It is not yet too late to make in this bill appropriate financial provision by increase in a very modest amount of the appropriation created for star-route contracts in Alaska to give to the people of Alaska, and also to the people of the United States, a better service, a service to which I firmly believe they are entitled. Of course, I speak principally for my friends and neighbors in Alaska, but I speak also for the people of the Nation.

In his testimony before the committee, Mr. Donaldson, of the Department, remarked that we "have a very poor service in Alaska", referring to the mail service—and that is true. If air mail is eliminated, the service will be poorer. We all ought to try to prevent that.

But, in any event, whatever may be done with respect to air mail, the appropriation should be increased to at least the amount carried in the Budget, which is $135,000.

What I have said about the necessity of maintaining the Air Mail Service does not mean that I am in favor of having all service on these star routes made by air. As I have tried to indicate, the mail should be carried from one large town or city in this region by air, and then the intermediate settlements and individuals along the routes should be given service by dog teams. This plan would cover the country like a blanket and would take care of all of the residents, or at least of as many as it would be practicable to serve within a reasonable appropriation of funds. That is substantially, in another form, the system that exists in the United States. Why can it not be done in Alaska? I am convinced that it can and ought to be done, and the Air Mail Service should be maintained.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLEOD].

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time to correct an erroneous and misleading conception that has recently spread concerning the scope and purpose of the new revised four point bill on the American Legion, which I had the honor to introduce on January 23 as H.R. 7261. The charge has been made that the Legion four point bill, if enacted, would virtually result in repeal of the Economy Act. For the sake of those few remaining supporters of the improperly named and dishonest Economy Act, it will readily be seen that this assertion is entirely without foundation when we consider that the Economy Act slashed the appropriation for veterans' relief by approximately $400,000,000 and the Legion measure is designed to restore only from sixty-five to eighty million dollars.

The Legion bill offers a most fair, just, and needed relief to disabled World War veterans and their dependents and should have the unqualified endorsement and hearty support of all Americans. It is designed to restore eligibility for service-connected disability, together with the actual monetary payments received for this prior to March 20, 1933, with the exception of veterans who enlisted after the armistice; where the Government can prove that the disability occurred before or after service; and where service connection had been established by fraud, error, or misrepresentation. Total cost of this section could not exceed $60,000,000 and would most likely be not more than $45,000,000.

I want to stress for the moment the fact that the marine hospitals throughout the United States, which formerly had jurisdiction over disabled war veterans' disabilities, are not permitted to receive these veterans at the present time, although some of the hospitals are used for C.W.A. employees.

This measure restores hospitalization privileges, restricted to Veterans' Administration facilities, where a veteran requires hospitalization for a disability and is unable to pay for it. The present empty hospital beds can be put to this good use without the necessity for a request for an additional appropriation.

Widows and orphans in need, under provisions of this bill, would receive a pension at the rate of $15 a month for a widow, $5 a month for the first child, and $3 a month for additional children, on the same conditions and rates provided for the Spanish-American War veterans under the Economy Act. Based on the Veterans' Administration cost estimates of the Rankin bill, which passed the House of Representatives 2 years ago, the first-year cost of this provision would be $9,000,000, with an average cost for 5 years of $19,250,000.

Until the passage of the Economy Act the laws provided a presumption of service connection for certain types of disease of uncertain origin in point of time if they became manifest to a disabling degree before 1925. This was found necessary because of many inadequate discharge examinations, the loss or absence of official records, and the serious difficulty of obtaining medical and other forms of evidence. Another factor was the natural tendency of men to minimize their ailments due to their anxiety to return to their families and resume their normal places in civil life.

The presumptive service connection laws remained on the statute books for 12 years until the passage of the Economy Act. During this period veterans were required to show the existence of these long-time and often devastating diseases within the legal period. Now, as a result of the Economy Act, the Government is demanding that proof of service connection be furnished by the veteran. Thousands of pitiful and meritorious cases are denied the compensation to which they are justly entitled because of this demand.

Special boards of review were appointed to consider the awards allowed on the basis of presumptive service-connected disabilities. Of the 51,213 cases reviewed by the special boards, 29,258 were discontinued and only 21,955 were allowed. A glance at the report showing the results of the review of these cases reveals a startling disparity in the percentage of cases allowed in different sections of the country. In one area the percentage of cases approved was 23.43, while in another part of the country the percentage rose to 74.68 percent. This inconsistency was primarily due to the fact that some boards placed a more liberal interpretation upon the law, regulations, and instructions than others.

The veterans in my own State, Michigan, were among those who felt the full blow of the economy legislation. Out of 1,604 cases reviewed by the two special boards for the State of Michigan, only 488 cases were allowed, or a percentage of but 30.42. Practically 70 out of every hundred veterans in Michigan with presumptive service connection had their claims denied by the special boards, although veterans in other States with the same class and type of disability and the same nature of evidence, were, in many instances, allowed to remain on the pension rolls.

Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEOD. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin. Does not the gentleman believe that the only way in which our soldiers can obtain justice is by the repeal of the Economy Act?

Mr. McLEOD. Absolutely; it never should have been enacted into law.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEOD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Is it not also true that the Economy Act has placed the veteran in a very disadvantageous position in reference to furnishing proof of his disability many years after the war has passed and the records are lost, the veterans being unable to furnish the required proof?

Mr. McLEOD. There is no question but that the gentleman is correct.

Before the passage of the Economy Act, the Government was spending a little more than $900,000,000 on relief for disabled veterans and their dependents; 1,016,561 veterans of all wars were receiving relief prior to last March. On November 30, 1933, this number had been reduced by 501,777. During the same period the number of pensioned dependents of deceased veterans dropped from 279,926 to 265,528. On March 31, 1933, 42,823 veterans were receiving hospitalization under Government auspices. The total on November 30 was 34,738. A total of 20,544 veterans were receiving domiciliary or institutional care on March 31, and by November this number had been reduced to 11,439.

Another result of the Economy Act which has worked great hardship on disabled veterans is the reduction in compensation received when they are confined to a hospital. Disabled veterans who received their injuries in battle, and who were drawing $90 and $100 a month for service-connected disability, have been having their compensation reduced to but $6 a month when receiving treatment in a hospital.

During the last session of Congress, it was declared that in order to balance the Budget, veterans' compensation must be slashed. To do this, approximately $400,000,000 has been cut from the appropriation for relief of veterans and their dependents. Yet Congress continued in effect $400,000,000 of new special taxes which are seriously handicapping industry and added $220,000,000 of additional new taxes and authorized the issuance of $8,560,000,000 in new Government bonds and securities, which caused our interest-bearing public debt to exceed by several billion dollars the peak of our public debt during the World War. During the past year, one appropriation bill alone (fourth deficiency) carried over 3½ billion dollars, which was $600,000,000 more than the entire cost of running the Government for the previous fiscal year, not including the interest on the public debt and the sinking fund.

In view of these enormous expenditures being made for relief work and recovery experiments, it is plainly evident that legislation which deprives disabled veterans and their helpless dependents of the necessities of life and throws them upon welfare organizations for relief is false economy, to say the least.

The Legion four-point bill is fair to the Government and merely metes out ordinary justice to our country's disabled veterans, their widows, and orphans. A grave injustice has been inflicted by the Economy Act upon those who sacrificed their health and earning capacity in defense of our country in its time of dire need, and the passage of the four-point bill of the American Legion will correct this wrong and at the same time fulfill our sacred obligation to care for those maimed and disabled in carrying out the highest duty of patriotism.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman and Members of Congress, undoubtedly every Congressman received a letter urging him to support the Frazier agricultural bill. I know that Congress has at this session passed legislation which will benefit the farmers; but it is my opinion that if the Frazier bill were enacted into law it would take the farmers out of the rut. We should see to it that this bill is passed at this session of Congress.

I also call attention to the fact that I have received many letters from Federal employees, soldiers, and various organizations asking me to do what I possibly could in repealing that part of the Economy Act which has taken from the Federal employees the 15 percent and also that part of the Economy Act which has deprived the World War veterans, the Spanish-American War veterans, their widows and dependents, of what rightly belongs to them. If we want to do something progressive, constructive, and humane, let us do that very thing, because I maintain that our soldiers who rendered a valuable service in behalf of our country have not been compensated for the services they rendered. I maintain that we should go so far as to give the soldiers their bonus. I have stated many, many times if individuals in this country have made as much as thirty-six to fifty million dollars profit on the World War, surely the men who fought the war, who kept our Nation intact, should receive some benefits. If it had not been for their indomitable courage and their sacrifice we today would be paying a foreign power fifty to seventy-five billions of dollars.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SMITH] whatever time he may desire.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Chairman, pursuing the same subject discussed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLEOD] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN], I desire to state that I have introduced two bills, namely, H.R. 6906 and H.R. 6907, to restore to the veterans of the Spanish-American War and of the World War the same pensions and benefits which they received prior to the enactment of the Economy Act.

JUSTICE FOR THE VETERANS

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, I have introduced, as I stated, two bills, H.R. 6906 and 6907, to restore to the veterans of the Spanish-American War and the World War the pensions, compensation, and benefits to which they were entitled prior to the enactment of the Economy Act, which bills are now pending before this Congress. I, therefore, welcome this opportunity to earnestly plead for more liberal treatment and a larger measure of justice for the veterans of our wars, and in so doing I speak as an American, for this subject presents no partisan issue. Indeed, when the Economy Act was passed, which many of us on this side of the House opposed and voted against as a matter of the highest principle, it was favored by the leaders on the Republican side, and received the votes of as great a percentage of Republican as Democratic Members in this Chamber.

In the interests of truth and historical accuracy, I desire to state that on the 4th of last March this Government faced the most serious financial and banking crisis of all time, threatening the very life of the Nation itself and involving the lives, happiness, welfare, and future destiny of the 120,000,000 men, women, and children of America, and every fair-minded American citizen—aye, every battle-scarred veteran—will remember that this economic crisis was not brought upon America by any act or policy of the administration which came into power on the 4th of March.

My friends, this crisis is happily passing, and we would now do well to heed the verdict of history; that from antiquity down to this present hour no nation which has proved ungrateful to its defenders has ever survived. Ingratitude to the Nation's defenders has invariably and always been the certain sign of national decay. In the words of Gladstone, "National injustice is the surest road to national downfall." The axiom "Republics are ungrateful", let us remember, was first spoken of republics which no longer exist. May God save America from the fate of the ungrateful governments of the past.

Mr. Chairman, fortunately for America, our greatest leaders and statesmen have always favored just treatment and grateful consideration for the veterans of our wars.

George Washington on June 8, 1783, said:

In what part of the continent shall we find any man or body of men who would not blush to stand up and propose measures calculated to rob the soldier of his stipend and the public creditor of his due? And were it possible that such a flagrant instance of injustice could ever happen, would it not excite the general indignation and tend to bring down upon the authors of such measures the aggravated vengeance of Heaven?

Abraham Lincoln, in his second inaugural address on March 4, 1865, declared it to be the duty of the country "to care for him who shall have borne the battle and for his widow and his orphans."

President Franklin D. Roosevelt has expressed views essentially the same as those of his illustrious predecessors. In his address before the American Legion Convention at Chicago, Ill., on October 2, 1933, he said:

The first principle, following inevitably from the obligation of citizens to bear arms, is that the Government has a responsibility for and toward those who suffered injury or contracted disease while serving in its defense. I personally know that mistakes in individual cases and inequalities affecting various groups have occurred during the past 6 months. But at the same time there stands out the fact—which you know—that many of these mistakes have been rectified and that we have the definite purpose of doing justice not only to the mass but, insofar as possible, to every individual as well.

My colleagues, we therefore have good cause to hope that during this regular session of Congress at least hospitalization will be provided for every veteran so long as there is an empty bed or cot in a Government hospital. The 10-percent reduction in allowances for service-connected World War disabilities should be removed and restored as formerly, and an increase in all payments to World War veterans. But first and foremost, we should restore the pensions to the veterans of that great volunteer army of the Spanish-American War, whom it was most unjust and cruel to strike from the rolls at their advanced age. We must revoke the requirement that they furnish proof that their disabilities are service connected after the lapse of 35 years, especially in view of the fact that little or no records were kept during that war. When we have done these things, we will have acted according to the letter and spirit of the words spoken at Chicago by our patriotic President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, and the noble utterances of George Washington and Abraham Lincoln. [Applause.]

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES,
OFFICE OF COMMANDER IN CHIEF, TOWER BUILDING,
Washington, D.C., January 5, 1934.

Hon. MARTIN F. SMITH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: At the meeting of our national encampment in Milwaukee, Wis., during September of last year, 2,000 delegates, representatives of our national organization of overseas men of all wars, unanimously instructed me to express to you, as one of the Members of the House of Representatives who voted against the Economy Act during the last session of Congress, our sincere thanks.

We want you to know that by your vote, when you were besieged by intense adverse political pressure, you have indelibly written your name into the honor roll which the overseas-service men will always love. The Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States hope that it will be your good fortune to remain long in political life in order that you may carry the standard of true American veterans' principles in the halls of our National Government.

You may be sure we will be happy to assist you in any way at any time we can be of service to you.

Sincerely,

JAMES E. VANZANDT,
Commander in Chief.

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D.C., October 3, 1933.

Mr. PAD R. BEAR,
619 Duffy Street, Aberdeen, Wash.

MY DEAR COMRADE BEAR: I find upon investigation that Congressman MARTIN F. SMITH voted right as far as the veterans are concerned in the legislation considered during the last session of Congress.

I find Congressman SMITH is recorded as voting against the Economy Act and in favor of the Steiwer-Cutting amendment. Your State had some very good and loyal friends of the veterans, and among them was Congressman SMITH.

Thanking you for inquiry, I am, yours in comradeship,

G. K. BROBECK,
Legislative Representative.

NATIONAL TRIBUNE,
Washington, D.C., October 13, 1933.

Mr. PAD R. BEAR,
619 Duffy Street, Aberdeen, Wash.

DEAR COMRADE: Replying to your recent letter addressed to the legislative committee of the Spanish War veterans, Congressman MARTIN F. SMITH voted against the original economy bill, against the compromise plan of the President and for the Steiwer-Cutting amendment The Connally amendment did not come to a vote in the House.

The record of MARTIN F. SMITH is clear.

Sincerely yours,

THE NATIONAL TRIBUNE,
C. W. SWAN.

THE AMERICAN LEGION NATIONAL LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE,
Washington, D.C., October 31, 1933.

Mr. PAD R. BEAR,
American Legion Post, Aberdeen, Wash.

MY DEAR MR. BEAR: In response to your letter of recent date, requesting the voting record of Congressman MARTIN F. SMITH, for your information it is as follows:

On the President's economy bill, cutting the veterans' compensation, which passed March 11, 1933, by a vote of 266 to 138, he voted "no" against passage, or in favor of the veteran.

On the previous question on amended House Resolution No. 185 (rule for the adoption of the independent offices bill) which was agreed to by a vote of 231 to 168 on June 10, 1933, he voted "no" against its adoption. A favorable vote on this question meant a vote against the question of having a House vote on concurring in the Steiwer-Cutting amendment.

On the Connery motion to concur in the Steiwer-Cutting amendment, which was lost by a vote of 177 to 208 on June 15, 1933, he voted "yes"; or, in other words, against the administration.

Very sincerely yours,

JOHN THOMAS TAYLOR,
Vice Chairman National Legislative Committee.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C., January 18, 1934.

HON. MARTIN F. SMITH,
House Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR FRIEND AND CONGRESSMAN SMITH: The soldiers of America appreciate your fine action in signing my petition for the adjusted-service certificates bill which now lies on the Speaker's desk and which will withdraw the bill from the committee, providing 145 members sign it.

I want to thank you for securing signatures among the Membership of the House. Let's get this bonus bill out on the floor, and then put up a memorable battle and let's get on the firing line.

Sincerely and fraternally yours,

ERNEST LUNDEEN.

Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. CANNON of Wisconsin. Has the gentleman a petition on the desk calling that bill out of the committee?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. I have not, for the reason that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN] has introduced a similar bill, for which he already has a petition on the desk. I have two bills, one applying to the Spanish-American War veterans and another applying to the World War veterans.

(Mr. SMITH of Washington was given permission to extend his remarks and to include therein certain letters from the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the National Tribune, and Mr. LUNDEEN, of Minnesota.)

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read down to and including line 3 on page 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

Recoinage of minor coins: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to continue the recoinage of worn and uncurrent minor coins of the United States now in the Treasury or hereafter received, and to reimburse the Treasurer of the United States for the difference between the nominal or face value of such coins and the amount the same will produce in new coins, $65,000.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I have listened today and yesterday to speeches made by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT], the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL], and the gentleman from Michigan complaining about the Government's competition with private enterprise, particularly referring to the contract to be let by the Postmaster General in Reedsville, W.Va. That is an absolute competition with private enterprise and never should be sanctioned, particularly at this time. I think it is an outrageous thing and that something should be done about it.

We had a committee appointed working for 7 months taking up every phase of this subject, and that committee made 29 recommendations, all frowning upon the Government's getting into business. That committee was composed of the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Shannon; the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. Pettengill; the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. Stafford; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Rich.

I find two recommendations out of the 29 that apply to the Reedsville case. I understand the money has been allocated by Mr. Ickes and turned over to the Postmaster General, with power to purchase land in West Virginia and erect a building, which will compete with private enterprise.

One of the recommendations of that committee was:

The committee recommends, for reasons of economy, that the Corps of Army Engineers, the Reclamation Service, and other Government Departments and Bureaus engaged in construction work should, so far as possible, enter into contracts with private competitive bidders, and discontinue, so far as possible, the performance of work with Government personnel and Government-purchased equipment.

Then, further, recommendation 18, with reference to new plants or equipments:

The committee recommends that no Department, Bureau, or subsidiary of the Government be authorized to erect or equip any new plants or reequip any existing plants for the manufacture of any commodity without having first secured the specific approval of the Congress for such action.

This is away beyond anything that should meet with our sanction. It has not met the approval of Congress. As someone has stated, that if that proposition had come before this body today there would not have been 10 men who would vote for Government competition with private individuals.

The committee further recommends that all such enterprises now in contemplation be reported to the Congress before any further action is taken by such Department, Bureau, or subsidiaries on any such project.

With that, gentlemen, I feel that this House should notify the Postmaster General, and that it should be brought forcibly to his attention that it is contrary to public policy and contrary to the wishes of the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Addition to cumulative sinking fund (sec. 308 of Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932): To carry into effect the provisions of section 308 of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, approved July 21, 1932 (47 Stat. 709), there is hereby appropriated for each fiscal year beginning with the fiscal year 1935, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purposes of the cumulative sinking fund provided in section 6 of the Victory Liberty Loan Act, as amended, in addition to amounts otherwise appropriated, a sum equal to 2½ percent of the aggregate of the expenditures on or after June 30, 1933, from appropriations made or authorized in sections 301 and 302, title III, of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Committee, I trust that the genial climate of Washington will not let us who come from the North to forget that there are portions of this country where there are millions of citizens who are not only unemployed, but whose families, despite all the relief work that has been and is being carried on by municipalities and by the States and the Federal Government, are still deprived of many of the necessities of life.

In my own district, for example, the condition of the dairy farmers is still such that, although the farmer through the agencies which he is compelled to use for the marketing of his milk receives on the average of 3 cents a quart, the children of the same farmer do not have what every child should have—a puart of milk a day; and, even though the milk sells for 3 cents a quart, that amount cannot be spared for the children at home as each 3 cents is necessary to help pay the taxes and interest on his mortgage.

The other day I heard the brilliant and genial gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] speak on the necessity of an adequate Navy and in behalf of the annual appropriation bill for the Navy. The gentleman, during the course of his remarks, taunted this side of the House with the fact that, in addition to the $286,000,000 which is being carried in the appropriation bill, there is $147,000,000 more coming from other sources which will be spent on the upkeep of the Navy for the next fiscal year; or, in other words, that we are actually appropriating $433,000,000 for the upkeep of the Navy and that without including any additional appropriation necessary for the Navy building program which the gentleman is advocating to bring our Navy up to treaty strength. The gentleman seemed proud of the fact, as he expressed it, that something had been put over. I do not think anything was put over. I voted for the naval appropriation bill, and I knew when I voted for it that I was, in fact, voting for the additional $147,000,000. I am not now attempting to debate with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] as to the necessity for the maintenance of an adequate Navy. It may be that the expenditure of $433,000,000 is necessary for protection. It is possible, of course, that we may at some time become involved in war, but that is a remote contingency.

The need for this expenditure, certainly to my mind, cannot compare with the need of furnishing employment and keeping children from starving. I am for an adequate Navy for defense but not for offensive purposes, and I am not now speaking in criticism of the gentleman's advocacy of an adequate Navy. However, the gentleman also in the same speech taunted this side of the House and the Democratic administration because of the billions of dollars we are spending for relief and unemployment. If I were compelled to choose between spending an additional $380,000,000 a year for naval increase and spending that amount of money for the relief of human suffering, I should certainly choose the latter. There were 200,000 children in this country, last year, of school age who did not have 1 day of school because of the lack of school facilities, arising from the impoverished condition of the people in many sections of the country. There are tens of thousands of school teachers who received no pay or only part of their pay because of the bankrupt condition of the municipalities and school districts. In the gentleman's own great city of Chicago thousands of children are without schools to attend and schools without teachers because of the lack of money.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of continuing the Civil Works Administration and the Public Works Administration programs until private industry is again able to furnish employment to every man who is willing to work and until the undernourished children have been supplied with wholesome food. The clock cannot be turned backward so as to make up for the stunting of the physical growth of children or the retarding of their mental growth. The children of this country who are suffering from the lack of wholesome food and who are deprived of the benefits of school may become a far greater menace to this country in years to come than any foreign power which may seek to attack us through the fact—and if it is a fact—that we do not possess the most powerful navy in the world.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. Do I understand the gentleman was referring to me as objecting to these relief expenditures?

Mr. SISSON. I understood the gentleman from Illinois to decry the fact that we were spending so much money, that we were unable to balance the Budget, and that that was because we were spending so much for unemployment and relief.

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, no.

Mr. SISSON. If I misinterpreted the gentleman's remark, I am sorry.

Mr. BRITTEN. I have no objection to the gentleman's inserting in the RECORD the letters to which he refers, but I want him to realize that I had no objection whatever to these expenditures—at least, I made none on the floor. My objection was directed toward this dual system of bookkeeping that the gentleman's side of the House has perfected. It shows all the expenditures, but it divides them into two budgets. I was complaining about the accounting and not about the relief expenditures.

Mr. SISSON. I am very glad to have the gentleman's position correctly, and I assume that that means that he will go along and ask for a further extension of the Civil Works Administration and the Public Works Administration programs.

In the debate the other day on the gold bill the statement was made that Louis XVI once advised the people of France when they lacked food to eat grass. I am unable to locate in either history or any literature, with which I am familiar, that advice attributed to that Bourbon monarch. I do recall, however, that the Scriptures record that Nebuchadrezzar had something to do with grass for a diet. But whether I am right or wrong about this, it is very certain that this Congress cannot afford to give such advice to the American people. And in more eloquent and moving words than is at my command for the portrayal of the great need that still exists for the carrying on of the Civil Works Administration and the Public Works Administration programs, as well as rendering aid to that great basic industry, namely, agriculture, I ask leave to insert in the RECORD a letter which I have received today from my district.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting a certain letter. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

DURHAMVILLE, N.Y., January 23, 1934.

Hon. F. J. SISSON,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: This is not the milk question but a very personal matter which would not have occurred if the manufacturing milk robbers had not have gotten in their work.

Everyone who knows him will tell you that my husband is a hard worker. He has done two ordinary men's work right along. December 1929 he had a very serious attack of appendicitis. He would not let me get a medical doctor, nor would he go to a hospital, nor would he obey the chiropractic doctor who saved his life. Christmas day, just 1 week to the day from the date the chiropractor and myself worked over him from 7 a.m. to 4 p.m. to keep the breath of life in his body, he went to the farm to milk. He still staggered when he walked because he was so weak. The chiropractor told him he must go to bed and let nature have a chance to heal him. He did not.

To make a long story short. We usually thrashed our grain directly from the field. It looked like a storm coming, so at two farms that morning he fed the thrashing machine unaided and that afternoon he carried the grain and dumped it so as to keep the machine running without interruption. At milking time a cow that had freshed tried to bolt to where the calf was tied, and he jumped in front of her and because of the weakened condition of his appendix it was ruptured. At the time I was nursing a lady 4 miles from here. He came over there and he was upstairs in my room and she was downstairs, and I took care of both and did the housework too.

When Dr. George came the next morning, I had him examine George (my husband) and the minute he saw him he told me George had a ruptured appendix and to get him to the hospital as soon as possible. My services could be dispensed with by getting other helpers and the next morning I drove him, unknown to the children, to the hospital. We had a blind boy helping us. He and Gladys, my oldest girl, who was attending Verona High School did the milking and other chores as best they could. I was George's special nurse, and he would hardly let me out of his sight. I had to see our cucumber crop lay right on the ground and waste. We needed the money from them to pay taxes, and so forth. Result: I went all to pieces.

November 9 saw my finish so far as doing any work was concerned. I had to take my girl out of high school. We had to let the telephone go. We have gone without every single thing we could go without to try to pay our debts. Then on top of that Levy the milk man failed. December 26 he came to the plant and told us we would get every cent due in 2 weeks. May 16 we got 48 cents on a dollar on what he owed us for milk delivered in October, November, and December to December 25, 1931.

Now, to go back when Governor Roosevelt appointed those 3 men, Straus and 2 others—before the thing had got shaped up, I wrote each of those 3 men, explaining our troubles and asking for a job. It was impossible for me to walk well yet, but I felt because of my 15 years as teacher—I held both a teacher's training certificate class and a first-grade certificate—Madison, Hamilton, Fulton, and Montgomery Counties. Also I lived in Philadelphia, Pa., when I was first married. I felt there just must be some job I could do that would help relieve our money troubles. I got no job, neither did my husband. Things went from bad to worse. A man who knew George since he was a baby, and who knew my folks, let us have money enough to take up the Federal farm loan and to pay the back taxes. Spring 1932—no price for milk, so we applied to the Government and got a seed loan. Repaid part of it. But that year the cucumber men sent a new man out to their receiving station. He cheated on weight—caught him 120 pounds on one load and could have made it hot but it would have meant that others would have lost their jobs and they needed them. He also put all their fancy packages in with the nubs at $8 per ton instead of in the $25 class; rooked us out of over half we should have got.

This year, the drought.

The C.W.A. people came to the church hall in State Bridge to enroll those who needed jobs. They would not enroll George because he had cows. Now, I find that Seymour Bennet, the former road commissioner, who has held that position 10 years, who has a farm free and clear that he inherited, and a big dairy—10 days after Mr. Jones became the new road commissioner he went to work on the C.W.A. and is receiving 75 cents per hour.

We have to go to Marysville today to see C. Bert Smith to beg for a little more time on that Government seed loan. We still owe $70 of the $75 interest which was due on the farm mortgage November 12, 1933.

Our school tax for 3 years is unpaid. The land tax due January 1933 and the one due now are still facing us. And still George nor I can get a job.

I feel as though it's high time something was done about it, and I do not know where to begin, so I am bothering you. Who is the head of the C.W.A., and where is the headquarters? If George had been the only needy man that was refused enrollment it would be different, but he was not.

Thanking you for your various efforts to help the farmers, I am

Very respectfully yours,

MRS. VERA E. DE GROAT.

P.S.—I opened this to say that with a 4½-percent milk test our check price is $1.74 for December milk, or $1.28 for 3 percent milk against $1.34 for milk in November. Feed to buy, groceries to get, and can still see daylight through the sole of my shoe. How are we going to buy auto license to get anywhere to get feed and pay bills? This is a merry world.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

During the debate on this question, or the presentation of it by the various members of the committee, several matters suggested themselves to me. But I cannot proceed with anything that has a bearing upon the Post Office matters without first reverting to the threatened explosion that my good friend MCFADDEN talked about which he expects to come from Lombard Street, London. When we find in the United States that over there those people are against anything that we are doing, I hope you gentlemen feel as I do, that that is simply a guaranty of further security on our part. When they complain about anything we are doing, then we are probably doing about the right thing.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] made a fine suggestion. I do not know how far they expect to carry it out, but it does seem to me that if you are going to continue spending money to give employment, you could do no better thing than what he suggested, namely, build Government post-office buildings in the smaller towns, ranging in cost from $10,000, as he said, and thus give ample accommodation to the people of the various communities. The unfortunate thing is that we have been doing a lot of talking about that meritorious plan, but without action. We had great hopes in our hearts when we heard what the Vice President, Mr. Garner, then Speaker of the House, was going to do about it, but it seems the funds are being diverted from one purpose to another under the power that I helped to give the President; but I trust that he will confine some of these expenditures to that very thing, of putting up modest but serviceable post-office buildings.

Another thing you gentlemen of the Post Office Committee did not touch at all. You said nothing about the 3-cent postage, and nothing is being done about it. Why do you not cut it out, realizing that it is a failure and a burden on the people and a great loss to the Post Office Department—this 3-cent postage?

Mr. STUDLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOCHT. Yes.

Mr. STUDLEY. I am a member of the Post Office Committee. That 3-cent postage originated in the Committee on Ways and Means as a revenue measure. Therefore it is in the exclusive jurisdiction of that committee, and the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has nothing to do with it. That is the explanation of it.

Mr. FOCHT. True enough, but the Post Office Committee would have to recommend action. Three-cent postage has evidently been a failure, because we are losing money.

Mr. STUDLEY. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. FOCHT. No matter what the Post Office seems to do there is always a deficit. There is deficit after deficit, and after you have developed the finest methods of distributing mail to the rich and poor alike, making them happy and better patriots, then you proceed to curtail that accommodation to the people.

You throw out of employment devoted and efficient civil-service clerks and rural carriers, and everywhere they are reducing those people, everywhere they are reducing this delivery, which is the best in the world and brings happiness to the people. It has caused great confusion and great inconvenience. In other words, where there are 4 rural carriers, they make 3 do the work, and in that manner reduce the cost of delivery, and yet there is always a deficit. That is one thing we do not want to reduce. We want the best possible accommodation for that thing which is personal to every individual, and that is delivery, by a Government official, as expeditiously as possible, of his mail.

Furthermore, we have vast expenditures that are given by the Government to the States that must be applied to rural post roads, and the people are not getting the benefit of that if you curtail the delivery.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] has expired.

SMALL HOME CONSTRUCTION

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, it has long been a rule in Washington that when a building falls into decay or unfitness to the extent of 50 percent, it cannot be repaired. We have seen some pretty good looking houses and buildings torn down under this ruling.

In America there are untold thousands of so-called "homes" more than 50 percent gone and which are unfit for the abode of humans. Thousands of shacks should be wrecked and well-appointed comfortable homes erected at public expense for our humblest citizens.

We talk about environment having its influence on the youth of our land and yet permit hundreds of thousands of bright young American children to be brought up in shacks that help constitute the slums of America and where health is hopeless.

The Government is seeking objects to which may be rendered helpfulness, but up to this time the one greatest object has been passed by.

The building of comfortable homes in every city, town, and hamlet in the country would instantaneously bring about a recovery in our economic condition.

The articles that enter into the construction of a home would have to be drawn from the four quarters of the country.

There would be instant employment for labor in removing old houses and making excavations for new ones. Then from the concrete contractor to the lumberman and carpenter, plumber, painter, paperhanger, plasterer, and all the needs applied by artisans.

There would be a finishing-up with necessary front cement walks and curbing.

Finally the house would have to be furnished, and here would be a demand for such a vast variety of things that they would have to be brought from all quarters of the United States.

To top it off there would be a local tax for purposes of supporting our schools and other borough expenses, while the insurance underwriter would be called in as would every tradesman in town—coal dealer, milkman, electric and gas supply men.

The public money could not be spent to better purpose; for two great objects would be instantly accomplished—work for men in every known branch of trade, and homes worthy of American citizens and their families. There would be far more purpose in our house-building proposal than in any other plan suggested or which the Government is now operating.

It is our theory that if you first of all give a man and his family a warm, healthful, and decent place to live in, you make the whole family boosters of the flag.

And finally, these houses could be sold to the occupants and paid for on a long-term amortization contract. The Government would thus do a great service to humanity with every family properly housed and healthy and happy, and be repaid.

[From the Daily Press]

OLD-AGE PENSIONS

WASHINGTON, January 24.—Representative B. K. FOCHT, of Lewisburg, Pa., author of the first old-age pension bill introduced in Congress, spoke in behalf of a similar measure today at a House committee hearing.

Appearing before a subcommittee of the Committee on Labor, Focht pledged his support to a bill introduced by Representative MARY T. NORTON, Democrat, of New Jersey, providing for old-age pensions in the District of Columbia.

Focht, who represents the Eighteenth Pennsylvania district comprising Snyder, Union, Juniata, Fulton, Bedford, Huntington, and Mifflin Counties, withdrew a similar bill because, he said, the Democractic majority would not report it out of committee bearing his name because he is a Republican, and also because Mrs. Norton's bill would accomplish the same end.

In 1915 FOCHT introduced his first bill to pension aged, and made an eloquent plea on the floor of the House for the measure. Old-age pensions, a new idea in social legislation at that time, were adopted that same year for Alaska.

Since that time various fraternal and benevolent groups of national prominence have adopted old-age pensions as one of their objectives, and 26 States of the Union have passed old-age pension laws. Pennsylvania was the twenty-sixth State to endorse the idea when Governor Pinchot signed that State's pension measure last week.

The Governor, in signing the bill, declared that it fulfilled a long-cherished dream and pointed to the fact that maintenance of aged and infirm persons in their own homes through a pension system not only removed the stigma and shame of going "over the hill" to the almshouse, but also actually saved the taxpayers' money.

The Clerk read as follows:

Refunding taxes illegally or erroneously collected: For refunding taxes illegally or erroneously collected, as provided by law, including the payment of claims for the fiscal year 1935 and prior years, $40,000,000: Provided, That a report shall be made to Congress by internal-revenue districts and alphabetically arranged of all disbursements hereunder in excess of $500, as required by section 3 of the act of May 29, 1928 (U.S.C., sup. VI, title 26, sec. 1676), including the names of all persons and corporations to whom such payments are made, together with the amount paid to each.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas: On page 13, strike out lines 7 to 17, inclusive.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is for the purpose of striking out that part of this bill that appropriates $40,000,000 for refunds on income taxes. I am opposed to this practice of the Government in refunding income taxes. As I understand the income tax law, these amounts are paid in voluntarily, on voluntary income-tax statements; and if the persons making out their own income-tax statements make a mistake, it is their own mistake. If they cannot add properly and if they cannot present proper information, it is their own fault.

In addition to that, the practice has grown up in this country in regard to income taxes where those liable for taxes never present anything more to the Government than they have to. They hold out as much as they can on the Government. Then it is necessary for the Government to start an expensive investigation and then commence suit in order to collect the money from them.

It has been stated on this floor time and again that more than $3,000,000,000 have been refunded the past few years. Then there are still amounts due from income taxpayers. The collector of internal revenue tells me he is as busy as possible trying to collect income taxes which are due the Government, going back before 1923.

Now, what is this bill? This bill presupposes that the Government is going to levy some illegal taxes and then it is going to be necessary to refund those erroneous and illegal taxes, and it presupposes that some people are not going to be able to add and that they will make mistakes, and will turn in more tax money than they should.

Another thing, we have this $40,000,000 now. Let us keep it. Just think what $40,000,000 would do. Forty million dollars would be enough to put over the 4-point program of the American Legion that is being suggested here, or enough to reestablish the Spanish-American War veteran to where he was before the economy bill was passed. Yet we are going to turn it back to those people who have found out that we have appropriated $40,000,000 and it is here for them, and by some hook or crook or lawyer or national committeeman or somebody who has some influence and who has probably been employed in the Internal Revenue Department and is well acquainted with the Bureau they are going to get this money back again. All of you fellow Members who have been denouncing this thing time after time and who intend to go out in the next campaign and make as much of an issue of it as you can, and talk about protecting the taxpayers' money, this is the time to put a stop to that sort of thing.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Certainly.

Mr. DONDERO. Does the gentleman mean to preclude a person who makes an honest mistake in his income tax getting that back or having it refunded to him?

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Not at all, but we can appropriate for him when the mistake has been discovered. He can come in and present his claim, and it can come out of a deficiency appropriation. Let us not appropriate for it ahead of time.

Mr. DONDERO. If we did that, the Government of the United States will be placed in the position of setting an example of taking advantage of an honest mistake against one of its citizens. The gentleman does not want to go that far, does he?

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. I should not want the Government to go as far as to take any money that they coerce a citizen into paying, that he should not have paid; but, speaking for myself, personally, I believe that any taxpayer who makes a mistake and pays more than he should voluntarily, that is his own mistake. If I should go to your county and pay your taxes in your county, and then come back and say, "I did not intend to pay them; I want my money back", the county treasurer would say to me, "We cannot help it. You have paid it and we cannot give it back."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, under the existing law, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is required to submit to Congress annually a report of all refunds in excess of $500, under the income tax law. That report came to the House as usual and was referred to the committee of which I am chairman. I always have an agreement with the press gallery as to the day the report is to be released. Today happens to be the day for the release of that report, and today the press carries a story of refunds of $51,487,000.

To one not understanding the operations of the Bureau of Internal Revenue it would appear that this amount is taken from the Treasury and there is nothing in return to offset the refunds. Such is not the case. Unfortunately while the law requires the report of refunds, it prohibits the publication of additional assessments. It so happens the committee in charge of this bill secured information from the Treasury that is printed in the hearings that enables me to show that while $51,484,845.92 was paid in refunds and $212,529,757 allowed in credits and abatements, $357,581,305 in additional assessments and collections resulting from office audits and field investigations were made during the same fiscal year. This means the Government collected and assessed during the last fiscal year $93,566,702.08 more than is refunded and allowed in credits. There is a short table in the hearings showing the activities of the Bureau along this line since 1917, and I ask unanimous consent to include it as a part of my remarks. The Bureau of Internal Revenue should have the right to make public its additional assessments and collections, always in excess of the refunds and credits, when it is compelled to report the refunds.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert this information in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

Statement showing internal-revenue receipts, additional assessments and collections, and overassessments of internal-revenue taxes (refunds, abatements, and credits) for fiscal years 1917 to 1933, inclusive, and the first 3 months of fiscal year 1934

Fiscal year	Total internal-revenue receipts	Amount of additional assessments and collections resulting from office audits and field investigations	Amount of refunds of taxes illegally collected	Amount of credits and abatements	Total
1917	$809,393,640.44	$16,597,255	$887,127.94	[1]	$887,127.94
1918	3,698,955,820.93	29,984,655	2,088,565.46	[1]	2,088,565.46
1919	3,850,150,078.56	123,275,768	8,654,171.21	[1]	8,654,171.21
1920	5,407,580,251.81	466,889,359	15,639,952.65	[1]	15,639,952.65
1921	4,595,357,061.95	416,483,708	28,656,357.95	[1]	28,656,357.95
1922	3,197,451,083.00	266,978,873	48,134,127.83	[2] $134,237,470.05	182,371,597.88
1923	2,621,745,227.57	[3] 735,216,858	123,992,820.94	306,583,881.95	430,576,702.89
1924	2,796,179,257.06	[3] 739,225,261	137,006,225.65	355,628,775.65	492,635,001.30
1925	2,584,140,268.24	[3] 457,314,407	[4] 151,885,415.60	226,155,508.74	378,040,924.34
1926	2,835,999,892.19	[3] 553,404,633	[4] 174,120,177.74	339,237,700.53	513,357,878.27
1927	2,865,683,129.91	[3] 416,669,507	103,858,687.78	262,292,604.21	366,151,291.99
1928	2,790,535,537.68	[3] 414,251,490	142,393,567.17	199,194,252.14	341,587,819.31
1929	2,939,054,375.43	[3] 405,855,476	190,164,359.48	228,775,274.72	418,939,634.20
1930	3,040,145,733.17	[3] 303,055,027	126,836,333.22	199,937,206.97	326,773,540.19
1931	2,428,228,754.22	[3] 382,788,076	69,476,930.26	213,731,335.60	283,208,265.86
1932	1,557,729,042.64	[3] 332,363,708	80,583,504.11	250,617,381.94	331,200,886.05
1933	1,619,839,224.30	[3] 357,581,305	51,484,845.92	212,529,757.00	264,014,602.92
1934, 1st quarter	573,582,446.81	[3] 63,129,217	13,498,873.15	45,063,060.96	58,561,934.11
Total	50,211,750,825.91	6,481,064,583	1,469,362,044.06	2,973,984,210.46	4,443,346,254.52

[1] No record available; credits first applied in fiscal year 1922.

[2] Estimated; based on amount of claims allowed in 1922 ($182,371,597.88) less refunds allowed in 1922 ($48,134,127.83).

[3] Includes jeopardy assessments as follows:

1923	$132,525,380.55
1924	161,515,217.33
1925	144,646,530.53
1926	148,867,165.26
1927	32,704,156.33
1928	45,685,725.80
1929	$50,865,425.58
1930	36,124,226.65
1931	50,425,493.68
1932	50,973,391.84
1933	109,895,996.57
First quarter of 1934	11,840,691.25

[4] Includes $17,777,642.45 refunded taxes under provisions of section 1200 of the Revenue Act of 1924 (25 percent refunds of 1923 individual income taxes).

[5] Includes $206,115.29 refunded taxes under provisions of above sections of law.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If the United States Government has money belonging to the taxpayer and not to the Government, we certainly should refund it if we are going to make additional assessments and assess penalties against the taxpayer. It would be folly to adopt this amendment.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. What is the reason for presupposing that we are going to make erroneous assessments in 1935?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Because we are continually doing this work, and for the first quarter of the present fiscal year $13,000,000 has been refunded. The amount carried in the bill is simply the amount they think they will need during the next fiscal year. It has nothing whatever to do with the current fiscal year. That money is in the Treasury. We provided it in the last bill. The $40,000,000 carried in this bill is for the next fiscal year.

If we are going to take money from the taxpayer in the form of additional assessments to the extent of $100,000,000 or more annually over what we refund, then by the same token we should refund money to taxpayers where mistakes have been made. Not infrequently it happens that a collector in the field will make a mistake in filling in the taxpayer's return.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield further.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Why is it necessary to include a specific amount to be refunded when we do not know what the amount of the refunds will be?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Because there must be some basis to work on. These officials of the Treasury Department appeared before the committee, as the gentleman will see from reading the hearings, and estimated that they thought they could get along with $40,000,000.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Would it not be better to let it go until 1935 and see what it amounts to?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If we pursued such a course it would mean that a refund having been determined as just, the Government would have to pay interest on the money from the date of its determination to the date of its payment, thus placing an additional cost on the Government. I do not think the gentleman would be in favor of incurring this additional expense. I think if the gentleman fully understood the situation he would withdraw his amendment, because we cannot be placed in the position of refusing to refund money that should be refunded, but continue making additional assessments.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent expenses, including subsistence of shipwrecked and destitute persons succored by the Coast Guard and of prisoners while in the custody of the Coast Guard; for the recreation, amusement, comfort, contentment, and health of the enlisted men of the Coast Guard, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, not exceeding $40,000; instruments and apparatus, supplies, technical books and periodicals, services necessary to the carrying on of scientific investigation, and not exceeding $4,000 for experimental and research work; care, transportation, and burial of deceased officers and enlisted men, including those who die in Government hospitals; wharfage, towage, freight, storage, advertising, surveys, medals, labor, newspapers, and periodicals for statistical purposes, and all other necessary expenses which are not included under any other headings, $173,795.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman a question in reference to page 59 of the bill, which we have not yet reached, relating to the purchase, manufacture, and repair of mail bags and other mail containers, and attachments, mail locks, keys, chains, tools, machinery, and so on.

The gentleman from Illinois undoubtedly recalls the remarks made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr.

McCORMACK] in reference to a new $500,000 factory recently erected at Reedsville, W.Va., out of C.W.A. or P.W.A. funds for the purpose of making locks for mail bags, and other post-office equipment.

I wanted to offer an amendment on page 59 in the nature of a limitation providing that none of the funds appropriated in this act should be used for the pay of people working in that factory or the purchase of supplies. I bring the matter up at this time to have this additional opportunity of speaking about it.

Would the gentleman have any serious objection to such an amendment?

Mr. ARNOLD. This appropriation is for the use of the mail-bag shops here in this city, Washington, D.C.

Mr. GOSS. I understand, but I thought the language of the bill was broad enough to include the new shop at Reedsville. The gentleman will notice, in line 11, page 59, the wording is, "Also material, machinery, and tools necessary for the manufacture and repair in the equipment shops at Washington, D.C." The world "also" makes the language so broad that it could include support of this factory in West Virginia, which is competing with private business already established, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] said. I would like to see a limitation applied so that none of the money in this bill, at least, could be used for the maintenance or operation of that factory.

Mr. ARNOLD. The language the gentleman just read confines it to the repair and equipment shops in Washington, D.C.; so it will be impossible to use any of this fund for the other place.

Mr. GOSS. I call the gentleman's attention to lines 8 to 11. If it were not intended that this fund should cover the West Virginia plant why put in the word "also"? In my judgment, the language to which I have called attention, lines 8 to 11, could be interpreted to include money for this plant erected as a C.W.A. project.

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not see how, by any construction, it could be held that any portion of this money could be used for shops anywhere outside the District of Columbia.

Mr. GOSS. If the gentleman will bear with me a minute, lines 8 to 11 read:

For the purchase, manufacture, and repair of mail bags and other mail containers and attachments, mail locks, keys, chains, tools, machinery, and material necessary for same, and for incidental expenses pertaining thereto—

Then there is a semicolon. Then it goes on to state:

Also material—

Which is the same as above—

machinery, and tools necessary for the manufacture and repair in the equipment shops at Washington, D.C.

It seems to me that the language in the first four lines of this paragraph which I have just read coupled with the word "also" might include this factory that is competing with private industry, the factory set up with C.W.A. funds.

With all the 40 businesses the Government is in, it seems to the people in many districts of the country that for it now to engage in the manufacture of locks and such things is unnecessary. Therefore, I would like to put a limitation on it so there will be no question about the matter.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARNOLD. May I suggest to the gentleman that this entire appropriation is for the use of the shops here. It is specifically confined to the shops at this place.

Mr. GOSS. What does the word "also" mean?

Mr. ARNOLD. It includes material, and in addition, machinery, and so forth, for manufacture of "other equipment."

Mr. GOSS. Would the gentleman be willing to accept an amendment that this apply only to the shops in Washington before we come to the word "also"? I think the gentleman and I are not far apart in our ideas.

Mr. ARNOLD. There is not any difference in our ideas, except I do not believe an amendment would clarify the situation or the language in the bill. This is intended to apply specifically to the shops in Washington and cannot be used for any other purpose. An amendment such as the gentleman has in mind would not, in my judgment, add anything to it or restrict it in any way.

Mr. GOSS. In view of the broad interpretations we are getting these days from different bureaus, the Accounting Office, and so forth, as I read this, to be perfectly frank, I thought this might be used for that purpose with the word "also" in there.

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not think the gentleman's fears are well founded at all. I cannot share his views as to the construction that he thinks may be placed on it.

Mr. GOSS. I hope the gentleman is correct. I do not want to clutter up the bill with useless amendments. I asked the question so we could iron it out here. I am hoping, as the gentleman is, that none of this money may be used for this purpose.

Mr. ARNOLD. I know this money is intended to be used for the shops in Washington.

Mr. GOSS. And not for the new factory contemplated in West Virginia?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; and I think this language carries out that purpose. However, I will look into the matter.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of rural carriers, auxiliary carriers, substitutes for rural carriers on annual and sick leave, clerks in charge of rural stations, and tolls and ferriage, Rural Delivery Service, and for the incidental expenses thereof, $82,902,500.

Mr. HENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HENNEY: Page 52, line 19, strike out "$82,902,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$92,562,500."

Mr. HENNEY. Mr. Chairman, the addition of the $9,660,000 to this bill adds the amount that was taken off on account of the 4 cents a mile maintenance that goes to the rural carriers.

The rural carriers are asked in this bill to reduce the amount that they formerly received from 4 cents a mile to 1 cent a mile, except during the 3 winter months, in which they are allowed 3 cents a mile. All of those who operate automobiles, particularly in the Northern States, know that it is absolutely impossible to operate an automobile at 1 cent a mile, even in the summertime.

In my State the average length of the automobile rural route is approximately 35 miles. At the rate of 1 cent per mile during the 8 summer months this would make 35 cents a day that these rural carriers are allowed for the maintenance of their automobiles. If this simply applied to gasoline and oil alone, it would not be so bad, but this covers their insurance, repairs, license fees, and all of the expenses which the rural carriers are obliged to stand for the maintenance and upkeep of their automobile, also for the exchange of the automobile when it becomes superannuated and they have to replace it with a new one. I think if a gesture is made to them at all, it should be made in keeping with the actual expense for the upkeep of their automobiles. If they are not going to do that, then cut the figure out entirely and give them nothing for maintenance.

I sincerely hope, Mr. Chairman, that this amount may be returned to these rural carriers, because the amount that is to be allowed under this bill is entirely inadequate.

Mr. RUFFIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RUFFIN. Is the pay of the rural carriers, excluding the 4 cents a mile, reduced in the same proportion as the city carriers?

Mr. HENNEY. Absolutely.

Mr. RUFFIN. Then in addition their mileage allowance is cut three quarters?

Mr. HENNEY. They are cut 15 percent; then they have their furlough of 2 weeks every 3 months which may come up each quarter. Then there is another 16⅔-percent furlough cut, just the same as any other carrier has. This is the only branch of the Service obliged to furnish its own delivery equipment.

Mr. RUFFIN. And their mileage allowance is cut three quarters?

Mr. HENNEY. Yes; they are cut from 4 cents to 1 cent during the summer months.

Mr. RUFFIN. What is the purpose of the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. HENNEY. To restore the 4 cents a mile.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENNEY. I yield to my colleague from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. I am very much in sympathy with the gentleman's objective in increasing this appropriation, but would that increase the amount actually paid the rural carriers? I wish it would, but I do not believe it would change the basic law of the Economy Act.

Mr. HENNEY. I agree with the gentleman, but I am hopeful that this may be given back to them. If we can add to this appropriation, we can use our influence to get the Department to do this very thing.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Chairman, I have been deeply interested in the apparent inequality and injustice inflicted by Executive order upon our rural carriers as compared with the city carriers. I have gone over the routes in my district and some of them have been lengthened from 32 miles to 52 miles, and this condition is true all over the country.

These men are now allowed 3 cents a mile; but in March, under an Executive order that has gone out, they will be given 1 cent a mile for upkeep of their car. Any man here knows that running a car from 50 to 60 miles a day, or fifteen to eighteen thousand miles a year, in all kinds of weather and over all kinds of roads, and having to stop and start on each trip from 100 to 300 times, 1 cent a mile will not buy the oil and gas which the owner must use, let alone take care of maintenance and depreciation.

These men have taken their 15-percent cut without complaint, but the conditions imposed upon them by the administration at the present time leaves them with a net salary of about $1,200, as compared with $1,700 for the city carriers, which I think is little enough for the city carrier.

So I urge that in spite of the paralyzing effect of the most amazing gag rule by which this House a few days ago denuded itself of its constitutional obligations to this country, that we find some way, somehow, to obviate this glaring injustice to this most deserving and honorable group of public servants.

The rural carrier is very much more than an ordinary letter carrier. He is an adviser of the people on the route. He takes care of their postal orders, their registered mail, their packages, and is a peripatetic postmaster; and instead of cutting him down to $500 or more less than his brother in the city, who, while paid little enough, still walks under the protection of a policeman and on good sidewalks and is not forced to furnish the Government with an automobile at his own expense, I say that in some way the powers that be, which seem to be all powerful at the present time, ought to take care of this group; and, for one, I will do everything I can to help bring this to pass. [Applause.]

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present. [After a pause.] I withdraw the point for the present.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 7 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to join my friend the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON] in support of the amendment to restore full pay to the rural carriers.

There is no higher class of public service than that found in the rural mail service. When you take into consideration the fact that in all kinds and character of weather the mail must be delivered, and it is up to the rural carrier to see that a letter addressed to any patron on his route is properly and promptly delivered, he should receive reasonable pay for his faithful services.

Everyone knows that in some seasons of the year the roads over which the rural carriers travel are not in good condition. Their mileage has been greatly increased at their expense, because it is more expensive to travel over these long routes than it was to travel over the short ones. It seems to me this pay should be returned to them and that they should have full compensation for the services they are rendering.

I believe there is no more competent employee in the Government service than those in the rural mail service and when their expenses are paid on these long routes, where they have muddy roads, most of them have used a great deal of the pay that has come to them under this cut, with but little remaining for themselves and their families.

I think the amendment should be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I am very sympathetic in what the gentlemen have said in regard to the rural carriers, but there is no use in doing a futile thing here. The amount of money that is included in this amendment cannot possibly, under the present conditions of things, reach the rural carriers. It would be useless to increase this appropriation to that extent because it would simply have to remain in the Treasury until there is further legislation or further Executive order affecting salaries and allowances of rural carriers.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. If we vote the money and later the President decides to restore the cut we would have the money available.

Mr. ARNOLD. There is no use in voting the money until we know what is going to be done. If anything is done to liberalize it, arrangements will be made to provide the money, and there is no use of anticipating it.

It was suggested a few minutes ago that these carriers are furloughed. They are not furloughed. Instead of granting them a furlough it was taken care of by a reduction in the maintenance allowance and by Executive order. Not long ago the maintenance was increased from 1 cent to 3 cents a mile for the months of November, December, January, and February.

Mr. DOWELL. But the fact is they are at a greater expense since the order was made than before.

Mr. ARNOLD. The gentleman must not lose sight of the fact that when the routes are increased the carrier gets $30 for each additional mile above standard route.

Mr. DOWELL. But there was no addition for upkeep. It is an extra charge against the carrier.

Mr. ARNOLD. It is true that there is no addition to the upkeep except this addition to the mileage, but they do get an increased compensation on their route.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman is opposed to appropriating the money now, but to leave it in the hands of the President for further Executive order?

Mr. ARNOLD. There is no way in which the money can now be used for the purpose intended, and it is idle to now adopt the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ARNOLD) there were 20 ayes and 27 noes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and Mr. PARSONS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. FULLER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 7295) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, had directed him to report that they had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 6670) entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of a corporation to aid in the refinancing of farm debts, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. HAYDEN and Mr. VANDENBERG members of the Joint Select Committee, on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments", for the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Government Printing Office.

REFINANCING OF FARM DEBTS

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the committee on conference, I present a conference report upon the bill H.R. 6670, to provide for the establishment of a corporation to aid in the refinancing of farm debts and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

UNITED STATES NAVY

Mr. BANKHEAD, from the Committee on Rules, presented the following privileged report for printing under the rule:

House Resolution 235

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H.R. 6604, a bill to establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties; to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels; and for other purposes. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill, and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

COMMITTEE ON WILD LIFE

Mr. DRIVER, from the Committee on Rules, presented the following privileged report for printing under the rule:

House Resolution 237 (Rept. No. 348)

Resolved, That a special committee of 15 Representatives, to be composed of the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, Chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries, the 2 House of Representatives members of the Migratory Bird Conservation Commission, 7 Members of the House of Representatives from the majority political party, and 4 Members of the House of Representatives from the minority political party, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House, is authorized and directed (1) to investigate all matters pertaining to the replacement and conservation of wild-animal life (including aquatic and bird life) with a view to determining the most appropriate method of carrying out such purposes, and (2) to report to the House as soon as practicable, but not later than January 3, 1935, the results of its investigations, together with its recommendations for necessary legislation.

For the purpose of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold hearings; to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the House in the Seventy-third Congress until the final report is submitted; to require by subpena, or otherwise, the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents; to administer such oaths; and to take such testimony as it deems advisable.

NATIONAL LIVESTOCK RECOVERY ACT

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a bill which I introduced this morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Speaker, the welfare of this country is inseparable from the welfare of its agriculture. The prevailing low markets for agricultural products have reduced the purchasing and debt-paying power of the farm dollar to approximately half of its pre-war parity with the industrial dollar, and this has much to do with the continuance of the general business depression.

It is necessary to restore a parity of price and economic opportunity for those engaged in agriculture in this country before a real recovery or national solidarity can be restored.

IMPORTANCE OF LIVESTOCK

The production and marketing of livestock is a basic industry—the oldest and most extensive in the United States—and is carried on in every State in the Union. Two thirds of our national areas produce hay, grass, and forage crops which must be transmuted into market values through livestock; and two thirds of the feed crops raised on the land that is tilled are fed to livestock. The value of livestock and dairy products is more than half of our whole agricultural output.

Less than 10 percent of our livestock products is in excess of domestic requirements; but lack of adequate foreign outlet for this small part of the business depresses domestic markets and entails losses of hundreds of millions of dollars annually to those engaged in agriculture.

Owing to disparities in international currencies, strained foreign credit relations, the raising of tariffs and lowering of quotas by other countries, the foreign trade of the United States has greatly diminished. A way must be found to restore it. A recovery of prosperity by the livestock industry will solve more than half of our agricultural problem.

NEW ASPECTS OF FOREIGN TRADE

Orderly marketing of livestock products cannot function efficiently until an outlet is found for this small surplus.

Recognizing that both industry and agriculture normally sell approximately 90 percent of their respective outputs at home and only 10 percent of their products abroad, it is time for this country to use its foreign trade so as to make more reciprocal and stable the relations of American industry and agriculture at home.

Nearly two thirds of our imports are duty-free, many of them directly or indirectly in competition with livestock products on our home markets. The tariff should be revised to give us a better measure of protection against the animal and vegetable fats and oils, meats, hides and leather, fish, and other products which are coming in ever-increasing amounts from foreign ports to the value of several hundred million dollars annually.

EQUALITY OF PROTECTION

The average duty on imports of products competing with American industry approximates 45 percent ad valorem, while through all this period of depression the average tariff imposed against competing agricultural products was approximately 20 percent ad valorem, much of which was not effective at all in giving protection because of the production in excess of our domestic requirements.

The fact that the farm dollar has today only 60 percent of its pre-war value, while the industrial dollar has 116 percent, is eloquent evidence of this disparity.

A policy of protection which protects only part of the people or a part of their property and leaves unprotected the balance of the people and the balance of their property, or which protects them in different degrees, is unwise, unjust, and un-American. Our national policy of protection can and must be extended to livestock.

In furtherance of that policy, Mr. Speaker, and in harmony with the wise recovery program which we have undertaken, I have introduced today a bill for an act to be known as the "National Livestock Recovery Act"; and under the permission generously given me to extend my remarks for that purpose, I am inserting a copy of that bill in the RECORD at this point.

The bill is as follows:

H.R. 7346

A bill to encourage and provide for the sale and exchange of livestock and dairy products in foreign countries; to extend to livestock the policy of Government protection and make it effective; to promote adjustment of economic relations between agriculture and industry, thereby hastening national business recovery; and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That it is hereby declared that discouraging conditions in the market for livestock throughout the country are depressing the basic industry of livestock production and adversely affecting the public welfare, undermining the standards of living in the rural population of America, and retarding national business recovery, which conditions result in large part from the greatly diminished foreign outlets for American livestock and its products.

It is further declared that it is and should be the policy of Congress to promote the exportation of livestock and dairy products of this country so as to restore and preserve the economic relationship of agriculture and industry in the United States of America; to encourage and revive reciprocal foreign-trade relations; to extend the protection of Government to the livestock industry comparable to the protection given by the Government to other basic industries; to avoid undue restriction of production (except as may be temporarily required); and to utilize more efficiently the Nation's natural resources in agriculture, thereby bringing prosperity to American agriculture and enlarging the market for American labor and industry.

SEC. 2. This act may be cited as the "National Livestock Recovery Act."

SEC. 3. As used in this act—

(a) The term "person" includes any individual, copartnership, corporation, or association of any kind engaged in production, processing, selling, and/or distributing livestock or livestock and dairy products produced within the United States of America.

(b) The term "livestock" includes beef and dairy cattle, hogs, and sheep produced within the United States of America, and any and all products derived, manufactured, or processed therefrom and containing at least 75 percent of such animal ingredients by value.

(c) The term "United States" includes only continental United States of America.

(d) The term "article" includes any device, thing, machinery, and parts thereof manufactured, assembled, made, or produced outside of the United States and entering into the commerce of foreign countries with the United States.

(e) The term "commodity" includes everything movable that may be bought or sold, except livestock as defined herein, produced, held, owned, or possessed outside of the United States and which enter into commerce of foreign countries with the United States.

SEC. 4. Any person exporting to any foreign country any livestock, as in section 3 of this act defined, the market value of which is $100 or more, shall be entitled to receive from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of the United States, at any port in the United States from which such shipment is made, a certificate of the United States Government for an amount equal to 40 percent ad valorem of the livestock exported.

SEC. 5. Every person who shall, under the terms of this act, export any livestock as defined in section 3 hereof, of a market value of $100 or more, shall, at the time of such shipment for export, deliver to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of the United States a concise and detailed written statement and declaration, under oath, setting forth the name and address of the person exporting the livestock, a designation of the quantity and kind thereof, and that the same was raised or was wholly produced, processed, or manufactured from cattle, hogs, or sheep raised within the United States, and the name, address, and the country of the consignee.

SEC. 6. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to prepare and promulgate reasonable regulations to carry this act into effect and for the administration thereof, and to prepare the form of certificate to be issued by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to any exporter under the terms of this act, and such other forms as may be necessary for the fulfillment of the purposes of this act. Such certificates shall be so prepared as to designate on their face the foreign country to which the livestock was consigned or exported, the amount and value of the shipment, and may be one or more in number, aggregating an amount equivalent to 40 percent of the value of the shipment.

SEC. 7. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue is hereby authorized to inspect, examine, grade, and determine the quantity, quality, and value of each and every shipment of livestock exchanged or exported under the terms and provisions of this act, and is further authorized and empowered to make such examination as may be necessary to verify the statements which any party to such sale or exchange may be required to make under the provisions of this act, or to regulations herein provided for.

SEC. 8. The certificates issued by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to any exporter of livestock under the terms of this act shall be acceptable at any time, at any port in the United States, in the payment of duties on articles or commodities, other than livestock, received from the foreign country designated in the certificate as the destination of the livestock shipment for which the certificate was issued. They shall be negotiable, and any holder thereof shall be entitled to tender the same at their face value in payment of tariffs or duties at any port of entry of the United States on imports into the United States from countries designated on the face of the certificate, and when so tendered they shall be accepted in such payment at their full face value.

SEC. 9. If, at any time, this act shall be repealed, any certificates outstanding when such repeal takes effect shall, on presentation by the lawful holders thereof, at the office of the United States Treasury, be redeemed at their face value, unless provision shall be made by law for their continued acceptance as provided for in section 8 of this act.

SEC. 10. Any provisions in existing laws or parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 11. Any person found guilty of a violation of any term or provision of this act shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both; and all certificates issued as a consequence of the fraud of any person or persons, whether employed by the United States Government or not, shall be void.

SEC. 12. This act shall take effect on the 30th day following its approval.

INVESTIGATION OF RECEIVERS, ETC.

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution for printing under the rule:

House Resolution 223

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, authorized to inquire into and investigate the matter of appointments, conduct, proceedings, and acts of receivers, trustees, referees in bankruptcy, and receivers in equity causes for the conservation of assets within the jurisdiction of the United States district courts pursuant to H.Res. 145, shall report to the House of Representatives not later than June 30, 1934, in lieu of January 31, 1934, the date specified in such resolution.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the majority leader, for the benefit of the Membership on this side of the House, what the program is for Friday and Monday?

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, the program tomorrow will be confined to the conclusion of the bill now under consideration, and as I understand it, probably the rule for the establishment of a special committee for the investigation of wild life.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman will yield, I think probably there is another rule that we might take up.

Mr. BYRNS. There will be ample time for the consideration of both rules. It is then proposed, after the conclusion of these matters, to adjourn until Monday.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What is the program for Monday?

Mr. BYRNS. On Monday, as far as I am advised, the chairman of one of the elections committees will call up what is known as the "Louisiana contest election." I do not know of anything else at this moment. In addition to what I have already stated, I think I should say that we will call up tomorrow the conference report upon the farm refinancing bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And the Navy bill probably will be taken up on Tuesday?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Could the gentleman tell us whether or not the rule for the establishment of a Committee for the Investigation of Wild Life contemplates the expenditure of money?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; it does not. It only sets up a House committee of 15 members, as provided in the rule, for the consideration of these problems.

ELECTION TO A COMMITTEE

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, the Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], and his committee are in session considering possibly the tax bill. He has sent to me this resolution, which he has asked me to present to the House and ask for its consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 238

Resolved, That AMBROSE J. KENNEDY, of the State of Maryland, be, and he is hereby, elected Chairman of the Standing Committee of the House of Representatives on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, January 26, 1934, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS

(Friday, Jan. 26, 10:30 a.m.)

Hearings on various bills.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

(Friday, Jan. 26, 10 a.m.)

Continuation of the hearings on H.R. 6836, to regulate motor carriers.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

308. Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, a letter from the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, transmitting the first annual report of the Administration, covering operations for the year 1933 (H.Doc. No. 130), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. SABATH: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 228. Resolution extending time of report on receiverships; without amendment (Rept. No. 339). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MILLIGAN: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. H.R. 6370. A bill to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near South Omaha, Nebr.; with amendment (Rept. No. 340). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. CORNING: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. H.R. 6492. A bill to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Alexandria Bay, N.Y.; without amendment (Rept. No. 341). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. WOLVERTON: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. H.R. 6794. A bill authorizing the State of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Delaware River at a point between Easton, Pa., and Phillipsburg, N.J.; without amendment (Rept. No. 342). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MILLIGAN: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. H.R. 6799. A bill to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Weldon Spring, Mo.; without amendment (Rept. No. 343). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MILLIGAN: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. H.R. 6909. A bill to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Des Moines River at or near St. Francisville, Mo.; without amendment (Rept. No. 344). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MILLIGAN: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. H.R. 7291. A bill authorizing the city of Hannibal, Mo., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Hannibal, Marion County, Mo.; without amendment (Rept. No. 345). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. WOLVERTON: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. S. 2029. An act to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across the Delaware River near Trenton, N.J.; without amendment (Rept. No. 346). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. BANKHEAD: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 235. Resolution for the consideration of H.R. 6604; without amendment (Rept. No. 347). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DRIVER: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 237. Resolution to create a committee on wild life; without amendment (Rept. No. 348). Referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CONNERY: A bill (H.R. 7332) to incorporate the National Yeomen F; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SHOEMAKER: A bill (H.R. 7333) to amend an act entitled "An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government", approved March 20, 1933 (Public Law No. 2, 73d Cong.), and an act making appropriations for sundry independent offices and executive bureaus, approved June 16, 1933; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma: A bill (H.R. 7334) authorizing the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to assign to the Government any amount due to World War veterans under adjusted-service certificates in payment of premiums on converted Government insurance; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. GILLETTE: A bill (H.R. 7335) granting pensions and increases of pensions to certain soldiers, sailors, and nurses of the War with Spain, Philippine insurrection, or the China relief expedition, and their widows and dependents, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WHITE: A bill (H.R. 7336) to add certain lands to the Challis National Forest; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. LUDLOW (by request): A bill (H.R. 7337) to amend chapter III of the Code of Law of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. MAPES: A bill (H.R. 7338) providing for the examination and survey of a proposed deep-waterway canal connecting Grand River with Lake Michigan; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. DISNEY: A bill (H.R. 7339) providing for flood control, irrigation, navigation, production of electric power, regulation of soil erosion, and for other purposes, in the areas drained by the Arkansas, Red, and White Rivers; to the Committee on Flood Control.

By Mr. DOCKWEILER: A bill (H.R. 7340) to authorize the Post Office Department to hold contractors or carriers transporting the mails by air or water on routes extending beyond the borders of the United States responsible in damages for the loss, rifling, damage, wrong delivery, depredations upon, or other mistreatment of mail matter due to fault or negligence of the contractor or carrier, or an agent or employee thereof; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. KNUTSON: A bill (H.R. 7341) to establish the boundary lines of the Chippewa Indian territory in the State of Minnesota; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SWEENEY: A bill (H.R. 7342) to punish fourth-class postmasters who inflate their cancelations by mailing, or causing to be mailed, at their offices matter which would not have been so mailed but for the extra compensation accruing to the postmaster; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7343) to remove inequities in the law governing eligibility for promotion to the position of chief clerk of the Railway Mail Service; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. PIERCE: A bill (H.R. 7344) to extend the provisions of the Forest Exchange Act to public lands within 6 miles of the boundaries of the Whitman National Forest in the State of Oregon; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. BUSBY: A bill (H.R. 7345) to authorize an appropriation of $25,000,000 with which to construct the Natchez Trace Parkway, leading from Nashville, Tenn., to Natchez, Miss.; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. DOBBINS: A bill (H.R. 7346) to encourage and provide for the sale and exchange of livestock and dairy products in foreign countries; to extend to livestock the policy of Government protection and make it effective; to promote adjustment of economic relations between agriculture and industry; thereby hastening national business recovery, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota: A bill (H.R. 7347) to enable the people of the Philippine Islands to adopt a constitution for a free and independent government, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

By Mr. HAINES: A bill (H.R. 7348) to amend section 3937 of the Revised Statutes; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. RAMSAY: A bill (H.R. 7349) to amend section 201 (a) of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, so that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may loan money to States, municipalities, etc., for the purchase of bridges and to operate and free the same from collection of tolls; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. LUDLOW: A bill (H.R. 7350) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the War with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, or the China relief expedition, to certain maimed soldiers, to certain widows, minor children, and helpless children of such soldiers and sailors, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. AYERS of Montana: A bill (H.R. 7351) to provide for the granting of public lands, including the minerals therein, to the States in which they are located, subject to certain terms, conditions, reservations, and exceptions, and also subject to acceptance by each individual State; for the elimination of lands from national forests, parks, reservations, and withdrawals in connection with such grants; for changes in the collection and expenditure of moneys for the United States reclamation fund and other changes relating to the Reclamation Service; and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. SUMNERS of Texas: A bill (H.R. 7352) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, and acts in amendment thereof; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7353) granting the consent of Congress to any two or more States to enter into agreements or compacts for cooperative effort and mutual assistance in the prevention of crime, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7354) to amend the act of June 21, 1902, entitled "An act to regulate commutation for good conduct of United States prisoners"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7355) to amend an act entitled "An act to give the Supreme Court of the United States authority to prescribe rules of practice and procedure with respect to proceedings in criminal cases after verdict"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7356) to provide, in case of the disability of senior circuit judges, for the exercise of their powers and the performance of their duties by the other circuit judges; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7357) to amend section 109 of the United States Criminal Code so as to except officers of the United States Naval and Marine Corps Reserve not on active duty from certain of its provisions; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WITHROW: A bill (H.R. 7358) to provide for the exemption from Federal income taxation of farmers' cooperative organizations; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. PEYSER: A bill (H.R. 7359) to amend the law relating to design patents, to provide for the registration of designs, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. WEAVER: A bill (H.R. 7360) to establish a minimum area for the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. KNUTE HILL: A bill (H.R. 7361) to provide funds for cooperation with White Swan School District No. 88, Yakima County, Wash., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children of the Yakima Reservation; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. LAMNECK: A bill (H.R. 7362) to amend the National Industrial Recovery Act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. AYERS of Montana: A bill (H.R. 7363) to amend Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, entitled "An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government", and Public Law No. 78, Seventy-third Congress, entitled "An act making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. CLARK of North Carolina: Joint resolution (H.J.Res. 248) to authorize the erection on public grounds in the District of Columbia of a stone marker designating the zero milestone of the Jefferson Davis National Highway; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. IGLESIAS: Joint resolution (H.J.Res. 249) to amend a joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of Puerto Rico", approved December 21, 1928; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CARDEN of Kentucky: A bill (H.R. 7364) for the relief of L. N. Patterson; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CHASE: A bill (H.R. 7365) to correct and complete the military record of Carl Lindow, known also as Carl Lindo; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CROWTHER: A bill (H.R. 7366) for the relief of Henry Charles Zadoorian; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. DICKSTEIN: A bill (H.R. 7367) for the relief of Sarah Smolen; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7368) to grant an honorable discharge from the military service of the United States to William Rosenberg; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FISH: A bill (H.R. 7369) granting a pension to Hannah Fitzgerald; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HAMILTON: A bill (H.R. 7370) for the relief of William F. Catching; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7371) granting a pension to John H. Botner; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HOWARD: A bill (H.R. 7372) for the relief of Donald K. Warner; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HESS: A bill (H.R. 7373) for the relief of Elizabeth M. Halpin; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KENNEDY of New York: A bill (H.R. 7374) for the relief of Edward C. Little; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. KRAMER: A bill (H.R. 7375) for the relief of Albert J. Jones; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7376) for the relief of George Hovey; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McGUGIN: A bill (H.R. 7377) for the relief of the McCune State Bank, of McCune, Kans.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MILLIGAN: A bill (H.R. 7378) for the relief of the Northwest Missouri Fair Association, of Bethany, Harrison County, Mo.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PIERCE: A bill (H.R. 7379) for the relief of Milburn Knapp; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. REECE: A bill (H.R. 7380) granting a pension to Rissie Whitson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STOKES: A bill (H.R. 7381) for the relief of Mary Blakesley; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7382) for the relief of Robert C. E. Hedley; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SUMNERS of Texas: A bill (H.R. 7383) for the relief of George T. Smith; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. THOMASON: A bill (H.R. 7384) granting a pension to Margaret R. Frier; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7385) for the relief of J. W. Jackson; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WERNER: A bill (H.R. 7386) for the relief of George Francis Grundy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WILLIAMS: A bill (H.R. 7387) for the relief of Royce Wells; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7388) granting a pension to Annie Rhodes; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7389) granting jurisdiction to the Court of Claims to hear the case of David A. Wright; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7390) granting a pension to Sarah K. Copeland; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

1789. By Mr. AYRES of Kansas: Petition of citizens of the Fifth Congressional District, Kansas, asking Congress to act at once to safeguard the inherent rights of the American people relative to the radio; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1790. By Mr. BOYLAN: Letter from the Hawley & Hoops Co., New York, N.Y., protesting against the excise tax on candy; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1791. Also, letter from the National-American Wholesale Lumber Association, of New York, N.Y., endorsing House bill 6460, to amend the Home Owners' Act of 1933, etc.; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1792. Also, letter from the Democratic Glass Workers' Protective Association of New York and vicinity, protesting against any order to curtail the hours and work on any of the projects of the Civil Works Administration; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1793. Also, letter from the Van B. Moler Co., Inc., New York City, regarding duty on imports; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1794. By Mr. BUCK: Petition of V. Peterson, of Stockton, and approximately 5,000 others of the Third Congressional District of California, protesting against radio discrimination; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1795. By Mr. CARTER of Wyoming: Memorial from the Twenty-second Legislature of the State of Wyoming, memorializing Congress to enact legislation transferring certain oil lands in Natrona County, Wyo., from the jurisdiction of the Navy Department to the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1796. Also, memorial of the Twenty-second Legislature of the State of Wyoming, memorializing the United States Veterans' Administration and the hospitalization committee to provide facilities for the care and treatment of Wyoming veterans and others in need of hospitalization by the opening of the Veterans' Administration facility at Cheyenne, Wyo.; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

1797. Also, memorial of the Twenty-second State Legislature of the State of Wyoming, memorializing Congress to provide relief for the oil industry, the farmers, the unemployed, business, and the people generally by providing an adequate tariff or tax on oil that will place the domestic oil industry on a competitive basis with imported oil, as shown by the reports of the Tariff Commission; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1798. By Mr. CAVICCHIA: Petition of August C. Weber and others, protesting against radio censorship; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1799. By Mr. COLDEN: Petition of approximately 22,500 residents of the Seventeenth Congressional District of California, asking that radio stations be given the same privileges enjoyed by the public press, and that radio stations should be permitted, without interference, to broadcast any lawful programs that they may choose to broadcast, and that persons or corporations who may attempt by coercion or other wrongful methods to prevent such broadcasting shall be restrained therefrom; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1800. By Mr. CONNERY: Petition of certain citizens of the Seventh District of Massachusetts, protesting against censorship of radio broadcasts; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1801. Also, resolutions of the City Council of Revere, Mass., endorsing President Roosevelt's proposal for congressional action to guarantee the bonds issued by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

1802. Also, resolutions of Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Winthrop, Mass., petitioning Congress to take favorable action on the Patman motion picture bill, H.R. 6097; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1803. By Mr. DONDERO: Petition of citizens of the Seventeenth Congressional District of Michigan, protesting against wrongful threats, coercion, and other improper influence preventing many radio stations from broadcasting the message of truth and depriving millions of American citizens of the privilege of hearing what they wish to hear, and particularly the message of Judge Rutherford, and ask that Congress safeguard the inherent rights of the American people relative to the radio; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1804. By Mr. FITZPATRICK: Petition of the Board of Supervisors of Westchester County, N.Y., urging the continuance of the Federal Civil Works program during the winter months, and that after the winter months be gradually decreased until the unemployed can be absorbed in other public-works projects or private employers; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1805. By Mr. FISH: Petition and protest of 2,260 signers; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1806. By Mr. FULMER: Concurrent resolution, passed by the Legislature of South Carolina, memorializing the Congress of the United States to pass legislation permitting business concerns to share in the benefits of Federal relief through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

1807. By Mr. GOODWIN: Petition of some 2,579 residents of the Twenty-seventh Congressional District of the State of New York, urging that Congress take action to safeguard the inherent rights of the American people in the matter of radio broadcasting; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1808. Also, communication from mayor and trustees of the village of Chatham, Columbia County, N.Y., urging the continuation of the Civil Works Administration policy until the slack of unemployment is taken up by the wheels of industry; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1809. Also, petition of men of Civil Works Administration, projects 10-a-18 and 10-a-19, signed by J. L. Landt et al., Valatie, Columbia County, N.Y., referring to restoring the hours of labor and prolonging the activities of the Civil Works Administration; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1810. Also, petition of National Council of the Steuben Society of America, New York City, concerning the so-called "boycott movement" against German goods; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1811. By Mr. HESS: Petition signed by various citizens of the Second Congressional District of Ohio, protesting against censorship of the radio; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1812. By Mr. HOLLISTER: Petition of Herbert H. Gildehaus et al., residents of the First Congressional District, Ohio, relating to the regulation of radio broadcasting stations; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1813. By Mr. HOOPER: Petition of various citizens of the Third Congressional District of Michigan, protesting against an alleged censorship on radio messages; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1814. By Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota: Petition of Everett M. Burch et al., including 43,938 citizens of the State of Minnesota, protesting against the discontinuance of radio broadcasts, and to urge freedom of the use of the radio as medium of expression; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1815. By Mr. KINZER: Petition of William W. Weaver and about 7,000 other citizens and residents of Chester and Lancaster Counties, Pa., protesting against radio discrimination, and urging congressional action in the interest of the people in the matter of radio broadcasting; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1816. By Mr. KOCIALKOWSKI: Petition of residents of the Eighth Congressional District, Illinois, requesting Congress to act at once to safeguard the inherent rights of the American people relative to the radio; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1817. By Mr. KVALE: Resolution favoring further extension of Civil Works Administration projects, and protesting reduction of hours or rate of pay; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1818. By Mr. LAMBERTSON: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Atchison, Kans., and the Ladies' Circle of the Christian Church, of Everest, Kans., urging the passage of House bill 6097, providing higher moral standards for films entering interstate and international commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1819. By Mr. LINDSAY: Petition of Colonel John Jacob Astor Camp, No. 6, United Spanish War Veterans, Washington, D.C., concerning exemption of the United States Soldiers' Home from the domiciliary ruling; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1820. Also, petition of National Federation of Post Office Clerks, Washington, D.C., concerning restoration of Government wages; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1821. Also, petition of National American Wholesale Lumber Association, New York City, favoring the passage of House bill 6460; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

1822. By Mr. MAPES: Petition of 4,633 citizens of the Fifth Congressional District of Michigan, comprising Kent and Ottawa Counties, Mich., relative to the use of radio; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1823. By Mr. MERRITT: Petition of sundry citizens of Bridgeport, Stamford, Danbury, Norwalk, Greenwich, Bethel, Shelton, Springdale, Noroton, Noroton Heights, Glenbrook, Darien, New Canaan, Cos Cob, Riverside, Fairfield, Stratford, Stepney, in the State of Connecticut, protesting against certain interference through censorship of radio broadcasting; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1824. By Mr. MORAN: Petition of the Governor and Executive Council of the State of Maine, recommending establishment of official gateway to Arcadia National Park, Maine; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

1825. By Mr. PEYSER: Petition and protest against censorship of radio broadcasting; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1826. By Mr. REID of Illinois: Petition signed by about 9,500 residents of the Eleventh Congressional District of Illinois, protesting against unjust censorship of certain radio broadcasting; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1827. By Mr. RUDD: Petition of Thomas Jefferson Post, No. 541, American Legion, New York City, favoring the repeal of Public Law No. 2 of the Seventy-third Congress; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1828. Also, petition of Colonel John Jacob Astor Camp, No. 6, United Spanish War Veterans, Washington, D.C., with reference to the United States Soldiers' Home, Washington, D.C., etc.; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

1829. Also, petition of National American Wholesale Lumber Association, New York City, favoring the passage of House bill 6460 to amend the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

1830. By Mr. SADOWSKI: Petition of the common council, city of Detroit, Mich., requesting continuance of civil-works program; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1831. Also, petition of the Detroit Board of Commerce, opposing amendment of section 131 of the Revenue Act of 1932; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1832. By Mr. SEGER: Petition of Robert Haines and other residents of Paterson, N.J., and vicinity, protesting against radio censorship; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1833. By Mr. SMITH of West Virginia: Petition signed by citizens of Beckley and other communities in West Virginia, protesting against attempts made to influence the Radio Commission to prevent the broadcasting of programs that are of public interest, convenience, and necessity; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1834. By Mr. SUTPHIN: Memorial of the Essex County Medical Society, of Newark, N.J., favoring enactment of Senate bills 1944, 2000, and House bill 6110; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1835. By Mr. TARVER: Petition signed by J. Y. Denton and several thousand other residents of the seventh district of Georgia, protesting against wrongful interference with radio broadcasts of any lawful programs and asking legislation providing heavy penalties where coercion or other wrongful methods are used to prevent the broadcasting of programs of public interest, convenience, and necessity; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1836. By Mr. TERRELL of Texas: petition of approximately 5,000 citizens of Texas, memorializing Congress against censorship of broadcasting speeches over the radio, and demanding freedom of speech as well as freedom of religion and freedom of press; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1837. By Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois: Petition of residents of the Fourteenth Congressional District of Illinois, requesting Congress to act at once to safeguard the inherent rights of the American people relative to the radio; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1838. By Mr. WEAVER: Petition of various citizens of Buncombe and other counties in North Carolina, regarding the regulation of radio broadcasting; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1839. By Mr. WITHROW: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing the Congress of the United States to amend the income tax law, providing for a deduction of State income tax paid from the Federal income tax; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1840. By Mrs. CLARKE of New York: Petition of Edward S. Buckland and approximately 2,500 citizens of the Thirty-fourth Congressional District of New York, protesting against unjust censorship of radio broadcasting, and urging the safeguarding of the inherent rights of the American people relative to the radio; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1841. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the city of Bedford, Ohio, regarding passage of workers' unemployment and social insurance bill; to the Committee on Labor.

SENATE

FRIDAY, JANUARY 26, 1934

(Legislative day of Tuesday, Jan. 23, 1934)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a.m. on the expiration of the recess.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE OF APPROPRIATION FOR FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION (S.DOC. NO. 121)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Federal Trade Commission, fiscal year 1935, in the sum of $500,000, of which sum $150,000 is to be immediately available, to provide an additional amount for carrying into effect the provisions of the Securities Act of 1933, approved May 27, 1933, and for work in connection with the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF WAR FINANCE CORPORATION (IN LIQUIDATION)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the War Finance Corporation (in liquidation), covering the period from January 1, 1933, to December 31, 1933, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

INFORMATION RELATIVE TO PROCESSING TAXES (S.DOC. NO. 122)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution 121, agreed to January 8, 1934, information relative to processing taxes imposed under the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

REPORT OF FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, submitting, pursuant to law, the first report of the operations of that administration covering the period from May 27 (the date of organization) to December 31, 1933, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Carolina, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

A concurrent resolution to memorialize the Department of Agriculture of the United States to maintain the present compensatory tax schedules on all fibers used in competition with cotton

Whereas the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States will hold a meeting at Washington, D.C., on January 25 instant, for the purpose of reconsidering the compensatory tax on paper, with the possibility of its reduction or removal; and

Whereas it is the sense of the General Assembly of South Carolina that the compensatory tax on paper, and all other competing fibers with cotton, shall at least remain as now fixed by the Department of Agriculture so long as the processing tax on cotton remains effective: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That we memorialize the Department of Agriculture of the United States to adhere to the schedule of compensatory taxes on paper and upon all fibers used in competition with cotton so long as the processing tax remains on cotton. That to remove or to lower the compensatory taxes on these fibers and at the same time maintain the processing tax on cotton would invite and encourage the use and consumption of the nontaxed fibers and lessen the demand for cotton products, of which we now have a great surplus; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the honorable the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States and to the Senators and Congressmen from South Carolina and to the clerks of both branches of the Congress.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Columbia, S.C., January 24, 1934.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of a resolution adopted by the house of representatives and concurred in by the senate.

[SEAL] J. WILSON GIBBES,
Clerk of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to take certain action for the relief and rehabilitation of the dairy industry

Whereas Wisconsin cannot enjoy economic recovery until its great dairy industry is rehabilitated and stabilized; and

Whereas the stabilization of the dairy industry cannot be accomplished until some outlet is provided for the huge surplus of dairy products and the price level of such products is substantially raised; and

Whereas the Federal agricultural relief program has directly benefited certain branches of the agricultural industry by making provision for the payment of more than $600,000,000 as bonuses in the Corn and Hog Belt, the Wheat Belt, and the Cotton Belt, as direct aid to the farmers in these sections; and

Whereas, of this allotment, agricultural communities in the Corn and Hog Belt will receive $350,000,000, Iowa alone receiving over $65,000,000; and communities in the Wheat and Cotton Belts will receive in each case about $160,000,000, of which Kansas will receive as a wheat bonus $30,000,000 and North Dakota, $15,000,000; and in addition thereto a considerable amount has already been paid to tobacco farmers for acreage reduction; and

Whereas no bonus of any kind is in sight for the dairy industry, the greatest of all farm industries, nor is there any effective program for the relief of the dairy industry; and

Whereas a program providing for a reduction of one fifth of the dairy herds and an increase in the price of dairy products of 25 percent would afford immediate and needed relief to the dairy farmer and would tend to bring back the price level of dairy products to the 1926 level: Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That this legislature respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to give prompt attention to the question of economic rehabilitation of the dairy industry by including in the Federal agricultural relief program a proposal for reduction in dairy herds and increase in the price of dairy products substantially as above set forth; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to both Houses of the Congress, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

THOMAS J. O'MALLEY,
President of the Senate.
R. A. COBBAN,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
C. T. YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JOHN J. SLOCUM,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Joint resolution memorializing Federal authorities to confine all contracts to be let for material and work to be used on or in connection with P.W.A. projects to American firms and corporations

Whereas the P.W.A. program is a great national project forwarded at the expense of the American taxpayers; and

Whereas economic conditions at the present time are such that any public money spent for construction projects should be utilized to give employment to the maximum number of American citizens: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby respectfully memorializes the Federal officials who have charge of the letting of contracts for any Federal construction project connected with the P.W.A. program, including contracts for the purchase of equipment and materials, to exclude from consideration any foreign corporation or other bidders, and to let such contracts only to American citizens and American firms and corporations, and to require that all material used in such projects shall be manufactured in the United States, and that only American labor be employed: Be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of the Interior, and to the Presiding Officers of both Houses of the Congress of the United States.

THOMAS J. O'MALLEY,
President of the Senate.
R. A. COBBAN,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
C. T. YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JOHN J. SLOCUM,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing Congress to amend the income tax law, providing for a deduction of State income tax paid from Federal income tax, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

(See joint resolution printed in full when presented by Mr. DUFFY on the 25th instant.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the council of the city of Bedford, Ohio, favoring the passage of workers' unemployment and social insurance legislation, and also the making of an appropriation to continue the operation of the Civil Works Administration, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas presented telegrams in the nature of memorials from Thomas B. Pryor, of Fort Smith, Ark., and R. E. Wiley and Henry Donham, of Little Rock, Ark., remonstrating against the contemplated use of several million dollars of Public Works funds for the purchase of trucks to transport National Guard men as being detrimental to the railroads, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. STEPHENS, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1077) for the relief of Lueco R. Gooch, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 235) thereon.

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 254. An act for the relief of Fred H. Cotter (Rept. No. 236); and

S. 413. An act for the relief of Edith N. Lindquist (Rept. No. 237).

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (S. 1853) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to execute an agreement of indemnity to the First Granite National Bank, Augusta, Maine, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 238) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. TRAMMELL:

A bill (S. 2493) to establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington February 6, 1922, and at London April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties; to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 2494) for the relief of Fred Edward Nordstrom; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CLARK:

A bill (S. 2495) for the relief of Minnie D. Hines; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 2496) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of William W. Danenhower; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McGILL:

A bill (S. 2497) to correct the military record of Judson B. Isbester (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NEELY:

A bill (S. 2498) for the relief of Herbert E. Guthrie; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HAYDEN:

A bill (S. 2499) to define the exterior boundaries of the Navajo Indian Reservation in Arizona, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SMITH:

A bill (S. 2500) to aid in relieving the existing national emergency through the free distribution to the needy of cotton and cotton products; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 2501) for the relief of Dr. R. N. Harwood (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TRAMMELL:

A bill (S. 2502) to authorize until June 30, 1935, contracts for and purchase of printing supplies and stationery in the locality of certain Government activities; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A joint resolution (S.J.Res. 77) for the relief of W. K. Richardson; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON IRRIGATION AND RECLAMATION

Mr. ADAMS submitted the following resolution (S.Res. 156), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation hereby is authorized to employ an assistant clerk for the remainder of the present session of Congress, to be paid at the rate of $2,000 per annum from the contingent fund of the Senate.

THE POSITION OF SILVER IN THE WORLD

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have received a number of letters asking my opinion as to the effect of the London silver agreement on the position of silver in the world, particularly with respect to the effect it may have on its market price in the world. I have here a letter written by me in response to that question and some other statements made in regard to it and also notifications of the ratification of that agreement by certain governments. I ask to have these matters printed in the RECORD for the information of the Senate.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D.C., January 25, 1934.

Mr. E. R. COOMBES,
Editor the Mining Congress Journal,
Munsey Building, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. COOMBES: Permit me to express my pleasure that you have honored me by publishing in your journal the extemporaneous speech that I delivered before the mining congress in December entitled "The Position of Silver in the World."

I regret that by reason of my absence from Washington I did not have an opportunity to revise the text of my remarks. No blame attaches to you in this matter, of course, as a stenographic transcript was sent to my office. The figures quoted by me are correctly set out in the printed article. Therefore, revising of the address was unnecessary.

Since this speech was delivered the President has issued his proclamation providing for the opening of the mints of the United States to the coinage of silver mined in the United States and its dependencies subsequent to the date of the proclamation.

The Government of the United States takes half of the bullion tendered as seigniorage and coins the balance for the tenderer of the silver. This, in effect, means that the miner is receiving 64½ cents an ounce for his silver. This in no way fixes the price of silver even in the United States, because the producer of silver is at liberty to hold his silver for a higher price or sell it anywhere in the world. He is assured, however, at the present time of a price 50 percent above the world price.

If the world price of silver rises to 64½ cents an ounce it will be obligatory upon the President to raise the price of American silver because he is obligated in the agreement between the United States and other governments to take into the Treasury of the United States 24,461,000 ounces of silver annually from the mined production for a period of 4 years.

If foreigners should outbid our Government for our silver, then the President could not carry out this agreement, because there will probably not be in excess of 24,461,000 ounces of silver produced in 1934. He will increase the bid for United States silver to meet foreign bidding by reducing the amount of bullion that the Government takes for seigniorage.

This process may go on—and I believe it will go on—until the miner will receive coined silver dollars for all of his bullion, which means that he will be receiving $1.29 an ounce for his silver, or the parity price based on the ratio of 16 to 1.

I am satisfied that the world price is going to advance. The London agreement, which has been ratified by India, United States, Australia, and Mexico, and which undoubtedly will soon be ratified by the other parties to the agreement, namely, Canada, Peru, China, and Spain, will result in there being only approximately 160,000,000 ounces of silver on the world market in 1934.

When the people of the Orient and other peoples who use silver as the reservoir of their wealth and a medium of exchange become aware of this fact, they will do as they have always done in the past—go into the world market and bid for silver. It is the history of these peoples that as silver rises in price their bids increase. When there is a bear movement in silver and silver starts down, they sell silver and buy gold. When silver starts up and they believe it will continue to rise, they sell gold and buy silver.

It may take 2 or 3 months for the world market to absorb the speculative silver that has accumulated in New York to meet the demands on the silver exchange.

The President's proclamation, while it recognizes silver as money, was not intended so much to establish a policy of the United States as it was to constitute a ratification of the London agreement. In his message he stated that he did not desire to make any further recommendation to Congress with regard to silver until he had ascertained the results of the London agreement. That agreement will undoubtedly be completely ratified in the near future. I feel, however, that the President's action and his attitude toward silver may be interpreted to mean that the position of silver as a world money, free of discrimination, will soon be restored.

The President is leading an evolution—not only in our monetary system but in the monetary systems of the world. He is doing it with extraordinary success, and we should follow and support him.

With best wishes for the success of the Mining Congress and of your journal, I beg to remain,

Sincerely yours,

KEY PITTMAN.

[From the Mining Congress Journal, January 1934. Address before Mining Congress, Washington, Dec. 17, 1933]

THE POSITION OF SILVER IN THE WORLD

By Hon. KEY PITTMAN

In a short extemporaneous address I find it quite difficult to know how even to approach the silver problem. I think the great trouble about the silver problem is that it is generally written about by those who know nothing about the production and consumption of metals. They know all about the theory of economics; they are perfectly familiar with what we understand as monetary systems.

Another error that is made is the belief that no one is interested in this subject except the comparatively few producers of silver throughout the world. Now, if that assumption were true, it would be a great waste of time to bring a matter of this kind to the consideration of the American Mining Congress or to the Congress of the United States, or to a great gathering such as we had in London a few months ago where 66 governments were represented.

As a matter of fact, those 66 governments did not consider the question as only a commodity question. The United States, Canada, Mexico, Peru, Ecuador, and Australia produce nearly all of the silver that is produced in the world. If the matter was of interest solely from the commodity standpoint, then you would only expect those governments to be interested and not the rest of the 66 governments that were interested. Just that in itself is an answer to the unfortunately ignorant discussion of this matter purely from a commodity standpoint.

At London there were two things presented, and they were presented on behalf of the United States. The first was a resolution dealing with the whole monetary standpoint. I had the honor on behalf of our delegation as a member of the monetary commission to present our monetary resolution. Probably because I presented it, most of the press of the world only took note of that part of the resolution dealing with silver. As a matter of fact, the resolution dealt with both gold and silver and was prepared before we left Washington, was discussed in the informal conferences held here in Washington between our Government and the representatives of various governments who came here.

The gold part of that resolution was substantially this, as I remember it: "It is the sense of the governments represented at this conference that governments return to the gold-standard measure of international exchange as soon as practicable."

The question arose as to what the word "practicable" meant. The Japanese delegate said, "It is not practical for us to return to the gold standard at the present time because we haven't the gold reserves, and we can't obtain them. We desire, however, to return to the gold-standard measure of international exchange as soon as possible."

Lord Hailshan arose, representing the delegation from England, he was a member of the Cabinet, and as a member of the Cabinet, the Secretary of War, and he said: "If I understand the delegate from the United States, he means by the word 'practical' that each government is to determine for itself the time of the return to the gold-standard exchange and the ratio." As that was my understanding of it, I accepted that amendment.

That was unanimously adopted by all of the 66 governments. As a matter of fact, under the rule of the League of Nations which governed that body, everything must be adopted unanimously. They take no votes on it because if there is an objection of a government to it, a substantial objection, and that cannot be overcome, realizing that you can't compel a government to do anything, that subject is passed.

When that part of the resolution was adopted they separated that portion of it dealing with the silver question. The first issue that arose was whether we should treat silver as a commodity the same as they were trying to treat wheat and cotton, or whether it should be treated from the monetary standpoint as money. The decision of that would cause it to be referred either to the economic commission or to the monetary commission. After a very full discussion of the subject they decided to discuss it from the monetary standpoint and it was referred to the monetary commission, and there the questions were considered and determined.

The silver resolution that was adopted by the 66 governments was substantially this: They all agreed on behalf of their governments, as far as they could bind their governments, that they would no longer permit the debasement of silver coin but would return to at least 0.800 fine silver coins as budgetary conditions permitted, that they would replace low-valued paper currency with silver coin, and that they would not permit legislation that could depreciate the value of silver on the market of the world. I think that is a substantial advance for 66 governments to unanimously agree to. As we know, the cause of the depreciation in the value of silver money is due entirely to prejudicial action of governments in the past, and when they agree to stop that, then you know that, sooner or later, the law of supply and demand will govern. I will get to that question a little later.

I may say, just in passing, that the Government of France is now replacing its low-valued paper currency, its 5- and 10-franc notes, little disagreeable shinplasters, with silver coins, and is carrying that out now.

In addition to that, the resolution that we took over to London provided that there should be every effort made to bring about an understanding or agreement between those countries producing large quantities of silver and those countries holding or using large quantities of silver. In fact, that was a condition of the adoption of the main resolution.

The reason of that was plain. It was first the debasement of the silver coins of Great Britain, France, Belgium, and other countries, and the consequent dumping of the surplus silver derived from such debasement upon the market of the world that started the downward price of silver. But they said, "Why should we desist from this practice if India, who holds probably a billion ounces of silver in the form of silver rupees, is going on arbitrarily without restriction and possibly without reason to melt up those silver coins and dump them on the market of the world in any quantities at any time at any price? Therefore, we want you to obtain that agreement."

Two days before that conference adjourned we obtained the agreement, signed up. That agreement provided that the Government of China would not sell any silver derived from the debasement of melting up of silver coins, that the Government of Spain would not sell to exceed 5,000,000 ounces a year for a period of 4 years commencing January 1, 1934, at the end of 4 years they would go under the general resolution of never again debasing of melting up silver coins. The Government of India agreed to limit their sales of silver to 35,000,000 ounces of silver annually commencing on the 1st of January, 1934, for a period of 4 years, and after that they would go under the general resolution and would sell no more silver derived from the debasement of melting up of silver coins.

There was a limitation, there was a certainty that people could count on, but, on the other hand, the producing Governments of the United States, Canada, Mexico, Peru, and Australia are the Governments to offset this limited oversupply by taking from their own mines 35,000,000 ounces of silver a year for 4 years during the same period of time. That neutralized the limited oversupply.

In that understanding there was also a separate arrangement between the United States, Canada, Mexico, Peru, and Australia as to the amount each of these Governments should take off of the market. The United States was required to bear the large part of the burden of that for several reasons. In the first reason, the addition of 30 millions of currency a year to the currency of the United States is a negligible thing; the addition of 30 millions of currency in Canada might be disturbing in its effect upon their monetary system. Again, taking into consideration our wealth, the amount of circulating currency that we have, the relation of our silver currency to our gold currency, justified the demand that we take the particular burden of it.

Not only that, but those Governments were aware of the fact that two sessions ago I introduced a bill in the Congress of the United States requiring our Government to purchase at least 24,000,000 ounces of silver a year for a period of 4 years. That was all of the silver we produced last year, and that was intended to purchase all of that silver and to pay for it either with standard silver dollars into which this silver would be coined or silver certificates as they saw fit. So we were required to purchase of the 35 millions 24 millions.

The Banking and Currency Committee of the United States Senate, the majority have already approved unofficially the purchase of 24,000,000 ounces of silver a year for 4 years. I did not urge a report on that because I desired to wait until after the Economic Conference has acted.

The President has full authority to carry out that understanding. India already had carried it out. The Indian Council passed an order, which is a law in India, prohibiting the sale of over 35,000,000 ounces of silver a year commencing on the 1st of January, 1934, for a period of 4 years. They have acted. Now it is up to us to act. We have the authority to act. The President has the authority to act.

In the so-called "Thomas amendment" it was provided that the President of the United States might fix the ratio between gold and silver and that he might coin silver at that ratio. It was also provided in that same act that if an agreement was reached at the world conference, which Congress authorized the President to participate in, he should carry out that agreement. Now, he has this power. If he doesn't see fit to exert it then Congress undoubtedly will exert it, because it is a moral obligation imposed upon us because our Government with the authority of Congress initiated this understanding. I think that you will find that it will be carried out either by the President or by Congress.

It may be carried out in many ways, either by opening the mint to the coinage of American silver, which would take off at least 24,000,000 ounces a year, deducting a certain portion of the bullion so deposited as seigniorage and as cost to theh Government, or through direct purchase by act of Congress. That is the situation with regard to silver as it stands today.

Now let me briefly go to the more important phase of it for a few minutes. It is contended constantly by economists of reputation that the price of silver does not in any way, or not materially, affect our export trade, that China, for instance, does not buy from us with silver, but she buys from us with her exports.

In theory that is true. You take two well-developed countries such as Germany and France and the balance of trade would probably limit exports and imports. It was not true in the United States in the early days when we had this vast territory back of us with raw resources; we had no money to start with here, it all came in from somewhere else. We finally melted up the gold and silver and made it into our own money. A prospector would go out in the hills with a slab of bacon and some beans and a burro and he would find a mine, a gold mine or a silver mine, or a copper mine or a coal mine, or what not; he would sell that to a British syndicate for something, $50,000, $100,000, or a million. That man had this money with which to buy anywhere in the world. He didn't get it from exports; that money didn't come in from exports. You have got to get down not only to the invisible income such as everyone recognizes, money sent back to China by the Chinese here, back to Italy by the Italians here, the tourist trade, and those things.

But added to that is another factor which always exists in the development of a pioneer country, and that is the creation of a new wealth by discovery and by making it available for the world. That is the position of China today, a country as large as the United States and nearly all of Mexico combined, with nothing but the fringe of it developed in great cities, that vast country waiting for development, 400,000,000 of energetic people wanting to have their standard raised, and in the last few years they have made remarkable strides toward it.

When I was over in China in 1925 there had been little change; when I was over there in 1931 I saw the girls on the street wearing American clothes, with their hair bobbed, and wearing American hats and American shoes. Our trade commenced to do well with China, and so did Great Britain's trade.

But what happened? They may have some other explanation for it, but we have lost since the fall of silver started in 1928, 75 percent of our manufactured exports to China. Oh, but they will say we lost it elsewhere. We did; but elsewhere there was poverty and distress such as we have experienced in 3 years, but during that time in China there was a boom going on every minute, and is today. Why? Because China has become industrialized. When the exchange value of the Chinese money was so low that it took from four to five of their dollars to exchange for one of ours, with which to buy our goods, they ceased to buy anything except what they had to have. And what they are buying is raw material.

I don't want to take your time with figures, but let's see what happened to Great Britain in that period of time. In 1928 Great Birtain exported to China 153,399,100 square yards of cotton piece goods. In 1929 it dropped to 149,000,000, in 1930 it dropped to 41,000,000, in 1931 to 41,000,000 and just a little less.

Now, what happened to us? Take our exports of raw cotton to England. In 1928 it was about 1,997,000 bales. In 1931 it was 899,000 bales, less than half. Why? Because Great Britain is our great market for raw cotton and China was one of her great markets, and India, too, for her cotton piece goods. She not only lost her cotton piece-goods market to China but she lost it to India and Mexico and South America and everywhere else in tropical countries where they use it. And why? Why, the economists will say that we lost it everywhere, but that isn't a fact. China was prosperous.

Take the report of that great commission that was sent over from London to China in 1930 and 1931 under Sir Ernest Thompson called the Economic and Monetary Commissions of the Far East. What did they report? They reported these facts and they gave us the cause of it, that the low price of silver had lowered the exchange value of the Chinese money with the pound sterling to such an extent that the Chinese couldn't afford to buy British piece goods. They couldn't buy it from Japan, and what did Japan do? Japan did what the British did; they went into China with their gold, they exchanged it for the cheap silver money on a ratio of 4 or 5 to 1, bought factories, enlarged factories, built new factories, and put the Chinese to work making cotton piece goods. That market is gone forever, and it is going every day of the world.

Take for instance our own exports to that country, and it is quite interesting. Here is what happens: Apparently we were all right. In 1929 we exported to China of raw products $40,000,000 worth; in 1930, $38,000,000 worth; in 1931, $55,000,000 worth, an increase of 38 percent. That is raw products, that is cotton.

But what happened to the manufactured stuff? In 1929, $2,531,000; in 1930, $1,898,000, but those figures are added to that, that is higher; in 1931, $1,119,667. In other words, our exports dropped from the index figure of 100 in 1929 to 43 in 1931. Those are the last exact figures I have.

Now, what happened to silver during that period of time? Silver was around 60 cents an ounce when this thing started, and it moved on down in 1931 to 25.5 cents an ounce. The figures are so simple, so plain, as to what is happening to us. The reports of this great commission from Great Britain, which was under the auspices of the cabinet member in charge of the Board of Trade, show it. In their reports they put their finger on it, and they state that it is the duty of Great Britain to take the initiative in removing the obstacles to the natural rise in the price of silver. That is Great Britain. Great Britain doesn't produce any silver except possibly in Canada and Australia a little bit. They were not interested in the price of silver except as it affected the commerce of the world. Why, everyone now is getting so they understand the effect of depreciated currency on exports and imports; everyone knows now who knows anything about exports and imports that the Government with its depreciated money has an advantage in export trade and a disadvantage in import trade.

They understand that with regard to the currencies of countries that were formerly on the gold standard, but for some mysterious reason they can't understand that the same law applies to countries who have nothing but silver money. It doesn't make any difference what kind of money it is—as a matter of fact, today in the world there is no kind of money, there is no gold standard; they might call it a gold standard in France and Switzerland or Holland or Italy, but it is a managed-gold standard and so tied in and held in that it is just a little local secret among themselves; there is no such thing among the great nations of the world as a gold standard, except in this: It is the intention of Great Britain and it is the intention of every one of those 66 governments to go back to the use of gold as the measure of the value of currency in international trade and as a limitation of issue, and if it wasn't for that gold wouldn't be worth much more than iron is today. They are bidding for gold because they know that gold is scarce, and they believe that some way, somehow, sometime it will be reestablished as the measure of the value of the currencies of the world; and I believe it will, too.

Now, getting down to bimetallism, there are two different definitions of bimetallism. We have bimetallism in the United States today, but it is not the same kind of bimetallism as Holland has; it is not the same kind of bimetallism that we had in the beginning of this Government; it is not the same kind that we had down to 1873. Originally our bimetallism meant that our measure of the dollar was 23.22 grains of gold—it was a little more than that on the start, but it is that now—and that the other measure of the dollar was 371.25 grains of silver—two measures—and that you could pay your debts in either measure until 1873, of course, when we adopted the single gold-standard measure.

But that hasn't made any particular difference to us here except to this extent: Right today 12 percent of the currency of this country is silver, and that silver is running on a parity with all gold currencies and has run on a parity with all gold currencies through this century, and it has run on the parity of 16 to 1. I know, if you use that term "16 to 1", somebody will immediately think you are crazy, but the reason it is 16 to 1 is that 371.25 is about 16 times 23.22. In other words, it takes 16 times as many grains of silver to measure a dollar as it does gold.

Why was that done? That is not just an arbitrary thing that happened. Napoleon, way back in the early days of 1818, established the ratio at 15 to 1, after he had had the greatest statisticians and scholars of that age determine the preciosity of gold and silver, and they determined that the production of the two was as 15 to 1 and that, the demand being exactly the same for money, the ratio of exchange should be 15 to 1.

Great Britain wanted to go them one better so they said, "We don't think it is quite that good, we will call it 15.5 to 1," and then of course they traded in it, they bought silver in Great Britain, carried it across the straits and coined it in France at a half a cent an ounce profit. That caused gold to flow into Great Britain, silver back into France, and then Great Britain having nothing but gold declared the single gold standard in 1818 and made the first discrimination against the use of silver as money. From time to time they have discriminated against its use for money.

Then they say that the law of supply and demand is working. Why, take away from gold the possibility of ever again being used as money, and I doubt if it will be as valuable as tin. What do you want with it if you don't use it for money? Half of it is used for jewelry and the arts and sciences. What would become of the other half if you didn't need it for money? Give exactly the same demand for silver for use as money as you do to gold and the law of supply and demand would undoubtedly run right along.

Today we have nearly $800,000,000 in silver in circulation in this country, 12 percent of all of our currency. Every one of those dollars today is circulating and paying debts at $1.29 an ounce. Nobody ever questioned it. Our Government since 1873 has made about $265,000,000 in profit buying the silver from the miner and selling it to the banker and the grocer and the merchant to do business with. There hasn't been any strain on our credit. In 1900, 30 percent of all the circulating currency of the United States was silver. We could increase the silver circulation in this country $1,500,000,000 and then we would not reach the proportion of silver currency to gold currency of 1900.

Why should there be any great fear of inflation even if we coin the annual production of this country of 24,000,000 ounces a year at a value of $1.29 an ounce? It wouldn't add but a little over 30 millions a year to our currency of this country, and they could keep adding to it until they had added $1,500,000,000 before it would be as was the proportion of 1900. What is all this talk about being afraid that you will disturb the ratio and bearing of the currencies of the United States by any of these small acts? It is perfectly absurd.

Why is it that people want gold? It is not a serviceable metal, practically. There are not enough teeth to be filled to use a fifth of it. They want it for the same reason they have wanted it throughout the ages, because it is precious metal that is recognized as precious throughout the world from the time of barter and trade when they wanted to reach further out and have a substitute for transferring a cow for a horse, they found out that a chunk of metal about as big as this match case was scarce, and that if they took that chunk of metal for the cow, this man somewhere else would take that chunk of metal for a horse. It was the scarcity of it. The functions of money are to transport things, like a railroad; not only that, but to measure excess labor for the future, to hold it to hand down to your children and to posterity, to meet the hard times of poverty. But not only that, it must be so limited in its production that it will be a sound measure of money. It must be found everywhere, not like platinum, in a few places.

So we find that from the beginning of time peoples everywhere have recognized that there were two precious metals, gold and silver, that nature limited their production, and that natural limitations gave it its value as money and made it stable. They not only found that out in the course of time, but even before professors and statisticians existed and roved the country, they themselves found out that there was just about 15 or 16 or 14 times as much silver as gold. They established the ratio themselves in their trades with silver before it had the stamp of a weight on it, or a government.

The same thing that causes people, our most intelligent, educated people, our great bankers, for instance, to long to get the gold into their hands, is because they don't trust anything else.

Well, I don't blame them much. No one who can see what is happening to the great powerful governments of Europe and their paper money, which has no intrinsic value, no value whatever outside of their own country, can help but fear what we call fiat paper money.

I have read the stories of Barney Baruch in the papers about the terrible destruction of fiat money. I thoroughly agree with him. He doesn't have to paint the history of Europe, the mark, we all know it. That is the reason Barney wants gold, and if he couldn't get gold he would want silver, just as the Chinese want silver and the Indian wants silver. The Indian there has his wife covered with bracelets, anklets, breastplates of silver, because the Indian woman can't inherit but she can keep that and when poverty comes, when the drought comes, she cuts off a little piece of that silver and takes it in to the bazaar and buys food and clothing with it.

During the good times they have hoarded. There are probably 8,000,000,000 ounces of silver hoarded in India. Nothing on earth could drag it out of India save necessity, poverty, famine, distress.

When silver was $1.38 an ounce, the highest in the history of the world, in 1919, I think it was, the Chinese were buying more silver than they ever bought before. The more valuable it becomes, the more they want it.

When there is a bear movement on silver like India created, the Chinese speculators know that it is going down and they join in the selling movement and buy gold and hoard gold, and they have been hoarding gold in India and China to an estimated amount of probably a billion dollars.

But as silver starts up their gold comes out to buy silver and they buy silver. I wouldn't be afraid now to open the mints of the United States to the coinage of the silver of the world, because my studies of it have convinced me that you couldn't get over 250,000,000 to 300,000,000 ounces in here for coinage. As a matter of fact, when there is a tendency to draw silver to this country, China puts her embargo upon the exportation of silver because she doesn't intend to have her country denuded of silver. So with England.

All we have got to do is just simply to remove the Government restrictions and limitations that have been put on silver money. A rise in the price of silver doesn't make China buy from us. Some economist the other day said that in the first 8 months of this year our exports fell off 16 percent to China, and during that time the silver was 4 cents higher than it was in 1932. It takes a little period like that. But he forgets that the price of cotton went up from 5½ cents to 9 cents during that period of time and the rise in the price of silver was not near as high as the rise in the cost of cotton and wheat and other things. That is your statistician. He picks out a little speck, a little section and says, "Look at that," instead of taking an average of 3 or 4 years.

The price of silver dropped from 65 to 25.5. Measure your trade, your exports, as did Great Britain, and you will find out what has happened.

What I mean is this: Some of you members of the Mining Congress are engaged in coal mining, others in iron mining, others in silver mining, lead, gold, copper, zinc, whatnot, and therefore I am discussing the economics of this proposition.

Your automobile sales went to pieces in China. We sold 80 percent of all the automobiles sold in China, and yet Mr. Soong, the Minister of Finance, who was educated in this country and is a great banker, testified before the Economic Commission over in London: "Of course we can't afford to buy your trucks and your automobiles, because a little truck that we paid $1,200 for in our money 3 years ago we now pay $3,400 for in our money." They said, "But wouldn't China benefit by cheap silver? Isn't it industrializing China?"

He said, "Yes; it is industrializing the coast cities, but my ambition is to develop China, the great resources back of it, and I can't do it without credit. I can't keep my credit unless I can pay the service debt on the $500,000,000 of gold that we owe. When we borrowed that gold 1,000,000,000 Chinese dollars would pay it; today it takes 2,500,000,000 Chinese dollars to pay it. We can collect $4 on the hundred taxes in our silver dollars, but when we get to pay on the debt it is only $1. No government can live in China without credit, and no government in China can get credit until it can pay its foreign-service debts, and they can't pay the foreign-service debts when you value our money at one fourth or one fifth of your money."

There is your history. If only you who are interested in metals would carry the truth to the country, would answer the foolish articles that are written in the papers like that written by Mr. Robey here the other day, it would help. He said, "Why, there are only four or five States interested in silver; there are only probably 100,000 people directly interested in silver. The gross value of it last year was only about, I should say, $8,000,000. Why should we worry ourselves about that little crop?"

Well, we shouldn't if that was all there was to it, but it has never occurred to him ever to read the reports of these other countries on these various questions that stand undisputed. Why, our commerce today, and ever since silver went up above 40, our exports to China, have been increasing right along. Why doesn't he segregate that period? Of course, that difference of 4 cents an ounce between 1932 and the 8 months in 1933, when we had raised the cost of everything, was not a fair comparison.

They say, "If the Chinaman's bank account was doubled he wouldn't buy any more." Well, it is human nature that if you double a man's bank account he is going to buy just a little more. If you double my bank account, I would probably buy a new automobile instead of running the one that I have been running for 5 or 6 years. You give the Chinese dollar the purchasing power even that it had in 1926, 1927, and 1928, and for years, of 60 to 65 cents an ounce, and you would pretty nearly double his purchasing power in the United States, and allow him to pay interest on his national debt, you would allow him to borrow more money, you would allow him to carry out the program that that national government promised, and that was to build railroads and wagon roads and canals.

The only reason they couldn't carry it out and the only reason the national government of China was under fire was because they couldn't carry out the promise, and they couldn't carry out the promise because they had to buy these things outside of their country, where their currency was depreciated.

Now we are depreciating the dollar deliberately, there is no use talking about that, and for exactly the same reason that Great Britain depreciated the pound and France depreciated the franc, because a country with a depreciated currency compared with other currencies has the best of the export trade. France got it first and prospered all during the hard times; Great Britain, when she depreciated the pound, got it, and now we are getting it. That is all there is to it. But if we recognize that law with regard to export, why if we appreciate the currency of another country instead of depreciating ours, aren't we accomplishing the same thing? We are, and by appreciating or reestablishing the value of silver money throughout the world by comparison with our own currency, it has the same effect as the law of appreciation and depreciation, and over half the people of the world will have their purchasing power in our country, not at home but in our country, doubled, and they will buy from us. There isn't any question about that at all, and it is coming.

The question is, people are afraid to start to coining the silver of the world in the United States, and there is a basis for fear. While I may believe that only 250,000,000 to 300,000,000 ounces will come in here, others may say, "Why not 12,000,000,000 ounces? That exists in the world, why not have it come in?"

There is no proof it won't. It was that argument that did more to destroy the Bryan movement than any other argument that was ever offered. The cheap-money argument had not half to do with it as did the flood of silver into our country and the driving out of gold. It is for that reason that I feel that the logical, natural, easy step to take which will get support will first be to try it out by limiting the coinage to our silver that is produced in this country. We know how much that is. There never has been over 62,000,000 ounces. It certainly can't be that much more for a long time, because 80 percent of the silver that is produced in this country is a byproduct of the mining of copper, lead, and zinc, and until there is a demand for copper, lead, and zinc, until prosperity returns, then the production of silver cannot increase. It is a governor, it is a safety valve; there can be no such thing as the over-production of silver. Why, when silver was over $1 an ounce for 3 years and all of the mining companies sent their scouts and engineers and geologists out and took the old pillars out of mines and worked the old dumps over all throughout the world, the total increase over the prior period was only 25 percent, and a part of that was involved in the natural increase of about 3 percent per annum.

I say to you that the fear of all of this is based upon the willful ignorance of economists and statisticians and writers in going to the basic facts of production and consumption of these metals. They are not interested. They still preach that there is a great stream of silver flowing somewhere that may be poured in here and drive out the gold. Well, there isn't any danger of driving out the gold right at present, and in my opinion there never will be. If you should give the value to the silver of the world that we give to our $800,000,000 in this country, you would have a basic purchasing power of silver of $15,000,000,000 throughout the world instead of $5,000,000,000.

There isn't enough gold to reestablish the old gold standard, and every government knows it; there never will be enough gold to reestablish the old gold standard. There may be enough if it is in a closed circuit in central banks used solely for the purpose of the settlement of the balance of trade between countries, but if you are going to have sound local currency you have got to have it based on metal, and there won't be enough gold to base it both ways, and the logical, the sound, the safe way to do it is to base it on the other precious metal as a supplement to gold. Then you will have no fear of the issue of fiat money in this country or anywhere else throughout the world.

[Full translation of editorial from the El Nacional, Mexico City, Jan. 18, 1934]

SILVER AND SENATOR PITTMAN

The Governor of the State of Sonora, Don Rodolfo Elias Calles, has telegraphed to our Ambassador in Washington, asking him to invite the American Senator KEY PITTMAN, in the name of that State, to be guest of honor at a celebration to be held in the city of Nogales by all the mining interests of the Republic. Senator PITTMAN, as is well known, is one of the most outstanding economists and one of the most persistent champions of the rehabilitation of silver. To him is due in large measure the fact that the authorities of the United States are directing the entire economy of the Nation to the sole end of fixing silver as the basis of all exchange (como divisa de todos los cambios) independently of the stipulations of the London convention. Now, at last, the stabilization of the dollar seems conclusive, by drastic measures and without losing sight of the increasing importance of silver.

There is, says President Roosevelt in his message to Congress of last Monday, a precious metal of importance, namely, silver, which has been used from time immemorial, not only as the metallic basis for the monetary systems but also as a medium of exchange. It is used in that form probably by half the population of the world and is to a great extent a decisive factor in international commerce.

Nevertheless, the President of the United States very prudently refrains from making definite conclusions so long as there are not available—as he says—better data regarding the results of the London convention and the measures which have been taken at home for the rehabilitation of silver. Meanwhile, the President asks the Congress of his country to approve a law whereby the Government is granted permanent and incontrovertible possession of all the gold, which amounts to $4,000,000,000. This last measure may be interpreted as a protective one, but also as its evident purpose is to remove gold from circulation and exchange, as a measure to establish an economy based exclusively on the power of silver; all the more so as the London convention liquidated, so to speak, the outworn bimetalist system, if not exactly by doing away with the importance of gold in the future (something impossible) at least, by delivering the new economy from an unbalanced system favorable in the last analysis to great capitalistic absorptions.

Now, the measures adopted by all or most of the nations substantiate the wise foresight of General Calles, embodied in the law which bears his name, under which silver took the place of gold in transactions, thus reestablishing tranquillity and stable exchange. Perhaps our economic problems bearing on international commerce would have disappeared or become less acute had the promulgation of the Calles law found the world converted to the silver standard (sometido a la plata). At home Mexico is particularly favored by the adoption and support of silver everywhere, for it should not be forgotten that we are the leading silver-producing country.

This explains and justifies the celebration which the authorities of Sonora are preparing in honor of Senator PITTMAN, as recognition of his tireless and fruitful labors in convincing the people and authorities of his country of the great necessity of giving to silver all the importance which is due it in the present and future commerce of the world. There are still, as President Roosevelt says, many uncertainties. Economists declare in favor of gold and silver, and other economists declare in favor of silver alone. But such uncertainties are a part of every period of transition in which custom and prejudice oppose all progress. Fortunately opinions are now beginning to agree, in view of the necessities, because necessities by their own despotic nature speak with more eloquence than cold reports, and not only do they speak, but they also command, under the severest penalties. Nearly all the political problems everywhere have ceded to economic problems, and the latter will command the attention of the world for many years. Assuredly the future will contain no problems of greater importance, since the masses of workers and the proletariate in general are augmenting their legal and social status. This will radically change the face of everything.

The happy proposal of the Governor of Sonora will have a glorious outcome when Senator PITTMAN makes his visit to Nogales. It will be an act of justice too little used in such matters; for, generally—as we have seen with much frequency among ourselves—credit is begrudged the living and glorification is reserved until after death. There has been greater resistance when it was a case of honoring personages living far away. But a people which can do honor to merit wherever it be found, whether at home or among aliens, is a people with a high sense of humanity. The act of homage of which we speak will be attended by high personages of both countries, and the noted guest of honor will be presented, as a souvenir, with an artistic Aztec calendar done in silver, weighing not less than 50 kilos. Mr. PITTMAN is convinced that the old economy, now on its death bed, should die, and the sooner the better, for it serves no purpose and obstructs all innovation; wherefore we need champions like him, a man who for a long time has inflexibly combatted routine and public opinion in his country until he brought about the rehabilitation—or more than the rehabilitation, the privileged position which it now holds—of silver in the commerce of the world.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 20, 1934.

The Honorable KEY PITTMAN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR PITTMAN: The Department has received information from the Australian High Commissioner at London, through the American Embassy there, that the international silver agreement signed at London July 22, 1933, has been ratified by the Parliament of the Commonwealth of Australia, and that the first quarterly deposit of silver will be made about March 31, 1934.

The Commissioner adds that a copy of the act of Parliament ratifying the agreement will be forwarded as soon as it is received from Australia.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM PHILLIPS,
Acting Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 24, 1934.

The Honorable KEY PITTMAN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR PITTMAN: The Department is in receipt of a despatch from the American Ambassador at Mexico City reporting that the Diario Oficial of January 9, 1934, contains a decree ratifying, on the part of Mexico, the silver agreement signed at London on July 22, 1933. It is presumed that official notification of its action will soon be given this Government by the Mexican Government.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN—ADDRESS BY REV. J. W. HILL

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, on Saturday forenoon at 11 o'clock, July 8, 1933, at Cedar Point, Ohio, before a session of the annual meeting of the Ohio Bar Association, an address was delivered on Lincoln, the Lawyer, by Rev. Dr. John Wesley Hill, chancellor of the Lincoln Memorial University, Cumberland Gap, Tenn.

The address was replete with the spirit and ideals of Lincoln as citizen and lawyer, an appropriate tribute to Lincoln on the approaching one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the birth of the great American, and the thirty-seventh anniversary of the founding of Lincoln Memorial University. In recognition of Lincoln's preeminence at the bar, no less than of the Lincoln Memorial University at Cumberland Gap, which is engaged in a practical work among the plain but ambitious youth of the southern highlands, the stock from which Lincoln came and which bears the name of the immortal American, I ask unanimous consent to print this address in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Chairman, I am happy in the privilege of this visit to my native State. Soon after arriving at my majority I was compelled, by the annihilating competition I encountered in Ohio, to move to fields less obnoxious to mediocrity.

Upon one occasion, while addressing a banquet in New York City, dwelling upon the transcendental attractions of my native State, I was challenged with the question: "If Ohio is such a great State, why didn't you stay there?"; to which I replied: "The competition was too great for me!"

We are gathered here today to pay tribute to Lincoln, the lawyer.

Rightly to analyze the greatness of Lincoln we must measure his background.

Oliver Wendell Holmes said that "the making of a great man must begin 150 years before he is born."

Early in the Civil War, the Darwinian theory was dawning. A group of soldiers were discussing it, when finally one of them exclaimed: "Boys, the rest of us may have sprung from monkeys, but only God Almighty could make such a man as Father Abraham!"

Understand, I am not assailing evolution. I come from Tennessee, near Dayton, where Bryan and Darrow fought it out.

The pioneer stock from which Lincoln came was born and bred under the spell of the ages. All the dim memories buried deep in their consciousness; the vague shadows far back in their history; the dangers lurking in the forest gloom; the phantom colors of the sky; the mystic voices in the murmuring trees; the reposeful hush of sylvan glades; the weird bewitching dreams that evolved the shadowy forest gods, Pan, Thor, and Woden, awoke echoes in the expanding soul of Abraham Lincoln and laid in him the foundation of forest fortitude.

In that environment Lincoln was born; through it he made his way.

In early life he became familiar with nature, with mystic and mysterious things, the springs of action and seeds of thought, the forms and forces, laws and growths of nature, the poem of the rising sum, the elegy of its setting, the epic of the star-lit night, the drama of the dawning.

Home and forest were alike to Lincoln—home at the feet of Nature, where you can see a real sun and learn the literature of stars and clouds and heavenly constellations; where you can hear the patter of the rain beating time with the rhythmic sighing of the winds; where Autumn chants her mournful threnody, Winter weaves her winding sheet of death; and where Spring, with her wizardry of sight and scent and sound, bursts into the minstrelsy of the resurrection; where every field is a patch of paradise, every flower a fragrant thought, every tree a burning bush in a fairyland of wonder, and you can preserve your self-respect in the country, where one "is an aggregation of atoms, while in the city he is an atom of aggregations."

Lincoln was "an aggregation of atoms."

He was an epitome of the universe, a compendium of creation, a cosmic revelation of the infinite.

He was schooled in poverty—not the poverty of the Old World, made despicable by centuries of submission to despotism, but the poverty of the New, in which the germ of manhood grows unrestrained by the demands of luxury and untainted by the poison of prodigality—the poverty that stands erect upon the bosom of gentle nature and entails neither the spirit of cringing nor fawning.

In the solitude of the forest he found God; in its sequential order he discerned law; in its democracy he developed his destiny.

His early reading was confined to six books—the Bible, Pilgrim's Progress, Robinson Cruso, Aesop's Fables, Weems' Life of Washington, and a History of the United States, later enriched and enlarged with the Statutes of Indiana and Blackstone's Commentaries.

Holland declares that "the poverty of Lincoln's library was the wealth of his mind."

No academy welcomed Lincoln to its shades. He did not go through a college, but several colleges went through him.

He would not take the risk of being "merely learned."

He was built upon a gigantic scale. Pericles once said: "I do not know how to play a fiddle, but I know how to transform a village into a city of world-wide influence and power."

Lincoln was not a fiddler but an archer. He could bend the bow of Ulysses. He shot to hit.

Bob Ingersoll, master of epigram and alliteration, declared, "Colleges are places where pebbles are polished and diamonds are dimmed."

Lincoln was not a polished pebble.

His was not the genius of gesture, the virtue of voice, the beauty of syntax, the vacuity of words, nor the exuberance of rhetoric.

He remembered the advice of Nestor to the Greek generals in their attack on Troy, when he said, "The secret of victory is in getting a good ready."

Lincoln could wait. He knew that for a steady light a tallow dip is more illuminating than a skyrocket.

His Harvard was the crude fireplace, before which he would study and stretch from one side of the room to another. A pine shovel was his writing tablet, on which he would copy his lesson, meditate, memorize, and scrape the shovel for another installment, literally scooping the ideas into his head. Then he would climb hand over hand along the pegs driven into the walls of the cabin and, throwing himself upon a pile of straw in the garret, he would masticate and assimilate and dream until faith lifted the thatched roof of his cramped shack above the stars and let in the light of things invisible, immortal, and divine.

Through long and lonely hours of wearisome struggle Lincoln the railsplitter, carpenter, boatsman, postmaster, clerk, and surveyor slowly advanced until his final admission to the bar, before which he practiced 23 crowded years and from which he stepped into the Presidency.

That his preparation for the law was painstaking, laborious, and thorough, those who knew him best were best able to judge.

To a student who applied early in his career for advice as to the best method of acquiring knowledge of the law, Lincoln, speaking from his own experience, said: "The mode is very simple, though irksome and tedious. Get the books, study, and master them.

"Begin with Blackstone's Commentaries, and when you have thoroughly familiarized yourself with its principles, take up Chitty's Pleadings, Greenleaf's Evidence, Story's Equity, and all books necessary to your legal education, and read, read, and work until you get there."

Stephen A. Douglas declared that, "Mr. Lincoln had no equal as an advocate before a jury"; Leonard Swett, himself one of the greatest advocates and a trial lawyer seldom equaled by any man of his generation, said, "If Lincoln ever had a superior before a jury, I have never met him." Judge David Davis, the circuit judge of the old eighth circuit of Illinois during the time Mr. Lincoln traveled that circuit, declared: "In all the elements that constitute the great lawyer Lincoln had few equals."

In his career at the bar he crossed swords in the arena of his profession with the greatest lawyers of his day, appearing as counsel in innumerable cases in all the courts, county and State, while in the Supreme Court of Illinois he appeared as counsel in 51 cases, winning verdicts in 31, and appearing as associate counsel in 124 cases, in which the parties in whose behalf he appeared were successful in 65. In 23 cases he appeared alone for the appellant or plaintiff in error, and he was successful in 14, while in 71 cases taken to the Supreme Court of Illinois by parties represented by him in which other counsel was associated his clients were successful in 37, and of 19 cases taken to the same court on appeal by Lincoln reversals in decisions of the trial court were secured in 10 cases.

Lincoln was admitted to the bar of the Supreme Court March 7, 1849. The cases of Lewis v. Lewis and Forsythe v. Reynolds were outstanding cases, establishing important principles of law, in one of which Lincoln made the principle argument and in both of which he appeared as counsel before that supreme tribunal.

What was the standing of the lawyer in Lincoln's day?

It must be said with keen regret that it was higher in certain characteristics than it is today.

De Tocqueville, who wrote his Democracy in America about the time of Lincoln's admission to the bar in Illinois, says that "lawyers in the United States were everywhere recognized not only as the chief exponents of public opinion but the one class trusted and honored in the administration of government."

Publicity was the order and necessity of that period.

Scandals were not hushed, but ventilated; they were tried in the sunlight.

The courthouse was the peoples' forum—theater, radio, moving picture, and Chautauqua—heterogeneous gatherings composed of old-timers and cosmopolitans, with a wonderful admixture of sense and sentiment; political prophets, who could foresee events by a sudden illuminating flash and foretold them in a quick, pithy sentence; frontier preachers who knew how to fight as well as to preach; lawyers educated in the wilderness, masters in the fundamentals of the law, able to expound and sometimes expound in analyzing the law and the evidence, the court and the jury; exchanging ideas as they exchanged the products of the soil and chase, clashing in verbal encounters that were as educational in their day as the discussions in the academic groves of Athens.

The primitive courthouses were always crowded to overflowing. The merits of a case often divided the entire community and were loudly discussed on the street corners. Those houses of justice were not dreams in marble, but shacks in rustic simplicity, frequently floorless, doorless, and windowless, and yet forums where the law was brought home to the people. They were not only spectators of the moving drama of government but living actors, actuated by love of fair play and the homely virtues.

It bred respect for the law, a sense of its dignity, its integrity and majesty. With them law observance took priority over law enforcement. Judges and lawyers were regarded as the public champions of justice, and the instruments through which righteous order must prevail. They were servants of the law, not the public. They knew that Government is impossible by tumultuous assemblage. The proposal to recall judges would have been regarded as sacrilegious as an attempt to recall God.

In such an atmosphere Lincoln grew to the full stature of his power. His conception of the lawyer's duty is the standard for all time.

He never accepted a case that he did not believe was right, regardless of the proffered retainer. He never charged an exorbitant fee. He never took an unfair advantage, even though supported by technical legal authority. He never played a trick, or resorted to an ignoble practice in all his career at the bar. He was one man, at least, who believed with Lord Cotton that "law and justice were two things that God hath joined and no man should put asunder"; and also with Justinian, who declared: "Justice is in granting to every man his dues."

Every case that Lincoln tried, every detail of his practice, is an open book to the students of his life. There has been found nowhere in this record the slightest incident that taints his fame.

A lawyer, hesitating between two points, as to what his duty is in any circumstance, need but ask himself, "What would Lincoln do?"

One of Lincoln's intimate associates at the bar in Illinois says, "It was morally impossible for Lincoln to allow dishonesty."

No one ever doubted the honesty of Abraham Lincoln. Those who saw his practice could not doubt it. He would not take a bad case if he knew it. He often persuaded a fair-minded client of the injustice of his case and induced him to give it up.

In his notes for a law lecture, Lincoln said: "Discourage litigation, persuade your client to compromise wherever you can. As a peacemaker the lawyer has a valuable opportunity of being a good man, and there will be still business enough."

In his first case in Henry County he said to the magistrate: "I cannot find a single case on my side. I have found several strong cases exactly fitting the other side, and I have brought a list of them to aid you in making your decision."

The other lawyer said with a whimsical sneer: "Lincoln is a great lawyer, is he not?"

And he was, for he never knowingly took the wrong side of a case.

Sometimes he was deceived. Once he went to the judge and said: "Your Honor, I am going to leave this case, the man is guilty." The judge said: "You can't do it under your oath. It would prejudice his case. Stay with it. You need not ask for a verdict. Simply see that the forms of the law are carried out."

Mr. Lincoln obeyed, but when the verdict was entered the foreman of the jury said: "As we see this evidence this man is guilty, but you know that Mr. Lincoln never takes the wrong side." And so the scamp was cleared.

He stated his cases clearly and fairly and with such absolute integrity that the court would sometimes stop and say: "If that is the case, we will hear the other side."

He said to a proposed client: "I reckon I can gain your suit. I can set a whole neighborhood at loggerheads. I can distress a widowed mother and six fatherless children, and thereby get for you the $600, which rightfully belongs to them. No! no! I shall not take your case, but I will give you a little advice for nothing. I would advise you to try your hand at making $600 in some other way."

Gentlemen, were I a lawyer, honored with membership in that great and honorable profession, and I confess that such was once my ambition, I would cling to the memory of Abraham Lincoln, knowing that one such character as Lincoln would make a profession honorable for a thousand years.

The real secret of Lincoln's success, if it can be designated as a secret, was his blunt good humor, flat-footed, square-toed, unyielding moral character. He was known as "Honest Abe."

There is a difference between character and reputation. A man may have one without the other. Reputation is the dust started in the street by the startled swine. Character is the verdict of Almighty God.

Lincoln was clothed and crowned with incorruptible integrity.

Carl Schurz said: "It was not surprising that the mere appearance of so conscientious an attorney in any case should have carried not only to juries but even to judges the presumption that he was in the right."

To a young man who aspired to the legal profession Lincoln wrote these pertinent words: "If in your judgment you cannot be an honest lawyer, resolve to be honest without being a lawyer."

Honesty is the base and bond of character. No man can be a good lawyer without being a good man.

Lincoln never charged an exorbitant fee, yet he insisted upon adequate payment when his service and the client deserved it.

He was employed by the Illinois Central Railroad Co. in an important tax case, and he submitted a bill for $5,000, which the company refused to pay. Lincoln brought suit and secured judgment by default, but when the railroad company asked to be heard, Lincoln, although not required to do so, consented to set the judgment aside and reopen the case. It was tried by a jury and a verdict rendered for the full amount. Then a strange thing occurred which demonstrated the quality of Lincoln. Before the final judgment was rendered, he arose and told the court that the defendant had forgotten to prove the payment of a retainer to him of $200, which ought to be credited on the amount of the verdict.

The case was closed with a check to Lincoln for $4,800. This canceled check is now on exhibition in the Lincoln room of Lincoln Memorial University, a perpetual credential of the incorruptible integrity of the man who received it.

The stories of the charity cases which Lincoln took, with their quaint quality of wit and humor, pathos and tragedy, should be garlanded.

He recovered the proceeds of an estate from a defaulting guardian on behalf of an injured ward, and he did it simply for love of fair play.

He refused to take a case of trespassing, although the client was able to pay a good fee, and the claim could have been easily established, because he was unwilling to distress a helpless family.

He gave up an engagement in the midst of his campaign for Congress, walked alone for 10 miles through the mud and night, to attend court in an adjoining county in order to defend, without money and without price, a charge of murder against a poor lad whose parents had once befriended him, and whose mother had written him a pathetic letter for his help.

And when the boy, freed by the jury, fainted in the court room, it was the strong arms of Lincoln who carried him to his mother's embrace.

Lincoln was the ideal American lawyer.

If he were a practitioner at the bar today, what would he say or do in that capacity in view of the grave increase of lawlessness in recent years which has threatened the stability of our representative democracy? What would he do as a lawyer in the face of a Nation-wide break-down of law enforcement?

The statistics are written in blood. The United States leads the world in crime. Chief Justice Taft affirmed sometime before his decease that the administration of criminal law in this country is a disgrace to civilization, nor can this condition be lightly charged to the World War, or prohibition, or our heterogeneous population.

Admitting that the World War has shell-shocked our civilization, disturbing its equilibrium; acknowledging the criminal activities of bootleggers and racketeers, and the flooding of our gates with undesirables during the years preceding the recent restrictions, and the intrigues of the vicious and criminal among them, aimed at the destruction of our Government, the gravity of the problem, coupled with a deep-seated suspicion as to the authority, adequacy, and impartiality of our legal machinery is inescapable.

This apprehension is so wide-spread that the average American business man distrusts the legal institutions, which should be regarded as his protection.

Government, drifting from the Constitution to the crowd, from principles to passion, from democracy to autocracy, is fraught with serious apprehension.

His fears are not measured by the enormous expense, interminable delays, and maneuverings of the process, but the foreboding spector that the law has miscarried, that courts and officers can be influenced by personal or political considerations, and that the thing to do in any emergency is to employ an attorney who has a nimble brain and dexterous touch, one who has pull, rather than character.

Who can imagine Abraham Lincoln approached by such a client?

In one of his cases, when he was prosecuting a civil action, evidence was introduced showing that the client was attempting fraud in the case. Lincoln arose and left the room in disgust. The judge sent for him, and Lincoln sent word back to the judge: "My hands are dirty, and I came back to the hotel to wash them."

Here is a moral standard to which all self-respecting lawyers can repair, a principle of ethics as inexorable as the Ten Commandments. When a lawyer or any other officer of the court is tempted to double dealing, let him follow the example of Lincoln and wash his hands of the whole dirty business.

There is no question as to the attitude of Lincoln toward the legal practice and its principles. He was not only the champion of justice but of all looking to justice for protection. He was the big brother of the helpless!

This attitude was so ingrained that Lincoln said upon one occasion, "I am for the under dog in the fight."

I do not hesitate to say that this sympathetic attitude of Lincoln was his greatest single contribution to the exaltation of the legal profession.

His most fundamental creed breathed the spirit of the Declaration of Independence.

When but 28 years of age, speaking before the lyceum in Springfield, he employed expressions as progressive in thought, and as cumulus in their portrayals of the dangers of injustice and as striking and appropriate as if fresh from his lips. That oration, as superb as anything in the English language, reached its climax when he exclaimed: "Let every American, every lover of liberty everywhere swear to posterity never to violate in the least particular the laws of his country and never to tolerate the violation of others. As the patriots of '76 did to the Declaration of Independence, so to the support of the Constitution and laws, let every American pledge his life, his property, and his sacred honor. Let reverence for the laws be breathed by every American mother to the lisping babe that prattles on her knee; let it be taught in schools, in seminaries, and in colleges; let it be written in primers, spelling books, and almanacs; let it be preached from pulpits, proclaimed in legislative halls, and enforced in courts of justice; in short, let it become the political religion of America."

What America needs today, as never before, is a return to the foundation principles incarnate in the life of Lincoln.

We are facing a period in which it is necessary for us to go back in order to go forward, back to those ideals of the law as the deliberate will of the people of its supremacy while it remains the law—ideals which are a part of our Anglo-Saxon heritage, and which need to be revived, revitalized, and applied, not in an abstract and detached way, but in a mood that nothing will satisfy short of prompt execution.

Lincoln was neither a reactionary nor a revolutionary. The reactionary would worship the devil because of his antiquity; the revolutionary wearies of God because of His eternity.

Lincoln stood midway between the extremes. Charles A. Dana declared, "He was never a step too late nor a step too soon." He moved slowly, a step at a time. He would further, not father, the Government. He stood for regulation, not strangulation. He believed in the Constitution without mutilation, liberty without license, and progress without revolution. He insisted that "new views should be true views." With William the Silent, he believed that "events are God marching." Lincoln kept step to that music. He believed in the divine imminence. In the face of discouragement and disaster he exclaimed, "Having chosen our course without guile and with a pure purpose, let us renew our trust in God and go forward with manly hearts."

In 1802 Wordsworth wrote of Milton and expressed the wish for the return of the poet statesman to the councils of those stirring times.

The stress of these days is far greater, the problem confronting us more complicated, and the issues involved are so vital and imminent that Wordsworth's longing for the return of Milton finds its counterpart in the oft-repeated appeals which are being made from pulpit and press, court and forum, to Lincoln's spiritual leadership.

It was never more urgent than at this moment. If we could but behold again the tall, commanding form, crowned with the tall, unshapely hat, which was his correspondence file, his clipping bureau and brief case, clad as yesterday with his brown shawl clinging loosely to his stooped shoulders, his eyes penetrating into the depths of things, his heart responsive to every call of humanity, his spirit aglow with the flame of the Infinite, his cosmic brain functioning as statesman, lawyer, and friend, then indeed might Wordsworth's call to the soul of Milton be paraphrased into the yearning cry of America for the return of Lincoln:

"O Lincoln, thou shouldst be living at this hour;
America hath need of thee; she is a fen
Of stagnant waters; altar, sword, and pen,
Fireside, the heroic wealth of hall and bower,
Have forfeited their ancient English dower
Of inward happiness. We are selfish men;
Oh! raise us up, return to us again;
And give us manners, virtue, freedom, and power.
Thy soul was like a star, and dwelt apart;
Thou hadst a voice whose sound was like the sea;
Pure as the naked heavens, majestic, free,
So didst thou travel on life's common way,
In cheerful godliness; and yet thy heart
The lowliest duties on herself did lay.
O Lincoln, return to us again!"

UNITED STATES MONETARY SYSTEM

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 6976) to protect the currency system of the United States, to provide for the better use of the monetary gold stock of the United States, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 14, line 3.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Couzens	Johnson	Reynolds
Ashurst	Cutting	Kean	Robinson, Ark.
Austin	Davis	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.
Bachman	Dickinson	King	Russell
Bailey	Dieterich	La Follette	Schall
Bankhead	Dill	Lewis	Sheppard
Barbour	Duffy	Logan	Shipstead
Barkley	Erickson	Lonergan	Smith
Black	Fess	McAdoo	Steiwer
Bone	Fletcher	McCarran	Stephens
Borah	Frazier	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Brown	George	McKellar	Thompson
Bulkley	Gibson	McNary	Townsend
Bulow	Glass	Murphy	Trammell
Byrnes	Goldsborough	Neely	Vandenberg
Capper	Gore	Norris	Van Nuys
Caraway	Hale	Nye	Wagner
Carey	Harrison	O'Mahoney	Walcott
Clark	Hastings	Overton	Walsh
Connally	Hatch	Patterson	Wheeler
Coolidge	Hatfield	Pittman	White
Copeland	Hayden	Pope
Costigan	Hebert	Reed

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I desire to announce that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

I desire to announce further that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] are necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BAILEY obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. I was going to proceed; but if the Senator from Oregon has something to say, I will take my seat.

Mr. McNARY. No; I rose to attract the interest of the Senator from North Carolina, as I thought he wanted to proceed at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina has the floor.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I shall support the bill before us on several grounds, which I will state as follows:

First, as an extraordinary measure addressed to extraordinary circumstances.

Second, as a step in the direction of redemption in gold, and also in the direction of keeping our party's pledge and the assurance given the country in the campaign and in the hour of his inaugural by our President.

Third, as a means of raising our prices in the world market and of stimulating them at home.

Fourth, as a means of protecting and stabilizing our currency and, therefore, our commerce at home and abroad.

Fifth, as a means of relieving an otherwise impossible situation as between debtor and creditor and without detriment to the creditor.

Sixth, recognizing its novel character and its dangers, I consider the proposed legislation as a necessity under the circumstances.

With that outline of the considerations which have moved me to support this proposed legislation, I shall proceed with the discussion.

Mr. President, we have been discussing this measure as if it had been presented under normal conditions. I think I am perfectly safe in saying, the statements of other Senators to the contrary notwithstanding, that neither the President of the United States nor any Member of the Senate would propose this legislation under normal conditions. I have heard it stated here, with great emphasis, that this is not emergency legislation. Of course it is emergency legislation. It is addressed to every phase of the emergency in which we find our country and ourselves, not only to the monetary phase, but to all the other phases of those conditions which we have formed the habit of describing as "the depression."

What are the outstanding emergency conditions which called for legislation of this character and which produced the motive for this particular bill?

DEBT OBSTACLE TO RECOVERY

In the first place we are confronted with the debt obstacle to recovery. I do not know that I can state the amount of the indebtedness of the American people and institutions in accurate terms, but I do have information from reliable sources that the indebtedness altogether in this country at this time is in the sum of around $220,000,000,000. Divided into long-term debt and short-term debt, it appears that the long-term debt is around $110,000,000,000, and that the short-term debt is about $107,000,000,000 to $110,000,000,000.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McADOO in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to know upon what basis, in those figures which the Senator has just given, he has divided the long-term debt from the short-term debt. What, in his definition, is a long-term debt and what is a short-term debt?

Mr. BAILEY. Responding to the Senator, the bonds maturing over a period of years, the bonds of railroad corporations, the bonds of many private corporations——

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator misinterpreted my question as I intended it. For the purpose of comparison, I should like to know the length of time that would be considered as classifying one as a long-term debt and the other as a short-term debt.

Mr. BAILEY. Responding to that point, a short-term debt, I think, is pretty well defined in the present status of the indebtedness of the United States. Notes maturing within a year or 2 years would be considered short-term debts. Notes maturing in part or in whole over a period of years, such as are customary with our municipalities, our counties, our States, and the United States, maturing in part or in whole at more distant dates, are considered long-term debts. I hope I have made that distinction clear.

The normal indebtedness in this country prior to what is very properly to be described as the inflationary period of the twenties was $75,000,000,000. Here is the point: That indebtedness of $217,000,000,000, or that excess indebtedness of nearly $150,000,000,000, was contracted very largely in the period of inflation and high prices. It might have been paid had that period of inflation and high prices not come to an absolute and, I fear, an irrevocable end. But it did come to the end, and with an amazing suddenness the American people fell as over a precipice so far as their commerce and their debts are concerned, fell from the heights of $1.50 wheat and 30-cent cotton and high wages down to the point of 30- or 40-cent wheat, 5- and 6-cent cotton, and low wages and no wages.

I need not go through the figures. If we had any hope that the prices under which this tremendously excessive debt was created could be restored, there would probably be no necessity for legislation of this sort. But the significant thing about it is that the present price level in America is not abnormal when compared with the price level for 50 or 100 years. It is not abnormal when compared with any period in our history outside of 4 or 5 or 10 years of any war period.

Mr. President, there is not the remotest possibility that the American people—corporations, individuals, and public institutions—can ever pay this debt under the present standard of prices and of wages.

Let us compare the debt for a moment with the national income. In the period in which the debt was contracted the national income rose to as high as $85,000,000,000. That is in the report of the Department of Commerce issued in the last few days. But that national income has dropped in the last 4 years below $50,000,000,000. A proper statement of it, according to official reports, is that the national income in 1932 was $49,000,000,000.

To undertake to hold a people to the payment of debts contracted in expansive times and under the influences of an inflation is just as much to be condemned as the inflations which are now so much feared upon this floor. To hold a people with an income of $49,000,000,000 to undertake to pay a debt of $217,000,000,000 is to demand of them the impossible. If the course is pursued, there can be but one consequence, and that is the liquidation of the millions of the debtors of our land in the courts of bankruptcy, out of which the creditors will receive, not the payment of the debts but, perhaps, not more than 10 cents on the dollar, that being the average in my part of the country.

But, Mr. President, that matter has been discussed here so fully, and I wish to confine myself to as short a time as possible, that I do not feel I should undertake further to elaborate upon it. I do not think that Pharaoh was more unreasonable in demanding that the enslaved children of Israel should make bricks without straw than the Government or the Congress would be in pursuing a course which would encourage the creditors of America to require the debtors of America to pay this excessive debt contracted upon a basis of inflation, and to pay it under the circumstances of a deflation so deep and so wide-spread and so great that it will require the lapse of many years in order that the historians may see it in its true perspective and describe it in its proper terms.

That, Mr. President, is the first of the emergency conditions which call upon the Congress to undertake to exercise its powers to regulate the value of the money in which the debts of the American people and the American institutions are to be paid.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. GORE. I want to get the authority for the Senator's statement that the debt is $217,000,000,000. It is fair to state that Evans Clark, in his book on the subject, gave the debt as $110,000,000,000.

Mr. BAILEY. I have given a great deal of study to just that matter, and I think perhaps, when Mr. Clark gave his statement in the terms in which the Senator states it, he was speaking of the short-term debts.

Mr. GORE. I think it was the interest-bearing debts.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well. I have the data in my papers, but I would not undertake to go into a discussion here to establish just the amount of the debt. There are some things we know; and if I did not have any data at all, I would know that the indebtedness of the American people is 100 to 200 percent greater than the normal debt, and I think everyone else here knows that. If I undertook to take the time to describe how that came on, and to give the mortgage debt, I would require time beyond the limitations of the time I wish to take. If I may just throw it in here, the debt on the urban homes of America is $8,000,000,000, as against about one billion 10 years ago. The indebtedness of the farmers of America 12 years ago was about 18 percent of the farms. Today it is 50 percent. We cannot get around those facts. They confront us.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BAILEY. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. In that percentage the Senator has also included the homes that are not mortgaged at all, I suppose; has he not?

Mr. BAILEY. No; I said the mortgage debt was eight billions.

Mr. NORRIS. I understood that the Senator gave it in percentages.

Mr. BAILEY. No; eight billions. I gave the farms in percentages.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what I desire to interrogate the Senator about. That includes the farms that are not mortgaged at all?

Mr. BAILEY. That is 50 percent of all the farms. That leaves 50 percent unmortgaged.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator included only the farms that are mortgaged, he would get a percentage that was much greater than he has given.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; that is very true, and I thank the Senator. However, that was just a detail in response to the inquiry of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

Having stated that as the first of the great conditions of emergency calling forth legislation of this type, I move on to the second.

THE TRADE WAR

The second emergency condition is this, and I have been rather amazed that so little has been made of it here in this discussion: That emergency is the existence of a state of rivalry and competition in international trade amounting to nothing less than a monetary war—a war which we did not initiate, but of which we shall be the victims unless we take prompt measures of self-defense.

My mind recurs for the moment to our entrance into the World War. We were in the World War, Mr. President, probably a year before the declaration of war was made. The declaration was merely a statement of a fact in existence, and in existence for some months; and very probably had we not gone into the World War, had it been won by the Central Powers, we would have been the victims without ever having suspected that we were engaged in the war.

Here is this trade war. It did not spring up yesterday. A resolution was submitted from this floor, I think, fully 18 months ago by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]—and I voted for it—making inquiry precisely upon that question.

What are the terms of the present world war with respect to trade and commerce?

In the first place, 33 nations of the earth, including all of them of importance except Holland and France, are trading in the markets of the world in depreciated currencies at the expense of the American dollar. They did that before we suspended gold payments. The suspension of gold payments aided us to a certain degree, but that suspension was the first act of self-defense on the part of the United States with respect to its international trade.

What was the effect of that? The depreciated pound of Great Britain, the depreciated franc of France, and the depreciated yen of Japan enabled those countries to undersell us in the markets of the world and even in our own home market. In Congress, and, I think, throughout this country, we have been in the habit of looking to the tariff as the great instrumentality of offense and of defense in international trade; but under the influences of currency operations, the tariff became a secondary weapon, and the monetary operations, the depreciation of the currency, the reducing of the cost of manufacture enabled practically every country on earth to undermine the tariff and come into our land, and certainly in the world market—that is, amongst the other nations—to undersell us everywhere and reduce our export trade to the minimum.

The question here is: Shall we permit that to go on? I shall speak directly as to the effects of the bill.

I may say at this point that the grand objective of this bill is the stabilization of our currency, looking in the direction of a return to specie payments in gold of reduced weight, and to provide a fund which will enable the American people to determine the value of their money at home and abroad. If I were inclined to indulge in rhetorical statements, I should say that reduced to one issue, in the greater aspects of the question here, the real question is not whether Mr. Roosevelt shall determine the value of the money or whether a board shall determine it or whether the Congress shall determine it, but the real question here is whether the American people shall determine the value of their money or whether the people of the other nations of the earth shall do it.

We can sit still, and we can do nothing, and we can see the trade of our country destroyed at home and abroad, with all the wreck and ruin that that will mean, with a debt upon the people of $200,000,000,000; or we can take monetary arms against a world that has taken monetary arms against us. We can go into the arena, and we can defend ourselves as best we can.

There is no aspect of this matter that commends itself to my mind so much as that. I would appeal to our friends on the other side and invoke the spirit which gave the Republican Party its banner of protection of American industry and commerce, and recall to you the issue upon which you have won many a campaign in America, and say to you that if you believe in protecting American industry, as you do, you will rise to this occasion and gladly embrace it in order that by way of defense and by way of the operation of our currency you may accomplish precisely the same ends which you have sought to accomplish by way of the protective tariff, and which you never again can accomplish by way of the protective tariff.

So, Mr. President, that is the second phase of the emergency situation which has called forth this bill.

Now, the third:

The third extraordinary condition is this: We cannot go on under the existing state of our currency. I take it that there will be general agreement on this point. We suspended gold payments on June 5, I think. No one at that time undertook to say that the action taken by the Congress at the instance of the President was anything more than temporary and of an emergency character. I think it was well taken, though not because I wanted to take it, and I do not think anybody wished to take it. It was well taken because the necessities of the situation drove us inevitably and helplessly to it. We cannot go on in the present state of instability. I do not want to go on in the present state of all sorts of threats as to what may be done. I want to know something definite. My little wish is of no importance; but the interests of agriculture and commerce and industry in our land, and the interests of international trade, demand that there shall be an end as soon as possible to the condition of instability and uncertainty and the establishment of a reasonable certainty.

Nor can we return to our former state; we cannot go back to the resumption of gold payments on the 23.22-grain gold dollar. I have heard protests against this legislation from many quarters here, but I have heard nobody suggest that we go back to redemption of currency in the 23.22-grain dollar; and yet that or acceptance of the existent state of instability must be the position of anyone who opposes this legislation. He must take one or the other.

What would happen if we went back to the gold dollar under the former standard of 23.22 grains? We would establish, if we could, the old gold base, and every nation on the face of the earth would trade at our expense. Every American wage would be measured in gold of that value and that weight. Every commodity would be measured in precisely the same weight; and the value of our cotton and our wheat and our wages and our services likewise being so measured, would go down to those points from which they have been drawn up in the last year under the leadership of the President.

If anyone wants to go back to 30-cent wheat; if anyone wishes to go back to 6-cent cotton; if anyone wishes to go back to 10-cent tobacco; if anyone wishes to see the army of the unemployed recruited by the million throughout the land; if anyone wishes wages to sink to the levels from which we have elevated them since March the 4th, 1933, let him amend the bill and let him vote for and let him declare that he is for the return from the present situation to the 23.22-grain dollar. I may take in a lot of territory, Mr. President, but it is my sober judgment that there is no one here who would undertake to do so. I have not heard one Senator who has objected to this bill suggest anything of that sort.

I will go further. Were we to undertake to do so, we could not do so. It is an impossibility. I can tell the Senate precisely what would happen if we undertook to do so. We would absolutely wreck the commerce of the country. We would not only destroy the farmer, we would not only starve the workers, but we would close the doors of the businesses of America.

What would happen were we to resume gold payments today and were we to agree to pay 23.22 grains of gold for this dollar [holding up a paper dollar]? Were that to be done, we would see the process of hoarding run to such riotous course that it would be extremely difficult, even by the severest penalties, to prevent the speculator and the hoarder from making his demand, draining the Treasury of the last dollar, and taking the last dollar from the Federal Reserve System and the Federal Reserve banks and leaving them on a paper basis. That is precisely what would happen in such circumstances.

Mr. President, a great deal has been said in this debate about the Federal Reserve System. I hope I may be able to say without offense and with utmost respect that the real friends of the Federal Reserve System, if they wish to preserve it, ought to support this legislation. What would happen to that System were we to resume gold payments today? The heart of that System is 3½ billion dollars of gold. How long would it remain there under the present circumstances were we to resume gold payments?

WHY GOLD PAYMENTS WERE SUSPENDED

That brings me, Mr. President, to the point where I may make a remark which I think ought to be made in this Chamber and in America, so that the world may know our position. There has been a great deal of debate as to whether we should have gone off the gold standard or not, and there have been many solemn affirmations made that we should have remained on the gold standard at 23.22 grains of gold to the dollar. It is my sober opinion, Mr. President, and it seems perfectly clear to me, at least, that that was an impossibility.

We have heard Senators defending Great Britain for suspending gold payments and defending other nations for suspending gold payments on the ground of necessity. I read in the New York Times some weeks ago an editorial in which it was sought to draw a distinction, the editorial saying that the United States went off the gold standard voluntarily, but England was driven off. Not so. Under the conditions of hoarding and speculating in gold that were going on in the month of May 1933, the only prudent thing the President could do, the only righteous thing that Congress could do, was to suspend gold payments and save the gold to the Treasury, to the Federal Reserve banks, and to the country, while it could be saved. It was the difference between putting out a fire before the house was burned down and trying to put it out after it was burned to the ground.

I am willing to go before the American people and my constituents and say that if it had been possible, I would have kept the country on the gold standard. I am sure the President would say no less than that. I am sure that the Congress would say no less than that. I am equally sure, Mr. President, that the American people will know and do now know that we responded here precisely to the same necessities that Great Britain and the other 32 countries responded. And so far from arguing that we should have waited until the last dollar was drained, as Great Britain did—I heard here the other day that she had less than $20,000,000 in gold in her treasury at the time she suspended the gold payments—so far from arguing that we should have waited until the gold reserves were destroyed and the Federal Reserve bank was prostrated, I thank God for the courage and the wisdom, the prudence and the power of a President and a Congress that could stop those payments before the ruinous work was done.

So, Mr. President, that is the third emergency. Having stated the terms of the conditions which have brought forth this legislation, the question now remains to be discussed as to whether the bill will meet, or tend to meet, or measurably meet, the demands of the existing situation.

I do not regard the bill as a final solution of our difficulties, and, of course, I know, and I think everyone else knows by this time, that there is no one final solution. I do regard the bill as a second stage in the administration's monetary policy, I having just now described and undertaken to justify the first stage. And upon examination and earnest study of the bill I am prepared to undertake to maintain that it looks to a third and ultimate stage, and the fulfillment of the platform pledges of our party and the solemn assurances of our President. I am going to take that up at this point.

Our platform—and I do not regret that we wrote it, and I am here to say that it was written in good faith, and it will be maintained in good faith—provided, with respect to the currency, that we should have "a sound currency, to be preserved at all hazards." It has been preserved at all hazards, except the hazard of impossibility. The President, in his inaugural, in that solemn hour following a campaign in which he had uttered the phrase frequently, entered into a covenant with the American people to maintain a sound and adequate currency.

Now, hear me, Mr. President and Senators. That is the pole star of all the legislation here under the leadership of the President and the Democratic Party. I pledge myself to that. I adhere to that. And though I be driven into the wilderness a thousand miles by way of necessities and emergencies, I shall always be traveling in the direction of a return to the solemn covenant of the President and the deliberate promise of my party—a sound and adequate currency.

It seems strange to me to find myself differing with men for whose intelligence and character I have the very highest regard, in that I interpret this bill as a step around the way back to a sound and adequate currency, while they discuss it as if it were going off into a wilderness of uncontrolled inflation, when every line and term of the bill is in the direction of a specie payment and a specie value, and a control of the value of the currency itself by the operations of the $2,000,000,000-gold fund set apart for the purpose.

SOUND AND ADEQUATE CURRENCY

I think it may now be timely, since I have used those phrases, for me to define what I understand by "a sound and adequate currency." I am pledged to that. I want my associates and my constituents to know that I stand for that, and I am perfectly willing to give my definition in order that they may know beyond a peradventure what I stand for: which is, a sound currency, a currency redeemable in specific, certain, and unvarying value on demand. I do not think any other currency is sound. I take it that that is the bedrock of a sound currency. Any currency that varies in its value or that is not payable in specific, true, unvarying value on demand is not a fit vehicle for commerce; it does not come within the terms of the historical meaning of money. An adequate currency is a currency that will respond instantly and equitably to all the exigencies of commerce, industry, and agriculture to the relation of debtor and creditor, to the progress of business and the promotion of enterprise, that will freely and truly serve as the medium of exchange, both of services and of goods.

I take it, it will be agreed that that is at least a reasonable definition of an adequate and a sound currency; and I take it that every man in his senses is for that sort of currency, for the simple reason that no other currency will serve as currency. I am here to say that my party is pledged to that, and the President of the United States is pledged to that, and I do not for one moment suspect that my party will go back on its pledge or that the President of the United States will propose a bill or make a recommendation that is inconsistent with the solemn assurance he gave the American people in the hour in which he took the oath of his office.

Now, a question arises in looking back upon our situation and the transactions with respect to the currency as to whether the currency prior to June 5, 1925, purporting by law to be redeemable in 23.22 grains of gold to the dollar on demand was or was not a sound currency. I am here to say it was unsound; it was unjust; it was ruinous; it was impossible. America could not stand on that with all the other nations off. American trade could not live on that with all the other nations living on depreciated currency. American debtors could not hope to pay their debts with that sort of currency.

OLD GOLD STANDARD UNSOUND

Mr. President, I do not think it can be controverted that gold in the last several years, in response to more than one influence, has attained an abnormal economic value. If so, the insistence upon the 23.22-grain gold dollar is an insistence upon adhering to a monetary standard that has varied up; and one that goes up is worse than one that goes down, because as it goes up it deflates everything on earth; it breaks up the home of the worker and turns him on the street; it impoverishes the farmer and dooms him to despair; it destroys the creditors and makes them beggars in a bankrupt court; it undermines the foundations of our country.

If I am right in that premise, that the standard itself of our currency had obtained an abnormal economic value—and I do not think I have to define that term—then I am right in the conclusion that it was not only necessary but it was absolutely just, and it is now just, that there shall be a correction—not an inflation but a correction—by way of restoring the dollar to sound economic value.

Now, let us see about that. What happened to gold? Mr. President, during the last 4 years every country on the face of the earth and every human being practically has been in a mad race for gold. That condition obtained in this country to such an extent last spring that our records show that $1,600,000,000 of gold were taken out of the banks and out of the Treasury and hidden or shipped to Europe. Everybody wanted gold; everybody wanted gold more than they wanted any other commodity on earth. France wanted it, Great Britain wanted it, Germany wanted it, Italy wanted it, Japan wanted it, America wanted it, and the American people also wanted it. I do not think I have to go further about that. That many people wanting gold created a demand that raised its value a great deal more, in my opinion, than 100 percent. I think the figures with respect to farm commodities show that it raised its value with respect to farm commodities to 170 percent. That accounts for the fact that the prices of commodities went down. They had to go down. Everybody wanted gold and everybody unloaded commodities; everybody wanted gold and everybody drove the worker to the wall; everybody wanted gold and everybody cut expenses. Every great business in America wanted gold; it had to have gold in order to pay its debts, and it curtailed its output, threw its inventories upon the market; it did anything to get gold. In doing so, we built in America the greatest army of unemployed that ever trod the earth. I do not think I have to argue that, Mr. President and Senators. How could it be otherwise? With the whole world demanding gold, how could it be other than that gold went up and up and up. As gold went up and up and up, every commodity and the real estate on which we live went down and down and down. So, I think, Mr. President, that we are very moderate, but I believe under the circumstances we are quite wise, in undertaking now to restore the economic normal value of the currency of the United States in gold.

How could we do otherwise? We have the power to regulate the value of money. Why do we have that power? Why did the fathers write that power into the Constitution with respect to the Congress? Why did they use the word "regulate"? If it was intended that we should live and die on a fixed weight of gold in the dollar, why did they not say so in the Constitution? They did not say "fixed" and they did not say the number of grains; they did not say anything about the weight, but they said we should regulate; and the word "regulate" is not susceptible to any equivocal meaning. We know what "regulate" means. It means to change from time to time.

Do not for a moment suspect that I would change it unjustly; do not for one moment suspect that I would rob a creditor of his just debts; and do not for one moment suspect that I would sit here and permit any man anywhere to derive an unearned increment on the money in his pockets; but that is exactly what was going on in America. I believe in the unearned increment of real estate; I am against Henry George in his theory as to that; I believe in the interest being paid by the debtor to the creditor; but I abhor, I hate, and I denounce any system and any condition—and it is intolerable to think of a Congress and the country permitting a monetary system—that enables the creditor to exact 100, 200, or 300 percent from the debtor. To follow such a course is to follow the course in which one sits calmly by and sees the debtor robbed in order that we may maintain a mere arithmetical number written in the laws 30 and 100 years ago, having been written twice. So, Mr. President, on that point I come to my conclusion.

THE PROCESS OF STABILIZATION

Second. As to stabilization. I said just now in mentioning the six considerations which induced me to support this bill that we could not go on under the existing unstable condition of the currency. That ought to be clear enough. We cannot trade well either at home or abroad on uncertain money; that is the great argument for what we call "sound money and specie payments".

We have now, Mr. President, an uncertain money and we have in the world market a condition of instability that tends to destroy the entire export commerce of our land. We find other nations, their bankers and merchants seeking to take our trade away from us by way of keeping our currency in an unstable condition. Shall we sit still and do nothing about that? If so, Mr. President, we are the only nation on earth that will.

We hear invoked very often the conservatism and the wisdom of the statesmen of Great Britain. I have the utmost respect for them, but are we doing here anything other than they have been doing from the moment they suspended gold payments? No. The curse of it is, and the crime of it is—I take that word back and will say that the curse of it is and the wrong of it is that we have so long delayed. I would not offer any criticism of the former President of the United States. I have said privately, and I do not hesitate to say publicly, that he wrought at his task with all the earnestness in the world; that he would have given, I think, his life if he could have extricated this country from its woes—and in saying that I say no more for him than I would say for any man here on either side—but I think the historian will describe as the crowning and ruinous blunder of his administration that when England suspended gold payments and proceeded to manage her currency at our expense he sat still and permitted that to go on.

Now let us see what has happened to us since we took the other course. It was in June 1933—the 5th of June, I think, nearly 2 years late—that the President of the United States suspended, by the authority of Congress, gold payments and proceeded with a managed currency; and at once we were able to cope with the other nations of the earth in the matter of international trade.

Gentlemen ask what will come of this bill. Suppose we look back to the past rather than venture upon vain prophecy. What has happened since we suspended gold payments? Have prices gone down or have they gone up? Has the condition of the people of the country improved or have they gone further down? There is no question about that. Sometimes I think we tend to forget the real figures. It happens that I read yesterday morning an editorial in the New York Times, dated Thursday, January 25, a statement of farm prices, and in that editorial it is stated, speaking of farm commodity prices:

> Since then (December) they have been rising, and a new estimate published yesterday placed the figure at 70. If this is still short of the best market reached last summer, it is nearly 40 percent above the level of a year ago. Since the Government's figures represent prices actually received by the farmers rather than market quotations, it is evident that a large increase has been made in farm purchasing power by comparison with a year ago.

Of course it has. The farm income in America is more than $1,000,000,000 by way of the harvest of 1933 than it was from the harvest of 1932 without any increase in the volume of output. It is money increase.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. AUSTIN in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. Will the Senator read the rest of the editorial wherein it is stated that it will cost the Government $1,800,000,000 in order to do this?

Mr. BAILEY. I am glad the Senator interrupted me. The editorial does not say it cost the Government that much to bring about this increase. I am going to read it. There is no trouble about it. I brought it here to read it. I shall read it all. I am going to skip now the paragraph that the Senator requested me to read in order to connect it logically with my statement, but I am going to read the paragraph which the Senator wishes me to read:

> The improvement of farm prices is described by some observers as the direct consequences of monetary policies pursued by the Government.

I am not afraid to read an editorial in support of my argument that contains that statement. That is precisely what I am arguing and precisely what I am saying.

> That these measures have had a large influence on cotton and other commodities of importance in export trade, and therefore sensitive to fluctuations in foreign exchange, is scarcely to be denied. But that other influences have also been at work is demonstrated by the fact that the general advance of farm prices actually concealed a wide diversity of movement in the case of individual products. At one extreme we find wool rising by 95 percent last year, oats by 91, and hides by 90.

I can add to that that cotton has risen from 6½ to 10½ cents. Senators can figure the percentage for themselves. It is about 60 percent. Tobacco produced in my State increased from 12½ cents to 17 cents, or about 43 or 44 percent. Wages in America have been increasing in volume at the rate of $70,000,000 a week.

> But at the other we find hogs gaining less than 12 percent and beef actually declining by 14.

I take it that that is what the Senator from Iowa desired me to read. I am not going into a discussion of that. We will always have conditions in which one commodity will outrun the other, but the whole point of my discussion is that in response to adjusting the American currency situation to the currency situation throughout the world, in response to the act of suspending gold payments and instituting a managed currency, as all other countries have done, the New York Times, at any rate, says that the rise in the price of our export products can be attribtued to the currency policy.

I note that the Senator from Iowa has just left the Chamber. I promised to read the particular paragraph, and I shall read it although it is not connected with the discussion:

Nor do these figures tell the whole story. Wholly aside from higher prices, purchasing power on the farms has been increased by the direct aid from the Government. A recent estimate of Moody's Investors Service places at $1,883,000,000 the total amount already spent and still to be spent for the benefit of American agriculture during the fiscal year which ends in June.

I wonder if the distinguished Senator from Iowa is complaining of that? I wonder if he desires me to put that in the RECORD in order that he may go back to Iowa and tell the farmers of Iowa that when the Government sent them their portion of this money it was wrong and they ought to give it back. I am perfectly willing to have it appear in the RECORD that I read the editorial into the RECORD at his request.

Of this, $515,000,000 represents cash bounties paid by the A.A.A. as a reward for acreage reduction and $1,368,000,000 consists of crop loans, mortgage relief, loans for export—

And so forth.

Now I have read it all. I realize that I am out of the arrangement of my remarks as originally contemplated, but since the Senator from Iowa demanded that I read these statements in the editorial, I am going to say that I read them with pride that the present administration has gone to the rescue of the farmers of America to the extent of $1,386,000,000. I am here to state that had it done less it would not have done right. They were entitled to it from the Government that kept the farmers of America on a 23.22-grain dollar while they were driven down to the earth. That Government owes them at least the consideration to extricate them from the hands of creditors who were armed with power to destroy them because the Government failed to act in the day of their need.

I go farther. If they had not received it I do not know what would have happened to that great mass of men to whom we all pay tribute and to whom we all owe the annual production of wealth in our land as we owe to no other class. If it requires more from the Treasury of the United States to rescue the farmers of our land, save their homes and their farms to them, whatever else may be said about other money-spending programs, no country ever broke itself, no country ever injured itself by seeing to it that the farmers upon whom it lives have farms upon which to farm and homes in which to live.

So, Mr. President, I move forward. I have mentioned some of the effects of the bill. I do not think I need to discuss the operations of the stabilization fund. I am glad that it is as great as it is. I am glad that it is greater than the fund of any other nation. I am not capable of operating such a fund. I would not want the responsibility.

The Congress is not capable of operating such a fund, either, and I say it with the utmost respect. The processes of stabilization of monetary values are instant and often secret processes. Imagine that there arises a situation in international finance in which the dollar is rising and rising in response to British purchasing of the dollar or French purchasing of the dollar. Somebody comes in and tells us that the dollar is being boosted in the market at London and therefore the world market. Someone introduces a resolution in the House that we take action. The resolution passes the House and comes over to the Senate and we debate it. I am not protesting against that. Very probably we ought to debate all these matters of legislation. Suppose we get through our debate in 3 days—which would probably break the record—what would happen to the dollar in the meantime? It is not conceivable that any parliament on earth could act with the expedition required in countering the governments of other nations in fixing the value of our currency in the world market. So the power must be delegated.

We determine the exercise of the power. We have the implied power to do whatever the power itself declares should be done, and with the actual specified power in the Constitution plus the implied power attendant upon it, we determine the limitation at 50 or 60 cents gold value of the dollar. Then we commit it, within those limitations, to the President or to a board appointed by the President, with full understanding that if we do not do it that way we should have to constitute a board operating instantly under the Congress.

We could not do it ourselves and so we commit it, as I have stated, with the full understanding that if we leave it to the President himself he also will have to invoke the aid of associates and men of great skill and understanding and experience. So all this debate about the mechanics of the thing resolves it down simply to the fact that we have the power, but we do not have the mechanics here, and we cannot, in the very nature of things, have the mechanics here. There is nothing else to do but to commit it properly to some person whom we shall trust; and if we cannot trust the President of the United States in the present hour in this land, whom may we trust?

THE FACTOR OF FAITH

I will make a departure here. Mr. President, the great asset of the American people in the circumstances in which we find them, and ourselves with them, is their faith in the President of the United States. Many things have been done by the Congress, many acts have been passed, but in their effect and their contribution to our civilization and to our progress in the direction of the long-sought relief, none of them can compare with the great factor of faith of the masses that constitute the Republic in the man whom they elevated as their chosen instrument, their vindicator, and their deliverer, the President. I do not think it would become us to distrust him when we know that there is not one of us here whose constituents trust himself with half the faith they trust the President.

It was said of old time, by one of the prophets, in a time of great distress "a man shall be as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." It always has been so, Mr. President. The masses of mankind never have looked to groups, and never have looked to mass meetings, and never have looked to marshaled hosts. By some means that we cannot fathom, down in their hearts they have a sense of faith and trust, and they place themselves in the hands of one whom they can trust, and they rest as the weary traveler in the sunburned desert as in the shadow of a great rock.

If America has been saved from demoralization; if the morale of the American people has been restored since March 4; if there is hope and confidence throughout our land today, whereas a year ago there was fear and horror, it is due to the fact that the people who sent us here and whom we represent consider in their heart of hearts that they have found their man.

I think it always has been so. Faith, after all, is the greatest factor in national life. Faith, after all, is the most important element in the life of the American people and the American Republic.

I think the Pilgrim Fathers made their progress across the stormy Atlantic by faith.

I think George Washington led his armies from Valley Forge to Yorktown by faith.

I think John Marshall wrought the Constitution, Thomas Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence, and their words and their deliverances were accepted, by reason of the faith of the American people in them.

I think Abraham Lincoln saved the Union by faith. I am from the South; my father was a Confederate soldier; but I thank God that he did.

I think Robert E. Lee brought comfort and hope to the Confederates who followed him and to the great section of the country that went down into defeat with him—a sort of defeat which could not really mean defeat—and they went back to their normal lives and restored themselves to the Union largely because of their faith in Robert E. Lee.

So, Mr. President, I believe I will conclude with just one word more.

It happened that years ago, up in the New England country, at Plymouth, I saw the monument to the Pilgrim Fathers—the great shaft high in the air, and around the base of the shaft four figures, and, as I recall, one representing morality and one representing education and another representing hope, perhaps, and another representing some other of the great spiritual values; but high up upon that shaft the form of a woman with her hands stretched westward across the land, the figure of Faith—the symbol of our Republic's life and the secret of its progress:

By faith they wrought righteousness and obtained promises.
By faith they stopped the mouths of lions.
By faith they quenched the violence of fire.
By faith out of weakness they were made strong.
By faith they turned to flight the armies of the alien.

So, Mr. President, having finished my argument, I am willing to go the whole way on this bill, because I know it is addressed to the necessities of our people; it is addressed to the protection of agriculture, commerce, and industry; it is addressed to the stability of the currency; it is addressed to the restoration of specific value in the currency; and, so far as the mechanics of it is concerned, I am perfectly willing to put my faith in him in whom the American people have put their faith.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 6670) to provide for the establishment of a corporation to aid in the refinancing of farm debts, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H.R. 6670) to provide for the establishment of a corporation to aid in the refinancing of farm debts, and for other purposes, and it was subsequently signed by the Vice President.

UNITED STATES MONETARY SYSTEM

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 6976) to protect the currency system of the United States, to provide for the better use of the monetary gold stock of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Hebert	Reed
Ashurst	Couzens	Johnson	Reynolds
Austin	Cutting	Kean	Robinson, Ark.
Bachman	Davis	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.
Bailey	Dickinson	King	Russell
Bankhead	Dieterich	La Follette	Schall
Barbour	Dill	Lewis	Sheppard
Barkley	Duffy	Logan	Shipstead
Black	Erickson	Lonergan	Smith
Bone	Fess	McAdoo	Steiwer
Borah	Fletcher	McCarran	Stephens
Brown	Frazier	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Bulkley	George	McKellar	Thompson
Bulow	Gibson	McNary	Townsend
Byrd	Glass	Murphy	Trammell
Byrnes	Goldsborough	Neely	Tydings
Capper	Gore	Norris	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hale	Nye	Van Nuys
Carey	Harrison	O'Mahoney	Wagner
Clark	Hastings	Overton	Walcott
Connally	Hatch	Patterson	Walsh
Coolidge	Hatfield	Pittman	Wheeler
Copeland	Hayden	Pope	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not like to interrupt the Senator, but I desire to propose an amendment to the bill; and, as the time is so short, I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and printed, and, without objection, printed in the RECORD.

The amendment is as follows:

At the proper place in the bill insert the following:

"That subdivision (2) of subsection (b) of section 43, title III, of an act entitled 'An act to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, to raise revenue for extraordinary expenses incurred by reason of such emergency, to provide emergency relief with respect to agricultural indebtedness, to provide for the orderly liquidation of joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes", approved May 12, 1933, be amended as follows:

"By adding at the end of said subdivision (2) the following:

"'The President, in addition to the authority to provide for the unlimited coinage of such gold and silver at the ratio so fixed under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, is further authorized to cause to be issued and delivered to the tenderer of silver for coinage, silver certificates in lieu of the standard silver dollars to which the tenderer would be entitled and in an amount in dollars equal to the number of coined standard silver dollars that the tenderer of such silver for coinage would receive in standard silver dollars.

"'The President is further authorized to issue silver certificates in such denominations as he may prescribe against any silver bullion, silver, or standard silver dollars in the Treasury not then held for redemption of any outstanding silver certificates. The President may issue and deliver silver certificates in exchange for any standard silver dollars surrendered and delivered to the Treasury in exchange for silver certificates.

"'The President is authorized, in his discretion, to prescribe different terms and conditions and to make higher charges, or to collect larger seigniorage, for the coinage of foreign silver, or silver not produced in the United States or its dependencies. The silver certificates herein referred to shall be issued, delivered, and circulated substantially in conformity with the law now governing existing silver certificates, except as may herein be expressly provided to the contrary, and shall have and possess all of the privileges and the legal-tender characteristics of existing silver certificates now in the Treasury of the United States or in circulation.

"'The Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, may make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of said subdivision (2), subsection (b), of section 43, title III.'"

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I hope my fellow Senators will understand that it is through no discourtesy to them that I should prefer not to yield; but when I finish what little I have to say I shall be very glad indeed to try to answer any questions.

I do not believe it is possible to exaggerate the importance to American life of the measure which is now pending before the Senate. Every one of us must feel his own inadequacy to discuss it effectively. It is being urged with all the pressure of the administration. We all know the bill is going to pass. The principal questions to be decided by the Senate are with regard to the amendments that have been recommended by the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Nevertheless, although the passage of the bill seems to be assured, we should be false to our duty if we did not now, before its passage, express the objections that we see to it, and tell why we think it is going to work havoc upon the average American; why it is going to embarrass not only the generation that breathes today but the generations yet unborn who will take over from us the occupancy of this country.

I have decided, for two reasons, to make no exhaustive discussion of the constitutionality of the bill.

In the first place, that task has already been performed superbly by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], who spoke at length on that phase of the matter yesterday.

In the second place, I confess my own bewilderment as to the present condition of the safeguards of the Bill of Rights and the other safeguards in the Federal Constitution, because after a careful reading of the majority opinion in the Minnesota mortgage moratorium decision I could draw no other lesson from it than that the Supreme Court has said that the safeguards of the Constitution are to be effective only when we do not need them.

The declared purpose of the pending bill is to enable the administration to restore a fairer price level—a most praiseworthy object, if it is the duty of Government to regulate the level of all prices. It is praiseworthy, of course, that the Government should wish to restore prices to a fairer level than those prevailing.

In the discussion of the bill it seems to have been assumed that a fair price level is about that which obtained in the year 1926, although examination will show, if one runs back over the course of prices of the past century, that almost never during that century were prices as high as they were in 1926. But I pass all that. If we are going to authorize the administration to correct the level of prices of commodities and labor and all else that sells for prices, I am willing to grant that, as far as I know, the 1926 level is just as good as any other year's level.

In discussing the purposes of the pending bill I am going to try, Mr. President, to use the simplest words of which I am capable. I think the subject has been made mysterious by the long words and the involved phrases that have been used by the sponsors of the bill in describing what it proposes to do.

I think it is fair to say that the bill has three purposes, each of which is of vast importance.

The first purpose is to create a great fund of money in the Treasury, which, of course, we will have to borrow, because our income is not beginning to keep up with our expenses. We will have to borrow the sum of two thousand million dollars and vest that sum in the Secretary of the Treasury to use in his uncontrolled discretion for the purpose of fixing exchange rates—that is, the rates at which our money shall be exchanged for the money of foreign countries; and also to peg the price of Government bonds in the stock market so that it will be easier for us to sell additional billions of Government bonds to our own people, who will be misled by that pegged price on the stock market into thinking that Government bonds are worth that much.

In other words, the first purpose of this bill is to do with Government bonds that dishonest thing that we have been damning the bankers of the country for doing with other types of securities—to create an artificial market which will mislead bond buyers into thinking that such market expresses the fair level of the credit of the country and the fair value of the obligations of the country.

When bankers do that we cry, "Jail them." When the Government does it it is considered to be praiseworthy. At all events the first purpose to be accomplished by the pending bill is the setting aside of $2,000,000,000 in order to act as a weapon of artificial control of foreign exchange rates and American Government bond prices.

I would not complain so much of that. The device was used shortly after the armistice, when our debt was at its earlier peak. Mr. Eugene Meyer carried on with honesty and ability a system of attempted price fixing in the Government bond market. He was not able to keep the prices up. The price of Liberties of shortest maturity actually go down in the lower 80's. I remember seeing Fourth Liberties quoted at 84, if my memory serves me right, and had it not been for Mr. Meyer's operations they undoubtedly would have been quoted much lower. Some such process as that is proposed to be carried on here. The operations in exchange will be very much like those of the British fund, which resembles this one. So there is nothing unprecedented in what is proposed to be done in this first purpose of the bill.

But I suggest, Mr. President, that to give $2,000,000,000 to any human being and invite him to administer that fund in utmost secrecy, with no obligation whatever to make an accounting of his operations to the public, whose money it is, is scandalously bad governmental practice.

I suppose there was nothing that worked so effectively toward discrediting the reign of George III of England as his practice of requiring appropriations for which he refused to account to the subjects whose money was thus given to him. He used the great majority which he had in the British Parliament to club through those appropriations, and spent them as he pleased, with no accounting whatsoever. It was only indirectly that the people of Great Britain learned that much of that money was corruptly and dishonestly spent. We still look back to the time of George III as the low-water mark in parliamentary government in the English-speaking world.

Why should we now imitate those practices that were found to be fallacious in his time?

Or, Mr. President, if we want a more modern and up-to-date illustration of the unwisdom of such practice, let us merely look to the present situation of the Civil Works Administration, where we gave a smaller sum than that proposed to be given the Secretary of the Treasury, in this case to a man of equal honesty with the present Secretary of the Treasury. No one that I know has ever suggested a suspicion or doubt of the entire honesty and incorruptibility of Mr. Hopkins, whom the President has had managing the C.W.A. Yet, Mr. Hopkins himself says that the system, which is only a few months old, is already rotten with graft and corruption. How, then, can we think that the fund proposed to be established by the pending bill, to be administered under the direction of a very busy Secretary of the Treasury by subordinates whose identity no one knows, is not going to be subject to the same temptations that the C.W.A. fund has been subject to? The difference will be that instead of seeing political machines being built up in the C.W.A., flaunted before our faces on the roads and the public works of all our States, this system will be worked by night, in secret, by men whose very names we do not know.

The Secretary of the Treasury personally cannot, with the utmost diligence on his part, know the details of the administration of his fund. Here we are giving from the Treasury of a sorely tried Nation an incredibly vast sum to be administered by unknowns, in the dark, without the slightest obligation to account, except secretly to the President, without the requirement of any published audit whatsoever.

The American people can justly hold us to blame for the loss that may happen to them if we pass this bill in its present form, without any requirement of an audit of the management of that great fund.

I pass on then to the second and more important purpose of the bill, and that is the taking of the gold of the Federal Reserve banks by the Federal Government and placing it in the Federal Treasury. That is entirely within the power of the Federal Government to do. Any property, real property or personal property, can be taken by the power of eminent domain. I am not questioning our power to take it. Under the fifth amendment to the Constitution the Government is required to make just compensation for what it takes.

Obviously, if we take 2 ounces of gold and offer to pay for it by a warehouse certificate calling for 1 ounce of gold, we are not making just compensation for the taking of the 2 ounces. And when our professor friends, with whom Washington teems at present, blandly talk about the profit to be made by the United States Government from this taking, the answer to that is that not until the Supreme Court has spoken will it be known whether there is any profit there whatsoever; and if the compensation be just, and if full value is paid for what is taken, there cannot be any profit. I think that their assumption that they are going by this process to create for themselves a profit equal in nominal value to the present value of the gold they take is quite unwarranted and will prove to be disappointing to them before the end comes.

That, however, is not the principal objection. I am not so concerned about just compensation being made for this gold that is taken. The Federal Reserve authorities are intelligent, and they know the courts exist, and they know how to protect themselves, and there is no need for us to do more than give them the opportunity to protect themselves. We need not shed many tears over the taking of that gold merely as it tends to affect these banks.

It is not from that standpoint that the matter seems to me to be serious. Where I think it is vitally serious lies in this, that we are taking from a nonpolitical central banking authority practically all of its tangible assets, and are putting those assets into a highly political central authority, which will really exercise most of the prerogative of the Federal Reserve. It will control the credit of the Nation.

I do not think it is for the good of the country that our banking credits be taken from nonpolitical control and thrown into the maelstrom of partisan politics, as will be done if we do what is proposed to be done in the pending bill. I believe we are doing a sore injury to the banking system of America by transferring this wealth from the nonpolitical custody in which it now is, into the highly specialized political control in which it will be in the future. In other words, we shall be taking away from the Federal Reserve System its best proven advantage; we shall be weakening the entire banking structure of America by this proposed act; and that is vastly more important to me than the question of how many of these new dollars shall be given for the taking of this metal.

The third purpose of this bill is to reduce the number of grains of gold for which each dollar stands, called sometimes "dollar devaluation", sometimes "dollar debasement"; at any rate, it is an exercise of the power the Constitution gives us to regulate the value of the coinage. We are prescribing by this proposed act a lower gold content for each American dollar than has existed for many decades past; we are changing the value of our money, not because we have to do so but because we think that is one step toward the restoration of what we conceive to be a fairer price level.

I pass over the question of the constitutionality of the delegation of power. That question was exceptionally well argued yesterday by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]. Let us assume, for the purpose of the argument, that every word in this part of the bill is entirely constitutional. The question to which I wish to direct attention is: Is it wise, is it fair to the great mass of the American people, to do the thing we are now proposing to do? I would set aside all technicalities of constitutional construction just as I am trying to set aside the use of all technical terms and try to reduce this discussion to the simplest words possible in the effort to show just what this measure is going to do to the life of the average American in the years to come.

It is not necessary to be a prophet. I do not claim that faculty. We do not need to prophesy, because in so many cases we have seen this same process resorted to under the compulsion of the conditions that followed the World War. We saw it done in France; we saw it done in Italy; we saw it done in several of the central European countries, and all within the last 15 years. So we need not go back to the inflation periods of the eighteenth century in France. It may be they are so old that they are no longer good lessons for us, though I think they are good lessons. However, we do not need to resort to them. We have right before our eyes actions similar to this which were taken in those European countries within the memory of everyone who sits within the sound of my voice. So no prophecy is necessary, nor is any historical research necessary, to be able to foretell, with comparative accuracy, just what the passage of this bill is going to do to the average American and his family. It is going to require years to register the full effect of this action of debasing the dollar. Some effects will happen instantly; in fact, as the markets have a trick of anticipating coming events, some results have already happened.

The first effect of any kind of inflation—and this is plainly inflation—is an immediate increase in the prices of all those commodities that are dealt with generally over the world, such as wheat, which takes its price level largely from quotations in Liverpool; such as rubber, tea, coffee, and tin, and the multitude of things that are imported by practically all countries and come from several sources. Those commodities already represent quite accurately the changed value of the American dollar to approximately 60 percent of its prior value; but that same action has not yet been had in the case of commodities which we call commodities of domestic exchange and domestic production and domestic consumption. They are made or produced here and they are sold here and they are consumed here, so that the condition of the international exchanges does not affect them at all. It will require some time before the effect of this inflation is going to be noticed to its full extent on the domestic prices of things produced and consumed here. We saw that happen in France and we saw it happen in Italy. France, as will be remembered, had inflation down to 10 percent of the nominal value, the pre-war value, of the franc, and then, under the very courageous leadership of Mr. Poincaré, stabilization and a balanced budget followed, and the franc was stabilized at 4 cents as against its prior value of about 20 cents; to be exact, 3.90 against 19.3. That was a reduction of 80 percent of the pre-war value of the franc. Italy made a similar reduction to the extent of about 75 percent, and her lira was stabilized at about 25 percent of its pre-war value.

In both those countries we saw, as we have seen here, an almost instantaneous reflection of the inflation on international commodities and a delayed but, nevertheless, certain correction of the price of domestic commodities. So, for months following the enactment of this bill, we will see domestic commodities stiffen in price; the price level of everything tangible will, after 6 months or so, have risen to reflect the changed value of the dollar.

What happens then? Everybody realizes that it costs more to live; everybody, without realizing the why of it, finds that his bills are bigger, that the same amount of money taken to the store on Saturday will not buy the same amount of goods. Great complaint will come, as it came in Italy and France, from the plain people of the country that, for some reason which they do not understand, their wages will not buy the same amount of comforts for their families. Then we shall see agitation for wage increases; it will continue and wage increases ultimately will come, but only after a lag such as occurred in both the countries referred to and also in central Europe, and during which the plain people of the country will have suffered great hardships. That is the first bad result that we are going to see in America from the adoption of this policy. Wages, then, will go up, and after them, but probably not with them, salaries will increase. The white-collar class will suffer even longer than the working class, but in the same degree and in the same way.

Then, long afterward, rents and real-estate prices will rise. It took years for inflation to be reflected fully in rents and real-estate prices in those European countries. And, after that is all over, the rates of utilities will very reluctantly be allowed to be corrected, while meantime the cost of operating them will have increased. Likewise, it will be impossible for the railroads of the country to pay a decent wage to the people who work for them because of the long delay that is inevitable in the correction of their rates. The same thing is true of the trolleys and the telephones and what not. I am sorry for the working people who are employed by the utilities during the period upon which we are now entering, because it will be years—it may be 5 years—before the full correction will have taken place.

Furthermore, some conditions never will be corrected. Think of the veteran who is living on a fixed money pension. By the passage of this bill we will have cut his pension 40 percent at least. Think of the retired old man, the widow who is living on a fixed money payment from an investment, from an insurance policy, or from some source such as that; by the passage of this bill we will have cut off from the income of those people not less than 40 percent. They do not know it as yet, but they will know it most certainly in the months to come, and then we will have to answer why did we do it. When we tell them that we did it in order to help the debtor group, they will answer to us and say, "But we are debtors; it does not help us; it is true my mortgage on my dwelling house or on my farm is a little easier to pay; yes, it is easier to pay that mortgage, but all my cost of living has gone up so that the surplus I was putting aside to get rid of my debts has disappeared; I can only buy the bare necessities for my family because of what you have done to prices by the passage of this bill."

Picture to yourself, Mr. President, a man named John Jones, who has a family of three children and a modest house on which he has a mortgage about equal to his annual income. He is paying a little on it now; he has a job with the railroad, let us say; he is paying a little on his mortgage; he is paying a little on his insurance; he is having some difficulty but he is taking good care of his family. What is this measure going to do to him? John Jones discovers that everything he buys for himself or for his family to eat or to wear is costing him more. He will discover it by July 1934. His pay will not go up; the railroad is just breaking even and it cannot raise his pay, but John Jones, who is working on a fixed wage, finds that keeping his family is a great deal harder than it has been at any time up to now. Perhaps he will not know then that it was this bill that Congress passed in January 1934 that did it to him, but sooner or later he is going to learn it. Then he finds that other things are beginning to cost more.

If he wants to have a job done by a painter or carpenter, whose wages are not held down like those who work for utility companies, he will find that that work costs him more. Everything about him is costing more, his pay stands still, and he realizes while as a debtor on his mortgage he has obtained some advantage in the reduction of the mortgage, that by this process the advantage has been far more than compensated by the rise in the cost of living, which pinches him at every turn, and before very long he has nothing with which to make payments on his mortgage and is in danger of foreclosure; that he cannot pay his insurance premiums and his policies are lapsing. So, in the long run, John Jones, the debtor, finds that he has lost far more than he has gained by the enactment of this bill.

When we talk about assessing the creditor class for the benefit of the debtors, the hard-pressed debtors of America, we do not stop often enough to think who constitute the creditor class. Obviously, the person who owns a bond is a creditor; we all know that. The person who owns a mortgage is a creditor; we know that; but we do not think of the people who have laid up their savings and built up little savings accounts in banks as being of the creditor class, and yet they are one of the biggest creditor classes in America. We do not think of the insurance policyholders of the United States as being of the creditor class; yet they hold some 55,000,000 insurance policies, and we, by this process, are cutting the value of every one of those 55,000,000 policies 40 percent. We never think of the line at the pay window on Saturday night as being of the creditor class, but those men to whom wages are owing constitute the biggest creditor class in the United States. They are the people whom we are hitting directly by this bill. If we were called upon to consider a bill providing that "all wages in the United States are hereby reduced 40 percent", who would think that the introducer of such a measure was in his sound senses? Yet that is exactly what this bill provides. The bill we are considering is a 40-percent wage reduction for every workman and working woman in the United States.

Heaven knows that it has been hard enough to get adequate compensation given and retained for those veterans who were disabled in the service of their country. This bill cuts the compensation of every disabled veteran 40 percent in addition to all the other terrific cuts he has been forced to stand under the recent Economy Act and the Presidential regulation. Is there any chance that in the near future Congress will restate the schedule of veterans' compensation so as to increase it and absorb the cut in value of those veterans' compensation that we are making by this bill? We all know there is not. We all know there is no chance of increasing the compensation payable to veterans of the World War in order to make up for the cut in value that we are inflicting by this measure.

Now, who wins by this process? Again we have only to look to the experience of those European countries which have followed this same road. They did it by compulsion. We are doing it by choice. Always and in every land the speculator wins, the speculator, like Stinnes, who borrows money from his trusting fellow citizens and buys on a shoestring tangible property that he knows will sooner or later reflect this inflation of the currency. Stinnes made billions of marks out of the German inflation. Men like him in Italy and France and Central Europe made money out of the distress of their fellow citizens by that process. The speculator wins. We are benefiting him by this method.

Some debtors win—those debtors only who have a considerable amount of tangible property whose price reflects the inflation process. Most debtors will not win. The working man who has a mortgage on his home will find that mortgage not one bit easier to pay, because his wages go down in value to the same extent and at the some moment that the mortgage goes down. By comparison with his income his debt remains just as big. That kind of debtor is not going to be affected in the slightest.

The average workingman of America ought not to be told that this is a measure for his relief. I do not care how much he is in debt, it will not relieve him, because both sides of the picture, his money and his obligations, go down in value to the same extent and at the same moment, and the mortgage will look just as big to him after this bill has passed as before it was introduced. So that vast group of debtors, the greatest group of them all, is not a winner.

There is one debtor that gains conspicuously at the first and that is the United States Government, because by this measure it is cutting almost in half the obligations that it owes to its citizens. It is a striking thing that practically every bond issued by the Government now outstanding is held in America. Practically all of the American public debt is owned by American citizens. When we remember how that debt was incurred, how in the horror of war times people's feelings were aroused to the utmost and we begged them to buy until it hurt, when we remember that they did buy until it hurt, we must admit that there is something more than the sanctity of the ordinary commercial debt about the transaction.

I can remember when the second Liberty bond issue was being floated. My regiment at that time was at Camp Meade. By persuasion, applied awfully hard, we induced every officer and man in the regiment to subscribe to a second Liberty bond. We took it out of their pitiful pay, so that when the monthly pay day came oftentimes the balance of the pay of a fine soldier was less than $1 when all these deductions had been made.

That is the kind of people who bought our Liberty bonds. They bought them out of patriotism; they bought them out of savings that had been held sacred for other purposes; they bought them on credit to be paid for out of their wages to come. They bought under circumstances that make that a sacred debt of America, and yet here, cavalierly and without giving a thought to those people, we are wiping away 40 to 50 percent of the amount that we promised to pay them. It is just as if the American Government stole in at night to the box where the citizen keeps his bonds and tore up or burned every alternate bond that was found in the box. Morally this action is exactly the same as that.

We are not driven to this action. We could be on the gold basis today. We have the biggest gold reserve of any nation on earth. If it were not for this deliberate policy upon which we are embarking at the instance of professors with the idea that somehow we are going to make prices go up, we would not need to indulge in any of this sort of legislation. The professors have an idea that America would be more prosperous if one apple sells for 2 debased cents instead of 1 sound cent. It is just as if they told us that we would be warmer if we put more lines on the thermometer.

The whole American currency system is being debased in order to prove to some professors—a small minority of the professorate of the country—that their theory will not work. For the last 3 or 4 months we have been paying foreigners about 60 percent more than we pay Americans for a lot of gold that we did not need, but that we have been buying abroad to prove to Professor Warren that his theory of buying gold to put up prices had no sense in it. We have spent millions of dollars in proving to Professor Warren that his theory is a silly one and that it will not work; and that the great majority of professors who said it would not work were right and that he was wrong. This bill is going to be a still more expensive way of proving to some other professors that their present theory is wrong.

The American Government is going to gain in the first instance by repudiating that part of the debt it owes its patriotic citizens, but in the long run we are going to learn from the injury to American credit that honesty after all is the best policy. In the long run, American credit, which hitherto has stood unequaled in the civilized world, is going to reflect the dishonesty of this action. We will pay in lowered credit and we will pay in higher interest rates, for many a long year to come, for the essential immorality and dishonesty of the policy that is declared by this bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] minimized the importance of the constitutional issue and sought to give emphasis to the economic effect of the measure involved. I have no intention at this time of claiming the time of the Senate to reply in detail to the address of the Senator from Pennsylvania. If any conclusion can be reached from his argument, it is that the policy of laissez faire, the policy that prevailed in the Federal administration under President Hoover until the 4th of March last, should be continued indefinitely.

There is in this body no abler lawyer, no more resourceful debater than the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]. Summarizing the conclusions into which he has entered, I say that the only thing he leaves in the minds of Senators is that it is morally wrong for the Congress of the United States to exercise its power under the Constitution to coin money and regulate its value, because rights have vested under the existing law pertaining to that subject—rights and interests which may be affected by this legislation. He does not take into consideration, in my judgment, that the holders of insurance policies and the holders of other obligations are dependent, in order that their rights may be safeguarded and preserved, upon a readjustment of the value of monetary units in the United States.

With respect to the constitutional question, it was asserted on the floor of the Senate by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who is not a lawyer, but whose experience has been so comprehensive and whose ability is so generally recognized that his opinion commands respect and confidence wherever it is asserted, that the Attorney General of the United States, in expressing the very opinion confirmed and approved by the Senator from Pennsylvania, had violated sound legal principles.

The Senator from Pennsylvania said that no constitutional question arises upon the power or right of the Congress in the exercise of eminent domain to provide for the seizure of gold.

The Senator from Virginia injected into the debate, with apparently great confidence, that the Attorney General had omitted from his reference to the Monongahela case certain excerpts to the effect that the amount of compensation recoverable in a case where eminent domain is exercised is a judicial question.

Mr. PRESIDENT, that issue is not involved except in a most collateral way, in the bill pending before the Senate. No lawyer with whom I am acquainted has raised the question or asserted that the measure of compensation is a legislative matter and not a judicial matter.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. I have not the opinion of the Attorney General before me, and, therefore, I may not exactly say whether the Attorney General in his opinion or before the Banking and Currency Committee undertook to state that just compensation was provided in the bill, in that the banks would be given some sort of gold certificates in return for the gold. My impression is that he included that statement in his written opinion. Certainly he made the statement before the Banking and Currency Committee that just compensation was provided.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Let me answer the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BARKLEY. I want to state what the Attorney General stated in the committee. After the reading of the Attorney General's opinion, in a verbal discussion with the committee the Attorney General emphatically stated that there is nothing in this bill, nor could there be, that deprives any Federal Reserve bank or any other interested party, of the right to go to court to establish the measure of just compensation if not satisfied with that established in the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, every lawyer knows that it is competent for the legislative department to tender what it considers just compensation. There is not a lawyer who hears me who does not know that in all the States statutes have been enacted providing for what the legislature considers just compensation; and no lawyer has contended that the owner of property taken by the Government for a public use is estopped from asserting his rights in the courts.

The opinion of the Attorney General, which I have before me, does not deal primarily with the question of just compensation. It implies that the measure of compensation fixed in the bill in all probability will be held by the courts to be just compensation. It is my humble opinion that his position in that particular is so well stated and so well grounded that the Senator from Pennsylvania wisely passed over a legal issue which he is peculiarly competent to discuss, and directed his argument to questions pertaining to the economic value of the measure.

The opinion of the Attorney General is contained in a letter addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury under date of January 17, 1934, and I read it:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I am pleased to comply with your request for an expression of my views as to the constitutionality of section 2 (a) of the proposed gold-reserve bill.

The section under consideration provides that all right, title, and interest, and every claim of the Federal Reserve Board, of every Federal Reserve bank, and every Federal Reserve agent in and to any and all gold coin and gold bullion shall pass to and are hereby vested in the United States. Payment is to be made in gold certificates in equivalent amounts of dollars.

The monetary gold stock may be taken by the Government in the exercise of its right of eminent domain.

The Senator from Pennsylvania admits that that declaration is unquestionable, and it would be absurd for me to present further argument on that subject.

Such power extends to every form of property required for public use.

The Supreme Court observed in Kohl v. United States (91 U.S. 367, 371) that the right of eminent domain "is inseparable from sovereignty"; and in United States v. Jones (109 U.S. 513, 518) that it "belongs to every independent government."

The manner in which the power is exercised is within the control of the legislature. This principle was formulated in Secombe v. Railroad Co. (23 Wall. 108, 117), in the following language:

"It is no longer an open question in this country that the mode of exercising the right of eminent domain, in the absence of any provision in the organic law prescribing a contrary course, is within the discretion of the legislature. There is no limitation upon the power of the legislature in this respect, if the purpose be a public one, and just compensation be paid or tendered to the owner for the property taken."

Likewise, the necessity for the exercise of the power is a matter solely for legislative determination (Monongahela Navigation Co. v. United States, 148 U.S. 312, 327).

Unquestionably, the taking of gold for monetary purposes is for a public use.

The establishment and the regulation of a monetary system is one of the fundamental functions of government. The power to coin money and regulate the value thereof is expressly reposed in Congress by article I, section 8, clause 5, of the Constitution (Veazie Bank v. Fenno, 8 Wall. 533, 549). In fact, monetary gold is a commodity affected with public interest (Ling Su Fan v. United States, 218 U.S. 302).

The requirement for just compensation is completely satisfied by the provision for payment in gold certificates in equivalent amounts of dollars.

That is a quotation from the opinion, and no doubt that is the expression to which the Senator from Virginia referred a moment ago.

I continue with the Attorney General's opinion:

Since the decision in the Legal Tender cases (12 Wall. 457), it may no longer be successfully disputed that Congress may make paper money legal tender for the payment of all debts, public or private, and that the Government may discharge its obligations in currency of that type.

The amount of just compensation is determined as of the time of taking, and not as of some subsequent date. The mere fact that at a later period the property may acquire an enhanced value, or that there may be an accretion to the thing taken, does not increase the compensation to which the owner is entitled. Thus, in this instance, the value of the gold must be determined as of the moment that title passes to the United States. The mere fact that, if thereafter the weight of the gold dollar should be reduced, the value of the gold would become proportionately greater does not serve to give the prior owner any right to secure increased reimbursement (Brooks Scanlon Corp. v. United States, 265 U.S. 106).

The measure of compensation must be the prevailing price (Vogelstein v. United States, 262 U.S. 337). The prevailing price of gold coin and gold bullion in the United States (other than newly mined gold) is fixed by statute. The act of March 14, 1900 (U.S. Code, title 31, sec. 314), prescribes that the weight of the gold dollar shall be $25^{8}/_{10}$ grains, nine tenths fine, which in turn makes gold worth $20.67 an ounce. That is the price that the owner of gold would have received at the mint, if he had presented it for deposit, prior to March 4, 1933. That is likewise the price that he would have received at any subsequent time if he surrendered it in accordance with the requirements of the Executive orders or the orders of the Secretary of the Treasury issued under the act of March 9, 1933. This is also the price that it is proposed to pay for the gold to be taken under section 2 of the bill under consideration. The conclusion seems inescapable that this provision safeguards the owners in their right to receive as just compensation the value prevailing at the time of taking.

The fact that the market price of gold in foreign countries is greater than the statutory price in the United States avails the owners nothing. An owner of gold in the United States has no way of shipping the gold abroad, in view of the prohibition against the export of gold from this country, promulgated under the act of March 9, 1933. Consequently, an owner of gold in the United States is in no position to secure the so-called "world price", and, therefore, his gold is not worth more than the statutory price.

The prohibition of the export of gold is constitutional. Thus, in Ling Su Fan v. United States (218 U.S. 302), the Supreme Court upheld the validity of an act placing an embargo on the export of silver coin from the Philippine Islands, in spite of the contention that the result was a taking of property, because of the fact that in China silver bullion had a higher market value than its nominal coinage value in the Philippines.

The question has been raised as to whether the member banks have any right, title, and interest in the gold coin or bullion held by the Federal Reserve banks. In my opinon, this inquiry should be answered in the negative. The member banks have no claim against the assets of the Federal Reserve banks except as stockholders, and, of course, it cannot be contended that in taking any of the assets of a corporation any compensation should be paid directly to the stockholders thereof. Every Federal Reserve bank is now required to maintain a gold reserve against circulating notes and deposits (Federal Reserve Act, sec. 16; U.S.C., title 12, sec. 413). Any part of such reserve may be used as part of the collateral for Federal Reserve notes, which is required to be deposited with Federal Reserve agents. The mere fact that the source of some or all of such gold may be deposits made by member banks with the Federal Reserve banks, is immaterial. As soon as the gold is deposited with the Federal Reserve bank it loses its identity, and the relationship between the Federal Reserve bank and the member bank becomes that of debtor and creditor.

The gold reserves of the Federal Reserve banks must not be confused with the reserve balances which every member is required, by section 19 of the Federal Reserve Act, to maintain with its Federal Reserve bank. The reserve balances of the member banks need not be in gold.

In closing, I desire to call to your attention the following expressions of the Supreme Court in Ling Su Fan v. United States (218 U.S. 302, 310):

"Conceding the title of the owner of such coins, yet there is attached to such ownership those limitations which public policy may require by reason of their quality as a legal tender and as a medium of exchange. These limitations are due to the fact that public law gives to such coinage a value which does not attach as a mere consequence of intrinsic value. Their quality as a legal tender is an attribute of law aside from their bullion value. They bear, therefore, the impress of sovereign power which fixes their value and authorizes their use in exchange."

The foregoing considerations lead me to the conclusion that section 2 (a) of the bill is constitutional.

Very truly yours,

HOMER CUMMINGS, Attorney General.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BULKLEY. I desire to add a suggestion. Apart from all legal argument as to just compensation in this matter, the whole question seems to me a good deal of a moot question, because the Federal Reserve Board and the Governors of the Federal Reserve banks have all agreed that any profit that may result from devaluation being the result of an act of the Government, the Government should take that profit. Furthermore, if the profit should remain in the Federal Reserve banks, still the ultimate beneficial interest in it belongs to the Government, because it is so provided in the Federal Reserve Act, which is the original charter of the Federal Reserve banks. I read this sentence:

> Should a Federal Reserve bank be dissolved or go into liquidation, any surplus remaining, after the payment of all debts, dividend requirements as hereinbefore provided, and the par value of the stock, shall be paid to and become the property of the United States and shall be similarly applied.

So there is no question in any of this affecting the moral right to the profit.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The question recurs on the subject of what constitutes just compensation. Availing of a well-considered memorandum on the subject the following seems conclusive of the constitutionality of the provisions for the taking by the Government of monetary gold.

There have been some suggestions, in connection with the gold-reserve bill, that the question of what constitutes just compensation is a matter for judicial determination. Possibly it was intended thereby to raise the question whether the fact that the bill fixes the amount of compensation to be paid for the gold and the medium in which payment is to be made, without making provision for review by the courts, renders the bill unconstitutional. The answer is an unqualified "no."

It is, of course, well established that where the Government takes property by eminent domain, a promise to pay just compensation is implied. Consequently, the owner may maintain an action in the Court of Claims to recover just compensation in such an instance. This principle has been enunciated and applied by the Supreme Court in numerous cases (Campbell v. United States, 266 U.S. 368, 371; Portsmouth Co. v. United States, 260 U.S. 327; United States v. Cress, 243 U.S. 316, 329; United States v. Lynah, 188 U.S. 445, 465; Russian Volunteer Fleet v. United States, 282 U.S. 481, 489).

This doctrine was also expressly recognized and approved by Judge Woolsey in a recent case in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, United States against Campbell. In that case the so-called "gold-hoarding provisions" contained in section 2 of the Emergency Banking Act of March 9, 1933, were held constitutional.

In view of the fact that the right to bring suit for just compensation under the general jurisdiction of the Court of Claims exists in such cases, an express grant or recognition of such right in a statute authorizing such taking is not necessary; and the absence of such a provision does not affect the constitutionality of the act.

Nevertheless, it is frequently wise and desirable for the legislature to fix the amount of compensation where property is to be taken by eminent domain so that if the owner is satisfied with the amount so determined, he may receive payment immediately without being compelled to resort to the courts. The insertion of such a provision in the statute clearly does not render it invalid.

The decision in Monongahela Navigation Co. v. United States (148 U.S. 312) throws an interesting light on this point. In that case the statute authorized the Secretary of War to condemn certain property for a lock and dam, and provided that in estimating the amount of compensation to be paid by the United States the value of the franchise to collect tolls should not be considered. In condemnation proceedings damages were assessed in accordance with the formula prescribed in the act. On an appeal to the Supreme Court that tribunal held that the franchise constituted a property right, and consequently the owner was entitled to be compensated for its value as well as for the value of the physical property. Accordingly, the judgment was reversed and the case remanded for a new trial.

The significance of the decision, as affecting the pending matter, is found in the fact that while Congress prescribed the measure of compensation in the act, which measure was found by the Supreme Court to be erroneous, that fact did not lead to a judgment that the statute was unconstitutional, but resulted merely in a readjustment of the amount of compensation.

It may be useful to give some consideration to the extent to which the courts will review the question of what constitutes just compensation.

Insofar as concerns the medium in which the payment is to be made, the legislative fiat is final. In view of the decision in the Legal Tender cases (12 Wall. 457), Congress may properly provide for the discharge of the obligation of the Government in any form of currency which it has declared to be legal tender. The courts, therefore, may not upset the provision for the payment of compensation in this instance in gold certificates, as there can be no doubt that gold certificates are legal tender for the payment of all debts, public and private (act of Dec. 24, 1919, 41 Stat. 370; U.S. Code, title 31, sec. 451).

As concerns the amount of compensation, in the case of the types of property that the Government has had occasion to take by eminent domain in the past, the amount of just compensation is a judicial question and the courts are not bound by legislative declaration of what is fair compensation. Were we dealing with an ordinary commodity, therefore the courts might pass de novo on all questions of law and fact in ascertaining the amount of just compensation.

If monetary metal is to be treated as an ordinary commodity—which, as is shown hereafter, should not be done—and the question of just compensation is open to the courts for decision, it is difficult to conceive how the courts could reach any conclusion other than that $20.67 an ounce constitutes just compensation. That sum constitutes the statutory price of gold bullion fixed by the Congress and is the only price which the owner of monetary gold is able to get if he desires to dispose of his property. Consequently, under the decisions in eminent domain proceedings, such price must constitute the measure of just compensation.

Should it be suggested that a person may sell gold for use in the arts, and, possibly, receive a price different from the statutory price for gold bullion, the answer is that the gold in question cannot find its way into the arts. The gold coin and gold bullion used by the Federal Reserve banks is employed solely for monetary purposes. It surely cannot be seriously contended that the Federal Reserve banks could sell their gold metal for use in industry.

The conclusion would seem to follow that even if we are to deal with monetary gold as though it were an ordinary commodity, the courts, in reviewing the question of what constitutes just compensation, would nevertheless be obliged to arrive at the same measure as that proposed in the bill.

In ascertaining the amount of just compensation for monetary metal, however, we are not dealing with an ordinary commodity. We are dealing with money. The property is given certain attributes and a certain fixed measure of value by the very fact that it has been declared to constitute money. The Constitution, in article I, section 8, clause 5, expressly confers upon Congress the power—

> To coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures.

In the exercise of this power the Congress has heretofore fixed the value of monetary gold as being $20.67 an ounce. For the courts to fix any other measure of compensation would be an attempt to exercise an authority which has been expressly granted to Congress.

It would seem to follow, therefore, that the courts would not be authorized to admit evidence or to determine the value of monetary gold as an open question of fact but would be required to render judgment for the statutory price fixed by the Congress.

Consequently, if the owner of such metal brought suit for just compensation, the power of the courts would be limited to the rendition of a judgment for the gold taken at the rate of $20.67 an ounce.

The peculiar characteristics of money would seem irresistibly to lead to this result. Money is the standard or measure of value. Its chief usefulness consists in the fact that the value of other forms of property is calculated in terms of money. For that reason, in all civilized countries, money has a fixed, arbitrary value given to it by the legislature. That value cannot vary from time to time except as provided by law, for otherwise money would lose its basic attributes and would cease to be money.

It is, perhaps, anomalous that one case cited on the question of compensation should relate to coal rather than to gold, since the two are not in the same category and are not fitly to be compared. But even if the rule as to compensation be the same, it is that "the full money equivalent of the property taken" must be paid, as declared in the case of United States v. New River Collieries (262 U.S. 341). Gold, however, particularly gold in the Federal Reserve banks, whether it be in the form of coin, bars, or bullion, possesses a monetary character (U.S. Code, title 31, secs. 325, 327, 333), otherwise it would not be held by these banks which have no use for it except as money or as a reserve for the issuance of other forms of money. Since it is treated and held by the banks as such, the Congress may take it over for fiscal or monetary reasons, as the pending bill proposes to do, as part of the Treasury's gold stock and to maintain the Government's credit, or for other reasons which Congress may approve in the public interest. Full compensation is provided for and is to be made at once by substituting another form of money of equivalent value for the gold, according to the existing standard, which is the only standard which the courts can recognize, if appealed to, to wit, dollar for dollar.

The question of compensation then comes to this: If the Treasury may, in the public interest, especially when thereto authorized by Congress, take the citizen's $20-gold piece, or other coin, and make compensation in lawful money of the United States, may it not do likewise with the billings in the Federal Reserve banks and compensate them in like manner when Congress so directs?

I shall conclude what I have to say on this subject at present with a further reference to the remarks of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]. He commended the speech of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] and that of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS]. The latter address was largely a political address. I think anyone listening to it or reading it would reach that conclusion. Its primary intention and purpose was to stimulate, promote, and cause, if possible, political opposition to the President and to his policies.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], in discussing the question of the validity of the proposed legislation, stated that it was an invalid or an unlawful delegation of legislative power. There were some interruptions and some discussion at the time as to the correct rule upon the limitation of the power of Congress to delegate its authority. That rule, I believe, is well stated—and I think it does not conflict with any principle of law asserted by the Senator from Vermont—by Burdick in the Law of the American Constitution in the following language:

> The true distinction * * * is between the delegation of power to make the law, which necessarily involves a discretion as to what it shall be, and conferring authority or discretion as to its execution, to be exercised under and in pursuance of the law. The first cannot be done; to the latter no valid objection can be made.

The authorities are uniform that before a court can properly hold a statute unconstitutional as delegating legislative power it must clearly appear that the power in question is purely legislative. All that will be accomplished by the passage of this bill, as was so ably stated by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], will be to give a rather broad discretion to the Secretary of the Treasury in the administration of the law; he is not given the power to make laws.

Let me say, in this connection, that during a long service in the Congress it has not been my privilege to listen to a more persuasive or conclusive address on any measure of legislation pending before the Senate or the House of Representatives than that which was delivered this morning by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY]. The Sena-or from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] controverted his conclusions; he waived the constitutional question insofar as he could do so without repudiating the position taken by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]. He says it does not amount to anything, anyway, and the Supreme Court has become so unconstitutional that it will sustain this measure, no matter what may be put into it. Senators, I do not believe that the attack of the Senator from Pennsylvania on the Supreme Court of the United States is justified. He had better have admitted that the arguments made by his colleagues, the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Vermont, were, in his judgment, not well grounded on authorities than to have said, "The Supreme Court will sustain the measure, but the Supreme Court in doing so will act corruptly or in violation of the Constitution."

The simple truth of the matter is that an effort is being made to defeat this measure on the ground of its unconstitutionality when the real opposition to it is economic considerations. There are those here who do not care how low the prices may fall; there are those here who do not care how great the purchasing power of the gold dollar might have become. They would have left us at the mercy of our competitors in foreign trade; they apparently would have approved of the policies of our competitors in foreign commerce in going off the gold standard. They would have had us remain on the gold standard, even though it were necessary to continue the policies of the former administration through which ruin was coming to the people of this country and to every interest they hold dear. They will not be permitted to make a covert political attack in their opposition to this bill.

This bill represents the best thought that has been put forth on the subject of our monetary system considered in connection with foreign exchange. Those who oppose it do so on the theory that the old doctrine of laissez faire—sit still and do nothing—should continue to prevail; and every Senator who votes against the bill but suggests no constructive measure in lieu of it will commit himself to the policy of doing nothing. The time has arrived when action should be taken.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] presented a very appealing picture of the soldiers who during the World War purchased Government bonds and who would be injured by an increase in price levels. Does the Senator think that many of those soldiers who during the war bought bonds today own those bonds, or are they held by bankers and other investors who purchased them at a discount?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; the Senator from Pennsylvania knows that the Liberty bonds of the United States or other bonds of the United States are not held by the veterans of the World War. The Senator from Pennsylvania in one breath complains of the action taken by the Government under Mr. Eugene Meyer in sustaining the Liberty bonds, and then ridicules the Government for not sustaining them now. That is the consistency in the argument of my good friend the Senator from Pennsylvania.

I want to say now, with all the emphasis at my command, that, while ordinarily I would not wish to see the Government of the United States engage in common market operations, yet if there is, as has been demonstrated by the Senator from North Carolina this morning, an exchange war in progress, and if those representing the opposition to my Government make an attack on the American dollar through American bonds, by all that is right and holy, I should like to see my Government in a position to sustain its bonds and to maintain its credit and its honor. The very argument made by the Senator from Pennsylvania against the bill is susceptible of being controverted into one of the best arguments that can be offered in support of it. The Senator from Pennsylvania says that the enactment of this measure will raise prices. That is among the purposes of the bill. The Senator also says it will make the debt burden, demonstrated this morning by the Senator from North Carolina to be unbearable, lighter than it now is. If that be true, then it constitutes a justification for supporting rather than for defeating the measure.

Mr. President, I had not intended to enter into a general discussion of this subject. It is better that these readjustments be made now as promptly, as decisively, and as finally as possible. It is better that the readjustments may affect the holders of insurance policies than that the insurance companies go into bankruptcy and all their policies become worthless. There is not a man who hears me who does not know that when the tide was made to turn, following the 4th of March, the whole insurance system of the Nation was trembling in the balance. There was danger then that the insurance companies would be wrecked and destroyed. It is better, far better, that the readjustments contemplated by the bill should come now, and as speedily as possible, rather than that the doctrine of my good friend, the Senator from Pennsylvania, should prevail, and that we should go on doing nothing and sink into a black chasm of despair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 14, line 3.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Hebert	Reed
Ashurst	Couzens	Johnson	Reynolds
Austin	Cutting	Kean	Robinson, Ark.
Bachman	Davis	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.
Bailey	Dickinson	King	Russell
Bankhead	Dieterich	La Follette	Schall
Barbour	Dill	Lewis	Sheppard
Barkley	Duffy	Logan	Shipstead
Black	Erickson	Lonergan	Smith
Bone	Fess	McAdoo	Steiwer
Borah	Fletcher	McCarran	Stephens
Brown	Frazier	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Bulkley	George	McKellar	Thompson
Bulow	Gibson	McNary	Townsend
Byrd	Glass	Murphy	Trammell
Byrnes	Goldsborough	Neely	Tydings
Capper	Gore	Norris	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hale	Nye	Van Nuys
Carey	Harrison	O'Mahoney	Wagner
Clark	Hastings	Overton	Walcott
Connally	Hatch	Patterson	Walsh
Coolidge	Hatfield	Pittman	Wheeler
Copeland	Hayden	Pope	White

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is detained from the Senate by illness, and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] is necessarily detained from the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-two Senators having responded to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there are two schools of thought with reference to the monetary question with which we are now dealing, and they are ranging themselves on either side in accordance with the views which they entertain. There is one body of men who hold that we should have a larger volume of circulating medium, a larger volume of currency, believing that that will result in an increase in the price of commodities. On the other hand, there are those who do not believe that we shall escape from our present dilemma or from the economic catastrophe which has engulfed us by legislating in any respect relative to money. They do not accept the view that our enlarged volume of money will augment the price of commodities or, if it would have that effect, that it would be a wise or just thing to do.

I am a believer in the first proposition. I feel quite sure that we shall not see a rise in the price of commodities in this country until we increase the volume of the circulating medium. That, of course, gives rise to the question of sound and unsound currency, or sound and unsound money. No one desires unsound currency. No one desires unsound money. No one would suffer more from unsound currency or unsound money than the agricultural interests of the country or the labor interests. When we come to discuss the question of sound or unsound money there is again a division. Some believe that gold alone must constitute the sole metallic base of our monetary system. There are others who believe that we should broaden the metallic base by using silver, that it would still be sound money.

Mr. President, I support this measure because I believe it is a step in the right direction. I do not anticipate the benefits to flow from this measure which are expected upon the part of some, but I think it will be helpful. I expect in the near future we shall have to take other remedial action, but I think this action is a forward move. I support it because it is based on the principle in which I believe, but I would go further in the application of that principle.

The able Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] was of the opinion that this bill, if enacted into law, would result in an increase in the price of commodities. He seemed to believe, at least so I infer from his argument, that there will be a considerable increase in the price of commodities. I support the bill for the very reason that he opposes it. In other words, as I understand the able Senator, he does not believe anything ought to be done in the way of legislation to effect a rise in the price of commodities. He does not favor that which he thinks the bill, if enacted into law, will accomplish. Naturally, he opposes it.

Mr. President, we are in a most extraordinary situation. The world has never faced just such a situation as that of the present in regard to money. I do not believe that anything less than drastic, almost revolutionary, movement will lift us out of our present condition. When we consider the amount of indebtedness which now rests upon the human family, something like $400,000,000,000, when we contemplate the stupendous tax burden which we are carrying, increasing year by year, and then take into consideration the very low level of prices corresponding to the low level of wages, when we contemplate the low purchasing power of the people generally, it seems to me that nothing less than a stupendous effort will bring anything in the nature of real relief. This bill is but a mild remedy compared with what we shall have to have to find real and permanent relief.

I do not fear this measure, therefore, because of any supposed radical changes which it is making in our monetary system. I rather believe that it will prove insufficient to accomplish all that its authors have in mind. But I realize that the President of the United States carries a great responsibility at this time. He doubtless believes it would not be wise to move other than by very deliberate steps and in a most conservative way. So long as the move is in the right direction, I do not feel that I should vote against a measure because it is not all I should like. The people have sacrificed and suffered beyond measure, and let us not blind ourselves to the fact that they are suffering still. I confess I am impatient with what seems to me procrastination in doing those things which appeal to me as indispensable to recovery. But in such a matter it may be that it is best to make haste slowly. In any event, I do not question the motives of those who feel it best to move slowly. But it is not out of order to state my views as to necessity of a more advanced program.

We have in the world today about $11,500,000,000 or $12,000,000,000 of gold. Three nations of the world possess practically all of the monetary gold of the world. Between 80 and 85 percent of the monetary gold of the world is now in the possession of the United States, Great Britain, and France. The remainder of the world, with a population of about 1,500,000,000, have but a few cents per capita primary money upon which to do business. It seems to me most extraordinary, therefore, that anyone should favor the restoration of the gold standard unless a way can be found to redistribute the gold which is now in the possession of these three nations, and also find more gold.

How are we going to redistribute it? We are not going to give it to the other nations. Indeed, the three nations which now possess it are uneasy lest they possess too little of it. These nations are making every effort to get more. Other nations of the world cannot borrow it, because we will not lend it. They cannot buy it, because they have no means under present tariff systems with which to buy. There is no method, it seems to me, by which we can redistribute the gold now in the possession of the three nations of the world. Unless we can redistribute it, there can be no possibility of restoring the gold standard.

The highest virtue of the gold standard was that it was an international standard, that it satisfied the nations of the world and made them at ease in the matter of international exchange. But if we have something like 250,000,000 people in possession of practically all the gold and 1,500,000,000 without it how may we restore the gold standard as an international standard or a world standard? Under present conditions, or under conditions which are to continue indefinitely, there can be no restoration of the gold standard.

Mr. President, we are dealing with a situation which really involves the reconstruction, the rebuilding of the entire monetary system of the world. Suppose that we divide the gold which we have; suppose the three nations of the world divide the gold which they now have, as we are proposing to do, making more dollars, creating more units of gold, the money, however devalued, would still be in the possession of the three nations. That does not help us in the least to redistribute it among the nations of the world. We are still in possession of it and still propose to hold it. It does not help us in the least to establish a basis for the reestablishment of a world gold standard. We are in a position where, whatever we may do in the matter of redividing or subdividing our own money, we cannot thereby benefit the outside world or the world which is now without primary money. In any event, geographically, the gold standard is impossible. In any event the business of the world requires more primary money than there is gold to supply. Conditions which no human power can control forbid the return to the gold standard as it existed before the war.

A large portion of the world which is without gold cannot use paper. They have no banking system. They have no checking system. They cannot use paper money; they cannot use credit currency. They must have metallic money. They want and will continue to require metal money. They cannot get gold. They cannot use paper. They want silver. They have used silver for 2,000 years. In the name of justice why not give it to them? Why should they not have the money they have always used, the money which they want to use, and the money which served them well.

How shall we restore trade with those nations or restore prosperity among the 57 nations of the world unless they have some kind of money with which to transact business, some medium of exchange, some method by which to measure value, some way by which to enable them to hold their savings? At the present time they do not have it. Shall we refuse to recognize the realities which confront the whole world in this question of money.

Great Britain, France, and the United States cannot be prosperous if the remained of the world is not prosperous. We cannot be prosperous and we cannot build up trade and commerce if the balance of the world is without a medium of exchange or without a measure of value. The question today is not merely one of dealing with the present situation in our own United States, but what steps shall we, as the great Nation, take in leading up to a monetary system which will serve a world tied together in business and in economics.

Mr. President, as I look at the measure today, the bill which is now before the Senate receiving our consideration is the logical result of 100 long years of legislation not only in this country but throughout the world for the purpose of effectuating a scarcity of primary money. For more than 100 years nation after nation has legislated with the particular object in view of making primary money scarce. We have it now. We have the scarcity which brutal selfishness has been fighting to bring about. It is so scarce that a large portion of the population of the world cannot buy it or borrow it. This bill itself is an effort to meet that scarcity by subdividing gold and making gold go further than it would as it obtained for the last 100 years. What we are undertaking to do is still to make gold the basis of our monetary system by dividing it and resubdividing it and reducing the gold content of the dollar. It will not meet the requirements of the age in which we live. We shall have to go much further. The gold is not to be had in sufficient quantity for any of the nations, and not to be had at all by the greater part of the world's population. What the people of the world have suffered through this scarcity of primary money exceeds all efforts to portray. I venture to believe that this prolonged suffering is to have an end. The start we are making today will go forward; we cannot turn back.

It will be recalled that Brooks Adams, in one of his historical essays written some years ago, had this to say:

> It appears to be a natural law that when social development has reached a certain stage and capital has accumulated sufficiently, the class which has had the capacity to absorb it shall try to enhance the value of their property by legislation. This is done most easily by reducing the quantity of the currency, which is a legal tender for payment of debts. A currency obviously gains in power as it shrinks in volume.

It has been a custom practiced by nations of wealth to increase the value of their own holdings by decreasing the amount of money in circulation. Is that true?

We are in fact at this time by this bill trying to meet in part a situation which has been brought on by this more than century of legislation in the interest of the scarcity of primary money. In the mad scramble for gold, in this effort to divide and subdivide what gold we have, we are realizing the consummation of a story of selfishness and greed which has no parallel in history. It began in 1816, the year in which England demonetized silver. There had been no call upon the part of the people for demonetization. Among the masses, who were to suffer by the act, there had been no demand for this extraordinary measure.

It was believed in some quarters that, as England was entering upon an era of industrial development, becoming a creditor nation and anxious to buy cheap raw material abroad, it was to her interest to accentuate the value of money. It would increase the value of her securities and cheapen the value of raw material. There was no concealment of the purpose; and, from a purely national standpoint, it seemed altogether a sound policy. But after the demonetization of silver in England, began the fall of prices, which continued for the next 34 years. Prices fell to the extent of some 35 percent. There is nothing more cruel, nothing more prolific of human misery, than the glacial pressure of the fall of prices of commodities. During this period of 34 years, as history now records, almost indescribable misery prevailed throughout England and other parts of the world. The prices continued to fall, and this wide-spread human misery continued to prevail until the discovery of gold in California and Australia. Nature provided the remedy. The discovery of gold and the increased volume of money brought relief. Prosperity again returned. The prices of commodities immediately began to rise.

The next event in this fateful history came after the close of the Franco-German War. After this war Germany levied tribute against France to the extent of a billion dollars. It seemed in the interest of Germany to increase the value of the tribute. Germany had long been on a bimetallic basis. But without delay she demonetized silver. This increased the burden upon France and worked to the great advantage of Germany—another move against silver had its foundation in pure selfishness. A short time thereafter silver was demonetized in the United States. These events again inaugurated a period of fall in prices, which continued for the next 23 years and reached the alarming extent of 40 percent. Never, except in the present period, have there been such wide-spread want and poverty and bankruptcy as followed the demonetization of silver in Germany and the United States. Again this period of deprivation, of human suffering, was ended by discovery of gold in the Klondike and Colorado and elsewhere. Business immediately revived. Prices increased and wages increased. The people were again prosperous.

Will it be argued that an increase in the volume of circulating medium has no effect upon prices? Do not the incontrovertible facts of history prove the contrary? Decreasing the volume of circulating medium inevitably results in the fall of prices. An increase in volume of circulating medium is invariably followed by an increase in prices of commodities. There is no historic incident with which I am familiar touching this subject in contravention of this fact.

Let me cite one more incident. In 1925 a move was made to demonetize silver in the Orient. At this time more than 800,000,000 people were using silver as money. It was their only medium of exchange. It was their only means of savings. They had used it from time immemorial. Nevertheless, the movement for the demonetization of silver had its origin in the adoption of the gold-bullion standard for India. Why was it necessary to change the medium of exchange of some 800,000,000 people? Why was it necessary to remove or take from these people their medium of exchange, their only method of storing values or of measuring values? Had there been any call upon the part of the people for such action? Had there been any fault found with the use of silver? Had the people complained of their medium of exchange?

Permit me to pause here to read an authority that ought to be accepted by all. It is the President of the Imperial Bank of India, Sir Osborne A. Smith. He says:

> The economists throughout the world are agreed that maldistribution of gold and overproduction of goods are two of the fundamental causes of the depression. If we consider the fact that the great masses of the Orient are half-starved and less than half-clad, one cannot say that there is overproduction in terms of requirements but rather that there is overproduction in terms of purchasing power. Our job, then, is to re-create purchasing power, and we have the instrument at hand in silver, of which these masses are possessed. The remonetization of silver will furnish us with a needed purchasing power and will cause to disappear, through consumption, the world overproduction of goods.

This man owns no silver mines. He is not interested in silver as a commodity. He is interested in giving his people sound money. He is interested in humanity, in his own half-clad and half-starved people who have had taken from them the only means they possessed of conserving their values and effectuating exchange.

I venture to say there is no act in all history more inhuman, more selfish, more cruel, than that which destroyed the only money the oriental people had or could secure. And what are we doing in this country at the present time? We are carrying out a program for the curtailment of the acreage of cotton. We are curtailing the acreage for the production of wheat. We are slaughtering pigs. At the very time this program is going forward, nearly one half the human race is on the verge of hunger, more than one half is poorly clad. While millions stand in want and beg for food, a great nation is engaged in destroying food and destroying the possibility of clothing. Why are we doing this? We are trying to conform our system of production to a system of distribution, which system of distribution is embarrassed, demoralized, and controlled by a defective, inefficient monetary system. Instead of conforming our monetary system to the demands and necessities of the world and to the people, instead of conforming it to production and distribution, we are undertaking to conform production and distribution to the monetary structure. And I venture to say it makes little difference how many pigs we slaughter or what acreage we may succeed in reducing, if the circulating medium of the country continues to rise in value, continues to take on greater scarcity, our producers in the end will be no better off. I reject the doctrine of overproduction when half the world is hungry. I reject the philosophy that industry is a menace, that energy is a curse, that the inventive genius of man is man's cruel master instead of his slave. If the human family could have a breakfast tomorrow morning commensurate with their needs, there would be very little discussion during the day of overproduction. What we need is a monetary system commensurate with our capacity for production and our desire for consumption. The world does not produce more than the world needs. It is not overproduction; it is want of distribution and underconsumption.

Mr. President, the able Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] declared that this bill would increase the price of commodities, and he thought by reason of that fact the people who had laid by some savings, widows and orphans who had likewise made savings, would be adversely and most sadly affected. What is the condition of those people now? Are they able to collect their interest upon their securities? Are they receiving returns upon their investments? Is there any Senator here who cannot recall dozens of people who thought they had stored away enough for old age, who expected to live upon the interest of their securities to enable them to care for their homes in their declining years? They now have not the means by which to pay rent or to buy food. Why? They are not able to collect the interest on their savings. They are unable to realize upon their mortgages. They can get nothing for their securities. On the other hand, I venture to say, if the prices of commodities were restored, these people would realize upon their securities and be able to collect their interest, realize upon their mortgages, and enjoy the contentment and ease to which they are entitled. These people who had put aside their life's earnings find their savings are worthless. When the producers, when those who create wealth, receive nothing for their services, you may be assured that the highest in the social ladder will in the end feel the effects.

The Senator from Pennsylvania, with his great ability, must realize that when the prices of commodities are restored, while labor may lag, as he says, while the white-collar man's salary may be affected adversely for a time by reason of the increase in prices of things he has to buy, yet it is the history of all such things that in time the laborer comes to receive his compensation in accordance with the compensation of the producer. When those who produce wealth are prosperous, the world must be prosperous. And the laborer and the white-collar man share in that prosperity.

That was the effect in 1849 after the discovery of gold in California when the volume of circulating medium was increased. At first there was a rise in prices of commodities, then followed an increase in wages, an increase in the purchasing power of the people generally, all of which revitalized the entire industry of the world. That was the effect of the discovery of gold in the Klondike. When it began to pour into the channels of trade, the prices of commodities began to rise, the wage of labor increased, and prosperity generally followed. It is written all over the experience of mankind that the depletion of the precious metals means poverty and misery, that the increased production of precious metals—gold and silver—means prosperity and affluence not with the few but with the masses.

Mr. President, in considering this bill we must not consider it in the light of the interest of any particular class. If we legislate, we should legislate for the entire country and for all classes. What we do will affect for good or evil the entire body of the people of the United States.

I spoke a moment ago about the legislation which had for its purpose the creation of the scarcity of money. The effect of this was disclosed at the close of the World War. There was a debt of some $400,000,000,000. We had about eleven and a half billion dollars in gold. When the demand for gold arose, the crisis came. Some of the debts had to be met. The demand for gold became abnormal. The result was an immediate period of liquidation. Collapse soon followed.

The gold standard is based upon the theory that every dollar of currency and practically every dollar of indebtedness is payable in gold. The gold standard works well enough when everything is serene and nobody inquires about whether or not he can secure gold. But the moment a cloud arises in the economic sky, the moment a disturbance takes place in the financial world and people make a demand for gold, the crisis comes. Since the adoption of the gold standard in 1816 by England, we have averaged a financial crisis about every 15 years. When that comes, when liquidation takes place, the man of ordinary means is wiped out, liquidated, ruined. For instance, in 1929 we had in this country about $60,000,000,000 in credit currency, every dollar of which was supposed to be payable in gold if gold was demanded. We had about 3½ billion dollars gold with which to meet the $60,000,000,000 currency. That is what I would call fiat money. And when the demand for gold came, the crisis came. Such was the condition, Mr. President, at the close of the war. When the demand for gold came, there was no gold with which to meet the demand. Every Nation was hunting for gold, grabbing for gold. Gold finally found its way into about two or three nations of the world. The other nations of the world were without means of carrying on trade or business. And it will be recalled that the first step in this break-down was the collapse of foreign trade.

The nations of the earth had not that with which to deal with one another. They had not gold. They could not get gold. We had destroyed silver. They could not use banks; they could not use currency; and 1,500,000,000 people were without the means of trade with their fellow man. Unless we are willing to restore the primary money which they have been using through all these years, there will not be, in my judgment, any revival of trade with these oriental countries.

The present bill, Mr. President, proposes to devaluate the gold dollar to a certain extent. Insofar as that has a tendency to increase the price of commodities, it is certainly, to my mind, a step in the right direction. But after we have accomplished that, what are we going to do with the 1,500,000,000 on the outside? How can the United States live and prosper and not trade with the remainder of the world? After we have reduced the gold content of our dollar and effectuated to some extent a rise in our domestic prices, what are we going to do with the trade with the outside world? Their silver money is debased, and they have no other means with which to trade.

I undertake to say, Mr. President, that until we shall have restored the money of the Constitution—specifically written into the Constitution, designedly so, by both Hamilton and Jefferson—until we shall give to the people of the world a metallic basis for their currency, we shall not be in a position to expect any trade or commerce from that part of the world which has no metallic money, and we shall not restore the purchasing power of the masses.

Mr. President, there are some two or three constitutional questions involved in the bill. I am not going to discuss them. Were I permitted to pass upon them, without the previous decision of the Supreme Court, I would have a very definite idea about them. I would but for these decisions regard the bill as unconstitutional. But I can see no difference in the matter of delegation of legislative power in the pending bill and the delegation of legislative power to the Tariff Commission. I thought at the time of the passage of the bill, respecting the Tariff Commission, it was unconstitutional, and I argued the question at some length. I thought it was a delegation of legislative power. The Supreme Court decided otherwise. It did not change my mind, but it established the law.

I do not know any longer what rule it is which determines whether a delegation of power is legislative or merely administrative. The action proposed in the pending bill would seem to me to be quite within the rule were it not for the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Tariff Commission case and in two other cases. We shall not know until the Supreme Court passes upon the question whether the present case comes within the rule of the delegation of legislative power.

In view of the fact that the pending bill establishes a rule of conduct for the administrative officers quite as plain, and quite as direct, and quite as definite as that which was established in the Tariff Commission law, I do not feel that I am called upon to contravene by my vote the views of the Supreme Court on that question. It may be that in a 5-to-4 decision some particular judge will entertain a different view; but as the decision now stands there is no reason to assume that the rule which the Supreme Court announced in the Tariff Commission case is not the rule of the court. If it is, certainly this proposed law is constitutional.

There is another proposition contained in the pending bill to which I will refer before I sit down, and that is the question of creating a board instead of giving the power in question to the Secretary of the Treasury alone. My first impression was to vote for the board, but I have changed my mind. I have done so for the reason that there is no increase in the volume of currency in the pending bill unless it meets with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. He may give us an increased amount of circulating medium, or he may refuse to do so. So far as I am concerned, I do not want any divided responsibility upon that question. I have reached the point where I want exact responsibility. The responsibility should rest with the administration. I have concluded I want to center and fix the responsibility. If we do not have an enlarged volume of currency, I want someone to be directly responsible and to be held responsible.

The President of the United States said in his speech on a Sunday night a few weeks ago, that the increase of the price of commodities was not satisfactory; that the administration had not been as successful as it had hoped to be in increasing the price of commodities, but that he was going to raise the price of commodities; that if he could not do it in one way, he would do it in another way; "but", said he, "do it I will." That is the doctrine, Mr. President, in which I am interested. I shall vote for undivided responsibility.

Let therefore the responsibility rest upon those who have given the American people the pledge that they will increase the price of commodities. No divided board can prevent the President from doing what he wants to do under this law.

It may be thought, Mr. President, by my colleagues that some of the remarks I have made are not pertinent to this particular bill. My contention is they are pertinent to the issue raised by the bill. They are pertinent to the most vital question before the world today, and that is, how are we going to restore purchasing power to the great body of the people, how are we going to increase the prices of commodities and give the producers of wealth a living compensation for their labor? I do not complain of many of the emergency remedies adopted to meet this crisis which now confronts us. But they are merely emergency remedies. They do not reach the fundamental problems involved. And until we seize hold of those problems and solve them, we are only drifting toward more certain and more dire disaster. We cannot escape from this awful situation by spending public money. We cannot escape by curtailing the powers of production. We cannot escape by destroying that which the world needs. Our money structure must be reformed and rebuilt in accordance with the world's business possibilities. Entertaining this view, I have ventured to go beyond the mere technical discussion of this bill. I know if we do our full duty, we shall soon return to the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. ADAMS voted in the affirmative when his name was called.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, have any votes been cast?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One vote has been recorded.

Mr. McNARY. I think we should have the amendment stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the roll call will be interrupted for the purpose of having the amendment again stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 14, after line 2, it is proposed by the committee to insert the following:

SEC. 10. (a) There is hereby created a Foreign Exchange Board for the purpose of administering the stabilization fund hereinafter provided for. The board shall consist of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Comptroller of the Currency, the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, and two other persons appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The two members so appointed by the President shall receive salaries of $10,000 per annum, and such salaries and all expenses of the board shall be paid from the stabilization fund.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the vote be rescinded and vacated, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not see how that can be done, Mr. President.

Mr. McNARY. It can be done by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the order by which the yeas and nays were ordered be vacated, and that he be permitted to make a point of no quorum. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will call the roll for a quorum.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Cutting	Kean	Robinson, Ark.
Ashurst	Davis	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Dickinson	King	Russell
Bachman	Dieterich	La Follette	Schall
Bailey	Dill	Lewis	Sheppard
Bankhead	Duffy	Logan	Shipstead
Barbour	Erickson	Lonergan	Smith
Barkley	Fess	McAdoo	Steiwer
Black	Fletcher	McCarran	Stephens
Bone	Frazier	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Borah	George	McKellar	Thompson
Brown	Gibson	McNary	Townsend
Bulkley	Glass	Murphy	Trammell
Bulow	Goldsborough	Neely	Tydings
Byrd	Gore	Norris	Vandenberg
Capper	Hale	Nye	Van Nuys
Caraway	Harrison	O'Mahoney	Wagner
Carey	Hastings	Overton	Walcott
Clark	Hatch	Patterson	Walsh
Connally	Hatfield	Pittman	Wheeler
Coolidge	Hayden	Pope	White
Copeland	Hebert	Reed
Costigan	Johnson	Reynolds

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is detained from the Senate, occasioned by illness.

I am also requested to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question recurs on the committee amendment upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I merely desire to say that I hope the amendment will be defeated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VANDENBERG (when Mr. COUZENS' name was called). The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] is necessarily absent in the hearings of the Committee on Banking and Currency. If he were present, he would vote "yea" upon this amendment.

Mr. GORE (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK]. If at liberty to vote, I should vote for the committee amendment, and the Senator from South Dakota, if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. LEWIS (when the name of Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma was called). I am authorized to state that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is sick at home. If present, he would vote "nay." He is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], who, I am instructed to say, if present, would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HEBERT. I wish to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] is necessarily absent. As announced by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], he is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea" on this question.

I am also requested to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], who is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. If present, I am informed that the Senator from South Dakota would vote "nay" on this question.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 54, as follows:

YEAS—36

Adams	Fess	Kean	Reed
Austin	Frazier	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.
Barbour	Gibson	La Follette	Schall
Byrd	Glass	Lonergan	Steiwer
Capper	Goldsborough	McAdoo	Townsend
Carey	Hale	McGill	Tydings
Cutting	Hastings	McNary	Vandenberg
Davis	Hatfield	Nye	Walcott
Dickinson	Hebert	Patterson	White

NAYS—54

Ashurst	Connally	King	Russell
Bachman	Coolidge	Lewis	Sheppard
Bailey	Copeland	Logan	Shipstead
Bankhead	Costigan	McCarran	Smith
Barkley	Dieterich	McKellar	Stephens
Black	Dill	Murphy	Thomas, Utah
Bone	Duffy	Neely	Thompson
Borah	Erickson	Norris	Trammell
Brown	Fletcher	O'Mahoney	Van Nuys
Bulkley	George	Overton	Wagner
Bulow	Harrison	Pittman	Walsh
Byrnes	Hatch	Pope	Wheeler
Caraway	Hayden	Reynolds
Clark	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.

NOT VOTING—6

Couzens	Long	Norbeck	Thomas, Okla.
Gore	Metcalf

So the amendment of the committee was rejected.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF A BILL

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that on January 25, 1934, the President approved and signed the act (S. 2284) relating to contracts and agreements under the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

STUDIES OF THE GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY (S.DOC. NO. 116, PT. 4)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, as follows:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Senate a report on the economic advisability of the St. Lawrence power project, prepared by the Federal Power Commission with the cooperation of the Power Authority of the State of New York.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 26, 1934.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask that the message, together with the report and illustrations accompanying it, be printed as a Senate document and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNITED STATES MONETARY SYSTEM

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 6976) to protect the currency system of the United States, to provide for the better use of the monetary gold stock of the United States, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, before we leave the subject upon which we have just voted I want to give notice that when we reach the appropriate point in the text of the House bill I shall offer an amendment on behalf of the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] and myself, adding the words "with the approval of the President" after the words "Secretary of the Treasury."

My point, and the point which I submit in behalf of my colleague, is that in every other responsibility given to the Secretary of the Treasury under this bill it is always specifically and verbatim with the approval of the President of the United States, and it is our view that a similar phrase should be added in connection with this authority.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, in the committee that question was discussed, and it was thought that it was covered by the language on the following page, which specifically provides that—

The fund shall be available for expenditure, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Which in the original draft included the words "with the approval of the President." So far as my own position is concerned, I agree with the Senator from Michigan that, in order to avoid any misunderstanding, at the place stated by the Senator from Michigan the words "with the approval of the President" should be included.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then, I assume we may hope——

Mr. BYRNES. I am not speaking for the committee; I am expressing my own view that it should be done.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In view of the Senator's expression, I feel quite certain that we may hope at least to make that specific identification.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think there will be no difficulty about that when it is in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Very well.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I do not understand where the Senator from Michigan desires to make the insertion.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I desire to add that identification after the words "Secretary of the Treasury" where he is given the authority to use the stabilization fund.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 14, line 13, it is proposed to strike out "Sec. 10. (a)" and insert "(b)."

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, since subdivision (a) has been rejected, I think the amendment just stated should also be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is rejected. The next amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the same line, before the word "purpose", it is proposed to insert the word "sole."

Mr. FLETCHER. That amendment also should be disagreed to because it is a companion amendment to the first one which has been rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be rejected. The next amendment will be stated.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, those of us back here cannot understand what is going on. The Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency announces that an amendment should be disagreed to, but we are unable to know what the amendment is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Virginia that the Chair has no disposition to deprive the Senator of any of his rights. The chairman of the committee suggested that the amendment should be disagreed to in view of the fact that the previous amendment had been rejected, and the Chair stated that, without objection, the amendment would be rejected.

Mr. GLASS. What was the previous amendment? Nobody had an opportunity to know.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will again state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first amendment disagreed to is on page 14, line 3, beginning—

SEC. 10. (a) There is hereby created a foreign-exchange board—

And so forth. The amendment disagreed to thereafter is on the same page, line 13, to strike out "Sec. 10. (a)" and insert "(b)."

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, let it be made clear for the RECORD then that this $2,000,000,000 fund is not for the purpose solely of stabilizing exchange but for any other use that the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, may care to make of it. I just wanted to make that statement for the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment [putting the question].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On the same page, in line 13, before the word "purpose", it is proposed to insert the word "sole."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the chairman of the committee if the word "sole" is eliminated, taking into account the context and all of the provisions of the bill, to what purpose the $2,000,000,000 fund may be devoted? What use is to be made of it if not for the stabilization of exchange?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is to be used for the stabilization of exchange; but I think it is unwise to insert the word "sole" there because there may be other ways of doing that, and it is thought that the authority given here should not be limited to that particular thing.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator—and it is really supplemental to the inquiry just made—to what other purpose may this $2,000,000,000 be devoted, taking into account the provisions of the bill? Certainly it is not to be used for any purpose to which the Secretary of the Treasury, even with the approval of the President, may conceive it should be devoted. There ought to be some limitation upon the use to which it may be put.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is a limitation.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I submit to the Senator from Utah that under the language of the bill, "for the purpose of stabilizing the exchange value of the dollar", it can be used for no other purpose other than to stabilize the exchange value of the dollar. When it is said that it shall be used for that purpose it can be used for no other purpose not authorized by that section.

Mr. GLASS. Then, what is the objection to the use of the word "sole"?

Mr. BYRNES. I can see no reason for its being added, because when the bill provides for the doing of one thing and no other purpose is set out, no other purpose is authorized.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I can see a very great use for it. I will say to the Senator from Utah that the meaning of that provision in the bill was more completely reflected in the original draft of the bill, which authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to buy local bills of exchange, bankers' acceptances, to rediscount notes, to do anything and everything that a member bank in the Federal Reserve System or a bank not a member of the Federal Reserve System now authorized by National and State laws could do. I objected in the committee rather vehemently to setting up a one-man central bank here in Washington with authority to do everything that either a Federal Reserve bank or a member bank is authorized by law to do. Then they changed the phraseology and fooled me for a while, because I am rather dense and not a lawyer, but the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], who is rather agile of mind and quick of discernment, discovered that the change of phraseology did not alter the authority conferred on the Secretary of the Treasury to do any kind of banking business he may want to do. That is the reason why I moved to insert the word "sole", and that is the reason the Banking and Currency Committee, by a vote of 12 to 18, adopted the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the word "sole" is inserted there as a limitation and along with that amendment the Senator from Virginia offered the amendment inserting in the next line the words "in relation to the currencies of foreign governments." Thus it reads:

> For the sole purpose of stabilizing the exchange value of the dollar in relation to the currencies of foreign governments—

And so forth. Both of those provisions should go out. I contemplate the Senate disagreeing to the amendment inserting the words "in relation to the currencies of foreign governments." In other words, we are not to be limited to price fixing abroad, but we will have something to say about price fixing at home.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. REED. I notice on the following page, page 15, beginning in line 12, these words:

> The fund shall be available for expenditure under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury and in his discretion, for any purpose in connection with carrying out the provisions of this section, including the investment and reinvestment in direct obligations of the United States of any portions of the fund which the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, may from time to time determine not currently required for stabilizing the exchange value of the dollar.

Obviously, if funds are not at the time required for stabilizing the exchange value, then to invest and reinvest them for any purpose in various securities, including Federal securities, is a pretty large power. That is given by indirection if we cut out the word "sole" which the committee inserted. I hope very much, if we are going to launch into market operations, that we will do so frankly and state it on the face of the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. The point is that the word "sole" applies not only to the principal language of the bill, "for the purpose of stabilizing the exchange value of the dollar", but also in relation to the currencies of foreign governments. We ought to disagree to both those amendments, so that the language will read:

> For the purpose of stabilizing the exchange value of the dollar, the Secretary of the Treasury, directly or through such agencies as he may designate, is authorized, for the account of the fund established in this section, to deal in gold and foreign exchange and such other instruments of credit and securities as he may deem necessary to carry out the purpose of this section.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit another question?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. REED. When we talk of the exchange value of the dollar we mean the value of the dollar in exchange for something else.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. REED. Obviously the committee has added the words which explain what exchange value is. When we talk of exchange of the dollar, it is exchanging the dollar for something else. If we mean foreign currencies, the committee amendment has made that a little more lucid. What other kind of exchange value has the Senator in mind than the exchange value for foreign currency?

Mr. FLETCHER. The exchange value of the dollar wherever it may be.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator mean exchange value for commodities? Is this a pool to peg commodities?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; but I do not think the power ought to be restricted or limited to operations abroad.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, we must take into consideration the two subsections (a) and (b) in interpreting the section. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized not only to use this fund for the stabilization of the dollar by purchasing gold and foreign exchange and such other evidences of credit and securities as he may deem necessary to carry out the purposes of this section—not the subsection but section 10—but in subsection (b) of section 10 the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use whatever part of this fund may not be required to stabilize the dollar in foreign exchange to invest and reinvest in Government securities.

It may be, and it is entirely conceivable, that there may come a time when there will be some interests in the country that will desire to drive down the price of Government securities. It might be necessary and wise to use a part of the fund to maintain the normal price of Government securities. It would, therefore, be within the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to do that under subsection (b) of section 10. But if we insert the word "sole" we even hamper the Secretary of the Treasury in dealing with this surplus fund over and above what may be necessary to stabilize the dollar in foreign exchange in his effort to stabilize the falling prices of securities of the United States. For that additional reason it seems to me it would be unwise to insert the word "sole."

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, if we leave out the word "sole" and the other words, we set up the Secretary of the Treasury as a one-man central bank in Washington. That is exactly what is done. That is what we were told was not intended to be done when the language was altered. If we are going to set up a one-man central bank in Washington, I am glad that it is to be under a Democratic administration instead of under a Republican administration. [Laughter.] I would certainly deplore having any such unprecedented and tremendous authority conferred upon a partisan Republican Secretary of the Treasury or a partisan Republican President. I am glad it is to be administered by a Democratic administration.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. REED. My attention is attracted by the word "securities" which occurs on page 14, line 19. This one-man central bank, which operates in the dark with $2,000,000,000 of the people's money, is authorized to buy securities if in his discretion he wishes to do so. That would include not only bills of exchange and promissory notes but common stocks. Does the Senator believe it is a happy thing to trust even a sanctified Democrat with power to gamble in common stocks with $2,000,000,000 of the people's money?

Mr. GLASS. I would not think a Democrat would do that. [Laughter] If there were a Republican President and Republican Secretary of the Treasury, they might do it.

Mr. REED. Inasmuch as the country is going Republican again very soon, does not the Senator think we had better restrict this power by retaining the committee amendment?

Mr. GLASS. I do not concede the premise. I do not think the country is going Republican at any time soon.

Mr. REED. The Senator practically admits it by insisting on his committee amendment.

Mr. GLASS. No; I am insisting on the amendment because the amendment is right. So far as maintaining the credit of United States bonds is concerned, that has been done, by direction of the Treasury, by the Federal Reserve open-market committee, and the Federal Reserve banks acquiring $2,500,000,000 of United States bonds, for not one dollar of which they had any use on the face of the earth. They may be depended upon hereafter, at the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to acquire as many more as may be necessary to maintain the market value of United States bonds.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, just a word in reply to the suggestion of the Senator about this section creating the Secretary of the Treasury as a central bank. This section authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to do whatever he does for two purposes: First, to stabilize the American dollar in foreign exchange. He may buy gold or bills of exchange, but whatever he does under subsection (a) is done for the purpose of enabling him to stabilize the American dollar.

The only other thing the entire section authorizes him to do is, if he has any part of the $2,000,000,000 not necessary for that purpose, that he may buy Government securities. He is not authorized in any part of the section, either subsection (a) or subsection (b), to go out in the open market as a central bank and deal in securities. He can only use it under subsection (a) for the purpose of stabilizing the American dollar in foreign exchange. All he can do under subsection (b) is to buy Government securities with any of the money which he does not need to stabilize the dollar. It is inconceivable that the Secretary of the Treasury would have any desire to do that unless it were necessary to maintain the price for securities of the United States Government. In neither instance, according to my interpretation of a central bank, is the Secretary of the Treasury made a central bank by this section, or any part of it.

Mr. GLASS. It was the considered opinion, delivered to the committee by men of a vast deal of banking experience—such men as Owen D. Young and Mr. Anderson, an international expert—that this provision of the bill does set up the Secretary of the Treasury in rival competition with the open-market committee of the Federal Reserve Banking System to go into the open market and do anything that the Federal Reserve bank may do or that a member bank may do.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the amendment inserting the word "sole" and the words "in relation to the currencies of foreign governments" was embraced in one amendment as considered by the committee. The word "sole" and the language following, "in relation to the currencies of foreign governments", would limit the Secretary of the Treasury to foreign exchange entirely. He could not do anything else with this fund except to use it in the handling of foreign exchange. That is the purpose of the amendment. We want it broad enough so he will have the power, as mentioned here, "to deal in gold and foreign exchange and such other instruments of credit and securities as he may deem necessary to carry out the purpose of this section."

The amendment inserting the word "sole" should be disagreed to, and the amendment inserting the words "in relation to the currencies of foreign governments" should likewise be rejected, in order that this provision affecting the price level and stabilization should apply not only abroad, but at home as well.

Mr. GLASS. I am just a little puzzled—no; I am not puzzled—but those Senators who were not on the Banking and Currency Committee and did not hear the discussions there might naturally be puzzled to know why the provision starts out by saying, "for a purpose" and then have it told here on the floor that it is not only for that purpose, but it is for many other purposes.

I do not want to appear wiser than I am. That is not very wise. As a matter of fact, the member of the Federal Reserve Board of longest service and perhaps of greatest experience in dealing with banking and economic questions suggested to me that it was imperative that that word should go in, and therefore I proposed to put it in, and the committee agreed.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, the chairman of the committee, as I recall, was quite right in his statement that the committee adopted the two changes in lines 13 and 14 all in one operation and as part of one amendment. They are now, I understand, to be presented to the Senate as two separate amendments. To that I have no objection; but, nevertheless, they might well be considered together.

I was one of those who acted with the majority of the committee and supported the proposal of the Senator from Virginia in the inclusion of both these amendments. It seemed to me then, however, and it seems to me now, that we may be wasting considerable time in trying to determine the exact relationship of the word "sole" to the meaning of the sentence. I doubt much if it is of any considerable importance. To say that something is done for a purpose defined in the act is not changed to any perceptible degree by saying that it is done for the sole purpose defined in the act. However, I shall vote for the amendment, because certainly the inclusion of the word "sole" cannot take anything away from the defined purpose of the act. If it has any effect, it merely makes it a little more lucid and definite in its interpretation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. STEIWER. Yes.

Mr. KING. I ask for information, not having been a member of the committee and not having had an opportunity to read the hearings. Will the Senator tell us what he means by the purpose of the act? What is the purpose of the act with respect to this $2,000,000,000 fund?

Mr. STEIWER. I am very sorry the Senator addressed that question to me. I have spent a week on the question, and I am utterly unable to answer it; and I doubt if any three Members of this body would come to the same conclusion if they attempted to analyze the language.

Mr. KING. May I say to the Senator that while I have the utmost confidence in the present Secretary of the Treasury and supreme confidence in the President of the United States; if I were the President and if I were Secretary of the Treasury, I would not want unrestricted and unlimited authority conferred upon me to use the $2,000,000,000 for any purpose that may be contemplated by some who may place interpretations upon this bill.

I am perfectly willing to vote for, and shall be glad to vote for, a proposition giving to the Secretary of the Treasury, particularly under the direction of the President, full and absolute authority to utilize this $2,000,000,000 for the purpose of stabilizing the exchange of the dollar, not only in the markets of the world but in the markets at home; but if this bill contemplates that he may use it for any purpose other than that—that he may go and buy stocks and bonds and engage in transactions which ought to be, if they are to be carried on at all, under the direction of the Federal Reserve Board—I should have some hesitancy. Therefore, I submitted the interrogatory as to the purposes that the Senator believes this bill has in mind.

Mr. STEIWER. I agree with the Senator thoroughly that the language used here ought to define the real object and purpose of the bill. It would aid it on the constitutional questions which have been advanced here; and, in my opinion, it would support the President in his administration of the act.

In expressing a rather lukewarm interest in the use of the word "sole" as it is used in line 13, I do not want to be misunderstood as having the same kind of a lukewarm interest with relation to the words in lines 14 and 15. Those words were placed in the provision deliberately by the majority of the committee, and I am entirely in accord with the Senator from Virginia in attaching importance to them. Unless those words are retained in accordance with the committee amendment there are going to be those who will contend that the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury is not limited strictly and technically to activities in relation to the exchange value of the dollar in terms of foreign currencies. Somebody will be saying that the authority of the Secretary will be to deal with the exchange value of the dollar in some other relationship.

Mr. REED and Mr. BARKLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield first to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if I correctly understood the chairman of the committee, he made exactly that claim a few moments ago. Perhaps the Senator did not hear him.

Mr. STEIWER. I heard him, Mr. President.

Mr. REED. He spoke of the exchange value of the dollar in terms of domestic commodities, which means price fixing.

Mr. STEIWER. There will be no way to control that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield, of course, to the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does not the Senator visualize a situation where it may be necessary to synchronize the value of the American dollar internally with its value externally? We now have a situation where the American dollar is worth 62 cents outside of this country, and about $1.40 in this country.

Mr. STEIWER. I think I know what the Senator means.

Mr. BARKLEY. The purpose of this section, of course, is to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to stabilize the American dollar.

Mr. STEIWER. In what respect?

Mr. BARKLEY. Chiefly, I should say, with relation to foreign currencies; but does the Senator realize no need, no necessity, no occasion when it might be necessary conceivably to try to have the internal dollar somewhat follow after the fashion of the external dollar, so that there would be a real stabilization of the dollar?

Mr. STEIWER. I think there is power enough in the bill, Mr. President, in sections of the bill that have not been alluded to here, and also in the language on page 15, to give to the Secretary all the power he will need in that regard. The danger of this language, unless the committee amendment is agreed to, is that the Secretary or his unidentified or unknown board of experts, who, we understand, are to act for him with respect to this matter, may interpret the law in a broader way than we are interpreting it now. If that eventuality happens, there is no control in the world—there is no authority of Congress, certainly; there is no authority in the courts; there is no authority in the Comptroller General; there is not any power in our Government, unless the President of the United States may have his attention directed to the matter—to determine whether or not these gentlemen are proceeding in the way that we had rather hoped they would proceed.

I suggest, therefore——

Mr. CONNALLY and Mr. SHIPSTEAD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. STEIWER. I should like to finish my statement, Mr. President. I suggest, therefore, that the first duty of Congress is to use clear and definite language, so as to place upon these gentlemen a certain responsibility, not subject to whim or caprice in administration.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield now?

Mr. STEIWER. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Minnesota. I will yield to the Senator from Texas in just a minute.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. It seems to me the language of the two sections is ambiguous. In section 10, subsection (a), we read:

> There is hereby created a Foreign Exchange Board for the purpose of administering the stabilization fund hereinafter provided for.

Mr. STEIWER. That is stricken out.

Mr. FLETCHER. That has been defeated.

Mr. STEIWER. Yes; that has been defeated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Minnesota that subsection (a) was voted down.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Then in subsection (b), which is now, I take it, subsection (a)——

Mr. STEIWER. That is right.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Originally, we had this language:

> For the purpose of stabilizing the exchange value of the dollar, the Secretary of the Treasury, directly or through such agencies as he may designate, is authorized, for the account of the fund established in this section, to deal in gold and foreign exchange and such other instruments of credit and securities as he may deem necessary to carry out the purpose of this section.

Mr. STEIWER. May I interrupt the Senator at that point in his reading merely to observe that the language "to deal in gold and foreign exchange and such other instruments of credit and securities as he may deem necessary" is itself a very unusual power.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. It seems to me that the most important words in the original part of that section are "stabilizing the exchange value of the dollar"; and they are restricted by the committee amendment confining stabilization solely in relation to currencies of foreign countries.

If we want to use this fund solely for the purpose of regulating foreign exchange, and the dollar in relation to the exchange of other countries, then I think we should vote for the committee amendment. If we want to use this fund for the purpose of managing the currency, or stabilizing, or whatever it is called, the domestic purchasing power of the dollar, I think it can be done under the original bill.

There are two things provided for here: One, under the committee amendment, confining the activities for which this fund can be used solely to the manipulation of foreign exchange and the stabilization of the dollar in relation to foreign currencies; or, under the original wording of the section, it seems to me it is quite plain that what is meant—and if it is not meant, it should be clarified—is that the relation of the dollar to other things than foreign exchange can be regulated. If that is the intention of the bill, and if that is what we want, we should vote down the committee amendment, it seems to me.

Mr. STEIWER. I think that is a very clear statement; and the committee thought the bill ought to be limited to the matter of dealing with the exchange value of the dollar in its relation to international exchange.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. STEIWER. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. It occurs to me that there is hardly the significance in the change in language that is being expressed. I will say, in reference to the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky, that if he wants the power reposed in the Secretary of the Treasury which he thinks he should have, he ought to offer an amendment to this section, because, as I read it, the amendment does not give the Secretary of the Treasury any authority to deal in domestic exchange. It is limited in terms to the exchange value, which has to do with international exchange. I think very little is added either by the word "sole" or by limiting it to foreign countries. So, if we want to have the broad interpretation, the amendment should be rejected.

One other suggestion, if the Senator from Oregon will permit me: The bill, on page 15, provides that this fund shall be under the exclusive control of the Secretary of the Treasury, whose decisions shall be final and not be subject to review by any other officer of the United States, which includes the President. So, if the Secretary of the Treasury wants to decide that he can deal in any form of exchange or securities or otherwise, his decision is not subject to review.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield right there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. STEIWER. Yes; I am happy to yield to the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Colorado says that the Secretary of the Treasury can do something and not even the President can control him. That is patently a mistake. The Secretary of the Treasury is merely the servant of the President, and when we put the responsibility on the Secretary of the Treasury we are putting the responsibility on the President of the United States.

I do not see that the point the Senator is making about the word "sole"—if he will permit me—has any value at all, because the Secretary of the Treasury gets whatever power he may exercise out of this bill; and this bill says "for the purpose of dealing in dollar exchange", as I understand. Then what else can he do but do that? He cannot go any further.

The Senator says somebody might think the Secretary has more power. Unless the Secretary thought he had more power, and unless the President thought he had more power, what difference would it make what other people thought? The responsibility will be directly on the President of the United States.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to answer the Senator from Texas?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. STEIWER. I do.

Mr. ADAMS. I am wondering what interpretation the Senator from Texas puts upon the words on page 15, line 10, which say that the exclusive control of this fund shall be in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury, "whose decisions shall be final and not be subject to review by any other officer of the United States."

Mr. CONNALLY. Here is my construction of that:

The Constitution makes the President the executive officer, and his Cabinet members are simply his servants. We cannot change that constitutional power by this statute. If the Secretary of the Treasury gets too fresh, the President can kick him out of office tomorrow, without consulting Congress or anybody else.

Mr. ADAMS. True; but we are putting that power in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury unless the President sees fit to discharge him.

Mr. CONNALLY. We are really putting it in the President of the United States, because the Secretary of the Treasury is not known to the Constitution at all. None of these Cabinet officers are. They are simply servants of the President; and when we give the power to the Secretary of the Treasury, we are giving it to the President of the United States, because he is responsible for the Secretary's appointment, he is responsible for the conduct of his office, and he is responsible for how long he stays there. Whenever a Secretary of the Tresaury gets gay with any President he ought to be fired, and the President now in the White House will fire him.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. STEIWER. If the Senator from Kentucky will permit me to conclude my observation, I will yield the floor to him.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not ask to have the floor.

Mr. STEIWER. If the Senator will indulge me for a moment, I desire to say that what I had hoped would be accomplished when I obtained the floor has been accomplished. It has been shown that we are in hopeless disagreement in regard to the construction of the language in question. The majority of the committee thought it their duty to the Senate to incorporate language unequivocal in meaning, such as the language in line 14, with relation to the currencies of foreign governments. If the Senate desires a plain and unequivocal statement, there it is. If the Senate does not desire to have that language, of course it can vote down the amendment of the committee, throw the language of the bill back into obscurity again, and turn it all over to the Secretary of the Treasury and his experts for interpretation.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, bearing directly on whether the amendment in question ought to be agreed to or rejected, it seems to me we should consider the language on page 15, commencing near the end of line 12:

> The fund shall be available for expenditure, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury and in his discretion, for any purpose in connection with carrying out the provisions of this section, including the investment and reinvestment in direct obligations of the United States of any portions of the fund—

There are set forth in the bill at least two purposes for which, in specific language, we have authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to use the fund. Subsection (a), page 14, line 13, refers to the use of the fund for stabilizing the exchange value of the dollar. The Secretary of the Treasury can, under the provisions of the bill, do at least two things: He can use the fund for the purpose of stabilizing the exchange value of the dollar, or he can use it, as provided on page 15, for the purpose of—

> Investment and reinvestment in direct obligations of the United States of any portions of the fund * * *.

If we put in the word "sole", we have, in effect, nullified the language on page 15. The word "sole" will confine the use of the fund to the purpose of stabilizing the exchange value of the dollar. We ought not to put in the word "sole" unless we strike out of the bill the language which is found on page 15.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a suggestion?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. STEIWER. It would appear that there may be a higher degree of use with respect to international exchange than with respect to the second proposition to which the Senator just now called attention. I desire the Senator to note that in line 19 there is a limitation. That limitation is to the effect that the second power may be carried out by the use of portions of the fund which the Secretary or board, " with the approval of the President "—I now read—

May from time to time determine are not currently required for stabilizing the exchange value of the dollar.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. STEIWER. I think the Senator will agree, therefore, that the first duty with respect to use of the fund would be for stabilization by the fund of the exchange value of the dollar.

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. STEIWER. But that such money as is not needed for that purpose may be used for the second purpose to which the Senator from Nebraska has called attention. There need not necessarily then be any conflict between the two. The one comes first, and the other afterward.

Mr. NORRIS. But we see in the first language I referred to that the fund is to be used for the sole purpose of stabilizing the exchange value of the dollar. We so provide if we put the word " sole " in the bill. If that is true, the Secretary of the Treasury cannot use the fund for any other purpose. On page 15, however, we explicitly authorize its use, or that portion of it which is not used for stabilizing the dollar, for a further use, but it is use of the fund just the same. We explicitly authorize the use thereof for the purchase or sale of Government bonds.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is entirely possible that the latter use of the fund may be the larger use.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; it may be. I do not know.

Mr. BARKLEY. It may not be necessary to use half the fund for the stabilization of exchange; and in that case, while the first object of the fund is to stabilize exchange, it is entirely possible that more of it would be used for the secondary purpose than for the primary purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. That may be. As long, however, as there is a dollar of it left, if we put in the word " sole ", it cannot be used unless there is a conflict in the provisions of the bill. There are two statements contained in it. One says the Secretary of the Treasury may use it, and the other says he may not; but if the word " sole " is given its full effect he cannot utilize any portion of the fund for the purchase of United States securities, as is provided on page 15.

Mr. STEIWER. Will the Senator from Nebraska again yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. STEIWER. May I point out to the Senator from Nebraska that in the first part of the language, commencing in line 13 on page 14, the Secretary is authorized, for the purpose there named and for the account of the fund, to do certain named things. They are " to deal in gold and foreign exchange and such other instruments of credit and securities as he may deem necessary ", and so forth.

In the second power, which the Senator is discussing, there is a different provision. That provision is that he may purchase and deal in the direct obligations of the United States. The authors of the language evidently are intending to make a distinction, not only between purposes but between the things which the Secretary may do.

Mr. NORRIS. I think so. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. STEIWER. I am not sure, therefore, that the first is in conflict with the latter.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me it must necessarily be. If by law we state the Secretary can use it solely for the first purpose, we have not left him any discretion.

Mr. STEIWER. The bill does not say that the fund may be used solely for that purpose, but solely for that purpose he may do one prescribed thing, and for another purpose possibly he may do another thing. Is that not what the language means?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think so. I do not construe it in that way at all. I am not saying that the language on page 15 is right. That is not the question that is now before the Senate. Whether that ought to be stricken out, or whether the power is too great or not, has not been argued. It certainly seems plain to me that the word " sole " should not be put in the bill unless first the other authority is taken away.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Senator from Nebraska is entirely right about that. The provision on page 15 enables the Secretary, if he has this fund lying idle and not drawing any interest, to invest it in Government securities and let it draw interest.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly; and then the Secretary has the right to sell them. I take it the purpose is not only that of keeping up the price of Government bonds but he can invest the fund in such bonds and get the interest on them, or, at least, stop the Government from paying some outsiders that interest, and sell them on the market afterwards and use the money for the purpose named in the first part of the section.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. I will say to the Senator that my view is that the fund may be used for two purposes. It may be used for stabilization purposes, to begin with, and if it is not needed for that, it may be used for the purpose of buying direct obligations of the United States. Its use for stabilization purposes, however, must be for the stabilization of foreign exchange and not to engage in a general banking business for the purpose of stabilizing domestic prices.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has advocated the same idea which the Senator from Oregon has suggested, that the word " sole " applies only to the first part of the section.

Mr. GLASS. To stabilization.

Mr. NORRIS. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that all the language I have quoted on page 15, as well as page 14, is in the same section—section 2—although in different paragraphs of that section. As I construe it—and I believe it is a fair construction—the Secretary could not use the fund, if he had some of it left, for the purpose of buying Government bonds, for instance. I should like him to have the right to use it for that purpose, for the reason that while he would get the interest on it, it would be the payment of money from one department of Government into another department of Government. If he did not buy the bonds, the Government would have to pay out the interest on them to the private persons who held the bonds. It might result in a very great saving to the Government. The fund could safely be invested in Government bonds, because they always have a market, and the Secretary can readily get the money at any time he wants to if he wishes to use it in accordance with the first part of the section.

Mr. GLASS. I simply wish to emphasize what I have already said, that there are two processes specified for the use of the fund. One is for stabilization purposes, and the other is, if the money is not being used for stabilization purposes, that it may be used for the purpose of purchase of direct obligations of the United States. In the use of the fund for stabilization purposes, it may only be used to stabilize foreign exchange, and may not be used for the purchase of bills of exchange and bankers' acceptances and rediscount purposes and open-market operations—functions that properly belong to tested and experienced bankers, and which are exercised by them.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I merely wish to supplement the statement of the Senator from Virginia. There are specified in the bill the two purposes to which he referred. The second purpose, however, is carefully distinguished, and there is attached to it another condition, which is that the Secretary of the Treasury must first determine that the funds are not needed to stabilize the exchange value of the dollar, and that the President must approve. In other words, the first use is unlimited in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury; the second use carefully distinguished; and there must be the definite finding of proof by the President that it is not needed for the first purpose. So I do not believe that the term "sole" applies to the second use.

Mr. NORRIS. I cannot see how Senators can draw that construction. We have here this fund. Its authorization is going to be confined to one purpose. That is what will be meant if the word "sole" is put in the bill. The fund cannot be used for anything else. Its use is then confined to one purpose, and one purpose only.

Mr. GLASS. When we attempt to stabilize.

Mr. NORRIS. Then later on in the bill it is provided that it can be used for another purpose.

Mr. GLASS. No; one purpose only, while we are devoting our attention to that purpose, which is stabilization.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes; but that is not in the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the word "sole" is left in the bill, by transposing the language on page 15 back to the first subsection of section 10, the provision would read as follows:

> For the sole purpose of stabilizing the exchange value of the dollar in relation to foreign currencies, the Secretary may do certain things, including the investment and reinvestment in direct obligations of the United States.

That certainly, it seems to me, shows that if the word "sole" is there it limits everything the Secretary of the Treasury may do in connection with this transaction, including the purchase of United States Government bonds.

Mr. NORRIS. It certainly confines it to the purpose of stabilizing the exchange value of the dollar. I believe it will be conceded that using the money to buy Government bonds is not for that purpose. The bill says so, indirectly at least. So there is a purpose that he cannot use it for. He can use it solely to stabilize the dollar, and it is admitted that the buying of Government bonds with this money is not stabilizing the dollar. So that is left out.

I may be wrong about it, but my idea is that one of the great purposes of the bill, under the language on page 15, is to save money for the Government by investing this money in Government bonds and stopping the interest the Government would have to pay. Probably a large portion of it might be used in that way. There would be times, perhaps, when a large portion of this fund would not be used for the purpose of stabilizing the dollar, and there the money would be, doing no good, drawing no interest. So the Secretary of the Treasury says, "Well, I will take the remainder of the $2,000,000,000"—a large amount of money—"and I will buy some Government bonds which draw 4 percent or 4¼ or 4½, and I will stop the payment of interest on the amount of the bonds I have bought." Incidentally, that would help to keep up the market for Government bonds, which everybody would like to do; it would help indirectly when it was desired, to sell some other bonds.

So I do not look at this question lightly. The language on page 15 is important, in my judgment, and I should dislike to take action here that would make it at least doubtful whether any legal effect could be given to that language.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield first to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I do not like to prolong this discussion, but I feel so completely in accord with what the Senator from Nebraska has said that I merely want to add a word. I do not believe there is a lawyer in this body—and there are many able lawyers here—who can escape the conclusion that the words "of this section", in line 4, on page 15, refer not to some subparagraph of the section but to section 10, which begins on line 3 on page 14. If that be not true, then, I think every lawyer here will have to unlearn all he has ever learned from experience in the trial of cases in court involving subsections of complete sections. This can have only one meaning, and, in my opinion, the Senator from Nebraska is right.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, now will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I suggest to the Senator from Michigan that his view and the view of the Senator from Virginia would be met if we used an adverb and made the language read as follows:

> For the purpose of stabilizing the exchange value of the dollar solely in relation to the currencies of foreign governments.

Would not that accomplish the purpose in mind?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know whether we want to accomplish that or whether we want to confine it to that; but that is beside the question.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am trying to avoid the Senator's difficulty.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, there are two definitely expressed purposes for which this $2,000,000,000 may be used. One of them, under this amendment, is solely for the purpose of stabilizing foreign exchange, and that, we were led to believe, is the purpose of transferring the $2,000,000,000 to the Secretary of the Treasury. The other purpose is to protect the credit of the United States by buying direct obligations of the United States Government. That, however, is not all, for if the Senator will read the language on page 15, he will see that it says:

> For any purpose in connection with carrying out the provisions of this section, including the investment and reinvestment in direct obligations of the United States.

In other words, he can do any sort of banking business he pleases.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, that is the only language in the whole section that authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to invest or reinvest in Government securities.

Mr. GLASS. But he can do anything, it says.

Mr. FLETCHER. Question!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. FESS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BARKLEY. I make the point that a quorum is not present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Hebert	Reynolds
Ashurst	Cutting	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.
Austin	Davis	Kean	Robinson, Ind.
Bachman	Dickinson	Keyes	Schall
Bailey	Dieterich	La Follette	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dill	Lewis	Shipstead
Barbour	Duffy	Logan	Smith
Barkley	Erickson	Lonergan	Steiwer
Black	Fess	McCarran	Thomas, Utah
Bone	Fletcher	McGill	Thompson
Brown	Frazier	McKellar	Townsend
Bulkley	George	McNary	Trammell
Bulow	Gibson	Murphy	Tydings
Byrd	Glass	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Goldsborough	Norris	Van Nuys
Capper	Gore	Nye	Wagner
Caraway	Hale	O'Mahoney	Walcott
Carey	Harrison	Overton	Walsh
Clark	Hastings	Patterson	Wheeler
Connally	Hatch	Pittman	White
Coolidge	Hatfield	Pope
Copeland	Hayden	Reed

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] is detained from the Senate on departmental business.

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] are detained from the Senate by committee work.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. FESS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VANDENBERG (when Mr. COUZENS name was called). The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] is still engaged in the Committee on Banking and Currency. If present, he would vote "yea" on the committee amendment.

Mr. GIBSON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW]. My understanding is that if present that Senator would vote "nay." If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. GORE (when his name was called). I desire to make the same announcement as before with reference to my pair with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK]. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea" and if the Senator from South Dakota were present and voting, he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. If my colleague were present on this question he would vote "yea", and if the Senator from Oklahoma were present he would vote "nay."

I was also requested to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], who is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. If the Senator from South Dakota were present, on this question he would vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS]. I inquire if that Senator has voted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Then I am forced to withdraw my vote and withhold it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was requested to announce that the junior Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] is unavoidably absent. I do not know how he would vote on this amendment, and therefore make no announcement.

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 50, as follows:

YEAS—32

Adams	Dickinson	Hebert	Schall
Austin	Fess	Kean	Steiwer
Barbour	Frazier	Keyes	Townsend
Bulkley	Glass	Lonergan	Tydings
Byrd	Goldsborough	McNary	Vandenberg
Capper	Hale	Nye	Van Nuys
Carey	Hastings	Patterson	Walcott
Davis	Hatfield	Reed	White

NAYS—50

Ashurst	Copeland	La Follette	Reynolds
Bachman	Costigan	Lewis	Robinson, Ark.
Bailey	Cutting	Logan	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dieterich	McCarran	Shipstead
Barkley	Dill	McGill	Smith
Black	Duffy	McKellar	Thomas, Utah
Bone	Erickson	Murphy	Thompson
Brown	Fletcher	Neely	Trammell
Byrnes	George	Norris	Wagner
Caraway	Harrison	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Clark	Hatch	Overton	Wheeler
Connally	Hayden	Pittman
Coolidge	Johnson	Pope

NOT VOTING—14

Borah	Gore	Metcalf	Stephens
Bulow	King	Norbeck	Thomas, Okla.
Couzens	Long	Robinson, Ind.
Gibson	McAdoo	Russell

So the committee amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 14, after the word "dollar", to insert the words "in relation to the currencies of foreign governments."

Mr. FLETCHER. That should be rejected. It is the companion amendment to the amendment just disagreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 15, after the word "dollar", to strike out "the Secretary of the Treasury" and insert the words "the board"; in line 16, to strike out the word "he" and insert the word "it"; and in line 19 to strike out the word "he" and insert the word "it", so as to read:

For the purpose of stabilizing the exchange value of the dollar the board, directly or through such agency as it may designate, is authorized, for the account of the fund established in this section, to deal in gold and foreign exchange and such other instruments of credit and securities as it may deem necessary to carry out the purpose of this section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is rejected.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, have the words "the Secretary of the Treasury", in the language of the House text in line 15, been stricken out?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Those words have not been stricken out.

Mr. VANDENBERG. At what parliamentary point should an amendment be offered to have the words "with the approval of the President" inserted after the words "Secretary of the Treasury"? Is that in order at this time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will not be in order until committee amendments shall have been disposed of. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 22, after the word "President", to strike out:

And a general report on the operation of the fund shall be made by the President to the Congress within the period beginning 90 days before and ending 90 days after the expiration of 3 years from the date of enablement of this act.

Mr. FLETCHER. That amendment should be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 3, to strike out "(b)" and insert "(c)."

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 3, to strike out the words "Secretary of the Treasury" and insert "board."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 10, to strike out the words "Secretary of the Treasury" and insert the word "board."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 13, to strike out the words "Secretary of the Treasury and in his" and insert the words "board and in its", so as to read:

The fund shall be available for expenditure, under the direction of the board and in its discretion, etc.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 18, to strike out "Secretary of the Treasury" and insert the word "board."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 1, to insert the following new paragraph:

(c) All the powers conferred by this section shall expire 2 years after the date of enactment of this act, unless the President shall sooner declare the existing emergency ended and the operation of the stabilization fund terminated; but the President may extend such period for not more than 1 additional year after such date by proclamation recognizing the continuance of such emergency.

Mr. FLETCHER. I see no particular objection to that provision. It might as well go to conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 22, after the word "require", to insert the following:

Except that such powers shall expire 2 years after the date of enactment of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934 unless the President shall sooner declare the existing emergency ended, but the President may extend such period for not more than 1 additional year after such date by proclamation recognizing the continuance of such emergency.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 11, to strike out the subtitle "definitions."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. That completes the committee amendments. Other amendments are now in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, on behalf of my colleague [Mr. COUZENS] and myself, I now offer the amendment to which I referred earlier in the day and to which the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] indicated his assent. On page 14, line 15, after the words "the Secretary of the Treasury", I move to insert the words "with the approval of the President."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the amendment be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 14, line 15, after the words "the Secretary of the Treasury", it is proposed to insert the words "with the approval of the President", so as to read:

For the purpose of stabilizing the exchange value of the dollar the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, directly or through such agencies as he may designate, is authorized, for the account of the fund established in this section, to deal in gold and foreign exchange and such other instruments of credit and securities as he may deem necessary to carry out the purpose of this section.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not object to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I desire to offer the same amendment in another place. On page 15, line 10, after the words "Secretary of the Treasury", insert the words "with the approval of the President."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, in line 25, on page 12, I move to strike out the words "or with any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the amendment be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 12, line 25, it is proposed to strike out the words "or with any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the amendment ought to be rejected.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GORE. On page 15, line 11, I move to strike out the clause "and not be subject to review by any other officer of the United States."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the amendment be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 15, line 11, after the word "final", it is proposed to strike out the words "and not be subject to review by any other officer of the United States", so as to make the sentence read:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out the provisions of this section there is hereby appropriated, out of the receipts which are directed to be covered into the Treasury under section 7 hereof, the sum of $2,000,000,000, which sum when available shall be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States in a stabilization fund (hereinafter called the "fund") under the exclusive control of the Secretary of the Treasury, whose decision shall be final.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I invite the attention of Senators to that language. It is absolute. It is unequivocal. The action of the Secretary of the Treasury under this clause would not be subject to review by the President of the United States himself. It would not be subject to review by the Comptroller General.

I do not know who drafted this bill. The Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, I believe, does not know the draftsman of the bill. The Committee on Banking and Currency made some effort to ascertain who drew the bill now pending, and we were unable to discover the draftsman. I do not believe, for the sake of our own self-respect, that we ought to adopt this language, no matter who drew the bill.

The next clause provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall act with the approval of the President, but under this clause he acts upon his own discretion, and it is expressly provided that no other officer of the Government has the right or the power to review either the use or abuse of that discretion.

Mr. President, there is a theory underlying our constitutional system, based upon the experience of centuries, that the sword and the purse ought to be placed in distinct and separate hands. Centuries of experience, I might say of tragedy, gave birth to that principle. Under our constitutional system the purse is placed in the hands of Congress, in the hands of the chosen representatives of the people, while the sword is placed where it should be placed—in the hands of the Chief Executive. The separation of the sword and the purse was deemed by our fathers to be indispensable to civil liberty. Where they are united their tyranny exists. This measure places the control of the purse, insofar as this provision is concerned, in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury; not subject to revision even by the President, not subject to revision by any other authority under the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. President, the Secretary of the Treasury is required by law to submit his annual report to the Congress and not to the President. Other Cabinet officers make their reports to the President, but the Secretary of the Treasury is required to submit his report to the representatives of the people.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. GORE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma if his objection cannot be obviated by a very simple amendment that would answer as well as the one which he has offered. At present the bill provides that the decision by the Secretary in respect of any issue shall be final. If we should amend it so as to state that the decision of the Secretary, when approved by the President, shall be final, and not subject to review, would not that fix it?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BYRNES. I wonder whether the Senator from Oklahoma understood the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], which has been agreed to.

Mr. GORE. I did not get the full import of it. I made inquiry, but I did not have the context.

Mr. BYRNES. The amendment of the Senator from Michigan does provide that this fund shall be under the exclusive control of the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, whose decision shall be final, and not be subject to review by any other officer of the United States.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct.

Mr. GORE. And the amendment was inserted at that point?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; only a few moments ago. I did not think the Senator was aware of that fact.

Mr. LOGAN. Then the suggestion I was trying to make has already been carried out.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, that substantially meets the objection which I was urging. I will add one or two other considerations in order that my own point of view may be understood.

The theory obtained in the Old World, a century or so ago, that "the king could do no wrong." That doctrine was accepted and exploited by the king, and was at least acquiesced in by his subjects. That doctrine has no place in a republic, in a democracy, or under any other form of free government. I wish to add that in raising this point I do not mean to raise any doubt as to the President, as to his good faith, or as to his ability in the administration of this or any other measure. I say that because the intimation has sometimes been made that any sort of dissent from one of these recommended measures implies a sort of distrust of the President himself. I am sure every Senator on either side of the aisle has implicit faith in the President's good faith and good intentions; and on this side we have faith in his judgment and in his ability.

Mr. President, it is my wish to see this administration succeed, first, on account of the country; then, I may add, on account of the Democratic Party. I am anxious to see the President succeed himself, and I am anxious to see the President succeeded by a Democrat; but sometimes the American people fall under a sort of mental aberration in the choice of a President. After all, fortune is a "wincing jade."

I am afraid that one day a Republican President might be chosen—and I mean nothing invidious toward the other side when I say that it is a source of pride and satisfaction to me that there never has been a national scandal in a Democratic Cabinet. Some Republican Cabinets have been less lucky. I remember that Belknap was impeached, that a scandal occurred when General Alger was Secretary of War. We might have a Republican President come to power, and he might place a Mellon in the secretaryship of the Treasury. By this I do not impeach either the personal or the official integrity of Mr. Mellon. We might have a Republican President come to power who might place an Albert B. Fall in the secretaryship of the Treasury. Another Republican President might make a Harry M. Daugherty Secretary of the Treasury. Still another Republican President might make a Walter F. Brown Secretary of the Treasury.

My amendment and my remarks are entirely impersonal so far as the present Secretary of the Treasury is concerned. I have known him many years and have marked his rise with interest.

My point is, Mr. President, that Congress has some legislative responsibilities which it has no right to abdicate, which it cannot abdicate without a breach of duty and of responsibility. So far as I am concerned, I should like to see, and my first purpose was to move to insert, after the words "United States" in this line, the words "except by the Comptroller General"; but I shall be content with the amendment submitted by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and be adopted by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma withdraws his amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and myself, I send to the desk an amendment which authorizes the Treasurer of the United States to purchase a certain amount of silver.

I will say to the Senate that on account of the lateness of the hour I am going to ask that I be permitted to discuss this amendment tomorrow morning. We have been here from 11 o'clock until the present hour. There has been no attempt on the part of anybody to filibuster this bill. On the other hand, there are several Members of the Senate who desire to discuss this particular amendment. It is a matter of great interest to millions of people throughout the United States, and particularly to the farmers throughout the western section.

It will be recalled that heretofore an amendment somewhat similar to this came within 10 votes of passing the Senate. I am going to ask that I be permitted to offer the amendment at the present time, have it printed, and discuss it tomorrow forenoon.

I am perfectly willing to fix a time when we shall vote on the amendment tomorrow, say, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. I do not want to delay the passage of the bill under consideration. I am in favor of the bill; I advocate its passage, and I do not want to delay it. I do think, however, that when an amendment of this kind, which is of such vital importance, is before the Senate, we ought not to be forced to discuss it at this late hour.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] has charge of this bill. He has asked me to make a brief statement, we being in hearty accord on the subject matter.

A good many Senators have approached the Senator from Florida this afternoon, as well as myself, and indicated a desire to conclude the consideration of the bill today. With the exception of the Senator from Montana, and certain other Senators who are supporting his amendment, I think there is a general feeling here that the consideration of the bill should be concluded today, in order that there need be no session of the Senate tomorrow. I realize, however, and the Senator from Florida realizes, that some time will be required for the disposition of this amendment; that there are several Senators who desire to speak on it; and, with the approval of the Senator from Florida, I am going to make a suggestion which I think will enable us to grant the request of the Senator from Montana.

As stated yesterday, it is very desirable that this bill be disposed of tomorrow; and I am going to propose a unanimous-consent request which, if agreed to, will result in the discontinuance of proceedings today, as requested by the Senator from Montana. It is that on tomorrow, if the bill shall not be previously disposed of, after the hour of 4 o'clock no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes on the bill or any amendment thereto, and that before the conclusion of the calendar day a final vote shall be taken on all amendments and on the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, that is entirely satisfactory to me; but, as I have said, several Senators want to discuss the amendment.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield; of course.

Mr. MCNARY. I was called from the floor, and hence was absent when the proposal was made by the Senator from Montana. I heard the proposal made by the Senator from Arkansas. As it stands now, I will say without further discussion that I shall have to object to the proposal made by the majority leader.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I ask the Senator from Oregon if he is prepared to suggest a modification of the proposition I have made?

Mr. MCNARY. I do not know, Mr. President. I want to cooperate, as the Senator knows, in the early disposition of the unfinished business. It is useless for me to refer again to the importance of the measure. There has been no evidence of a filibuster. Everyone seems to be willing to go through with it; but I am in this situation: The Senator from Montana has an important amendment. It involves the buying of a great quantity of silver. I do not know how long that amendment is going to be discussed. I do know that there are Members on this side of the Chamber who have not yet been heard who desire to discuss the general principles quite at length. It may be that the Senator from Montana will conclude his argument by 2 or 3 o'clock tomorrow, and the others who are in favor of his position; but it might be that the argument on the silver question would run until 3 or 4 o'clock, in which event there would be a denial of the rights of those who desire to discuss the general purposes of the bill. For that reason it would be extremely unfair at this time, this late in the evening, to attempt to come to some understanding regarding a limitation of debate for tomorrow.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I do not think the lateness of the hour this evening has anything whatever to do with the fairness of the proposition to limit debate. If it has, it emphasizes the fairness of it. May I say to my friend from Oregon that I had no opportunity to discuss this request with him prior to its presentation. It came up rather unexpectedly on the floor.

We are in this situation: If no arrangement for a vote can be made that is satisfactory to the Senate, both the Senator from Florida and I feel that we shall have to proceed with the bill this evening.

It is perfectly manifest to me that general discussion on the bill has been pretty well exhausted. There is no contention here that there has been a filibuster or that there is a filibuster; but it is believed that ample time has been afforded and will be afforded on tomorrow to conclude the consideration of the bill. It was my intention to suggest that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow in order to afford more time for the discussion of the bill. I do not know what length of time the Senator from Montana feels will be necessary for the consideration of his amendment. So far as I know, the amendment is the only one of importance that has not been taken up. There is nothing, of course, to enable one to determine how long that particular amendment will require; but meeting at 11 o'clock, and imposing a limitation on debate at 4, would afford 5 hours of general debate, which probably would not be confined to the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

I hope the Senator from Oregon will not persist in his objection.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from Arkansas would not act so unjustly as to impose without notice a night session on the Senate. The Senator well knows that the practice has always been not to hold a night session until ample opportunity has been given to Senators to arrange their evening and their work. For that reason I am sure the Senator would not want to take advantage of the situation and hold a session tonight without first giving notice of his intention to do so.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

Mr. McNARY. Just a moment, if the Senator please. Secondly, I wish to say that if the Senator desires to have the Senate meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning, I am in full accord therewith; and if the Senate shall meet at 11, it may be that debate will exhaust itself by 3 or 4 o'clock. I think we all on this side are as anxious as are Senators on the other side to get through with the consideration of the bill, and if a recess be taken tonight between half past 5 and 6, and we meet tomorrow at 11, I think I can extend great hope that we may conclude the consideration of the bill tomorrow afternoon.

For that reason, Mr. President, I shall have to insist upon my objection.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator why we cannot agree on an hour, then.

Mr. McNARY. I stated the reason therefor. I do not know how long the silver amendment is going to be debated. I am trying to protect the rights of those who have not discussed the substance of the pending bill and its purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon will recall that on yesterday, in making the request for unanimous consent, I stated that it was desired to conclude the consideration of this bill today, gave the reason for it, and announced that if it became apparent that the bill could not be concluded today it would be necessary to lengthen the session. There is nothing unreasonable in that. There is nothing unjust or oppressive in it. We are not taking an unusual course in asking for an arrangement that will bring the pending measure to a conclusion.

Of course, I realize that a single objection will prevent an adjustment; but if the Senator persists in his objection I shall certainly not consent to a recess now.

Mr. McNARY. Let me suggest to the Senator a way out—that we conclude the session this evening, say, at half past 5, meet at 11 o'clock in the morning, see how the debate progresses, and probably at 2 or 3 o'clock we can sit down and get together, perhaps earlier.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That would not be satisfactory to me.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that I doubt if we will take more than 2 hours in debating the silver amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well. Let us limit the time, then, and see if we cannot get an agreement.

I ask unanimous consent, then, that when the Senate concludes its labors today it take a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow; that it proceed then to the consideration of the amendment of the Senator from Montana, and that not later than 2 o'clock——

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to suggest 3 o'clock? That will give us 3 hours.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Does the Senator want 4 hours? I understood the Senator to say a short while ago that he wanted 2½ hours. I ask unanimous consent that not later than 2 o'clock tomorrow the Senate proceed to vote on the amendment, and, if the consideration of the bill and amendments shall not be concluded prior to 4 o'clock, that after the hour of 4 o'clock debate be limited to 10 minutes on the bill and to 10 minutes on each amendment.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I do not know whether I understand exactly what the Senator is asking for. Is it the Senator's suggestion that we vote on the amendment at 2 o'clock?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That at not later than 2 o'clock we vote on the Wheeler amendment, and that after that we do anything we please—anything that is in order—until the hour of 4 o'clock, when we impose a limitation to the effect that no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes on the bill or any amendment.

Mr. FESS. After 4 o'clock.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. After 4 o'clock. That does not fix an exact time for a vote on the bill, but it assures that a vote can be had before the end of the calendar day.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President——

VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Do I understand that that would mean a total of 20 minutes on an amendment and the bill?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I do not like to inject myself into the discussion, but I should like to have an opportunity of speaking sometime about 2 o'clock.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator will have from 2 o'clock to 4 o'clock.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. So far as I am concerned, the Senator can waste all the time between 2 o'clock and 4 o'clock. I do not think we ought to agree that any particular Senator shall have that time.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I think I shall have to object unless it can be understood that I am not going to be shut out in doing what I desire to do.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well. Let us proceed with the bill, then.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Montana, on behalf of himself and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], offers the following amendment:

On page 12, line 20, after "Sec. 8.", to insert "(a)."

On page 13, after line 10, to insert the following new subsection:

"(b) The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to purchase silver, at the rate of not less than 50,000,000 ounces per month, until there shall be added to the monetary resources of the United States 1,000,000,000 ounces of silver, except that whenever 371¼ grains of pure silver equals in purchasing power 23.22 grains of pure gold the purchase of silver under this subsection shall be suspended. Such silver shall be purchased, at home or abroad, wherever silver shall be procurable at or under the value specified above, with any direct obligations, coin, or currency of the United States authorized by law, or with any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, at such rates and upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem most advantageous to the public interest; and the silver so purchased shall be held in reserve in the Treasury against the issue of certificates of deposit payable to bearer on demand in silver bullion as hereinafter provided. Such silver certificates shall be issued by the Treasury in an amount which, in the aggregate, shall equal the cost of such silver to the Treasury. Upon presentation of any such silver certificates the Treasurer of the United States shall redeem the same by the delivery of the face value thereof in silver bullion of the gold equivalent value at the time of demand, to the end that the silver delivered shall be measured by value rather than by weight. The silver certificates issued under the provisions of this subsection shall be legal tender for all debts, public and private, public charges, taxes, duties, and dues."

Mr. WHEELER obtained the floor.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator state whether or not his proposed amendment has been submitted to the Committee on Banking and Currency?

Mr. WHEELER. It has not.

Mr. WALSH. So there is no record in the hearings before that committee of any discussion of the measure?

Mr. WHEELER. There was a discussion before the committee of an amendment similar to this, or a suggestion similar to this.

Mr. WALSH. During the present session of Congress?

Mr. WHEELER. During the present session of Congress; yes; and in connection with the bill now under consideration.

Mr. WALSH. So it is not an entirely new subject with the Committee on Banking and Currency?

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, not at all. I will say, likewise, at the suggestion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], that it is not a new subject to the Senate, excepting in a way which I wish to make perfectly plain to the Senate. The amendment I propose does not provide for the free and unlimited coinage of silver on the basis of 16 to 1. I appreciate the fact that there is in the minds of a great many people, particularly throughout the East, a certain prejudice against that idea; and consequently, notwithstanding my own views about the matter, and for the purpose of giving the general principle a trial, I have offered the amendment as a compromise and for an experiment, to test the plan. If it is found to be workable, then in my judgment it will be and should be adopted as a fundamental principle of our Government.

Mr. WALSH. I understand the position of the Senator.

Mr. WHEELER addressed the Senate. After having spoken, with interruptions, for about 1 hour, he said: Mr. President, I am wondering if I may not be permitted to conclude my argument tomorrow morning.

Mr. BARKLEY. Do I understand that the Senator from Montana desires to conclude his remarks tonight?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not. Unless Senators desire to stay here a long time, I will not conclude tonight.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will yield to me, I will present an agreement which has been worked out which will permit of adjournment at an early hour today and leave the Senator from Montana in possession of the floor.

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

(Mr. WHEELER's speech is published entire on p. 1445.)

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its session this afternoon it take a recess until 11 o'clock a.m. tomorrow, and that at an hour not later than 2 p.m. tomorrow, the Senate shall vote on the amendment of the Senator from Montana; that thereafter debate may proceed to 4 o'clock p.m., and that after 4 o'clock p.m. no Senator shall be permitted to speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes on the bill or on any pending amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that is the agreement reached by the Senator from Kentucky and myself; but I desire to have the agreement include an understanding that we shall now recess until 11 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If that suggestion is satisfactory to the Senator from Montana, he need not lose possession of the floor.

Mr. McNARY. I understand the Senator from Montana is as anxious as other Senators are that we shall take a recess until tomorrow.

Mr. WHEELER. I am agreeable to that being done.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its labors today it take a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow, and that at not later than 2 o'clock the Senate shall proceed to vote on the pending amendment, and that after the hour of 4 o'clock all debate shall be so limited that no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes on the bill or any amendment thereto.

Mr. WHEELER. It will be understood, I assume, that I shall be able to resume the floor in the morning.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; the Senator from Montana retains the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REYNOLDS in the chair). Is there objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

FEDERAL RELIEF ADMINISTRATION

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a news item from the Minneapolis Journal for January 24, 1934, relative to a request made by more than 200 educators of 30 colleges and universities of America for an explanation from the administration of its purpose for making economic storm troops thruogh the Federal Relief Administration. This attempt, they say, "is not even a thinly veiled advocacy of the German Nazi's dictatorship methods."

There being no objection, the news item was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Minneapolis Journal of Jan. 24, 1934]

RESIGNATION OF WOODRING IS ASKED OF F. R.—200 EDUCATORS PROTEST MAGAZINE ARTICLE PROPOSING ECONOMIC STORM TROOPS

NEW YORK, January 24.—Educators of 30 colleges and universities demanded of President Roosevelt today the resignation of Harry H. Woodring, Assistant Secretary of War, because of a magazine article entitled "The American Army Stands Ready", in which he proposed organization of economic storm troops through Federal Relief Administration.

The declaration was made in a letter, signed by more than 200 educators, which was made public here.

Among those protesting Woodring's statements were E. A. Ross, professor of sociology, University of Wisconsin; Robert Morss Lovett, professor of English, University of Chicago; Edward Hulme, professor of history, Stanford University; Gordon Allport, professor of history, Harvard University; Broadus Mitchell, professor of economics, Johns Hopkins; M. E. Curti, professor of history, Smith College; and Colston E. Warne, professor of economics, Amherst College.

The educators called Woodring's statement that the Army "is our ace in the hole for peace as well as war" a "totally unwarranted threat to the civil liberties of the American people" and a veiled advocacy of Nazi dictatorship.

"Were we deceived", the letter asked of the President, "when, in response to vigorous protests against apparent militarization of the Civil Conservation Corps at its formation, the people were assured militarization was not even considered? If not, then Mr. Woodring has made presumptuous and dangerous assumptions as to his official function with reference to this branch of the Federal relief and conservation program.

"We contend Mr. Woodring's suggestion 'to organize the veterans of the World War, the C.C.C. men, and, through them, the administration of relief into a system of economic storm troops', is not even a thinly veiled advocacy of the German Nazi's dictatorship methods. * * *

"We contend, Mr. President, that this is a totally unwarranted threat to the civil liberties of the American people; and, if this attitude prevails in the War Department of your administration, we are made to feel our country is being prepared for such an abuse of powers as is intolerable to contemplate. * * * We submit that a man who proposes such a plan * * * be forced to resign his public office."

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER, as in executive session, laid before the Senate several messages from the President of the United States submitting nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of A. Raymond Raff, of Philadelphia, Pa., to be Superintendent of the Mint of the United States at Philadelphia, Pa., in place of Freas Styer.

Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on Finance, to which was recommitted the nomination of Wright Matthews, of Texas, to be Assistant to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to fill an existing vacancy, reported it favorably.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (for Mr. McKELLAR), from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nomination of Benjamin F. Love to be postmaster at Mountain Home, Ark., in place of I. J. Morris, resigned, and also the nominations of sundry other postmasters in the State of Arkansas.

Mr. ADAMS (for Mr. WAGNER), from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, reported favorably the following nominations:

Edward W. Griffin, of Alaska, to be secretary of the Territory of Alaska, vice Karl Theile, whose appointment has been terminated;

Mrs. Antoinette Funk, of New Mexico, to be Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office, vice Thomas C. Havell, resigned;

Miss Ruth Lockett, of California, to be Recorder of the General Land Office, vice Mrs. Emma L. Warren, whose appointment has been terminated;

Ellis Purlee, of California, to be register of the land office at Sacramento, Calif., vice John C. Ing, whose appointment will be terminated;

Chris Bertsch, of North Dakota, to be register of the land office at Bismarck, N.Dak., vice Charles Gilbert Boise, whose term has expired; and William F. Jackson, of Oregon, to be register of the land office at The Dalles, Oreg., vice Robert J. Carsner, deceased.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate stand in recess in pursuance of the agreement heretofore entered into.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 52 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess, the recess being, under the order previously entered, until tomorrow, Saturday, January 27, 1934, at 11 o'clock a.m.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 26 (legislative day of Jan. 23), 1934

AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY

Jefferson Caffery, of Louisiana, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Cuba.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

Harry C. Blanton, of Missouri, to be United States attorney, eastern district of Missouri, to succeed Louis H. Breuer, whose resignation is effective at the close of January 31, 1934.

REGISTRAR OF THE LAND OFFICE

Patrick J. Keohane, of Arizona, to be registrar of the land office at Phoenix, Ariz., vice Henry A. Morgan.

APPOINTMENTS, BY TRANSFER, IN THE REGULAR ARMY TO QUARTERMASTER CORPS

Lt. Col. Thomas Jefferson Johnson, Field Artillery, (assigned to duty with Quartermaster Corps), with rank from May 1, 1932.

TO FIELD ARTILLERY

Maj. Kenneth Prince Lord, Finance Department, with rank from July 1, 1920.

TO CAVALRY

Second Lt. George Reynolds Grunert, Infantry, with rank from June 10, 1932, effective June 10, 1934.

TO INFANTRY

First Lt. James Robert Manees, Finance Department, with rank from July 1, 1920.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JANUARY 26, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Harvey D. Hoover, of the Lutheran Theological Seminary, Gettysburg, Pa., offered the following prayer:

Merciful Father, almighty God of our fathers, who hast laid the sure foundations of our beloved Nation, who art living in the hearts of its noble citizens, Thou who art law and love, we thank Thee for all who are living an unselfish life of service for others, for all in public office who are devoting their lives to the common weal. We thank Thee for the spirit that moves humanity truly to seek and bravely to do Thy will.

Richly bless, we pray Thee, all who are in authority with Thy wisdom and Thy spirit; enable them to hear sympathetically the voice of the people, to listen understandingly to Thy voice, to be faithful to their trust, and to do valiantly as Thy prophetic leaders and our creative statesmen.

Set all Thy people free from selfishness and sin. Grant to all Thy children the realization of their divine destiny. Fulfill, we pray Thee, Thy holy dream when all the nations and peoples of the earth shall become the kingdom of heaven. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PRESENTATION OF GAVEL TO THE SPEAKER

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute in which to present a gavel to the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a gavel composed of 13 varieties of Colorado wood, representing the 13 Colonies, and fabricated in 73 pieces, representing the Seventy-third Congress. On the side of the gavel is a disc of Colorado silver inscribed to the Speaker as follows:

House of Representatives, Seventy-third Congress. Presented to the Speaker, the Hon. Henry T. Rainey, by R. H. Tusler.

On behalf of Mr. Tusler, who resides at Colorado Springs, Colo., and who designed and made this gavel, I have the honor to present it to the Speaker. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Please tell Mr. Tusler that the Speaker appreciates this beautiful gavel coming from the gentleman's State. It is historical, and the Speaker will use it today in presiding over the House.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday, February 7, immediately after clearing the matters on the Speaker's desk, I may be permitted to address the House for 45 minutes on the subject of Muscle Shoals.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

REFINANCING OF FARM DEBTS

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 6670) to provide for the establishment of a corporation to aid in the refinancing of farm debts, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 6670) to provide for the establishment of a corporation to aid in the refinancing of farm debts, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 35, 37, and 38; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert " but the rates of compensation of such agents, officers, and employees of the corporation shall not exceed the rates of compensation prescribed for comparable duties by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended "; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 34: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert " the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, either in cash or in bonds of the corporation at his election, but no such loans shall be made by him after February 1, 1936, except for the purpose of refinancing loans previously made by him under this section. Not to exceed $600,000,000 of the bonds and proceeds thereof "; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert on page 11, line 4, of the House bill after " and " a comma and the following: " with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to "; and the Senate agree to the same.

MARVIN JONES,
H. P. FULMER,
WALL DOXEY,
CLIFFORD R. HOPE,
J. ROLAND KINZER,
Managers on the part of the House.

DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
ROBERT F. WAGNER,
PHILLIPS LEE GOLDSBOROUGH,
JOHN G. TOWNSEND, JR.,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 6670) to provide for the establishment of a corporation to aid in the refinancing of farm debts, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendment no. 1: Under the House bill the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration was authorized to organize and charter the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation. The Senate amendment does not change the fundamental principles of the organization contemplated, but eliminates the authorization and establishes the corporation by the act itself. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 2: This amendment provides that the principal office of the corporation shall be in the District of Columbia. There is no comparable provision in the House bill. The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 3, 4, and 5: These Senate amendments reduce the directorate of the corporation to three members and eliminate the provisions of the House bill providing for the service on the board of directors of two officers of the Farm Credit Administration appointed by the Governor; and the House recedes.

On amendments nos. 6 and 7: These amendments authorize the board of directors to adopt rules and regulations necessary for the conduct of the business of the corporation, and change the provision of the House bill authorizing the directors to make amendments to the charter of the corporation so that the directors' power to make amendments is confined to amending bylaws, rules, and regulations; and the House recedes.

On amendment no. 8: This is a clarifying amendment; and the House recedes.

On amendment no. 9: This is a clarifying amendment expressly authorizing the directors to fix the duties of the agents, officers, and employees of the corporation; and the House recedes.

On amendment no. 10: This amendment authorizes the directors to require bonds and fix the penalties thereof of agents, officers, and employees of the corporation, and to dismiss them at pleasure; and the House recedes.

On amendment no. 11: This amendment strikes out the provisions of the House bill limiting the rates of compensation of offices and positions under the corporation to rates comparable to the rates under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and substitutes therefor a provision subjecting the rates of compensation of agents, officers, and employees of the corporation to the limitation contained in section 66 of the Farm Credit Act and a provision requiring appointment of such agents, officers, and employees by and with the advice and consent of the Senate if at a salary of $4,000 or more per annum.

The effect of the conference agreement is to insert the provision of the House bill with clarifying changes in language.

On amendments nos. 12, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, and 20: These are clarifying clerical amendments; and the House recedes.

On amendment no. 13: This amendment limits the incidental powers of the corporation to such powers as are related to carrying out this act. The provision of the House bill authorized such powers as were necessary to carry out powers and duties under any other act of Congress or under its charter and bylaws and amendments thereto. See amendment no. 1. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 14: Under the House bill the funds and proceeds thereof made available to the Land Bank Commissioner under the direct-lending provisions of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933 and the mortgages made and credit instruments secured thereby were transferred and made available to the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration to enable him to make capital subscription to the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation. Under this Senate amendment such transfer is made directly to the corporation. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 21: This amendment strikes out as surplusage the language of the House bill which states that the bonds are made lawful investments for certain funds because of the Federal guaranty; and the House recedes.

On amendments nos. 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, and 28: These amendments make it certain that the bonds for which the corporation may exchange its bonds, or which it may purchase, or upon the security of which it may make loans, shall be consolidated farm-loan bonds; and the House recedes.

On amendment no. 29: This amendment expressly authorizes the corporation to invest its funds in direct farm mortgage loans under section 32 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act; and the House recedes.

On amendment no. 30: This is a clarifying amendment; and the House recedes.

On amendments nos. 31, 32, and 34: Under the House bill the Land Bank Commissioner on behalf of the corporation is authorized to make, subject to the provisions applicable under present law, the direct loans under section 32 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act in cash or in bonds of the corporation at his election. These Senate amendments make no change in the substance of these provisions but make them effective by amendment to section 32 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act, which is found in section 9 of the bill, rather than by including such provisions in section 6 of the bill as was provided in the House bill.

The House recedes on amendments nos. 31 and 32 and recedes with an amendment on amendment no. 34, the effect of which is to authorize the corporation to make loans after February 1, 1936, if such loans are made for the purpose of refinancing direct loans made under the section.

On amendment no. 33: This amendment strikes out the provision of the House bill providing that the Land Bank Commissioner shall, upon issuance of the corporation charter, make direct loans and substitutes therefor a provision which authorizes the making of such loans until February 1, 1936. See amendment no. 34. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 35: This amendment makes it clear that the proceeds of the $600,000,000 of bonds made available for direct lending are to be in addition to the capital transferred to the corporation; and the House recedes.

On amendment no. 36: This amendment requires the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury of the Governor's subscription to capital stock or paid-in surplus of the Federal intermediate credit banks. The House recedes with an amendment the effect of which is to limit the Secretary's power of approval to the expenditure of the funds.

On amendment no. 37: This is a clerical amendment, and the House recedes.

On amendment no. 38: This amendment rewrites the provisions of section 16 of the House bill which provide that Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation bonds may be used as security for 15-day lending by Federal Reserve banks and may, if they have maturities not exceeding 6 months from the date of purchase, be bought and sold by Federal Reserve banks so as to make such provisions amendments to the proper sections of the Federal Reserve Act. The House recedes.

MARVIN JONES,
H. P. FULMER,
WALL DOXEY,
CLIFFORD R. HOPE,
J. ROLAND KINZER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. JONES. The conference report retains the essentials of the House bill. Most of the changes are in the language rather than the substance. The House amendment increasing the commissioners' loans to $7,500 remains in the bill. The changes are explained in the report which has just been read.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. With reference to amendment no. 11, which was inserted by Senator CLARK, of Missouri, in that amendment the Senator sought to hold salaries to the limitations contained in section 66 of the Farm Credit Act and to provide further that no person should be appointed as agent, officer, or employee, drawing a salary in excess of $4,000 a year, unless with the advice and consent of the Senate. I know the Senator from Missouri is very much interested in that amendment, and I am wondering whether the gentleman could tell us why that was stricken out and why other language was substituted?

Mr. JONES. The first part of the amendment was retained practically in the language of the House bill, which carries the limitation on salaries contained in the original act, and also making those salaries subject to the maximum provisions of the Reclassification Act. The other provision was eliminated. The Senate conferees did not insist, at least, not very strenuously. It seemed to the conferees on the part of the House that that was an impracticable amendment. I believe that this administration should pay more attention to the recommendations of Members of Congress, or at least should consult with them more than they have been doing. I have so stated to them. But to require that all the employees of the corporation, wherever located, whether they are Presidential appointments or not, shall be confirmed by the Senate would practically turn the Senate into an investigating body and would be wholly impractical.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. It only applies to those drawing salaries over $4,000.

Mr. JONES. If that is to be done, I think it should be established as a general policy, because while I think this organization has been subject to some just criticism along that line, I think it is not any more so, and perhaps less so, than some of the other departments of government. I do not think this is the way to reach it. I do not think that requiring all of the subordinate employees to be investigated and confirmed by the Senate is the practical way to handle the proposition.

Then, in the second place, while these matters are important, the main matter of importance is to get the job done, and these people have been doing a real job of refinancing the farmers of the country; and if they will carry on and refinance and save American farm homes, I will forgive them a great many other things.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I agree with the gentleman, it is a rather crude way to reach the situation; but is it not the only way that Congress is going to reach it? As the gentleman says that the Senate conferees receded on the amendment, then, of course, we cannot blame the managers on the part of the House for agreeing. I simply made the inquiry to learn if it was the Senate conferees that suggested the elimination of the Clark amendment. I know nothing of the situation the Senator desired to correct, other than what I have heard said here on the floor and in the cloakroom. The Members know that there has been sharp criticism.

I hope those administrating the act will not take the elimination of the Clark amendment as indicating the Congress approves of existing conditions.

Mr. JONES. I am sure they will not do so. I feel that in many instances the Member is in a position to furnish valuable information and thus to assist in getting an efficient organization. But the main purpose is to accomplish the vastly important work of refinancing.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

MEETING OF THE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture may have the privilege, during the remainder of this session, of holding its meetings during sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand the gentleman to ask this permission to extend throughout the entire session?

Mr. JONES. That was my request. If there is objection, I will limit it.

Mr. SNELL. It is agreeable to me if it is to the majority leader. The request usually states a reasonable length of time. We do not want to give general permission to all the committees.

Mr. JONES. Then, Mr. Speaker, I modify my request and ask unanimous consent that for the next week the Committee on Agriculture be given permission to sit during sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

C.W.A. RELIEF PROGRAM

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, it has always been the policy of the Republican Party to support the administration in power during great emergencies in peace and in war. We supported Woodrow Wilson during the entire World War, to the very end of the war; and we have been doing our part in supporting the N.R.A. under the present administration. No one can say that the Republican Party has tried to block, hinder, or destroy the N.R.A., whether it succeeds or fails. I believe the members of my party will also go along on the Civil Works program and favor an extension of this much-needed relief work at least until May.

I am not speaking for my party, although I believe most of the Republican Members of the House hold the same views. I have the highest regard for and confidence in Harry L. Hopkins, the Administrator of the C.W.A. He is well qualified for the important position he holds through training and experience. For 2 years he was the relief administrator in the State of New York. He also served as the head of the southern division of the Red Cross prior to that. Just because there may be some dishonest and petty grafters who have taken advantage of their emergency positions, which is not surprising when you put 4,000,000 men to work almost overnight, it is not fair to condemn the C.W.A. work or that of the Administrator in trying to solve the relief problem by putting men to work instead of paying doles or granting charity.

My reason for speaking today is not to criticize what has been done. We realize that almost overnight 4,000,000 Americans were put to work. What I want to discuss now is—and it applies to Republicans and Democrats alike—that we must make sure that no politics is played with human misery, and that those millions who are in actual need, the destitute, the people who are walking the streets in need of food to support their own families, should be given preference in obtaining and retaining C.W.A. jobs as long as it lasts. I do not know whether it is wide-spread or not, but from my district I am receiving many complaints that people with political influence, young boys whose fathers have money in the bank, who own automobiles, relatives and personal friends, are getting those jobs in order to make pin-money or to buy automobiles; and that those unfortunate Americans who are absolutely destitute and virtually starving are given no preference over men and women with money in the bank or with paying investments.

It must be self-evident that the purpose of this act is to take care of those in actual need, those who are undernourished, destitute, and particularly those who have families to feed, clothe, and house.

I take this opportunity to request, or rather demand, that the Administrator—because it is within his power to do it within 48 hours if he wanted to—issue an order to every one of his State administrators compelling first preference to be given to those who are neediest and second preference to those next neediest, and that those not in need should be kept off the Government pay rolls until all in actual need have been taken care of.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. FORD. Is it not true that the people put on C.W.A. work are those who have been registered as absolutely in need?

Mr. FISH. No; the gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. FORD. Such is the case in California.

Mr. FISH. Up to December 8 it was true they had to come from relief agencies. Since December 8 all that has been scrapped.

Mr. FORD. Not in California.

Mr. FISH. It has been in my State; it has been unfortunately scrapped. Need is no longer a requisite to secure C.W.A. jobs. Political, social, and financial influence is becoming a stronger factor every day and actual need, less. The fact is that needy men have to wait to get jobs when they ought to be given immediate preference over those who are more fortunate and not in actual need.

What I am saying is not a criticism of the Civil Works Administration; I believe in this relief work as much as any Democrat, but I think we are all agreed, first, that there should be no politics in it either from the Republican side or the Democratic side; and, second, that those in need must be given absolute preference.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. FULLER. The gentleman must be mistaken about the date. Throughout the South people to be eligible must be on the relief rolls as of the 7th day of December.

Mr. FISH. I agree with the gentleman that up to December 7 the relief rolls constituted the eligible list, but that was scrapped 6 weeks ago. In my State the relief rolls have been done away with, and the men employed on the C.W.A. work now are simply chosen without regard to need.

I am very glad this question has been raised, because evidently there is some misunderstanding among a good many Members of Congress.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. In Illinois at least—and I think you will find it so everywhere—the fact is that those people making up the first 2,000,000 put to work on C.W.A. projects were taken entirely from the ranks of the unemployed, particularly those who were on relief rolls. The next 2,000,000 men were not taken entirely from the relief rolls, because it was found that a great many men were suffering because they were too proud to go on the relief rolls—men who badly needed the work.

Mr. FISH. I agree with the gentleman. I think the gentleman will agree with me and I think the House will agree that we can very well, regardless of partisanship, make a definite demand upon the Administrator at least to send out word by telegram to the State administrators that those actually in need must be given preference, just as the veterans are given preference now.

I hope that the Administrator will take this up himself, acting on his own powers, and send out these telegrams immediately. If we are going to continue the C.W.A. program to May 1, and possibly beyond, then he ought to act immediately.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman said this should be a nonpolitical activity. I agree with the gentleman completely, but I wish he would tell the House how we can have a nonpartisan, fair, impartial administration of this program if Republicans are named as State directors, county chairmen, and precinct committeemen to administer it, as has been done in a number of States of the Union.

Mr. FISH. There are probably more Democrats than Republicans holding administrative positions in the C.W.A., and all, regardless of partisanship in this economic emergency, should administer the duties of their office without political favoritism and for the best interests of the needy.

Mr. PARSONS. If the gentleman will yield further, I will amplify my question by asking how we can have a fair, impartial administration when Democratic politicians are named to all these administrative positions, as they have been in some of these other States? Can the gentleman tell the House how we may get a fair, impartial administration of this program if it is administered in any place solely by members of one political party?

Mr. FISH. Yes; the gentleman knows that almost overnight machinery cannot be perfected to put 4,000,000 men to work. I do not think the Administrator is a politician himself. I do not know what his politics are. He comes from my State, but he has never been in politics and, I am confident, is opposed to the use of political influence in the operation of the Civil Works program.

Of course, politics will creep into such a huge undertaking; grafters and racketeers will also creep into it, as we have found out, but probably few in number. I believe the people back home do not want anyone, Republican or Democrat, to play politics with human misery. I believe it is contemptible and despicable, and when such a condition is found to exist the Administrator ought to remove the offending official at once. The C.W.A. must not become a political football, and needy Americans among our unemployed must be given an absolute preference in securing and retaining employment as long as the C.W.A. lasts.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, we have the Treasury-Post Office bill before us and want to finish its consideration, so I shall be constrained to object to any further requests for time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

GEN. JOZEF HALLER

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, one of the most outstanding personages of modern history will be paid homage during the next few days in the district which it is my privilege to represent in Congress.

I refer to that distinguished Polish soldier of the World War, patriot, and statesmen, Gen. Jozef Haller, one of the oldest retired generals of the Polish Army, who is touring the United States and who is paying Hartford County, Conn., the honor of a visit during this week-end.

The passing of time too often dims the record of accomplishment of men who have earned the undying gratitude, not only of a single nation, but of the entire world; therefore, while I fully appreciate the importance of the problems which present themselves to Congress at present, I feel justified in utilizing the time that has been allotted to me to insert in the permanent records of this honorable body a word of recognition to General Haller, to the nation that claims his allegiance, and to the nationality from which he comes and which he so truly typifies.

While the program in Hartford County will center mainly in Hartford and New Britain, it will not, by any means, be a matter of strictly local celebration. From the great industrial plants of my county wherein artisans of Polish birth or extraction skillfully fabricate hardware, office appliances, and almost every known implement and utensil of modern convenience and necessity; from its financial centers from which radiate the activities of internationally respected financial and insurance activities; from the agricultural regions of the county where tireless sons of the soil bring into existence the necessities of life and produce the famous Connecticut wrapper tobacco—representing every known field of human endeavor and every walk of life—men, women, and children will converge during the coming week-end upon Hartford and New Britain, vying with one another in bestowing upon this distinguished gentleman of Poland the honors he so richly deserves.

We cannot think of General Haller and of his important place in the annals of the World War without thinking of his brave compatriots of the United States who banded with him in the darkest days of the war, even prior to the participation of this Nation in that conflict. We cannot do honor to him without honoring those men who forsook the safety and comfort of their homes, their places in civil life, to don uniforms and shoulder arms with that great fighting unit—the Polish Legion of the French Army. Neither can we omit from this great roll of honor the families of these men, their wives, their children, those whom they held nearest and dearest, those who were left behind when the brave men of the Polish Legion marched forth to do battle. It has been said, and truly so: "They serve, too, who only sit and wait."

Fortunately, many of these courageous men have been spared the fate that befell comrades and have returned to take up their places in civil life; many will be numbered among those present in Hartford and New Britain in the next few days to honor their war-time leader.

At the risk of repeating facts which doubtless are known to many of you, but because they constitute an important page in twentieth-century history, I am going to sketch briefly the story of this patriot who is to the twentieth century what Kosciusko and Pulaski were to the eighteenth.

Gen. Jozef Haller was the war-time commander of the Second Brigade of the Polish Legion, a post won by him through his valor and success on the battlefields of Europe. Twice he was seriously wounded, but each time returned to the field and with the valiant group he was leading achieved yet greater triumphs. In 1918 he advanced with the Polish troops to Russia, then to France, where he joined the Polish Army with the Allies. Subsequently he organized Polish detachments from America and other countries in France.

Over 25,000 of the entire Haller army were from the United States.

The extent of Poland's participation in the World War may, perhaps, be best reflected by recalling that 600,000 of her sons were conscripted in the German Army and an equal number in the Austrian forces, while 1,300,000 wore the uniform of the Russian Army. Compelled to fight each other in the ranks of their oppressors, three quarters of them have fallen on the battlefield.

The World War over, in 1919 he returned to Poland, where as the commander of a Polish Army corps, he took part in the war against Soviet Russia. In March of 1920 he achieved his greatest triumph when the waters of the Baltic were once again opened for the new Republic of Poland.

Poland's achievements during the World War and in her subsequent campaigns against nations which desired her complete subordination are of historical significance, for they reminded the world that the Polish Nation still lives—a fact forgotten or ignored by diplomacy of the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries.

Dominating this force in spirit from its very beginning and in the later days as its actual commander, was Haller, the soldier who organized the Polish Legian in the United States and as its commander brought it to the Western Front over a circuitous and perilous route. Made up in its entirety of residents of the United States of Polish birth or extraction, his legion was actually our own, intrusted to his capable hands and guidance. [Applause.]

Mrs. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mrs. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I wish to urge the restoration of the force and equipment allowance the year around for rural mail carriers.

The 4-cent allowance cut has worked a very great hardship upon rural mail carriers. In the winter and spring months when the country roads are worst, they are forced to use horses or hire auxiliary help much of the time, and the expense has to come out of their already meager pay. In some sections and in cases where they do not have teams available, they are forced to have a snowmobile for winter use. This necessitates licensing two cars and also insurance and repairs, together with a 4-cent gas tax and other expenses. Reducing the allowance to 4 months of the year leaves out March and April, which are 2 of the hardest months upon equipment which has to be used on dirt roads. Some of the men in my district have often had to abandon their equipment altogether and do many miles on foot to serve all their patrons. These men are entitled to a fair equipment allowance in addition to the 5-percent restoration of their pay cut, since, like all Government employees, they are prohibited from engaging in other occupations to augment their income.

No one is more aware than I of the necessity for economy at the present time, but it seems as though there might be other ways to save this amount that would be more humanitarian than taking it from these men whose lives are already so hard. [Applause.]

ACTION OF THE HITLER REGIME AGAINST THE JEWS

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a radio address of Hon. CHARLES KRAMER, of California, delivered on November 3, 1933.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

My dear radio friends, I am pleased to have this opportunity today to discuss with you a matter that is very close to the hearts of all of us—a matter in which every red-blooded American is interested. I refer to the dastardly actions of the Hitler regime in Germany against the Jewish people.

Nazi-ism is waging a relentless warfare against the Jews. Under the guise of patriotism for the fatherland, the Nazis are really taking a left-handed slap at our American Government. It is not only creating hatred toward honorable and upright Jewish men and women but it also breeds disrespect for the very foundation of our American Government.

It is a great menace to civilization. It not only is attempting to crush the ideas of freedom and tolerance, which have ever been the foundation of America, but it seeks to exterminate our fine Jewish people who have fought and bled for our country, shoulder to shoulder with the gentiles, ever since the Revolutionary War.

When Germany sent her sons forth to be killed and wounded in the name of military supremacy, she did not differentiate between Jews and gentiles—she needed the Jews then to fight the common foe, and she will need them again, even in a more marked degree.

We have no right to say how Germany shall conduct the affairs of her country, so long as the men in power do not interfere with the rights of American citizens. If the German people are willing to be hog-tied and made servile simply to carry out the policy of Hitlerism in Germany, it is their privilege to do so.

It is not our object to formally protest against any brutality and inhumanity which that Government has been guilty of toward its own subjects, no matter how our hearts may bleed for these Jewish victims of tyranny and oppressicn. There is nothing we can do except to join other enlightened nations in assisting these victims in every way possible to alleviate their distress and help them to reestablish their lives on a humane basis.

While in a sense we cannot take official action to remedy the situation of these victims of bigotry and oppression in Germany, we can take cognizance of the subtle propaganda being disseminated in America to bring about the identical situation here, as regards the treatment of the Jewish people as prevails in Germany.

A newspaper has been started in our country to carry on the campaign of hatred against the Jews. Pamphlets and periodicals are being circulated, broadcasting this relentless war of ignorance and oppression. Thousands of dollars are being expended in this campaign. Nazi storm troops are being drilled in America. They are against the Jews, and they are against America.

We must stifle this movement and stamp it out. It is a form of communism more dangerous than the radical red movement that we have been fighting against for years.

We can circumvent this new movement of hatred and intolerance if we act quickly and vigorously. This propaganda against the Jewish people and against the American form of Government is not being directed by ignorant groups. It is being directed by men and women who are well educated, but nevertheless blind to the human principles that make America the land of the free and the home of the oppressed.

Our Jewish people in America are conforming to the laws of country and State. They are doing everything in their power to develop the social art and industrial life of the community.

If these Nazi advocates from a foreign shore do not intend to conform to the laws and customs of America, then they should go back to Germany where they can live and be happy in working for the principles that they love.

I have just been appointed by Congressman SAMUEL DICKSTEIN, chairman of the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, at Washington, as a member of the committee to investigate Nazi activities on the Pacific coast.

I am going to make a detailed investigation as to the activities of these organizations seeking to propagate hatred, bigotry, and internal disturbance. A full report will be made covering the movement in all parts of the country, and I expect drastic action to be taken on this growing menace to our country and our civilization.

We all did our part to make the world safe for democracy in the World War.

We are all doing our part in winning the war against depression, and now, as Americans, we have to win our fight against this un-American menace of Nazi-ism.

I thank you.

CITIZENSHIP LAWS AFFECTING PUERTO RICO

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill (H.R. 5330) amending provisions of the present organic act with respect to citizenship laws affecting Puerto Rico.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the request of the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico?

There was no objection.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House:

First. It would establish the equivalent of the American constitutional rule regarding citizenship:

All persons born * * * in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States.

Second. It would facilitate the proof of American citizenship when required. One born here after April 11, 1899, and domiciled here, would need to establish only the facts of his birth and domicile, without submitting any evidence as to the American nationality of his father.

Third. It would strengthen the Puerto Rican case against any attempted discrimination with respect to status in the Federal laws and regulations, as in veterans' pension claims.

Fourth. It would point to a greater approximation of Puerto Rico to the mainland.

Section 5 of title 8 of the United States Code—based on law approved March 2, 1917—provides that the following shall be considered citizens:

(1) All citizens of Puerto Rico as defined by section 733 of title 48 of the United States Code. This section 733 of title 48 is not sufficiently clear, because it refers back to section 5 of title 8 and also makes a distinction between citizens of Puerto Rico and citizens of the United States, but apparently it intended to designate as citizens of Puerto Rico all inhabitants who were Spanish subjects on April 11, 1899, and then resided in Puerto Rico, and their children born subsequent thereto, except such as elected to remain Spanish subjects in accordance with the treaty of peace of 1899. From the citizens of Puerto Rico so declared American citizens those are excepted who within 6 months from March 2, 1917, elected not to become American citizens.

(2) All natives of Puerto Rico, not citizens of a foreign country, who were temporarily absent from that island on April 11, 1899, and returned prior to March 2, 1917, and were on the last-mentioned date permanently residing there, except such as within 6 months from March 2, 1917, elected not to become American citizens.

(3) Persons born in Puerto Rico of an alien parent and permanently residing on said island, who within 6 months from March 2, 1917, or within 1 year after coming of age expressly elected to become American citizens.

It will be apparent that under (1) and (2) above, when the citizens of Puerto Rico were made American citizens in 1917, those were excepted who within a period of 6 months declared that they did not wish American citizenship. Out of 1,500,000 inhabitants only some 200 made this declaration. Many of these persons afterward regretted having done so and desired an opportunity to become American citizens. It will also be observed that under (3) above persons born in Puerto Rico of foreign parents had only a limited time to choose American citizenship, the rule being different from that prevailing in other parts of the United States, where all native-born persons not subject to a foreign power, are declared to be citizens (U.S. Code, title 8, sec. 1). It frequently happened through ignorance or inadvertence that the period designated in the law was allowed to lapse. In order to meet these two situations a law approved March 4, 1927, granted a further period of 1 year to elect American citizenship. This law enacted section 5 (a) to title 8 of the United States Code and added the following as American citizens:

(4) Persons born in Puerto Rico of alien parents who did not make the election to become citizens within the time specified in (3) above, but who did make such declaration within 1 year after March 4, 1927.

(5) Persons who elected not to become American citizens as stated in (1) and (2) above, but who elected to become such citizens within 1 year from March 4, 1927.

CONFUSION AND DIFFICULTY SHOULD BE AVOIDED

This is the present situation. The exceptions and specific periods designated in the law occasionally give rise to confusion and difficulty. This is especially the case with regard to persons who could have become citizens under nos. (3) and (4) above, but failed to do so within the time designated. There is no good reason why there should be a special time limitation in such cases, nor why the rule for native-born children of aliens should be different in Puerto Rico from what it is elsewhere in the United States. It has repeatedly happened that an alien's son, born and raised in Puerto Rico, has through ignorance of the law failed to make the election in time and has consequently found himself in an embarrassing situation. Circumstances may arise in which such persons are persons without a country.

As a typical case among hundreds of others of natives of the island, may be cited this one that is self-explanatory.

I have with great pleasure read in local newspapers part of your important memorandum to the honorable, the president of the American Federation of Labor, in reference to nationality of children born in Puerto Rico, of alien parents, which are termed by the law, as "aliens born in Puerto Rico", and to which class, I found myself to belong, with no other alternative than to accept it and patiently await for the opportunity to acquire citizenship by naturalization after going through the usual legal course, but with the handicap, that I could not enter the United States of America to do so, according to the State Department in Washington, as I was of Spanish nationality, and according to the Spanish legation in Santo Domingo, I was an American citizen, and consequently none of the two could issue a passport. A man without a country. Born and raised in Puerto Rico, and educated in continental United States.

I have traveled through mostly all Europe, and back and forth to United States and Puerto Rico as an American citizen, but in July 1928 I tried to enter Puerto Rico as the American citizen I thought I was and was denied admission on the grounds that I was not an American citizen, and had lost my residence there, due to my absence for over 6 months. Then I learned that I could have acquired American citizenship upon becoming of age, but it was too late, as I already had 24 years, and this privilege was only granted for 1 year after becoming of age.

My principals run a weekly steamship passenger service from Santo Domingo to San Juan, and every week we have identical cases to mine; people that come over from Puerto Rico under the impression that they are American citizens due to their being born in Puerto Rico, and upon returning after being abroad for a period of over 6 months, they have lost their residence in United States and are only allowed to reenter with a nonquota immigration visa, as aliens born in Puerto Rico, which is no nationality at all.

THE NATIONALITY OF PUERTO RICANS

Contrary to common belief, mere birth in Puerto Rico—unlike birth elsewhere in American territory, including the Virgin Islands, although excluding the Philippine Archipelago and Samoa—does not vest the native with United States citizenship. The organic act of 1917—so-called "Jones-Shafroth Act"—extended American citizenship, not to all natives of Puerto Rico, but only to such persons as were described or recognized by prior legislation as citizens of Puerto Rico, namely, (a) as to natives of Spain, those who being residents of the island from April 11, 1899, to April 11, 1900, failed to make during that period a declaration to preserve allegiance to Spain under the Peace Treaty (of Paris) of 1899; (b) as to natives of Puerto Rico, those who were Spanish subjects on April 11, 1899, and continued to reside in the island through to April 12, 1900; and (c) children born subsequent to April 11, 1899, of fathers who became citizens of Pueto Rico as stated in the two preceding excerpts ("a" and "b"), which children acquired Puerto Rican nationality at birth.

The Jones Act also naturalized those natives of Puerto Rico who were Spanish subjects on April 11, 1899, who were temporarily absent from the island on the date mentioned, and who returned thereto prior to March 2, 1917. Persons born in Puerto Rico of alien fathers were left out entirely, except for the short naturalization provisions enacted for them in the organic act of 1917. The full citizenship provisions of said act are as follows:

SEC. 5. That all citizens of Puerto Rico, as defined by section 7 of the act of April 12, 1900, "temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Puerto Rico, and for other purposes," and all natives of Puerto Rico who were temporarily absent from that island on April 11, 1899, and have since returned and are permanently residing in that island, and are not citizens of any other foreign country, are hereby declared, and shall be deemed and held to be, citizens of the United States: Provided, That any person hereinbefore described may retain his present political status by making a declaration, under oath, of his decision to do so within 6 months of the taking effect of this act before the district court in the district in which he resides, the declaration to be in form as follows:

"I, ————, being duly sworn, hereby declare my intention not to become a citizen of the United States, as provided in the act of Congress conferring United States citizenship upon citizens of Puerto Rico and certain natives permanently residing in said island."

In the case of any such person who may be absent from the island during said 6 months the term of this proviso may be availed of by transmitting a declaration, under oath, in the form herein provided, within 6 months of the taking effect of this act, to the executive secretary of Puerto Rico: And provided further, That any person who is born in Puerto Rico of an alien parent and is permanently residing in that island may, if of full age, within 6 months of the taking effect of this act, or, if a minor, upon reaching his majority, or within 1 year thereafter, make a sworn declaration of allegiance to the United States before the United States District Court for Puerto Rico, setting forth therein all the facts connected with his or her birth, and from and after the making of such declaration shall be considered to be a citizen of the United States. (This last proviso was reenacted in 1927.)

This legislation, of course, extended citizenship to the bulk of the Puerto Rican population, but (probably inadvertently) it also established in the island the rule of citizenship by blood or parentage (so-called "jus sanguinis"), quite different from the American constitutional rule of citizenship by place of birth (jus soli), also acknowledged in many other countries. The island being, by judicial declaration (U.S. Sup. Ct.) an unincorporated territory, said constitutional rule is not, of course, in force ex proprio vigore in Puerto Rico, but the Congress has power to make the rule operative here by special legislation, as it did for the Virgin Islands in 1927.

Accordingly, and to correct the defects noted and improve generally the nationality laws affecting Puerto Ricans, House bill 5330 was introduced at the last special session by the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico to the United States. The bill seeks to add a new section 5 (b) to the present Organic Act, providing as follows:

SEC. 5. (b) All persons born in Puerto Rico on or after April 11, 1899 (whether before or after the effective date of this act), and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, are hereby declared to be citizens of the United States: Provided, That this act shall not be construed as depriving any person, native of Puerto Rico, of his or her American citizenship heretofore otherwise lawfully acquired by such person; or to extend such citizenship to persons who shall have renounced or lost it under the treaties and/or laws of the United States, or who are now residing permanently abroad and are citizens or subjects of a foreign country: Provided further, That any woman, native of Puerto Rico and permanently residing therein, who prior to March 2, 1917, has lost her American nationality by reason of her marriage to an alien eligible to citizenship, or by reason of the loss of United States citizenship by her husband, may be naturalized under the provisions of section 4 of the act of September 22, 1922, entitled "An act relative to the naturalization of married women", as amended.

CITIZENSHIP AT BIRTH

The effect of this bill would be: (1) To enable all persons born in Puerto Rico to acquire United States citizenship at birth, as all natives of New York, Illinois, Florida, and so forth, do; (2) to make this naturalization provision retroactive so as to cover all persons born in Puerto Rico after the change of sovereignty in the island—that is, since April 11, 1899—and who are permanently domiciled here, those temporarily residing abroad included; and (3) to give Puerto Rico born women equality of rights of naturalization with (continental) United States born women. The bill also coincides with the policy of approximation to which the declaration of the last—national—Democratic platform with respect to Puerto Rico—statehood—clearly points.

House bill 5330 was referred, in due course, to the Committee on Insular Affairs of the United States House of Representatives, where it is to be considered at the next regular session of Congress. It was brought to the attention of the Honorable George R. Dern, Secretary of War, who wrote his views to the Honorable SANTIAGO IGLESIAS, Resident Commissioner, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 16, 1933.

Hon. SANTIAGO IGLESIAS,
Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. COMMISSIONER: Referring to my letter of May 9, 1933, acknowledging your previous letter of May 2, 1933, in which you request my views regarding H.R. 5330, to amend the act of Congress of March 2, 1917, with respect to citizenship, no objection other than indicated below, is seen by this Department to the enactment of H.R. 5330.

It is to be observed that the phrase "and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States" occurring in the proposed section 5 (b) (lines 9 and 10, p. 1, of the bill) appears to be ambiguous. It is believed that the meaning presumably intended in the proposed section 5 (b) of the bill would be clarified by amending the first four lines of the section to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. (b) All persons born in Puerto Rico on or after April 11, 1899 (whether before or after the effective date of this act), and not subject to any foreign power are hereby declared to be citizens of the United States."

With reference to the last proviso (lines 8–16, inclusive, p. 2) of the proposed section 5 (b) of the bill, it is noted that the proviso apparently does not cover the case of a woman, native of Puerto Rico but not a citizen of the United States under the act of March 2, 1917, who has since that date become a subject of a foreign power by marriage to an alien eligible to citizenship, or by reason of the loss of the United States citizenship by her husband.

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE H. DERN, Secretary of War.

The following comments, apropos of the above-quoted communication, seem pertinent:

The phrase "and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States" was taken from amendment 14, section 1, of the Federal Constitution, which, as the Department knows, provides:

All persons born * * * in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens, etc.

The phrase, it is understood, has a technical meaning, the effect of which would be to exclude the children of foreign ambassadors and ministers; that is, persons born of foreigners and in places without or not subject to the jurisdiction of the United States—for example, foreign legations and warships.

The legal import of the phrase in question, it is believed, is discussed in, first, United States Supreme Court decisions (Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U.S. 258; Elk v. Williams, 112 U.S. 94; United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U.S. 649); second, in the legal encyclopedia Corpus Juris (vol. 11, pp. 778–79, sec. —); and, third, in textbooks, such as Hyde's International Law Chiefly as Interpreted by the United States (vol. I, pp. 614–4, sec. 344) and Borchard's Diplomatic Protection of Citizens Abroad (p. 607, sec. 269). In the treatise last cited it is said:

The uniform construction of the law at the present time * * * interprets the clause "subject to the jurisdiction" as excluding merely children born in places enjoying extraterritoriality, such as foreign legations or public vessels.

It was with this construction in view that the phrase in question was made a part of the proposed amendment, even in preference to the suggested substitute "and not subject to any foreign power"; for the latter, although apparently having the same meaning as the former, and originally used in the Civil Rights Act of 1866, has not received as thorough a judicial interpretation as the clause now shown in the bill.

However, should the Department feel convinced that the proposed substitute phrase will not be construed differently—for example, it might be argued that it meant "and not citizens or subjects of a foreign power", in which case, if such interpretation prevailed, the amendment would be nullified—the Resident Commissioner has no objection to the suggested change of phraseology. Nevertheless, it would seem proper to point out, in this connection, that when legislating for the Virgin Islands with the same purpose in view as sought in H.R. 5330, Congress used precisely the same phrase. In 1927 it provided by law:

All persons born in the Virgin Islands of the United States on or after January 17, 1917 (whether before or after the effective date of this act), and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, are hereby declared to be citizens of the United States (44 Stat. 1235; U.S.C., Supp. VI, title 8, sec. 5c).

As to the Department's suggestion with reference to the last proviso (married women) of H.R. 5330, it is acknowledged that it tends to broaden the provisions of the present draft of the bill. The original purpose of the latter was, of course, to include without any doubt all women, native of Puerto Rico, who at the time of their marriage to aliens were at least nationals (although not citizens) of the United States. However, it is now thought that under the present wording of the bill, Puerto Rico-born women who married aliens at a time when they (the women) because of parentage or otherwise, could not be regarded, under existing law, as United States citizens or nationals, would be left out of the enabling benefits of the proposed measure, which would naturalize males (whether single or married) similarly situated (insofar as birth is concerned), and this involved a discrimination which, naturally, should not be favored and was never contemplated. Possibly the following changes in the draft would accomplish the desired purpose:

First. In lieu of the phrase "prior to March 2, 1917", substitute "prior to the effective date of this act"; and Second. After the phrase "American nationality", insert the clause "or become the subject of a foreign power."

No objection to the bill is anticipated on the part of those affected (the number may reach into the thousands). On the contrary, it is believed that the great majority of them will welcome the reform and the opportunity to be speedily naturalized.

RECOMMENDATION

It should be recommended that in the new citizenship law the inhabitants of Puerto Rico be treated in the same manner as those of the mainland and that all natives of Puerto Rico and their children, except those who are citizens of a foreign country, shall be considered American citizens in the same manner as natives of the various States of the United States.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL—FISCAL YEAR 1935

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 7295) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H.R. 7295, the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill, with Mr. FULLER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a pending amendment which the Clerk will read for the information of the Committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HENNEY: On page 52, line 19, strike out the figures "$82,902,500" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$92,562,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the pending amendment.

The question was taken; and on a devision (demanded by Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts) there were—ayes 34, noes 51.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For transportation of foreign mails by steamship, aircraft, or otherwise, including the cost of advertising in connection with the award of contracts authorized by the Merchant Marine Act of 1828 (U.S.C., title 46, secs. 861–889; sup. VI, title 46, secs. 886–891x), $37,500,000: Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be paid on contract no. 56 to the Seatrain Co.: Provided further, That not to exceed $7,000,000 of this sum may be expended for carrying foreign mail by aircraft under contracts which will not create obligations for the fiscal year 1936 in excess of $7,000,000: Provided further, That the Postmaster General is authorized to expend such sums as may be necessary, not to exceed $250,000, to cover the cost to the United States for maintaining sea-post service on ocean steamships conveying the mails to and from the United States, including the salary of the Assistant Director, Division of International Postal Service, with headquarters at New York City.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CHASE: Page 55, line 8, strike out "$37,500,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$4,750,000."

Mr. CHASE. Mr. Chairman, there is only one question involved in this amendment, and that is, whether or not this House will vote money for subsidies that are at the present time under criticism.

I am proud of the character of the contribution to this subcommittee from the Republican side of this Chamber. You gentlemen on the Democratic side have every reason to be proud of the quality of your Representatives. They have been fair, candid, and honest.

I quote briefly from page 20 of their committee report:

The domestic air mail is on a subsidy basis. With expenditures for the current year at $14,000,000, revenues are estimated at $6,500,000, indicating a minimum subsidy to the contractors of $7,500,000.

And from page 21:

The committee has no means of knowing what the right sum to appropriate may be and until the results of these studies and investigations lead to a sound conclusion the position of standing on the present rate of expenditure is adopted even though it may be arbitrary in character.

Foreign air mail: * * * This service is provided for under contract to South and Central America and is an essential feature of our trade relations and communication with the countries of that portion of the world. This service, as in the case of domestic air mail and ocean mail, is definitely on a subsidy basis, the estimated revenues being $1,250,000 and the excess cost or subsidy amounting to approximately $5,750,000.

Ocean mail contracts under the Merchant Marine Act of 1928: * * * Ocean mail contracts under the Merchant Marine Act are also on a definite subsidy basis with compensation fixed by law for vessels of various classes, graded by speed and tonnage, without reference to the amount of mail carried.

* * * * * * *

For the fiscal year 1933 the subsidy amounted to $24,730,000. For the fiscal year 1935 it will amount to approximately $27,000,000.

* * * * * * * *

Aggregate subsidies—the cost of the subsidy features of ocean mail contracts, domestic air mail contracts, and foreign air mail contracts may be summarized as follows:

Foreign air mail contracts	$5,750,000
Domestic air mail contracts	7,500,000
Ocean mail contracts under the Merchant Marine Act of 1928	27,000,000
Total	40,250,000

The committee has been fair, and the chairman has been fair. No one could be more honest, candid, or frank. He has neither concealed nor evaded the issue. Yesterday he said, and I quote from column 2, page 1344, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

Doubtless gentlemen have heard before from me from this floor my opposition to this method of granting subsidies for the development of aviation, for the development of our merchant marine, and for the development of our trade relations with the Central and South American Republics.

Then turn to column 1, page 1345:

Mr. ARNOLD. If the money is not made available, and those contracts are valid contracts, the holders of the contracts can go into the Court of Claims and sue the Government and recover.

This is a perfectly fair, candid statement. The companies' rights are protected. They will have their day in court.

Now, for the other side of the picture.

I respectfully read to you the campaign pledge of my party, the Republican Party, to the taxpayers of America:

We urge prompt and drastic reduction of public expenditure and resistance to every appropriation not demonstrably necessary to the performance of the essential functions of government, national or local.

The Democratic campaign pledge is clearer—brief, definite, concise, and to the point. It says:

We condemn the open and covert resistance of administration officials to every effort made by congressional committees to curtail the extravagant expenditures of the Government and to revoke improvident subsidies granted to favorite interests.

This is your campaign pledge made by the party which sent you here.

In column 2, page 15, of the October 9, 1933 edition of Time, appears this statement:

Senator BLACK estimated that Export Steamship Corporation, the first of 50 shipping companies on the committee's list for scrutiny, had received Federal subsidies and benefits worth $26,663,151 since 1928. Yet Export officials testified that their company was now "in worse condition" than in 1930, that it "still owed the United States some $8,000,000, of which $1,200,000 was already past due."

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CHASE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHASE. Over at the other end of the Capitol you have a diligent committee, headed by a great Senator from a great State, and through his courtesy I read from the manuscript of Senator BLACK, where by radio he brought to the minds of the American people the conditions relative to the payment of subsidies from the money of the taxpayers of this country.

Quoting from page 2 of the manuscript:

It is impossible, in the short span of time I am to talk, to give details of the evidence before our committee. The record, however, discloses that the huge subsidies paid by the Government to build up a merchant marine have been diverted from that channel and have been largely spent in high salaries, extravagant expense accounts, highly paid lobbyists, and huge dividends.

Since 1928 our Government has contributed practically $1,000,000,000 by mail subsidies, ship sales, and Government loans, to shipping interests. A few illustrations will show how much of this money has gone:

One man drew more than $300,000 per year for his salary and expenses, charging up to the company of which he was an officer, as much as $75 for 1 day's meal; $100 for waiters; $75 for taxicabs.

Back in my old home city of Anoka an old-time friend of mine, Frank Hickman, who during the Spanish-American War volunteered in his country's service and lost his health in that service, is now almost completely disabled. He is 70 years of age, has no other means of support, and the misnamed economy bill allows him $15 a month to maintain life. Of this amount $5 goes for rent and $10 to support himself and help support his sister.

I ask you here today whether you favor paying crippled, disabled veterans with war-incurred disability $15 a month, and voting to contribute $75 for one meal for a New York multimillionaire?

Quoting again:

Another shipping official charged his own company a commission for buying Government boats, amounting to more than $600,000 and a part of these payments were made when the company was in default to the Government on its indebtedness for the same ships.

One company started in the shipping business with $500 paid-in capital. In a period of 8 years more than $7,000,000 profits were made.

Another official of a holding company owning a subsidized shipping line drew in salaries and bonuses more than $500,000 in 1 year.

Another man made in net profits more than $3,500,000 from the time he began to have Government contracts until 1923.

Attorneys' fees of $100,000 have been paid to one individual law firm for services in connection with a single Government contract.

Subsidized ship operators have become millionaires practically overnight, while not even able to name the various companies constituting their network of holding companies, subsidiaries, affiliates, and associated companies.

Quoting from the bottom of page 4 of the manuscript:

When the air mail map had been redrafted, it was found that the eighteen or more million dollars of taxpayers' money annually paid for the carriage of air mail was controlled more than 90 percent by four companies.

At the directors' tables there sat not the pioneer air pilots, but the masters of American finance. The control of aviation had been ruthlessly taken away from men who could fly, and bestowed upon bankers, brokers, promoters, and politicians, sitting in their inner offices, allotting among themselves the taxpayers' money.

Again fortunes were made overnight. Forty dollars invested in an airplane company went upward to a subsidized aviation company, and in approximately 2 years, gave to the $40 investor a value of $6,000,000.

Two hundred and seven dollars made another man worth $25,000,000.

Two hundred and fifty-three dollars made another man worth $35,000,000.

This is our problem here today.

Here is the committee, here is the bill, here is the appropriation, here is the subsidy—how will you vote?

Will you repudiate Senator BLACK, the administration's spokesman, before the people of America and vote for these appropriations? Or will you vote down the appropriations and support him? Will you keep your campaign pledges, written into the party platform, or will you break them? Were those statements sincere, honest expressions of conviction drafted by responsible representatives of the Democratic Party, or were they merely political bunk?

This is your administration. You have made the criticism. You have the power, and with it the responsibility. Just how will you vote?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to discuss the question of the policy of subsidies. I am simply going to call your attention to this fact: In the independent offices appropriation bill which was passed last year there was contained a provision that the President of the United States should have the right to consider, cancel, alter, modify, or repeal any contracts entered into with respect to the transportation of air and ocean mail.

Now, gentlemen, can we not trust the President of the United States when full information shall have been secured, when he shall have carried forward the work that is being done not only by Seantor BLACK's committee but also—as I personally know—by the Department of Commerce in investigating all questions? Then when our great President, who has made no mistakes, makes his decision, we should abide by his judgment.

I am simply asking you not to curtail or injure the President's program.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I did not know that this was the President's bill. I thought it was a bill that came from the committee. Does not the gentleman think we are trying to shove upon the President too much responsibility, and that we ought to assume some of these things rather than to say we will give it to the President? I think he will have so much to do it will be impossible for him and his associates to handle all this business.

Mr. BLAND. Upon the suggestion of the administration the power was given to the President which he desired.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I will.

Mr. MOTT. Did the law give the President the authority to cancel all contracts, or only those that were entered into illegally?

Mr. BLAND. As I recall, the President was given full power to modify or cancel all contracts. I will ask the chairman of the committee if that is not the fact?

Mr. ARNOLD. That is entirely true, insofar as they related to transportation.

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. As I understand, these contracts are valid contracts, and they can recover from the Government on the contracts?

Mr. BLAND. The President was given full power, and if they are valid, to determine what is just to be paid.

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. Were these contracts entered into prior to or after March 4?

Mr. BLAND. Prior to March 4.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. My understanding is that the independent offices bill gave the President the right to cancel these contracts regardless of whether they were valid or not.

Mr. BLAND. That is my understanding.

Mr. TABER. The authority in the independent offices bill gave the President authority to fix the compensation for the contractors, and they would have the right to accept his offer or go to the Court of Claims for damages.

Mr. BLAND. Yes; if the President desires to cancel the contracts.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I listened to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CHASE] getting all wrought up over these air subsidies and other matters in this bill. I want the people to know that it is not in the making of the Democratic Party that these subsidies were put into this bill. These unconscionable subsidies were all granted by the previous administrations, and under 10-year contracts. When the gentleman wants support from this side of the House in a matter of economy, he will get it. I, for one, have always voted against gags, and I voted against subsidies, and I shall continue to vote against them, and also continue to vote to abolish, as far as possible, the tremendous powers of the bureaus that now operate in the Government. Along the line of economy, I wish the gentleman would go down to the Treasury Building and see the number of people employed there. There were two messengers at each table, and on one floor of the Treasury a total of 36 men acting as messengers, sitting around reading newspapers, doing nothing. That is only one department. Go to the Bureau of Internal Revenue, and in some of the positions under the civil service there the people do not have enough to keep them busy, while under the N.R.A. the people work overtime, and I am not in favor of that. I am in favor of a fair deal for every employee, whether under the civil servive or the N.R.A., which, by the way, has not been so anxious to enforce its own codes among its own employees. The Democratic Party has always been for a liberal and progressive government and economic administration, while the gentlemen on the other side have not been for liberality and progress. We are following the President. I am going to follow him on everything, except when I have to violate a pledge that I have made to my people. I am for real economy, the abolition of some of these useless bureaus and civil-service positions. I am not for penalizing the veterans or the Federal employee in the smaller brackets. It is the big swindlers and grafters, who have been robbing our Government for years, that I am after.

I think the gentleman knows that this side of the House has supported them on many occasions when they were right; and we are going to support measures as a matter of principle rather than as a matter of politics. I hope when these matters come before the House we shall support these matters of economy on principle and not as a matter of politics. We are not for giving away millions of dollars to air mail contractors, by virtue of which contracts men who are able to raise a $40 investment to a value of some $6,000,000. Also in an initial investment of $207 in the Pratt-Whitney Co. George Mead, formerly of the United Aircraft Corporation, made $7,800,000 profit in cash and still holds stock of the value of $750,000. There is not a Member of this House who is in favor of that, not one Member on the committee in favor of it. There is not one Member of this whole body who is in favor of giving away any of the moneys of the Government uselessly. No one should be able to profiteer from the granting of any Government contract or subsidy.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Is the gentleman in favor of the construction of plants in West Virginia by the Government to manufacture material for the Post Office Department, at the request of the wife of the President.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I do not believe that individual enterprises should be financed by the Government in competition with free industries set up in other parts of the country. Many industries in Detroit and some of your other northern industrial cities have been shifted to the southern areas of the country the last few years under your administration, when there were cheap wages in the South, but now, due to the operation of the new industrial codes, we find competition with cheap wages in certain parts of the country is not so furious, and that labor is paid a decent wage, all due to the National Industrial Recovery Act. I think if we let things alone we will not have to build these factories. In answer to the gentleman's question, I am not in favor of it.

There are too many factories empty and too many people unemployed in industrial centers for the Government at this time to spend $525,000 for the building of a factory anywhere with public funds. So the Members of the House may understand more thoroughly what the gentleman from Pennsylvania refers to, it is this: The Government proposes to build a factory at Reedsville, W.Va., for the purpose of making post-office screens, which will include the post-office boxes in the post offices, the counters, the delivery windows, and so forth. Reedsville has a population of about 400. A population of this number cannot supply the number of needed mechanics, cabinetmakers, and steel workers and other artisans to run the factory, and will draw workers from other parts of the country. This particular project will tend to destroy our industrial centers, if continued, representing the investment of hundreds of millions of dollars, and consequently hurt every property owner of an industrial center by drawing business away from his home town, and indirectly lowering the value of his property. Let us rehabilitate our destroyed centers of industry before building new ones.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon the pending amendment close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, I think most of you realize the situation that we are in. When the present administration came into power it found legislation on the statute books authorizing subsidy contracts for the development of our merchant marine and contracts that had been entered into by a prior administration. Those contracts were entered into under authority of law that had heretofore been granted by this Congress. There has been much comment lately as to the validity of some of these contracts. Investigations are being conducted, and from disclosures already made there is serious doubt as to some of them. So far as the contracts on their face are concerned they are regular, they were entered into by the proper officials of the Government who were authorized to enter into them, and the contracts that will be affected by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CHASE] are all 10-year contracts. They are based on variables contained in the contracts and the law under which they were made possible by which the amounts payable are subject to fluctuation. The obligation of the Government is fixed, so far as those contracts are concerned, within a defined range, and the only thing that the Government can do, having already obligated itself, is to go ahead and perform its part of the obligation resting upon it by virtue of the contracts. If those contracts are void in their inception, of course, there could be no enforcement of any obligation against the Government to recover the amount of compensation the Government agreed to pay under the contract; but, if the contracts are not void in their inception, then there is a fixed obligation on the part of the Government to pay its monetary obligation under the contract, and that is an obligation that cannot be escaped, that cannot be evaded.

If the appropriation should not be made for the purpose of carrying out these contracts, and they are valid, the holders could go into the Court of Claims and enforce that obligation against the Government of the United States. We do not know whether the contracts are valid or not. The investigations now under way may determine that question. It is indefinite and uncertain at this time and we cannot determine that question here. Since our obligation is definite and since we are bound by a solemn contract obligation, we can only go along and make the money available for our part of obligations.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. I understood the gentleman to say a short time ago that the President was given authority, under the bill passed at the last session, to cancel these air mail contracts, whether they were valid contracts or not.

Mr. ARNOLD. The President was given power to cancel and annul any of the contracts providing for the transportation of persons and things, upon rendering due compensation to the parties who hold the contracts. Now, what is due compensation? It would be the amount of damages that would be recoverable under the contracts. That is true as far as the contracts which are valid are concerned. Of course, if the contracts were fraudulent in their inception, then there would be no recovery. The committee at the other end of the Capitol that is investigating the matter is going into it very thoroughly, and making an investigation of the set-up of these various concerns and going into the question of whether or not the contracts had been properly or improperly let; and until it is determined in some way—until we have some information upon which to base our action—the only thing we can do is to proceed as we are now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. All time has expired on this amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CHASE].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CHASE: Page 55, strike out line 11 and all down to the colon in line 14.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. Chairman, night before last I tried to state as clearly as possible, as a Member of the Republican side of this Chamber, that, Republican or Democrat, I am against the misuse of public money and against graft.

It has been freely and fluently charged around this country, from the platform and over the radio, that we of the Republican Party are guilty of wasteful expenditure of public money. If that charge is true, as a Republican, I would like to have it stopped, and I would like to help stop it.

The accepted spokesman for the Democratic Party, Senator BLACK, reporting to the voters and taxpayers of this country by radio, has declared, in effect, that there is graft, and has gone far to prove his statement. I realize that the committee was somewhat bound in its consideration of these proposed appropriations, but this House is not bound, and the Committee of the Whole is not bound. It was my purpose to present to you, just as clearly as possible, an opportunity to vote out the subsidy provisions and to pay the companies on a poundage basis only. If you gentlemen do not wish to cut out the subsidies, vote down the amendment. It is your responsibility, not mine. This is the new deal and you are in power. You have absolute and exclusive control.

But if you vote for these subsidies, when you go back on the stump tell your constituents frankly: "I voted for the subsidies." For when you vote down these amendments, as manifestly you are going to do, you will be doing what our friend from Michigan was just trying to condemn, namely, sanctioning the payment of subsidies, which practice under a Republican administration you denounced.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

OCEAN MAIL SUBSIDIES

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The Republicans are criticizing the Democrats on account of the appropriation for ocean mail contracts. The subsidy system for steamship lines and air lines to carry the mail was started under the Republican regime. I think the ocean mail contracts was one of the biggest rackets growing out of the disposition of property acquired during the war for emergency purposes. January 18, 1930, an appropriation bill for these same departments was pending before this House. At that time I brought to the attention of Congress the great subsidies that were being paid to steamship lines and offered an amendment which would have prevented similar subsidies from being adopted in the future—there were 13 such contracts in contemplation at the time.

ONE OF FIRST TO EXPOSE RACKET

So far as I have been able to find out, I was the first Member of Congress to expose in detail the small amount of service rendered by the subsidized steamship lines and the large amount of money received therefor.

Permission having been granted, I insert herewith a part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 18, 1930, and which appears on page 1914 of the bound volume of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the Seventy-first Congress, second session:

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Amendment offered by Mr. PATMAN: Page 75, line 20, strike out the figures '$28,000,000' and insert in lieu thereof the figures '$21,400,000.'"

Mr. PATMAN. If the appropriation for ocean mail service is decreased to $21,400,000, it will mean that contemplated contracts cannot be carried out until an additional appropriation is made. The contemplated routes, 13 in number, are estimated to cost, the next fiscal year, $6,600,000. In order that the Members of the House may know something about these contemplated contracts, I desire to invite your attention to the one that is contemplated from Tacoma, Wash., to Valparaiso. The Post Office Department will probably issue an order today asking for bids from steamship companies to carry the mail on this line. The Department will require 17 trips each year and will pay for the service $284,920, or $16,700 a trip. Of course, we do not know how much mail this line will carry. Upon investigation, I discovered that a line was operated between these points during the year 1929 and made 18 trips. The total amount of first-class mail carried was 42 pounds. The total amount of other mail, including parcel post, amounted to 1,263 pounds. The largest amount of mail carried on either of these trips was 5 pounds of letters and 145 pounds of parcel post.

If this appropriation is not reduced, the Post Office Department, in compliance with a duty under existing law, will no doubt enter into a contract with a steamship company for a term of 10 years under which the Government will be obligated to pay this steamship company $284,920 a year, or $2,849,200 for 10 years for carrying the United States mail on a line where the total amount carried during the fiscal year of 1929 amount to 42 pounds of letters and 1,263 pounds of packages.

There are 12 other contemplated contracts besides this one. I have not had the time to investigate them. This is the only contemplated contract on which I have been able to receive information so far, although the officials in the Post Office Department have cooperated with me fully in obtaining this information, and there was no reluctance on the part of anyone in that Department to disclose the facts fully.

If the same amount of mail is carried by the Tacoma-Valparaiso line that was carried during the fiscal year 1929, the value of the services rendered on each trip by the steamship company to the United States Government will be $2.36; 61 cents' worth of letters and $1.75 worth of packages. For each one of these trips the steamship company will receive $16,700. In other words, the steamship company will receive about $7,000 for every $1 worth of service rendered.

A glaring example of a subsidy may be pointed out in the case of recent ocean mail contracts where the owners of one vessel received from the Government $14,915 for transporting a few pounds of mail. A service that was worth $7.10.

November 14, 1929, the steamship Everett sailed from Tacoma, Wash., for Manila. It carried as a part of its cargo United States mail consisting of 16 pounds of letters, or first-class mail, and 136 pounds of parcel post. The Everett is owned by the Tacoma Oriental Navigation Co., a private corporation; on February 16, 1928, she was purchased by this company from the United States Shipping Board; before the purchase the name of the vessel was West Ison. The purchase price was $91,644; one fourth of the amount, or $22,911, was paid in cash and the remainder to be paid to the Government in eight annual payments; the unpaid amount draws interest at the rate of 4¼ percent. The Shipping Board, at the expense of the Government, before delivering this vessel, put it in first-class condition and ready for operation.

If the owners of the Everett were paid the same price that foreign vessels will carry our mail for, they would have received $7.10 for conveying this 16 pounds of letters and 136 pounds of parcel post. But, instead of the Government paying the owners $7.10 for this service, the owners of this vessel are receiving from the Government $14,915 for carrying a hatful of letters and a mailsackful of parcels.

REPUBLICANS RESPONSIBLE

The question immediately arises, "What did the Republicans do at that time to help stop such outrageous contracts?" Here is a case where we had an opportunity on an appropriation bill to reduce the appropriation to such an amount that it would have been impossible for Postmaster General Brown to approve 13 contemplated routes at an estimated cost of $6,600,000 a year for 10 years, or $66,000,000 in all.

It so happened that there was a roll call on this amendment, and I am inserting herewith the proceedings on the same day, which include the roll call in the House of Representatives on this question:

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers a motion to recommit. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Mr. PATMAN moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to report it back to the House forthwith, with the following amendment: On page 70, line 20, strike out the figures '$28,000,000', and insert in lieu thereof the figures '$21,400,000.'"

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit, submitted by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 13, noes 112.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently not a sufficient number. The Clerk will call the roll. As many as favor the motion to recommit will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 62, nays 178, not voting 187, as follows:

[Roll No. 4]

Yeas—62: Allgood, Almon, Arnold, Bell, Box, Brand of Georgia, Briggs, Browning, Byrns, Cannon, Cartwright, Collier, Cooper of Tennessee, Cross, Doxey, Drewry, Edwards, Eslick, Fulmer, Garner, Gasque, Glover, Hammer, Hare, Hastings, Hill of Alabama, Howard, Huddleston, Johnson of Oklahoma, Johnson of Texas, Jones of Texas, Kvale, Lampert, Lankford of Georgia, Larsen, Lee of Texas, Lozier, McCloskey, McKeown, McSwain, Milligan, Moore of Kentucky, Morehead, Nelson of Missouri, Parks, Patman, Patterson, Peavey, Quin, Ragon, Henry T. Rainey, Ramspeck, Rankin, Rayburn, Romjue, Sanders of Texas, Stevenson, Tarver, Warren, Wingo, and Wright.

Nays—178: Ackerman, Adkins, Allen, Andresen, Andrew, Arentz, Aswell, Ayres, Bacharach, Bacon, Baird, Barbour, Beedy, Beers, Black, Bloom, Bolton, Brigham, Britten, Brumm, Buckbee, Burtness, Campbell of Iowa, Campbell of Pennsylvania, Carter of Wyoming, Chalmers, Chindblom, Clague, Clancy, Cochran of Missouri, Cochran of Pennsylvania, Connery, Corning, Coyle, Craddock, Cramton, Crowther, Culkin, Cullen, Dallinger, Darrow, Denison, DeRouen, Douglass of Massachusetts, Dowell, Dunbar, Eaton of Colorado, Eaton of New Jersey, Elliott, Englebright, Esterly, Fitzgerald, Fitzpatrick, Free, Freeman, French, Garber of Oklahoma, Garber of Virginia, Glynn, Green, Greenwood, Guyer, Hall of Illinois, Hall of Indiana, Hall of North Dakota, Halsey, Hardy, Hawley, Hess, Hill of Washington, Hoch, Hoffman, Hogg, Holaday, Hooper, Hope, Morton D. Hull, Hull of Wisconsin, Igoe, Irwin, Jenkins, Johnson of Illinois, Johnson of Indiana, Johnston of Missouri, Jonas of North Carolina, Kading, Kearns, Kemp, Kendall of Pennsylvania, Ketcham, Kiess, Kopp, Kurtz, Lambertson, Langley, Lankford of Virginia, Leavitt, Letts, Ludlow, McCormack of Massachusetts, McDuffie, McLaughlin, McMillan, Maas, Manlove, Mapes, Mead, Michaelson, Michener, Miller, Montet, Moore of Ohio, Morgan, Mouser, Nelson of Wisconsin, Newhall, Niedringhaus, O'Connell of New York, O'Connell of Rhode Island, O'Connor of Louisiana, O'Connor of Oklahoma, Owen, Palmer, Pittenger, Pritchard, Frank M. Ramey, Ramseyer, Reece, Reed of New York, Robinson, Rogers, Rowbottom, Sandlin, Schafer of Wisconsin, Sears, Selvig, Shott of West Virginia, Shreve, Simmons, Sinclair, Sirovich, Sloan, Smith of Idaho, Snell, Snow, Sparks, Speaks, Spearing, Sproul of Illinois, Sproul of Kansas, Stafford, Stalker, Stobbs, Strong of Kansas, Strong of Pennsylvania, Swanson, Swick, Swing, Taber, Taylor of Tennessee, Temple, Thatcher, Thurston, Tilson, Vestal, Vincent of Michigan, Wainwright, Wason, Watres, Watson, Welch of California, Whittington, Wigglesworth, Williamson, Wilson, Wolverton of New Jersey, Wolverton of West Virginia, and Wood.

Not voting—187: Abernethy, Aldrich, Auf der Heide, Bachmann, Bankhead, Beck, Blackburn, Bland, Bohn, Bowman, Boylan, Brand of Ohio, Browne, Brunner, Buchanan, Burdick, Busby, Butler, Cable, Canfield, Carley, Carter of California, Celler, Chase, Christgau, Christopherson, Clark of Maryland, Clark of North Carolina, Clarke of New York, Cole, Collins, Colton, Connolly, Cooke, Cooper of Ohio, Cooper of Wisconsin, Cox, Crail, Crisp, Crosser, Curry, Davenport, Davis, Dempsey, De Priest, Dickinson, Dickstein, Dominick, Doughton, Douglas of Arizona, Doutrich, Doyle, Drane, Driver, Dyer, Ellis, Estep, Evans of California, Evans of Montana, Fenn, Fish, Fisher, Fort, Foss, Frear, Fuller, Gambrill, Garrett, Gavagan, Gibson, Gifford, Golder, Goldsborough, Goodwin, Graham, Gregory, Griffin, Hadley, Hale, Hall of Mississippi, Hancock, Hartley, Haugen, Hickey, Hopkins, Houston, Hudson, Hudspeth, Hughes, Hull of Tennessee, William E. Hull, James, Jeffers, Johnson of Nebraska, Johnson of South Dakota, Johnson of Washington, Kahn, Kelly, Kendall of Kentucky, Kerr, Kiefner, Kincheloe, Knutson, Korell, Kunz, LaGuardia, Lanham, Lea of California, Leech, Lehlbach, Lindsay, Linthicum, Luce, McClintic of Oklahoma, McClintock of Ohio, McCormick of Illinois, McFadden, McLeod, McReynolds, Magrady, Mansfield, Martin, Menges, Merritt, Montague, Mooney, Moore of Virginia, Murphy, Nelson of Maine, Nolan, Norton, O'Connor of New York, Oldfield, Oliver of Alabama, Oliver of New York, Palmisano, Parker, Perkins, Porter, Pou, Prall, Harcourt J. Pratt, Ruth Pratt, Purnell, Quayle, Ransley, Reid of Illinois, Rutherford, Sanders of New York, Schneider, Seger, Seiberling, Shaffer of Virginia, Short of Missouri, Simms, Smith of West Virginia, Somers of New York, Steagall, Stedman, Stone, Sullivan of New York, Sullivan of Pennsylvania, Summers of Washington, Sumners of Texas, Taylor of Colorado, Thompson, Timberlake, Tinkham, Treadway, Tucker, Turpin, Underhill, Underwood, Vinson of Georgia, Walker, Welsh of Pennsylvania, White, Whitehead, Whitley, Williams, Wolfenden, Woodruff, Woodrum, Wyant, Yates, Yon, and Zihlman.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. McClintic of Oklahoma (for) with Mr. Magrady (against).

REPUBLICANS OPPOSED AMENDMENT

It will be noticed that every Republican except Mr. PEAVEY, of Wisconsin, voted against this amendment. Mr. PEAVEY was known as a "progressive Republican." Our present Speaker, the Honorable HENRY T. RAINEY, voted for the amendment; so did our present majority leader, the Honorable JOSEPH W. BYRNS. It will also be noticed that the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, Mr. ARNOLD, the present chairman of this subcommittee, voted for the amendment.

Every Republican except Mr. PEAVEY, of Wisconsin—and the Republicans were greatly in the majority at that time—voted against the proposal to stop 13 contemplated ocean mail contracts which were later agreed upon by and between the steamship companies and Postmaster General Brown, and which has caused the inclusion in this bill of $6,600,000 to pay said steamship companies their subsidy for the next year. During the Seventy-first Congress, first session, there were 267 Republicans, 163 Democrats, and 1 Farmer-Laborite.

INFORMATION GIVEN HOUSE

The Republicans cannot claim that they did not know what kind of contracts they were. I told them the names of the companies and the amount of the subsidy that many of the companies would get. I showed where Postmaster General Brown if not stopped would let a contract to a steamship company that would cause this Government to pay $7,000 for every one dollar's worth of service rendered. I have not quoted all of my speech on that occasion.

I am sorry that it was impossible to obtain the support of the Members on the Republican side at a time when something could be done that would definitely stop a large number of ocean mail contracts such as they now complain about. The best time to stop such contracts is before they are let.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Is not the gentleman thankful for Republican constituencies which have sent to Congress men who now stand for the same thing which the gentleman claims he stood for 3 years ago?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes. Of course we had lots of Republicans here 4 years ago, but we did not hear of but one of them voting with us.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Let me ask the gentleman this question, if I may: Will the gentleman stand in the same place now that he did then?

Mr. PATMAN. I am against such contracts. I am not familiar with the one we have now, but I am against all those contracts.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Do I understand from the gentleman that he proposes to vote for this amendment?

Mr. PATMAN. I am not acquainted with the amendment. As I stated to the gentleman, I am against all these contracts and expect to vote accordingly.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the pending amendment is directed against the air mail contracts of companies carrying air mail to Central and South America. It applies with equal force, though, to all foreign air mail contracts, the other lines being New York to Montreal, Seattle to Victoria, and Bangor to Halifax. However, the principal item in this amendment has reference to the Air Mail Service to Central and South America.

When the original bill providing aid to foreign air mail lines was brought into this House, it was based upon a broad general policy that we must not allow the carrying of air mail or the establishment of airplane routes in the Caribbean region to get into the hands of Europeans; that these routes should be in our control and not under the control of either the Germans or the French. The Germans had already established a line in the Caribbean, and the French were contemplating one. Congress determined that the Panama Canal was of such importance to this country that air routes in the Caribbean should be under the control of this country, and the result was a deliberate policy entered into by the Congress. I may say as far as this particular phase of air mail contracts was concerned, there was no opposition from either side of the House. It was treated as a broad national policy and as having a great deal to do with our national defense.

As a result of this policy the Pan American Airways Co. was formed. I know nothing about the details of the company; I do not know anything about its personnel, but I do know they have established a most efficient air mail line from Florida through Central America to the Panama Canal on one side of the Caribbean, and through the island of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Santo Domingo, Haiti, and on to South America on the other side of the Caribbean. They circle the Caribbean and they circle South America, flying the Andes with remarkable efficiency. They have a record of delivering over 99 percent of the mail on time under trying circumstances. And in so doing they are the flying carriers of messages of friendship and good will between our country and Central and South America.

I know from the testimony of members of our Diplomatic Service stationed in Central American points, given before committees of Congress, that the establishment of these air mail routes has been of great benefit in bringing Central, South, and North America together in a better spirit of cooperation. I know whereof I speak, for I was a member of the subcommittee dealing with this matter when the question came up. I have seen letters written by hundreds of business concerns in every State of the Union stating that because of this service they were able to close contracts to sell American goods, whereas they could not have done otherwise. This Air Mail Service has brought Buenos Aires, for example, within 7 days of New York. It has saved merchants thousands and thousands of dollars in transshipment of funds. Instead of sending the funds by steamship, which would take 21 days, they now can cut the time down to 7 days through use of the air mail and save 14 days' cost of insurance. The Department of Commerce reports that—

> This service has reduced by about two thirds the time required for communication with the countries to the south of us, and has been of incalculable value in enabling our foreign traders to keep in close contact with Latin American markets under difficult and rapidly shifting conditions. It has been absolutely essential to them in meeting the competition of European companies, which, under heavy subsidies, have pushed their air lines across the Atlantic and are rapidly penetrating the countries of South America.

This Air Mail Service has been of the greatest benefit to the merchants of this country in their trade relations with Central and South America; it has been of the greatest benefit in the higher plane of diplomacy, friendship, and good will in bringing the countries of Central and South America closer to us and bringing us closer to them. The President of the United States now is engaged in conversation with Central and South American countries looking toward better trade relationships.

If we do anything to hurt this service at this time, we will be putting an obstacle in the path of the President in his efforts today to bring Central America, South America, and North America closer together. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the inland transportation of mail by aircraft, under contract as authorized by law, and for the incidental expenses thereof, including not to exceed $17,760 for supervisory officials and clerks at air mail transfer points, and not to exceed $34,967 for personal services in the District of Columbia and incidental and travel expenses, $14,000,000.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CHASE: Page 56, line 7, strike out "$14,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$6,500,000."

Mr. CHASE. Mr. Chairman, I shall not take the time of the House to discuss this amendment at any length. It is along the same line as the other two amendments. It merely cuts the subsidy amount from the appropriation and leaves the item at poundage rates.

In your party platform and by spokesmen over the radio you have declared to the American people that this subsidy money is misused. If you are correct, a few of us here will help you put a stop to this alleged misuse.

If you wish to vote the money, this is your administration, your Congress, and your bill.

If you think subsidies are wrong, here is your chance to register your opinion. If you think that they are right and Senator BLACK is mistaken, vote down this amendment and vote for the subsidies.

But having done so and thereby having put the stamp of your approval on the policy of subsidies and the actual practice of which Senator BLACK told his radio audience, do not go out on the stump and give us hell for permitting misuse of public money when you have yourselves voted to furnish the money for misuse.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I want the committee to know the destructive nature of this proposal.

The effect of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota is to strike out the appropriation for the domestic Air Mail Service, which was the same amount as that carried in the bill last year, and to substitute therefor $6,500,000. Exactly on what philosophy the proposed amount is fixed I cannot understand. The effect is the same as though the entire amount were eliminated.

Representatives of the Department stated, as shown by the hearings, that revenues derived from domestic Air Mail Service were $6,500,000. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of the House have made a thorough investigation of this matter and are convinced that on the present amount of mail, which is reduced on account of the depression, the revenues are approximately $9,000,000.

Now, providing only $6,500,000 for a year's service means absolute destruction of the air mail system. We have spent $73,000,000 over the entire life of the Air Mail Service, and never was there a better expenditure in the history of Congress. Five hundred millions of dollars of private money has been invested in aviation. Without the Air Mail Service there would be no private aviation industry whatever in this Nation. We have built up, besides, a reservoir of men and materials, a corps of trained pilots who may be used for national defense at any moment. We have established a service which is an astounding exhibition of what can be done by efficient organization aided by the helping hand of the Government.

No one opposed the original Watres amendment and the policy it embodied more vigorously than I did. With the present chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD], I undertook to prevent injurious changes in the settled policy in the Air Mail Service. We did change many features suggested in the original bill, and the troubles since that time have been due to violations of the spirit, at least, of the amendment as it was finally enacted.

I am sure the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the committee, will agree with me when I say that we are earnestly in favor of making the Air Mail Service self-sustaining. We can do it. It cannot be done, of course, by such action as this pending proposal, for that is destructive. It can be done by the passage of the legislation which has been unanimously approved by our committee. In that bill we go back to the original basis of the Air Mail Service, which was that without $1 of subsidy we could establish the finest air mail service of all countries in the world. That is what we can do now. We can do it by paying for the pounds of mail actually carried; and we have worked out a basis of 2 mills a pound-mile. If we could now establish a rate of 2 mills per pound-mile, we could compensate the larger companies for their service and not have a cent of subsidy. Two thirds of the entire Air Mail Service could be put on a self-supporting basis immediately at that rate of payment.

However, some of the companies that are not carrying a sufficient volume of mail would go out of business on that rate if enforced at once. We provide in the measure before the committee for the basic rate, and where there were certain lines that could not exist on this rate, for the next 3 years we allow them additional pay, not to exceed 25 cents per mile for the miles flown. At the end of 3 years this would be eliminated, and they would be paid on a flat per-pound per-mile basis. With increased mail volume the compensation will be adequate.

When we reach that point, we will have our Air Mail Service without one penny of subsidy. Every dollar will come out of the revenues received. We will keep the air mail maps intact, with the exception of a few illogical routes which now exist. There will be a chance for the establishment of new routes. We will have taken valuable action for the national defense of the country, and maintained America as first in commercial aviation among all the countries of the world. Let us be constructive, not destructive. [Applause.]

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I am somewhat in sympathy with the effort of those who would eliminate the subsidies contained in this and other sections of the bill, and, to indicate my attitude more definitely, let me say that, together with my colleague on the Post Office Committee who has just concluded a very illuminating and effective argument against the adoption of this amendment, I brought in a minority report against the adoption of the Watres Act. I urged its defeat on the floor of the House. I believe I was the means of taking that bill off the calendar and sending it back to the committee for further amendment, and as it was finally amended it was highly unsatisfactory.

All of the criticism that has grown up around our Air Mail Service resulted from maladministration of the Watres Act. To destroy subsidies when an appropriation bill is on the floor by amendments that may be worthily conceived but illogical, because they substitute no constructive method and destroy that which exists in its entirety, is the wrong method of procedure.

Our committee has investigated the Air Mail Service. We are receiving in the United States $20,000,000 worth of service, as contracted for by the former Postmaster General, for the $14,000,000 contained in this bill, to the credit of the present administration. We are getting exactly the same amount of service for approximately $6,000,000 less in expenditure.

The proper way to approach this subject, in my judgment, is to await the legislation which will emanate from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of this House and a similar committee in the Senate that is now doing what we have done, namely, investigating the entire subject of subsidies. Personally, I believe the expenditure of $14,000,000 for domestic air mail is a very worthy expenditure. We are receiving more for this small sum of money as a national defense medium than we are in the expenditure of twice that sum of money insofar as the Army and Navy activities are concerned. For $14,000,000 we are not only developing a revenue of approximately half that much for the Post Office Department but we are maintaining over 600 pilots, trained to the minute, ready to go to the defense of the Government within an hour's time. We are keeping over 700 ships of the latest model and type in the air, and we are developing the best commercial aviation system of all the nations in the world.

Today we are in serious competition with Germany and France in the South American and Central American field. Today, by reason of the support given the industry, our country's ships fly over the various countries of Central and South America and the islands of the Caribbean Sea. Shortly, we expect a trans-Atlantic route will be attempted by an American company, and we will have aviation rights in Europe. It is my judgment that this country ought to promote aviation and become the leader of the nations of the world, and at the same time, by a constructive method of legislation, wipe out these subsidies and put them all on a self-sustaining basis. This is the object of our committee; and I trust when our committee brings legislation before the House that we will have the support of those who are today suggesting amendments which, if adopted, would have a destructive effect upon the work which we contemplate doing.

Mr. CHASE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. CHASE. I appreciate the fact that the distinguished gentleman is an authority on this subject, and I respectfully inquire for my own information, whether or not the gentleman, in view of his statement, agrees with the charges made over the radio by the chairman of the Black investigation committee and believes them to be correct. Are those charges true, and is this money misused? Or are those charges false, and is this money being properly used?

Mr. MEAD. Unfortunately I did not hear the radio address, but I will say that the administration of the air mail law on the part of the former Postmaster General was deserving of criticism and even condemnation. In my judgment, the administration of the postal air mail laws by former Postmaster General Brown has brought the industry and the legislation into disrepute, but under the present administration we are getting more for our money, and I do not believe that there is any merited criticism that can be directed at the present Postmaster General. He is trying, and we are trying, and with the cooperation of the Department and of Congress we will straighten out the unfortunate situation.

Our legislative committee has no jurisdiction over the ocean mail contracts. This matter is considered by our Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. We have jurisdiction in the matter of air mail contracts, and we are very anxious to reduce the air mail subsidy as rapidly as possible and hope to place this service on a self-sustaining basis.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the pending amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Goss) there were—ayes 3, noes 29.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase, manufacture, and repair of mail bags and other mail containers and attachments, mail locks, keys, chains, tools, machinery, and material necessary for same, and for incidental expenses pertaining thereto; also material, machinery, and tools necessary for the manufacture and repair in the equipment shops at Washington, D.C., of such other equipment for the Postal Service as may be deemed expedient; for the expenses of maintenance and repair of the mail-bag equipment shops building and equipment, including fuel, light, power, and miscellaneous supplies and services; for compensation to labor employed in the equipment shops and in the operation, care, maintenance, and protection of the equipment shops building at Washington, D.C., $804,500, of which not to exceed $499,500 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia: Provided, That out of this appropriation the Postmaster General is authorized to use as much of the sum, not exceeding $15,000, as may be deemed necessary for the purchase of material and the manufacture in the equipment shops of such small quantities of distinctive equipments as may be required by other executive departments and for service in Alaska, Puerto Rico, Philippine Islands, Hawaii, or other island possessions.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LUDLOW: Page 59, line 8, before the word "For", insert "Equipment shops, Washington, D.C."; line 11, strike out the word "also"; lines 13 and 14, strike out the following: "in the equipment shops at Washington, D.C."; line 21, strike out the following: "at Washington, D.C."

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, from and in behalf of the Committee on Appropriations I offer this amendment, the purpose of which is to make clear the intent of Congress that the manufacturing activities authorized by this bill shall be confined to the District of Columbia. The amendment is offered in compliance with and to carry into effect the expressed intent of Members of the House that no part of the appropriations carried by this bill shall be used to finance the proposed Government furniture factory in the State of West Virginia.

While I honor and respect the proponents of that project for the high altruistic and humanitarian purpose that motivates them, I would be less than human if I did not hear the cries of distress coming from various parts of the country, including my own district, from those who will surely suffer if this West Virginia project is carried out. The baneful effects of this project would be national in scope, but I think I can best illustrate the evils that would follow by citing a concrete illustration that has come to my attention in my efforts to serve the city of Indianapolis in the Congress. Execution of the plan means the destruction of the Keyless Lock Co., one of the old-established manufacturing institutions of my home city. Other post-office furniture factories in Connecticut, New York, and other States also would be injuriously affected by this Government enterprise.

I would be a poor Representative if I did not fight for my home people who will lose their positions and their homes and who will be reduced from self-respecting independence to the miserable existence of charity—seeking mendicants—if this project goes into effect. But I am just as much interested in relieving distress wherever it exists. The mails have brought to me their plaintive appeals. Their cries have penetrated my heart, and, if I never do anything else, I will stand by these good citizens who face eviction from their jobs because of this paternalistic adventure, and will resist with all my power this destructive incursion of Government competition into the realm of private industry.

When Secretary Ickes allotted $525,000 of Public Works funds to establish a Government furniture factory in West Virginia he was actuated by a noble purpose, but I submit that he must not have taken into consideration the fact that nothing would be gained from a humanitarian standpoint by giving factory employment to unemployed coal miners in West Virginia if at the same time an equal number of heads of families are robbed of their employment and thrown on the charity lists elsewhere. Many of the men employed by the Keyless Lock Co. have done nothing else all their lives. Their fathers worked for the company before them. They have a specialized knowledge that is useless in any other occupation. To be thrown out of work now leaves them helpless. No wonder they are despondent.

The proposal to put the Government in competition with private business violates the fundamentals of American philosophy and sets a precedent that will hound and plague this country for years to come. I know that a vast majority, if not all, of the Members of the House do not want this thing done, and, in keeping with what I believe is a general feeling of the Membership of this body, I ask for the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss] yesterday raised a question as to whether or not these funds could be used for purposes other than in the plant in the District of Columbia. I told the gentleman at that time I was satisfied in my own mind they could not, but I would look into the matter a little further. In order to prevent any misunderstanding so far as the construction of the language of this paragraph is concerned, I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] clears it up entirely and therefore the committee has no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Goss: Page 60, line 6, after the period insert:

"Provided, further, That no part of any appropriation heretofore made shall be used for the construction of a factory or factories for the manufacture of lockboxes, postal equipment, and postal furniture."

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. ARNOLD. I reserve the point of order if the gentleman wishes it.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I admit frankly this amendment is subject to a point of order, but I call the Chairman's attention to the fact that under the P.W.A. fund there has been $525,000 allotted to build such a factory. The Committee has already accepted the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW], which will prevent any expense money being allocated to the factory. My amendment goes one step further and stops the construction of the factory.

There is no question but what the amendment is subject to a point of order, but I may say to the gentleman that if it is important to stop the maintenance and operating expenses of this very factory, and if the Committee is willing to do this, if the point of order is withdrawn against this amendment we will stop the construction of the factory, and I think this is most desirable at this time.

We all have in our districts plants making lockboxes and other mail equipment, and I am sure if the gentleman would withdraw his point of order the Committee would be pleased to pass on this question and agree to the amendment, just as they have agreed to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made a short while ago and to include therein certain statements I made in a speech in 1930, and to also include the roll call on the question then before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the transportation and delivery of equipment, materials, and supplies for the Post Office Department and Postal Service by freight, express, or motor transportation, and other incidental expenses, $344,100.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 61, line 22, after the period, insert "Provided, That no part of any appropriation contained under this title shall be used for the maintenance and operation of any shop for the production of postal equipment and supplies other than such as may be specifically provided in this title."

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is not subject to a point of order. It is plainly a limitation on this paragraph, which deals with the transportation and delivery of equipment, materials, and supplies for the Post Office Department and postal service by freight. In other words, I am joining with the gentleman from Indiana and the chairman of the subcommittee in trying to make the bill as tight as possible so that no part can be received of the equipment to be manufactured by the new factory about to be constructed by money from the P.W.A.

I ask the chairman of the subcommittee if he will not accept this amendment here, because this deals with the transportation of equipment. It can do no harm and it is tying it up tight.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I can see no use in the gentleman's amendment. If he wants to stop the building of the factory in West Virginia he ought to take the proper course and go to the proper source.

Mr. GOSS. I contemplate doing that but in the meantime I call attention to the fact that this paragraph deals with transportation of equipment and this can do no harm and it will actually prevent sending any of their goods here by transportation.

Mr. ARNOLD. If they do not manufacture the goods they cannot transport them.

Mr. GOSS. This paragraph deals with the transportation of equipment and material and supplies for the Postal Service anywhere in the United States. It does tie that up. If the gentleman does not want to accept it, all right. I say if you are going part way why not go all the way.

Mr. ARNOLD. I cannot accept the amendment. I see no useful purpose that it will serve.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Goss) there were 8 ayes and 37 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I do that for the reason that I wanted to offer an amendment to the provisions for salaries of clerks and employees and carriers in the Postal Department, which are to be found on pages 51 and 52, but I got into the Chamber too late, after the section has been passed.

In any event I have learned that the proposed amendment would be out of order on the bill. Nevertheless, I am rising to call to the attention of the House and the country the very desperate situation of the substitute carriers, clerks, and employees in the Postal Service.

My interest is stimulated in the subject by a pathetic letter I received yesterday from a constituent, who stated that at the end of the day on which he wrote he had only made 85 cents, and that his average wages as a substitute carrier are from five to six dollars per week.

This comes from a man in one of the busy post offices in the city of New York. It is not an isolated case. It is general. There is, perhaps, not a Member of the House from a large city in this country who has not been faced with the same situation and the same complaint. The position of these men is pathetic. It is shameful, in a country such as ours today, where we have even built up N.R.A. codes guaranteeing to the employees of private industrial concerns at least $15 a week, that the Government itself, which exacts so much benevolence from others, should skimp its own employees to a miserable five or six dollars a week.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The same situation exists in my city, St. Louis, although I think the average is a little above that; but I know it is a most disgraceful situation and a disgrace to the Government of the United States, requiring these men over this long period of years, 4, 5, or 6 years, to act as substitutes, and then providing for the payment of such small wages is an outrage. It should be corrected by legislation.

Mr. DONDERO. And did we not compel those people to yield 15 percent of that small wage under the Economy Act?

Mr. GRIFFIN. That is the disgrace of it. This miserable wage that these people get is still further reduced through the application of the Economy Act by 15 percent.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Is it not a fact that these men are discriminated against in the Public Works and C.W.A. and that they cannot get anything there because they are Government employees?

Mr. GRIFFIN. That is another thing. They are working for the Government ostensibly, and if they apply to the welfare agencies they are told that they are already employed by the Government.

Mr. MEAD. And it is also true of ex-service men who may be disabled drawing a pension of $75. Because he is a Federal employee he is automatically reduced to $6, and because he is a substitute he cannot earn over six or seven dollars a week. So there is a double penalty because a man is a Federal employee and an ex-service man.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Precisely.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRIFFIN. On page 70 of the hearings on the Post Office bill now before us you will find a list of 25 post offices in the United States where the situation of these substitute carriers, clerks, and employees is broken down. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] spoke of the situation in his city. In Kansas City they have 50 substitute clerks, and their average earnings for 3 months were $234. However, in Chicago, Ill., they have 423 substitutes, and their average earnings were only $65 for 3 months, or 13 weeks, at an average of $5 per week. You will note there is a great disparity in the treatment accorded to these employees in the different cities, which only emphasizes the evil. I want to pay my respects to my colleague, Mr. MCLEOD, for opening up a discussion of this subject, on page 54 of the hearings. He brought out the fact that these men are paid 65 cents an hour, subject to a deduction of 15 percent. Laboring employees get 55 cents an hour, also subject to the 15-percent reduction. That is clearly an outrage.

My idea of getting over the difficulty was by an amendment increasing the appropriation and providing the following limitation:

> Of which such amount shall be immediately available as is necessary to pay such substitutes and employees a minimum wage of $15 a week in conformity with the N.R.A. codes. It is further provided that in computing the time of such substitutes they shall be credited with not less than a half day's pay in any single day they are employed, and their compensation shall not be subject to any deduction under the Economy Act.

The purpose of that is clear. It is manifest that the Government has put itself in a peculiarly embarrassing situation when it requires industrial and commercial organizations to pay $15 a week and yet pays its own employees only $5 or $6 a week.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Yes.

Mr. MEAD. And in providing a minimum wage of $15 a week, the gentleman would not be giving the substitutes anything for nothing, because in a mobile force, such as the post office has—that is, ever-changing shifts over a 24-hour period—we require these substitutes to show up two and three and four times a day, to fill in if their services are necessary. They pay their street-car fare and devote their time and bring their lunches, and the reward in many cases is to be sent home without compensation. In private industry, as, for instance, in the railroads, they pay 4 hours' pay to any substitute who is called and sent home without being put to work.

Mr. GRIFFIN. That is a matter of obvious justice, because a man is working when he reports ready for work. These men go to the place where they are supposed to work, and they stay on, waiting to be called, and if they do not get a job all day long they get nothing. If they get 1 hour's work, they get 65 cents.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. And unless they do report they are eliminated from their civil-service standing, and they cannot get on the C.W.A. because they are Government employees.

Mr. GRIFFIN. That is another embarrassing hardship.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Does the gentleman not think it would be more just to give these Federal substitute employees a just rate rather than to pay these fabulous high salaries to these political satraps who are flooding Washington so that no one can find a decent apartment to live in?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Yes.

Mr. BEITER. Evidently these 20,000 substitutes are forgotten men.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Evidently so. I rose to call this situation to the attention of the House, and I trust my friend and colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD], Chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, will take it up in a legislative way.

Mr. MEAD. We will bring in a very modest and reasonable bill, and I know the gentleman will give it his cordial support.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I hope the gentleman will give them 4 hours' pay for every day they report. That will give them a minimum of $15 a week.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Operating supplies: For fuel, steam, gas, and electric current for lighting, heating, and power purposes, water, ice, lighting supplies, removal of ashes and rubbish, snow and ice, cutting grass and weeds, washing towels, telephone service for custodial forces, and for miscellaneous services and supplies, tools and appliances, for the operation and maintenance of completed and occupied public buildings and grounds, including mechanical and electrical equipment, but not the repair thereof, under the administration of the Post Office Department, including the Washington Post Office and the Customhouse Building in the District of Columbia, and for the transportation of articles and supplies authorized herein, $4,150,000: Provided, That the foregoing appropriation shall not be available for personal services except for work done by contract, or for temporary job labor under exigency not exceeding at one time the sum of $100 at any one building: Provided further, That the Postmaster General is authorized to contract for telephone service in public buildings under his administration by means of telephone switchboards or equivalent telephone-switching equipment jointly serving in each case two or more governmental activities, where he determines that joint service is economical and in the interest of the Government, and to secure reimbursement for the cost of such joint service from available appropriations for telephone expenses of the bureaus and offices receiving the same.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman a question. For many years the custodial force in the Federal buildings throughout the Nation has been under civil service. In order to obtain a position in the custodial force it has been necessary to take a civil-service examination and be selected from the civil-service register. I understand that since the custodial force has been transferred from the Treasury Department to the office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, they have been taken out of civil service. The employees who have been selected heretofore on a civil-service test have been justified in the belief that their employment was for life or during good behavior or until retirement. I should like to know if it is the purpose of the administration to throw those jobs that have heretofore been under civil service into the hopper of political patronage in the ordinary acceptation of that term? To do this would not only be an injustice to the individual affected but would also be a calamity to this service.

Mr. ARNOLD. Let me say that their anxiety is wholly unfounded. When this custodial force was transferred from the Treasury Department to the Post Office Department, for the maintenance of the post-office buildings, they still remained under civil service.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I am very much gratified to have that assurance.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention, on page 42 of the report, to the specific and indefinite permanent appropriations, which in this bill amount to $1,363,494,072. I notice that under our sinking fund the amount increased this year over last year by $86,000,000 under the Treasury Department. On the interest on the public debt it has increased $99,349,000. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if he knows whether this increase in the interest, of about $100,000,000 per year, which will go on forever unless these permanent laws are repealed, and the increase of $86,000,000 for the sinking fund are all the increases for sinking fund and interest for this recovery program?

Mr. ARNOLD. Of course, the increase in the sinking fund and the increase in the interest on the public debt is due to the new securities that the Government has put out in refinancing. I cannot tell the gentleman when it will end. It depends altogether upon the necessities of the Government in refunding these obligations and in taking care of new obligations that must be issued to carry on the recovery program.

Mr. GOSS. Has the gentleman any information as to how much of the whole program this covers? Perhaps it covers it all. I do not know. Has the gentleman any information on that subject?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not have any information on that, but the gentleman can see the report that comes from the Treasury every week. I think there is one on the 15th of every month that is very exhaustive and gives a list and the character and amount of each and every one of the obligations of the Government.

Mr. GOSS. I have seen that report, and I read it occasionally, but here is an annual appropriation that will go on under permanent law forever until it is repealed, or being of an indefinite nature, may increase or decrease. Now, I understand that the Bureau of the Budget for 1935 estimates that it is only necessary to increase it by $86,000,000 for the sinking fund and $100,000,000 for interest. If that is an estimate from the Budget, I am wondering if we can accurately take that to be the figure on the increased cost of this new program, or whether it is just a part of it. The reports to which the gentleman referred a moment ago do not indicate to me the exact position on this question of sinking fund and public debt, inasmuch as we have these permanent appropriations. Shall we add this amount to the amount that comes up in those reports, or should part of it be deducted? How do we get at the problem?

Mr. ARNOLD. Of course, the proportionate increase in the amount of interest on the public debt compared to the increase in the sinking fund is due to the fact that in short-term financing there is no sinking fund required, and there has been a great amount of short-term financing.

Mr. GOSS. We refund those all the time. Is that not the reason?

Mr. ARNOLD. We refund those all the time, and no sinking fund is required. The sinking-fund obligation applies only to long-term financing, and is 2½ percent each year.

Mr. GOSS. So that really the $86,000,000 represents the permanent law of 2½-percent sinking fund?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes. Of course, that will be carried until the obligations mature, naturally.

Mr. GOSS. Of course, the country probably does know, but we are increasing and have increased in this bill our interest charge by $100,000,000. Besides the regular amount carried in the annual supply bill of $820,000,000, we must really add the permanent appropriation of $1,363,000,000, so that this bill, with the permanent indefinite and specific appropriations would really carry something over $2,000,000,000, would it not?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss] has expired.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes until I get an answer to my question.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ARNOLD. I did not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. GOSS. The permanent appropriations amount to $1,363,000,000 as far as this bill is concerned. That is permanent law, to which should really be added the $820,000,000, which includes $265,000,000 for special items in the Fourth Deficiency Act; so that we have got over $2,000,000,000 that we are actually appropriating, whether it be in the annual supply bill or in the permanent appropriation; is that not correct?

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, I do not know about the amount. I presume the gentleman's figures are correct. He has evidently figured it, but none of the permanent indefinite appropriations appear in the annual supply bill.

Mr. GOSS. That is just my point. None of them appear, so that when we get these bills we are apt to figure we are spending $820,000,000 a year in the Treasury and Post Office Departments, and instead of that we are spending a little over $2,000,000,000. I want to say again that we have a committee which I understand will probably come to hearings before long on these permanent appropriations, and all of these subjects can be taken up at that time. I notice an item of "obligations retired from cash repayments of principal by foreign governments." On that item we are reducing our estimate from the Budget by $90,000,000.

Mr. GOSS. I assume, therefore, that we are expecting to lose some $90,000,000 owed us by foreign governments this coming year; and I direct attention to page 42 of the report.

Mr. ARNOLD. The gentleman does not mean to say that we are going to lose it; he means to say we are not going to get it.

Mr. GOSS. Well, after all, not getting it and losing it are the same. It appears, therefore, from the appropriation provided for in this bill that the amounts due to but not expected to be received by this Government from foreign governments exceed the interest item carried in this bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. This title may be cited as the "Post Office Department Appropriation Act, 1935."

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McLEOD: Page 66, after line 17, insert a new section, as follows:

"No part of the appropriation contained in this act shall be used for any purpose other than that for which appropriated."

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve his point of order that I may explain the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, if the chairman of this subcommittee would indicate his willingness or the willingness of the subcommittee to accept this amendment, and if the majority party will support it, they will give the people of the country an opportunity of knowing where their money is being spent. Over $2,200,000,000 is carried in this bill. As the law now stands portions of this money can be used for purposes other than those for which appropriated and the people of the country will have no possible way of knowing at this time where it is to go.

The act of March 31, 1933, permits administrative officers to use unexpended moneys heretofore appropriated for any purposes the administration sees fit.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is strictly a limitation on expenditures and is not subject to a point of order.

Before the gentleman from Illinois presses his point of order, which I assume he is about to make, I would urge him to permit the amendment to come to a vote and to support it in order that the majority party may assure the country it will attempt to carry on in a fair way not only this appropriation but all the appropriations to be provided before the present session adjourns, appropriations which will amount to many billions of dollars.

My amendment is offered for the sole purpose of letting the country know where and how its money is going to be spent.

As I say, I do not believe a point of order will lie against the amendment; and I ask the gentleman what is his objection to letting this matter go to a vote?

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, since the gentleman has made his explanation, and, on reflection, I am inclined to think his amendment is simply a limitation and not subject to a point of order.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. McLEOD. Will the gentleman accept the amendment as a committee amendment?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; I could not do that.

Mr. McLEOD. In the event this amendment is voted down by the majority party in the House, will the gentleman, as chairman of the subcommittee, offer an amendment to strike $26,400,000 from this bill, which represents the 12 percent which may be assigned for any purpose whatsoever without the knowledge of the people of the country as to where it is to go and what it is to be used for?

Mr. ARNOLD. No; the gentleman from Illinois could not agree to that.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan is nothing more than declaratory of existing law. The purpose of the gentleman from Michigan seems to be to make sure that the amounts appropriated for specific items shall be used for those items and no other purpose.

Permit me to call the attention of the Chair to the provisions of existing law. Title XXXI, section 628, contains this language with reference to appropriations:

> Except as otherwise provided by law sums appropriated for the various branches of expenditures in the public service shall be applied solely to the objects for which they are respectively made and for no others.

This is existing law, which fully covers the object sought by the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan; so it is useless to adopt that amendment.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. I yield.

Mr. McLEOD. It is a fact, of course, that should the House adopt the pending amendment, money appropriated in this bill could not be assigned for any purposes not provided for in this bill.

One of the reasons that prompted me to offer the amendment is that where, in certain sections of the country, appropriations were made for public buildings, plans were drawn, even the land was condemned, yet the money was assigned to other departments and until another appropriation is made for the purpose those buildings cannot be constructed, which means two appropriations for the same project. Now, that is contrary to the policy adopted at the time bills authorizing those public buildings were passed.

Mr. ARNOLD. The gentleman knows, does he not, that those transfers were made in accordance with legislation which was enacted at that time.

Mr. McLEOD. That is correct; but it seems hardly fair that 12 percent of these appropriations, as provided in the economy bill, may be used for purposes other than those specified in the bill making the appropriations.

Mr. ARNOLD. It is advisable to have some leeway there; at least, to the extent of 12 percent.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in favor of the amendment.

It is true that with the language read by the gentleman from Illinois, if there were no subsequent legislation like the economy bill and no authority for transfers, it would not be necessary to have the proviso offered as an amendment by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLEOD].

If we are ever going to keep the executive departments within their appropriations as authorized by the House when we make the appropriations, we must have some such language as this in the bill. I hope this amendment will be adopted and that the appropriations will be earmarked so they will have to be spent for the purposes for which appropriated or not spent at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McLEOD) there were—ayes 22, noes 53.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I find some things have been passed over which should be corrected.

For instance, there is the Bureau of Industrial Alcohol. The scope of activity has been broadened by some new acts coming in which their appropriation will cover. There is a beer bill and a Liquor Tax Act of 1934.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to that paragraph for the purpose of offering an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. GOSS. Reserving the right to object, may we have the amendment reported, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Committee amendment: Page 13, line 24, before the word "including", insert "and the provisions of the act of March 22, 1933 (48 Stat. 16), as amended, and the 'Liquor Taxing Act of 1934', approved January 11, 1934."

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Does this amendment change the funds that are available?

Mr. ARNOLD. Not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, there is an error on page 18 of the bill which we have discovered. The Coast Guard came before our subcommittee and showed where 30 additional officers were provided for. We were going on the assumption that funds had been carried in the bill for those 30 additional officers. Upon investigation, when they called our attention to the matter, we found that there was not any money carried in the bill for those 30 officers. That they would not be commissioned until the last 2 weeks of the fiscal year 1935. Whatever expense there may be at that time for these officers will be absorbed out of the appropriation. The amount your committee struck from the Budget estimate was $96,951 and we find that is necessary for the restoration of the 5-percent pay increase. If this is omitted the item will not carry enough money to restore to these people their 5 percent pay increase.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. GOSS. Are these 30 officers the cadets graduating from the Coast Guard Academy at New London, Conn.?

Mr. ARNOLD. Out of the class of 1935?

Mr. GOSS. That is what I mean.

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. The 30 are the graduates from the 1935 class of the Coast Guard School at New London, Conn.?

Mr. ARNOLD. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 18, line 18, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Committee amendment: Page 18, line 18, strike out the sum $14,127,657 and insert in lieu thereof the sum $14,224,608.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FULLER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H.R. 7295, the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ARNOLD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct the totals in the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

UNITED STATES ROANOKE COLONY COMMISSION

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a concurrent resolution (H.Con.Res. 27) and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 27

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the House concurrent resolution of the Seventy-second Congress establishing the United States Roanoke Colony Commission is continued in full force and effect during the Seventy-third Congress, and, as continued, section 2 of such resolution is amended by striking out "1934" and inserting in lieu thereof "1937."

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand the situation, there was no appropriation by Congress for this Commission?

Mr. WARREN. Five hundred dollars was appropriated, of which only $65 has been expended. It is the Commission of which Senator ROBINSON of Arkansas is chairman. The resolution simply extends the life of the Commission 3 years.

Mr. SNELL. I see no objection to the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. WARREN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including certain remarks that my colleague the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAMNECK] intended to express upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following remarks that my colleague the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAMNECK] intended to express upon this bill:

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, I wish to address myself to the provisions of the pending bill which carry appropriations for our Air Mail Service. Since the policy of the Government with respect to subsidies for this service has become a controversial one, I believe many pertinent and relevent facts have been lost sight of. I hope I may have the attention of the Membership present, because I believe I can relieve your mind on many questions that have been raised about our subsidy policy.

At the outset, let me emphasize that the basic principle of the air mail subsidy was to build up and keep alive the American aviation manufacturing industry. Behind this was another important purpose—that of keeping a trained corps of pilots and technicians in reserve at all times in case of national emergency. The cost to the Government of the transportation of mail by air was more or less an incidental proposition. The primary purpose was to insure and guard against this country's having to start from scratch again, as far as aviation resources are concerned, in the event of a national emergency.

I do not presume to make a defense of any contracts that have been let by the Post Office Department for air mail service under authority granted by Congress. However, I believe that in granting contracts for carrying air mail, the Post Office Department was required to weigh the financial responsibility of a bidder on a contract just as much as it was required to consider the price submitted by the bidder as against the price contained in other bids. There is no question that the air mail carried today could be carried at a cheaper cost to the Government. But to do so would defeat the real purpose of our subsidy policy. You would find smaller planes used. You would find the factor of safety decreased. You would find the incentive to develop new and larger and faster planes and other equipment to promote safety of air travel practically diminished. You would get the mail carried for less cost, and that is all you would get.

Looking at our subsidy policy, strictly from the standpoint of developing the aviation industry, I believe it can be said without contradiction that amazing development has taken place since 1921. The record showing the reduction in time for delivery of air mail has decreased every year. This reduction has been accomplished by the manufacturing industry, in cooperation with the air mail contractors, in the production of faster and safer planes. Without the air mail subsidy where would the manufacturing industry find steady customers to purchase new and better commercial equipment each year? Without the air mail subsidy it would have been impossible to reduce the time for delivery of mail from coast to coast from 60 hours in 1921 to 30 hours and 45 minutes in 1926 to 18 hours and 30 minutes in 1934. These figures, I believe, show an almost unbelievable progress for the commercial industry. It should also be remembered that in 1921, when it took 60 hours for the mail to be flown across the country, the planes were single-motored planes with no provision for passengers, while in 1934, with 18 hours and 30 minutes of time consumed, the planes carry upwards of 10 passengers in addition to mail and express.

We all know that attempts to imitate or copy anything are a distinct tribute to the thing to be copied or imitated. I believe that one of the finest tributes ever paid our Air Mail Service is contained in a dispatch from London, appearing in the Washington Herald, January 23, 1934. The dispatch is as follows:

BRITAIN PLANS AIR MAIL LINES ON UNITED STATES SCALE

"LONDON, January 22.—British cabinet members today are considering a project for wide-spread development of all forms of British commercial aviation.

"This was revealed by the aeronautical correspondent of the London Morning Post, who stated a cabinet committee is investigating possibilities of air-transport expansion on a large scale.

SUBSIDY SYSTEMS

"According to the Morning Post, the project is aimed at development of an air mail service comparable to that in the United States. The newspaper said:

"'A great national air development plan embracing every phase of commercial air transport is under consideration by a cabinet committee.

"'Faster mails and modified subsidy systems and England-Canada and England-Australia routes are among the subjects being examined.

"'An attempt will be made to start a period of intensive progress toward Empire air communications and an air mail system approaching in scale that in the United States.

"'The subsidy agreement with the Imperial Airways ends 5 years hence. In order to insure that development on Empire lines is continued, various suggestions have been made, among them that Government assistance should take the form of an air mail agreement for carriage of first-class matter.

FOR OCEAN SERVICE

"'It is felt in air circles that there is need of Government assistance for an Atlantic air service. An agreement has been entered into between Imperial Airways and Pan American Airways as to establishment of this line, but the British company is hampered in preparation of suitable aircraft by uncertainty regarding the attitude of the British Government in the future.'"

In our Air Mail Service today we find 600 planes operating in the United States and in the neighboring Central and South American countries—1 air liner for every 9 pullman cars. How many of us realize the extent that commercial aviation has reduced travel time between various large cities in this country? Today Chicago is but 5 hours from New York; St. Louis is but 9 hours from New York; Washington is 6 hours from Chicago; Atlanta is 6 hours from Washington; Cleveland is 11 hours from Fort Worth; Los Angeles is less than 6 hours from Salt Lake City; the Canal Zone is 3 days from New York; Puerto Rico is 2 days from New York; Mexico City is 2 days from New York; Lima, Peru, is 4 days from New York; Santiago, Chile, is 6 days from New York; and Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, and Buenos Aires, Argentina, are 7 days from New York.

Here is a very interesting point about our Mail Service. A business man can drop two letters in the mail chute of a New York skyscraper at the close of a business day, one addressed to a person in New York City, the other air mailed to a person in Omaha, Nebr. Both letters will be delivered at the same time.

I hope Members will take the time to read the hearings on this bill covering our foreign Air Mail Service, which links our industrial and commercial centers to 104 cities in 32 countries to the south of us. The hearings contain valuable information showing the importance of this foreign system from trade and social standpoints. Information supplied the committee shows that during the period of large decreases in the ordinary mails to Latin America, the air mails have showed an actual and material increase and the utility of these lines by commercial travelers has increased tremendously. In 3 years express shipments over the air mail lines to Latin America have increased nearly 600,000 pounds.

I would advise Members to also examine Appropriations Committee hearings to see the commercial aviation activity of European countries in South America. These countries are aware of the fact that Latin America holds huge trade possibilities, and they are leaving no stone unturned to obtain all of the business they can.

Closer contacts and communication mean better trade and social relations, and our air lines in Latin America have more than held their own against our European competitors in this respect.

As I stated earlier, I am making no defense of the awarding of any air mail contract. These awards are being inquired into in another quarter. Should any fraud or corruption be unearthed, there should be vigorous prosecution. However, my main purpose in making these few remarks today is to bring out the fact that real progress has been made by our commercial aviation industry through these subsidies. Our commercial aviation system is the greatest in the world today, and we should always regard it in the light of tomorrow's emergency.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H.R. 6670. An act to provide for the establishment of a corporation to aid in the refinancing of farm debts, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 32 minutes p.m.) the House, in accordance with its previous order, adjourned to meet on Monday, January 29, 1934, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

309. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting for the consideration of Congress supplemental estimates of appropriations for the District of Columbia for the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, District of Columbia, fiscal years 1934 and 1935, $75,000, and office of the corporation counsel, District of Columbia, fiscal years 1934 and 1935, $12,793, for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the act entitled "An act to control the manufacture, transportation, possession, and sale of alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia", approved January 24, 1934 (H.Doc. No. 226); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

310. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the War Finance Corporation (in liquidation), covering the period from January 1, 1933, to December 31, 1933 (H.Doc. No. 227); to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

311. A letter from the vice chairman of the national legislative committee of the American Legion, transmitting the financial statement of the American Legion for the period ending December 31, 1933; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

312. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting draft of a bill to repeal certain provisions of the Naval Appropriation Act of March 2, 1907, as amended by the Naval Appropriation Acts of March 3, 1909, and August 29, 1916, relating to statutory limit for repairs or changes on naval vessels; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

313. A letter from the president of the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission, transmitting the fifth annual report of the Commission (H.Doc. No. 228); to the Committee on the Library and ordered to be printed.

314. A letter from the Assistant Deputy Administrator of the National Recovery Administration, transmitting resolutions of Local Unions Nos. 6531, 5493, and 5147, United Mine Workers of America, urging that a tax be placed on natural gas and oil; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. BLAND: Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries. H.R. 7205. A bill to provide for the care and transportation of seamen from shipwrecked fishing and whaling vessels; without amendment (Rept. No. 350). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. McMILLAN: A bill (H.R. 7391) to amend the Air Mail Act of February 2, 1925, as amended, for the purpose of further encouraging commercial aviation; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota: A bill (H.R. 7392) to authorize the Post Office Department to hold railroad companies responsible in damages for the loss, rifling, damage, wrong delivery, depredation upon, or other mistreatment of mail matter due to fault or negligence of the railroad company or an agent or employee thereof; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7393) to extend the tariff to certain oil-bearing seeds and nuts not included in the Tariff Act of 1930; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. STALKER: A bill (H.R. 7394) to provide for the acquisition, improvement, equipment, management, operation, maintenance, and disposition of a civil air field and any appurtenances, inclusive of repairs, lighting, and communication systems, and all structures of any kind deemed necessary and useful in connection therewith; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SWEENEY: A bill (H.R. 7395) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws, and to punish the crime of lynching; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KOPPLEMANN: A bill (H.R. 7396) to amend section 284 (e) of the Revenue Act of 1926; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. McCLINTIC: A bill (H.R. 7397) to provide for the payment of adjusted-service certificates to enable veterans to own their homes clear of indebtedness; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HAINES: A bill (H.R. 7398) reducing the rates of taxation on tobacco products; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GRISWOLD: A bill (H.R. 7399) to limit the car length of trains which may be operated upon railroads by common carriers engaged in interstate foreign commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HARLAN: A bill (H.R. 7400) to repeal, as obsolete, section 1132 of the Revised Statues, in part, as amended, and to improve the United States Code; to the Committee on Revision of the Laws.

By Mr. WITHROW: A bill (H.R. 7401) to limit the car length of trains which may be operated upon railroads by common carriers engaged in interstate and foreign commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing Congress to amend the income tax law providing for a deduction of State income tax paid from Federal income tax; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing Congress to confine all contracts to be let for material and work to be used on or in connection with Public Works Administration projects to American firms and corporations; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing Congress to take certain action for the relief and rehabilitation of the dairy industry; to the Committee on Agriculture.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BECK: A bill (H.R. 7402) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, consider, and render judgment on the claims of George A. Corden and Anderson T. Herd against the United States in respect of certain ships taken during the World War by the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CONNOLLY: A bill (H.R. 7403) granting a pension to Paul Matthew Schell; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CRAVENS: A bill (H.R. 7404) granting a pension to Theta B. Spring; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FULMER: A bill (H.R. 7405) granting a pension to Maggie Cooper; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KOPPLEMANN: A bill (H.R. 7406) for the relief of John J. Moran; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. LEWIS of Colorado: A bill (H.R. 7407) granting a pension to Lillian S. Budd; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MEEKS: A bill (H.R. 7408) granting a pension to Alice Payton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REECE: A bill (H.R. 7409) granting a pension to Josie Bradley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7410) granting a pension to Verna Maddux Hyder; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7411) for the relief of Drew N. Keever; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

1842. By Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts: Petition signed by Oliver W. Fiske, of Beverly, Mass., and approximately 3,000 other residents of the Sixth Congressional District of Massachusetts, urging that Congress act to safeguard the inherent rights of the American people in relation to the radio; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1843. By Mr. CADY: Petition of certain residents of the Sixth Congressional District of Michigan, protesting against alleged censorship of radio broadcasts; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1844. By Mr. DARROW: Petition of about 7,000 residents of the Seventh Congressional District of Pennsylvania, relative to the regulation of radio broadcasting; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1845. By Mr. DEROUEN: Petition of citizens of the United States residing in the Seventh Congressional District of the State of Louisiana, capable of determining for themselves what they wish to hear broadcast by radio, without censorship by the clergy or anyone else, hereby protest to the Congress against certain wrongful interference with their rights; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1846. By Mr. GOODWIN: Petition of Mrs. H. B. Ambler, Chatham, N.Y., protesting against the elimination of section 114b (2) and (4), as recommended by the Treasury Department in connection with the percentage depletion allowance in the Federal Revenue Act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1847. By Mr. GRAY: Petition signed by 5,523 residents of the Tenth Congressional District of Indiana, urging that a heavy penalty should be laid against all persons or corporations that attempt by coercion or other wrongful methods to prevent the broadcasting of programs over the radio that are of public interest, convenience, and necessity; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1848. By Mr. HAINES: Petition signed by Clayton Hess and about 3,826 other citizens of the Twenty-second District of Pennsylvania, protesting against radio discrimination; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1849. By Mr. HIGGINS: Petition of M. Tisner and 2,800 other citizens of the Second Congressional District of Connecticut, protesting against the control and censorship of radiobroadcasting by the Columbia and National Broadcasting Cos.; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1850. By Mr. HOPE: Petition of citizens of the Seventh Congressional District, Kansas, asking Congress to act at once to safeguard the inherent rights of the American people relative to the radio; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1851. By Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota: Resolution by the Stillwater Association, Stillwater, Minn., urging the early ratification of the St. Lawrence waterway, and the completion of the 9-foot channel of the Mississippi River; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1852. By Mr. RUDD: Petition of N. D. Q. Specialty Corporation, Brooklyn, N.Y., favoring the repeal of the excise tax on candy; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1853. By Mr. LINDSAY: Petition of R. M. Haan Candy Co., Inc., New York City, opposing excise tax on candy; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1854. Also, petitions of James F. Walsh, John A. O'Gorman, John J. Clainey, Ernst Schwarz, Lena C. Greene, and Carl Hansen, all of Brooklyn, N.Y., concerning the monetary program before Congress; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

1855. Also, petition of J. A. Melnick Co., Brooklyn, N.Y., urging support of House bill 6460, introduced by Congressman DUFFY, of Ohio; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

1856. Also, petition of American Coalition of Patriotic, Civic, and Fraternal Societies, Washington, D.C., opposing the passage of House bill 3522; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

1857. By Mr. PARKS: Petition of numerous citizens of the Seventh Congressional District of Arkansas; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1858. By Mr. RANSLEY: Petition of residents of the First Congressional District of Pennsylvania, requesting Congress to act at once to safeguard the inherent rights of the American people relative to the radio; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1859. By Mr. RUDD: Petition of R. M. Haan Candy Co., Inc., New York City, favoring the repeal of the excise tax on candy; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1860. Also, petition of J. A. Melnick Co., Brooklyn, N.Y., favoring the passage of House bill 6460, amending the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

1861. Also, petition of Mason, Au & Magenheimer Confectionery Manufacturing Co., Brooklyn, N.Y., favoring the repeal of the excise tax on candy; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1862. Also, petition of American coalition of patriotic, civic, and fraternal societies, Washington, D.C., opposing the passage of House bill 3522; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

1863. By Mr. WHITLEY: Petition of residents of the Thirty-eighth Congressional District of the State of New York, urging that Congress take action to safeguard the inherent rights of the American people in the matter of radiobroadcasting; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1864. By Mr. WOLFENDEN: Petition of certain citizens of the Eighth District of Pennsylvania, protesting against censorship of radiobroadcasting; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1865. By Mr. WITHROW: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing the Congress of the United States to take certain action for the relief and rehabilitation of the dairy industry; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1866. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Polish Centrale of St. Paul, Minn., urging the support of President Roosevelt's monetary policy; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

1867. Also, petition submitted by Congressman J. LEROY ADAIR in behalf of the residents of the Fifteenth Congressional District of Illinois, protesting against the alleged discriminations in the matter of radio control; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1868. Also, petition of Oliver Cox and numerous citizens of the Twentieth Congressional District of the State of Illinois, regarding the unfair and unethical practices of certain major broadcasting interests; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1869. Also, petition of the Willing Workers Sunday School class of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Waverly, Ill., regarding maintenance of peace; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1870. Also, petition of Henry W. Ronel, regarding the continuation of the Civil Works Administration painting project; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE

SATURDAY, JANUARY 27, 1934

(Legislative day of Tuesday, Jan. 23, 1934)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a.m., on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On motion of Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal for the calendar days of Thursday, January 25, and Friday, January 26, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

UNITED STATES MONETARY SYSTEM—AMENDMENT

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, yesterday morning I sent to the desk an amendment which I intend to offer after action on the Wheeler amendment. By oversight there was left out of it a sentence and a paragraph. I refer to the amendment as printed on page 1393 of the RECORD of January 26, so that it may be found by those who wish to read it. I will send to the desk a rewritten amendment for the purpose of the RECORD. After the words "silver certificates", in the third paragraph, I want to insert the words "and to coin standard silver dollars or subsidiary currency for the redemption of such silver certificates."

Then before the beginning of the last paragraph, before the words "Secretary of the Treasury", I wish to insert the following:

> The President is authorized, in addition to other powers, to maintain the parity of the standard silver dollar with the gold dollar by reducing the weight of the standard silver dollar in the same percentage that he reduces the weight of the gold dollar. The weight of the silver dollar shall not be fixed in any event at more than 60 percent of its present weight.
>
> The President is further authorized to reduce and fix the weight of subsidiary coins so as to aid and maintain the parity of such coins with the standard silver dollar and the gold dollar.

I will substitute for the amendment I presented yesterday the rewritten one with these changes. I am only presenting it to be offered after action on the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I understand that the amendment is not printed in its revised form?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; it was printed in the form in which it was presented yesterday.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I suggest that it be sent down and printed as quickly as practicable?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will ask that that be done; and I hope that it may be printed before we conclude the consideration of the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and lie on the table, and will be sent to the Printing Office as quickly as possible for printing.

The amendment entire intended to be proposed by Mr. PITTMAN to House bill 6976 is as follows:

> At the proper place in the bill to insert the following:
>
> "That subdivision (2) of subsection (b) of section 43, title III, of an act entitled 'An act to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, to raise revenue for extraordinary expenses incurred by reason of such emergency, to provide emergency relief with respect to agricultural indebtedness, to provide for the orderly liquidation of joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes', approved May 12, 1933, be amended as follows:
>
> "By adding at the end of said subdivision (2) the following:
>
> "'The President, in addition to the authority to provide for the unlimited coinage of such gold and silver at the ratio so fixed under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, is further authorized to cause to be issued and delivered to the tenderer of silver for coinage, silver certificates in lieu of the standard silver dollars to which the tenderer would be entitled and in an amount in dollars equal to the number of coined standard silver dollars that the tenderer of such silver for coinage would receive in standard silver dollars.
>
> "'The President is further authorized to issue silver certificates in such denominations as he may prescribe against any silver bullion, silver, or standard silver dollars in the Treasury not then held for redemption of any outstanding silver certificates, and to coin standard silver dollars or subsidiary currency for the redemption of such silver certificates. The President may issue and deliver silver certificates in exchange for any standard silver dollars surrendered and delivered to the Treasury in exchange for silver certificates.
>
> "'The President is authorized, in his discretion, to prescribe different terms and conditions and to make higher charges, or to collect larger seigniorage, for the coinage of foreign silver, or silver not produced in the United States or its dependencies. The silver certificates herein referred to shall be issued, delivered, and circulated substantially in conformity with the law now governing existing silver certificates, except as may herein be expressly provided to the contrary, and shall have and possess all of the privileges and the legal tender characteristics of existing silver certificates now in the Treasury of the United States, or in circulation.
>
> "'The President is authorized, in addition to other powers, to maintain the parity of the standard silver dollar with the gold dollar by reducing the weight of the standard silver dollar in the same percentage that he reduces the weight of the gold dollar. The weight of the silver dollar shall not be fixed in any event at more than 60 percent of its present weight.
>
> "'The President is further authorized to reduce and fix the weight of subsidiary coins so as to aid and maintain the parity of such coins with the standard silver dollar and with the gold dollar.
>
> "'The Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, may make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of said subdivision (2), subsection (b), of section 43, title III.'"

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Representative Martin L. Sweeney's Roosevelt League for the Advancement of Social Justice, Cleveland, Ohio, favoring the passage of the so-called "Dunn bill", being House bill 5694, to create a bureau for the blind in the Post Office Department with power to issue licenses to persons without sight to operate stands in Federal buildings, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from Mr. and Mrs. Frank Trochowski, of Chicago, Ill., praying for the passage of legislation restoring the price level of silver, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate petitions of sundry citizens, being Federal employees of the States of Alabama, Arizona, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Maryland, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Texas, Utah, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin, Wyoming, Virginia, the Territory of Alaska, and the Canal Zone, praying for the passage of legislation, sponsored by the American Federaton of Labor and the American Federation of Government Employees, to immediately abolish the 15-percent pay cut of Federal employees, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KEYES presented a petition of sundry citizens, being Federal employees of the State of New Hampshire, praying for the passage of legislation, sponsored by the American Federation of Labor and the American Federation of Government Employees, to immediately abolish the 15-percent pay cut of Federal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COPELAND presented the petition of the mayor, the president of the Utica Civic Forum, and sundry citizens, all of Utica, N.Y., praying for the passage of Federal anti-lynching legislation, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution of the Board of Supervisors of Westchester County, N.Y., favoring the continuation of the Federal Civil Works program during the winter months and the gradual decrease of such a program thereafter until unemployment can be absorbed in other public-works projects or by private employers, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Schuyler County, N.Y., praying for the making of an additional appropriation of $1,016,000,000 for the continuance of the C.W.A. program, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the common council of the city of Lockport, N.Y., favoring the continuance of appropriations for the C.W.A. program, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a resolution of officers and members of Local No. 2, the American Workers' Association, of Tonawanda, N.Y., favoring the passage of legislation to alleviate the condition of workingmen and their dependents and to spread wealth so as to lift some of the burdens now carried by small home owners and reduce the direct property tax, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of International Workers' Order, Branch No. 467, of Brooklyn, N.Y., praying for the inauguration of more public works and the abandonment of all policies looking toward war and war works, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Mechanicville, N.Y., praying for world peace and the adoption of measures for the prevention of war, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the petition of the Lunch Meeting of Flatbush, Long Island, N.Y., praying for the inauguration of more public works and the abandonment of all policies looking toward war and war works, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the board of directors of Associated Industries of New York City, Inc., at Syracuse, N.Y., favoring the establishment of a congressional committee to report upon the facts as to the nature of employment relations in industry and commerce, the viewpoint of employers and employees, the number of employees dealing individually or through various forms of collective bargaining with employers, the prevailing characteristics of such forms, and the nature and extent of Federal authority to deal with employment relations in industry and commerce, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Astoria Heights Taxpayers Association, Inc., of Long Island, N.Y., opposing the continuation of the Boulevard Housing Corporation, organized under the laws of the State of New York, through which agency the Federal Government has obligated itself to lend to such domestic corporation a sum aggregating $3,400,000 for the construction of 10 buildings housing 960 families in the area commonly referred to as Woodside, Long Island, in the Borough of Queens, N.Y., which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the faculty and students of St. John's University, of Brooklyn, N.Y., Branch No. 104, the Holy Name Society, of the Church of the Incarnation, of New York City, and the Catholic Women's Union of New York State, protesting against the passage of legislation authorizing the dissemination of birth-control information, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1540) for the relief of the Concrete Engineering Co., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 239) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 1258) for the relief of Charles F. Littlepage, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 242) thereon.

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2496) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of William W. Danenhower, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 240) thereon.

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1078) for the relief of Mrs. Asa Caswell Hawkins, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 241) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. DAVIS:

A bill (S. 2503) to provide for guaranteeing the principal of bonds issued by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, to extend the benefits of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and to limit the amounts of aid which may be extended under such act in any one State; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. McGILL:

A bill (S. 2504) granting a pension to Wilbur T. Lardie; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BACHMAN:

A bill (S. 2505) granting a pension to Rue S. Jackson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DILL:

A bill (S. 2506) to provide funds for cooperation with White Swan School District No. 88, Yakima County, Wash., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children of the Yakima Reservation; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 2507) for the relief of certain officers of the Army whose household and other effects were damaged or destroyed by the flooding of a warehouse at Fort Myer, Va.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 2508) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior, with the approval of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the Attorney General of the United States, to make equitable adjustments of conflicting claims between the United States and other claimants of lands along the shores of the Potomac River, Anacostia River, and Rock Creek, in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (S. 2509) to readjust the boundaries of Whitehaven Parkway at Huidekoper Place, in the District of Columbia, provide for an exchange of land, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 2510) to amend section 51 of chapter 2, title 45, of the Code of Laws of the United States of America; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. WALSH:

A bill (S. 2511) for the relief of William R. Smith; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KEAN:

A bill (S. 2512) to amend the act entitled "An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government", approved March 20, 1933; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. WHEELER:

A bill (S. 2513) authorizing the Court of Claims to investigate and determine the facts in connection with the claim of the First National Bank of Billings, Mont.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BANKHEAD:

A bill (S. 2514) to provide for the exploitation for oil, gas, and other minerals on the lands comprising Fort Morgan Military Reservation, Ala.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TRAMMELL:

A bill (S. 2515) to supply additional aviators for the United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. GORE:

A bill (S. 2516) for the relief of the Playa de Flor Land & Improvement Co.; and

A bill (S. 2517) to provide for the method of measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal; to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

By Mr. BLACK:

A bill (S. 2518) limiting the hours of service of common carriers; and

A bill (S. 2519) to establish a 6-hour day for employees of carriers engaged in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

PRICE FIXING IN FAIR-COMPETITION CODES

Mr. COSTIGAN submitted a resolution (S.Res. 157), which was ordered to lie over under the rule, as follows:

Resolved, That the National Recovery Administration is requested to transmit to the Senate at the earliest practicable date copies of all codes of fair competition in which price fixing in any form has been resorted to, together with the industrial, consumers', and labor analyses with respect to such codes.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H.R. 7295) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H.Con.Res. 27) continuing in full force and effect during the Seventy-third Congress the concurrent resolution of the House establishing the United States Roanoke Colony Commission, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

THE PROPOSED TAX LAW

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in the issue of the Washington Daily News of today, January 27, there appears a very important and illuminating editorial entitled "Not Enough Taxes!" The editorial reads:

NOT ENOUGH TAXES!

The proposed tax bill is inadequate. The Ways and Means Committee of the House has done some useful tinkering with the law, and in taxing unearned income more than earned income has revived a just principle. In ordinary circumstances this might be enough. But with the Government facing a $31,000,000,000 debt, it is not enough.

To borrow huge sums as the Government is doing, and must do, without raising taxes is unwise. It is bad business, because it means that revenues will be eaten up by interest charges on the public debt rather than on reduction of principal. And it is bad morals, because it seeks to pass on to the next generation the debts and burdens of this generation.

There is an added consideration. It is the danger of uncontrolled inflation. We must have reflation—no sensible citizen denies that. But every sensible citizen is anxious that the administration be able to carry out its pledge to control inflation. That is not easy. Indeed it probably will be impossible for any political administration to control inflation if it resorts to unlimited borrowing.

During the emergency we cannot hold to a pay-as-you-go policy. But we can afford to pay much more than is contemplated by this proposed tax bill.

The new proposal would not materially increase income taxes on earned incomes—that is, the majority of incomes—in the lower and middle brackets. This is wrong. Every citizen lucky enough in these days to have a job and an income should be willing to help pay our way out of the depression.

Compared with citizens in other countries, we are slackers in income-tax payments. Our system makes a gesture of putting a heavy tax on very large incomes, incomes of a half million and a million dollars yearly. But that does not mean much in terms of revenue, because the number of such incomes is small. The real test from the standpoint of revenue is the amount collected from the middle brackets—from incomes of $10,000 to $100,000. The reason the Government debt is mounting so rapidly is that we never have had an administration with sufficient political courage to tax this great class.

A comparison of the present rate of this and other countries for earned net income of a married person with no dependents, for instance, shows: on a $10,000 income in this country, 4.8 percent; in Great Britain, 18.6 percent; in France, 25.2 percent; on $25,000 in this country, 10 percent; Great Britain, 29 percent; France, 38 percent; on $50,000 in this country, 17 percent; Great Britain, 39 percent; France, 47 percent; on $100,000 in this country, 30 percent; Great Britain, 48 percent; France, 54 percent.

Thus a substantial and progressive increase all along the line is possible in this country on the basis of the experience of other countries. We do not believe that Americans are any less patriotic than foreigners. Americans with net incomes of $10,000 to $100,000 should be—and we believe are—of the opinion that they are fortunate to have incomes on which to pay a heavy tax.

The same principle applies to death duties.

President Roosevelt has provided leadership in other ways. So far he has not announced a tax policy. Here is his opportunity.

COTTON-REDUCING PLAN—ADDRESS BY SENATOR SMITH

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a very able and interesting radio address delivered on January 23, by Senator ELLISON D. SMITH, of South Carolina, on the subject "The Cotton Reducing Plan of the A.A.A."

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I want to begin by saying the cotton-reduction campaign of last year was a marvelous success. Before the campaign could be gotten under way, cotton had been planted and some of it had reached the stage of maturity. Yet, the farmers of the Cotton Belt responded in a manner that startled the world and gave an impetus to the Agricultural Adjustment Administration that would have been impossible had they not thus responded. I think it will be conceded by all that this response and the results accruing therefrom is largely responsible for the general feeling of confidence that the depression will be broken. The objective sought to be reached was the reduction of the surplus. This has been partially achieved. On the same general plan, the cotton producers of the South are now engaged in signing the 1934 producers' adjustment contracts.

There still exists a surplus of American cotton that must be absorbed before we can attain a normal relationship of supply and demand in the world markets. It must be understood that the Department is making no attempt to create a scarcity of American cotton nor is the program designed in any way to impair the dominance of American cotton in the world markets. It is estimated that there is for the current year a world supply of American cotton of 24,800,000 bales. This is some 1,200,000 bales less than the record supply of the previous 2 years, but it is still in the neighborhood of 6,000,000 bales in excess of the normal supply and carry-over. It is for the welfare of the cotton producers that this acreage reduction, with the hearty cooperation of the administration, is now being carried forward. It is absolutely essential in order to relieve us of the surplus of cotton which is the direct result of the disastrous depression through which we have passed. Producers are not asked, as they have been heretofore, to reduce their acreage and their production without compensation. The greater part of this surplus is now held by those who do not produce cotton but who bought it as an investment at the ruinous prices obtained during the marketing of this surplus.

A reduction in production, therefore, resulting in an advanced price for cotton, would immediately compensate those who held this cotton and would, of course, ultimately benefit the producer; but the Government is offering an attractive rental for the acreage agreed to be held out of production, and in addition to that, other benefits are offered. The Government, in offering these benefits, is attempting to eliminate any excuse or reason for any producer to refuse to join in a unified program with his neighbors to bring about what is essential to be done without any sacrifice on his or their part. This program, if carried out as it is now being done, will enhance the material welfare of the producer as well as bring about an economic condition which will mean the restoration of cotton prices and prosperity in the South. The objective is to take out some 15,000,000 acres which should not be planted to produce cotton for which no market exists. If these 15,000,000 acres are eliminated, reducing the acreage by 40 percent, it is reasonable to anticipate a production which will result in a normal condition approximately in 1935.

The farmers who participate will receive around $125,000,000. The payment to farmers who sign these contracts will be made on the basis of the average yield of the land they agree to withhold from production. The rate of the rental payment will be 3½ cents per pound on the average yield of the rented acres for the 5-year base period preceding. This rental, if the cotton producers of the South join in this program, will total around $100,000,000. In addition to the rental payments each participating producer will be given a domestic allotment on which he will receive a benefit or parity payment of not less than 1 cent per pound upon this allotment which is figured at 40 percent of his average production for the 5 years. It is significant that these rental payments are to be made in two equal installments. If producers complete the signing of the contracts within a reasonable time, get their contracts into Washington, the checks will be distributed about planting time, thus aiding the individual producer this spring in making his crop. The second installment, it is estimated, will aggregate around $50,000,000; and will be sent out some time in August, this giving the producer funds with which to finance the picking of the crop. The parity payment should be received in December, thus spreading a little Christmas cheer through the South. Through the distribution of the rental payments—the first installment about planting time and the second installment about picking time—the cotton producers of the South will be given cash when it is most sorely needed in meeting their pressing obligations.

In addition to the direct benefits of acreage rental and parity payments to cotton farmers there are other benefits to be derived from the 1934 cotton program. First, the program has as its objective a better price for cotton. Congress in enacting the Agricultural Adjustment Act recognized that agriculture was not receiving a fair share of the Nation's income. Parity for the farmer, which means economic justice, was the principle written into the Federal law; and through this 1934 cotton-adjustment program the effort is being made to carry out this mandate. So one of the principal benefits that would accrue to cotton producers from this program would be the improved price that a participating producer will receive on the cotton he does produce. It constitutes a virtual guarantee to the farmer who cooperates against a disastrously low price.

I have already alluded to the direct benefit of the cash payments, the $125,000,000 which will be distributed ratably among the participating cotton farmers.

There is another potentiality in this program which I do not feel has been given sufficient attention by the cotton producers in considering the 1934 contract. As the author of the original option plan I was deeply concerned with the opportunity that could be afforded cotton producers by the substitution of Government-held cotton for that portion of the normal crop which they would limit or withhold from production. The option plan was one of the salient features of the 1933 program. Approximately 2,400,000 bales were optioned last summer to participating producers at 6 cents per pound. After the 1933 campaign was completed and 10,400,000 acres taken out of production, ideal climatic conditions resulted in the production of a crop of over 13,000,000 bales despite the elimination of more than 4,000,000 bales from production. As a consequence, cotton prices did not respond as fully as many had hoped to the emergency program of the past summer, and when low prices were again threatening disaster to the South the 10-cent loan plan was inaugurated and producers were given the opportunity to obtain a loan of 10 cents on the unsold portion of their crop on the condition that they would participate in the 1934 program. I am advised that more than 2,000,000 bales are now included in these loans. In addition, under the cotton-option pool arrangement, an additional 2,000,000 bales have been assigned to the pool. From these 4,000,000 bales of cotton producers have the opportunity to realize additional profit. If, as a result of the 1934 program, the price of middling cotton can be brought to 15 cents by August 1, between 500,000 and 1,000,000 producers should benefit to the extent of $20 per bale on more than 4,000,000 bales. This means that the producers themselves will have an opportunity to increase their equity in these 4,000,000 bales of cotton.

While no one can predict with any precise degree of certainty concerning the price or production of cotton from one season to the next, it seems reasonable to assume that if the present sign-up is a success and if producers faithfully perform the requirements of the contract and restrict cotton acreage to 25,000,000 acres for the coming season, a price of 15 cents per pound or more would not be surprising. In brief this means that the producers have it in their own hands to realize some eighty million dollars out of the cotton covered by options and loans and in addition would gain other benefits that will accrue through this program.

It should be emphasized that under the terms of the 1934–35 cotton-adjustment contract a sufficient number of contracts must be signed by January 31 for the Secretary of Agriculture to determine that the program will be effective. Individual cotton producers again have the opportunity to determine their fate. It is up to them to decide whether we shall have a program. This is the democratic theory under which this farm-adjustment program is operated.

The results of the 1933 adjustment program are familiar to every citizen of the South. During a brief period of less than 6 weeks last summer 1,042,000 contracts were signed. A total of 98 percent of the growers who signed contracts faithfully performed their conditions. For this they received in acreage rentals approximately $112,000,000 and potential option profits of at least $48,000,000. But greater than these direct benefits was the effectiveness of this program in preventing a disaster of major proportions throughout the South and the Nation. Had there been no program and had the entire crop of the past year been permitted to mature, the supplies of American cotton would have reached the highest proportion of record. Seventeen million six hundred thousand bales added to a carry-over of 11,600,000 bales would have resulted in a supply of American cotton for the current year of 29,200,000 bales, the largest of history. There is little doubt that the cotton price would have been disastrously low had a full crop reached maturity. Cotton farmers this past summer struck out boldly and with teams and tractors went into the fields to decrease this burdensome surplus. They now have the opportunity to consolidate the gains that have been made and to adjust their production to a basis where it will not only be more profitable for each individual farmer but make a substantial contribution to the economic recovery of America.

NEEDED N.R.A. REFORMS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR NYE

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] over the radio last night, January 26, on the subject of "Needed N.R.A. Reforms."

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Who would stand in the way of the administering of such remedies as will end this impossible state which finds plenty of everything, including food, housing, clothing, and work to be done, yet at the same time untold suffering by millions for want of those same things?

Certainly not I. But I fear that in our zeal to put these remedies at work we are failing to observe how the new-deal machinery is being captured by the old dealers, with a resultant threat that we may emerge from the present program and find ourselves back precisely where we were prior to 1929, when a greedy few found their selfish profiteering programs builded upon nothing more than sand that would not and could not carry the terrible load which fictitious investment profit had saddled upon the masses of American people.

WATER FOR MILK

Unless America is ready for a departure from that selfish direction of other days which rewarded so few, unless we are ready to further curb the ambitions of the few to monopolize the business of the world, for heaven's sake let us quit talking about a "new deal."

We want again a land of milk and honey. We want it for all, not for just a few financial giants and business combinations, but for all who are willing to work and give to the service of mankind. The ending of child labor, the providing of higher minimum-wage scales, the closing of the sweatshops are evidence that the N.R.A. program has produced sweet honey. Now we must watch our step lest the restoration of the milk of which we speak proves to be nothing more than the water and wind of investment boom days returned to the status it enjoyed until the crash of 1929.

N.R.A. NOT TIMELY

I have long criticized the N.R.A. program as being poorly timed. Convinced as I have been, and still am, that the years of economic punishment inflicted upon that half of our population which is directly dependent upon agriculture was the more direct cause of our national crash. I would first have restored such agricultural prices as would return a buying power to the farmer. That buying power would quickly be reflected on the railroad, in the mill and factory, and in every trading house in the land. But the N.R.A. has moved so much faster than the agricultural recovery program that the farmer today finds himself carrying new and added burdens by reason of the increased prices which the N.R.A. program has tacked to his living and operating costs. The farmer justly complains about this, but there is no turning back at this stage. There is no halting the N.R.A. Then it behooves us to make the best of it, hoping that the agricultural program will accomplish those results which will give the farmer a fair return on his 1934 production and restore economic balance for him.

PIONEER IN TRADE-PRACTICE CURES

I have never criticized the basic purpose and principle of N.R.A. I know there are terrible business methods to be done away with. I am not afraid of code agreements through which business will do away with its vicious trade practices, and have the help of Government in enforcing the agreements. Indeed, I feel that I pioneered in this field. Four years ago, and again 2 years ago, I introduced in the Senate the so-called "fair trade bills." In the House they were sponsored by my very good friend and colleague, JAMES H. SINCLAIR, than whom there is no more sincere champion of fair play for all. These bills provided for trade agreements to wipe out the unfair trade practices. The bills, however, were carefully drawn to prevent larger advantage going to the monopolists. Indeed, the purpose of the bills was that of giving decently, efficiently conducted business protection against the powerful and greedy industrialists. Extensive hearings were held upon these bills. Though they never became law, they did serve to pave the way in a degree for more ready acceptance of the N.R.A. when it was presented during the great emergency of last spring. Codes honestly adopted certainly do not find me afraid or prejudiced.

REAL PRINCIPLE OF N.R.A. THREATENED

However, I have made free to criticize what threatens to become permanent N.R.A. policies. I cannot refrain from criticism when I see the real principle of the N.R.A. threatened by such advisers as have had the ear of those administering the act. Far too much reliance has been placed in men guilty of iniquities in the conduct of business. I cannot remain silent when I see monopolists taking advantage of N.R.A. machinery and improving upon their chance to win a more complete concentration of industry, of wealth, and of the power that always goes with it. I cannot refrain from criticizing when I observe a course being pursued which destroys the smaller business institution and industrialist. I object strenuously, and will continue to do so, to the advantage which big business is taking under N.R.A. to again dominate, reestablish its leadership, and the false capitalizations upon which to base dividends and profits, and to then force all their competitors to abide by an N.R.A. code program that will surely destroy the competitor. If big business continues to dominate through retaining important posts it has won in the administration of N.R.A. codes, then the recovery program is doomed, and recovery will prove to be the fortune of the few, not of the masses.

My criticism has brought upon me the charge of seeking to undermine the N.R.A. program, of trying to embarrass the administration of President Roosevelt, of chiseling, of wanting to go back to those impossible do-nothing days of other years.

TO ENCOURAGE SMALL INDUSTRY

Naturally, I resent such contention, for no one more thoroughly desires departure from the old course than I. The President has said concerning the purpose of the N.R.A.:

"We are seeking the encouragement of small local industries, thus furthering the principles of a better-balanced life."

Do I undermine his program and embarrass the President, then, when I fight what appears plainly to be the effort of selfishness and greed to destroy small local industries? The answer is evident. I have yet to see any indication that the President is displeased by such criticism as I have offered.

It is said that I would reopen the sweatshops, go back to the miserable hours of labor, and low wages which have prevailed. There has been no reason for any such conclusion. The N.R.A. program and its administrators shall always have my praise for what was accomplished in these matters, and I hope they may go forward and accomplish more, including a sharing of industrial profits with the workers and adequate old-age pensions for those who give their productive years to the benefit of an industry.

ANTITRUST LAWS

It is said that I would repeal features of the National Industrial Recovery Act relating to the antitrust laws and thus destroy the N.R.A. and all the good it has won. I do not know that repeal of the anti-trust-waiver features of the law is necessary to accomplish the reforms sought. In fact, I believe the faults which I find can be corrected by administrative action. The truth, however, is that I fail to find a solitary good thing accomplished by the N.R.A. that could not have been won with the antitrust laws in full force and effect. On the other hand, it appears that big business has taken advantage of the antitrust law dodge in the Recovery Act and is engaging in price fixing in no uncertain way, to the detriment of the smaller producer in industry, of the consumer, and of the very life of the N.R.A. program itself.

Court decisions are not indicative of conclusions that the antitrust laws would prevent agreements involving the fixing of hours of labor, of minimum wages. Those decisions do not reveal that child labor and the sweatshop could not be ended without a waiving of the provisions of the antitrust laws. The truth is that monopolists have grabbed at the anti-trust-waiver feature of the National Recovery Act and are using it to destroy competition and at the same time lift their prices to a level that will permit them to pay profits on the basis of their watered and inflated investments and continue excessive salaries and bonuses to their executives. It is said that small business complains about the N.R.A. and codes only because it cannot pay the minimum wages called for, or because it cannot abide by the minimum-hour requirements of the N.R.A. codes. The insistence is that small business does not pay living wages to its employees and therefore objects to the new deal codes. This is most unfair. Of the hundreds of complaints which have come to me from so-called "smaller business units" not 1 percent of them have voiced complaint concerning the minimum-wage scale or the provisions limiting hours of labor. Indeed, there is ample showing that most of them were paying well over the minimum scale before N.R.A. came into being.

NO BRIEF FOR SOME OF SMALL BUSINESS VENTURES

I make no defense of the man who is a misfit in the business world. The law of the survival of the fittest will automatically eliminate him from the picture in the course of time even under the most ideal conditions. If a business will not pay decent living wages, and if it resorts to jungle methods, it ought to be destroyed.

The so-called "small business", whose brief I do and will gladly hold, is that which has played fair with its employees, has contributed to the maintenance of happy communities, has paid taxes, has sold at prices intended to maintain decent living for its owners and employees, not at prices intended to put someone else out of business. Of that kind there are thousands complaining today. And now to see them threatened, as they are under some of the N.R.A. codes, because they remain a source of competition to the monopoly operators, calls for such response as will once and for all destroy the monopolistic dreams of the few.

WHO KILLED THE GOOSE

To listen to the defense made against the criticism which has been leveled against some of the seeming policies of N.R.A. one would guess that our economic crack-up of 1929 was caused by unscrupulous small business enterprises. The conclusion which the powerful business interests and their spokesmen would have us draw is that if there had been no small business in 1929 and if big business and monopoly had been in charge of all business, there would have been no economic crash—no depression. The sad part of it all is that some people accept this smokescreen as truth.

What was the immediate cause of our economic break-down? What, if anything, contributed more to it than the damnable concentration which big business had accomplished through the selfish and greedy practices which found the few rolling in profits while the many were without the means to provide the barest necessities?

Through monopoly and unfair business practices, through price cutting to hurt a competitor, through cutthroat methods, through what amounts to theft from the public and their stockholders, big business brought us to a pass which found a mere handful of men possessing the great percentage of the wealth of the country. This possession and control is revealed as continuing in the recently announced report covering income taxes paid by corporations in 1931.

CONCENTRATION THROUGH MONOPOLY

Of the 381,000 corporations, big and little businesses alike, 632 of them show possession of $154,000,000,000 of the total assets of all corporations amounting to $296,000,000,000. That means that one sixth of 1 percent of all corporations have over 50 percent of the total assets. These 632 giants own over half of the capital assets, over half of the liquid assets; they paid over three fifths of the cash dividends during the year by all corporations, though the few reported slightly more than one fourth of the gross sales of all corporations. Of the total of surpluses and undivided profits the 632 corporations showed themselves possessed of three fifths while reporting only a little more than one third of the total compiled receipts. Who needs whatever help the Government is prepared to give business now? It seems to me that these figures represent about all the concentration we want to accept, that monopoly and big business have reached a stage beyond which they ought not to be permitted to pass. It is time they were checked, not helped.

DIVORCEMENT FROM HOGGISHNESS

But here they are, instead, taking advantage of N.R.A. codes, clubbing to death what remains of competition, while they and their agents stand on the side lines shouting "Little business is what upset our economic structure and brought on the depression." And some Americans thoughtlessly say, "Amen!"

Oh, for divorcement from the hoggishness, the hungriness for huge profits demonstrated by these pirates in American business! Save America from being "saved" by these, its exploiters! Let us win divorcement from that order which seems to place our program to accomplish recovery in the hands of those who so grossly betrayed and abused the trust and confidence placed in them during the days of unregulated business! Let us close our eyes and ears to them when they plead that we see the little independent business man and enterprise as the real cause of our economic trouble.

THE WAY BACK TO TROUBLE

President Roosevelt has said that no business has ever been known to purge itself of its own iniquities, yet here we are with those guilty of great iniquity praising the N.R.A. to the skies while they man the machinery of recovery with their men and lord it over the little fellow in business and the consumer. I do not know how we could better proceed to get back to that selfish era of 1928 and 1929 than to let these monopolists lead the way back to recovery, accepting, of course, their kind of recovery.

TO WHAT SMALL BUSINESS OBJECTS

I repeat: It is not the increased wage costs, not the lessened hours of employment, not the abandonment of child labor and the sweatshops against which the independent business man and consumer complains. It is plain from that vast correspondence which has come to me that the objection to N.R.A. codes is to the matter written into these codes by their monopolistic brethren and to the fact that these monopolists administer, translate, and do the enforcing of these codes, naturally to their own advantage.

I might say that I have heard little or no objection to codes adopted in those fields of business where monopoly has not been able to control an excessively large part of the total product in a line of business. In other words, when monopoly has not reached such growth as has been witnessed in the electrical, steel, cleaning, oil distribution, and like businesses, the codes seem to be working quite satisfactorily. When a monopoly is not dominant in the field, the complaints of price gouging, price fixing, advantage taking are rare.

It comes to this: In the cases of preparation of those codes involving fields of business in which monopoly has a strong foothold there is large evidence that the N.R.A. authorities have heard quite alone the advice of the monopolist; the lesser producers in that field have had little or no voice. There is proof that men have resigned from their places in the employ of big business, accepted appointment in the N.R.A., supervised the writing of the code for the line of business in which he had been employed, then resigned from N.R.A. to accept employment with the code authority to administer that particular code. Invariably the personnel of these code authorities is most largely representative of the monoplist group in the business. What chance does the independent have operating under such an authority when "big business" is the maker of the law, the arresting officer, the judge, the jury, and the executioner?

But, it is said, surely there is possible appeal from the decisions of code authorities; they cannot be the last voice. Of course, they are not the last authority. But there has been at least one case where the N.R.A. has said they could not consider changes in codes unless the changes were submitted by the code authority. It was open criticism which finally remedied this injustice.

It is true that any complainant under the codes can appeal to the compliance board of N.R.A. But experience before that board has found informatio nabout the complaint's getting back to the monopolists who have then made life the more unpleasant for those who would dare to appeal. Plainly, there have been agents for big business watching at every gate. Plainly, to ask small business men to lodge their complaint with the N.R.A. board has been like asking the three little pigs to go over and ask for cookies of the big bad wolf.

Yesterday it was announced that Administrator Johnson would name a board of men, all recognized as antimonopolists, whose duty will be that of weighing the complaints of independents and recommending code changes when the existing code is found to be aiding monopoly or monopolistic practices. It is likewise encouraging to note the plan of N.R.A. to reconsider all of the scores of codes which have thus far been approved with a view to eliminating injustices.

A serious fault about the code making has been the speed with which they have been pushed through. Too often the desire seems to have been to see how many codes per minute could be rushed through, not how good and fair to all they were.

PRICE FIXING

There is justified complaint being voiced by the smaller business establishments against what is known as "the open price-filing provisions" found within so many codes. Under this agreement every business must post its prices from time to time with its code authority. Suppose one operator quotes a price lower than the other quotes. His lower price is immediately known. It matters not if this lower price represents a fair return to the one quoting it, practice has shown that the bigger operators have threatened the one quoting low. The general result has been a fixed price with the advantage of such going to the monopolist who has a large selling force and who has deprived his competitor of his only weapon, namely, a lower price. Surely, if there is provision against selling below cost, I see no reason why one manufacturer should have to tell his competitor what his price is for today. If there is to be continuation of price posting, let the posting be done with N.R.A., not with the competitor. It must be seen that this price posting accomplishes in the end unadulterated price fixing, the fondest dream of monopoly so long as the fixing can be high. It should be remembered, too, that these monopolists were the first to protest price fixing on farm products.

PROTECT FALSE CAPITALIZATION

One practice under the N.R.A. certain ultimately to breed no end of trouble and injustice is that which finds many code authorities in a position to prevent any new enterprise in their field. If business can show that it is overproduced, it can go far in preventing new competition. If this is true, it must be seen that the monopolist-controlled code authorities have the power to maintain profits on obsolete plants and fictitious capitalizations by holding off new competitors, honestly capitalized, and prepared therefore to produce more cheaply.

POWER DELEGATED MONOPOLY

Were the time mine tonight, I would recite endless justification for the complaint concerning the aid which monopoly is enjoying under the N.R.A. codes. Unless we are on our toes, industrial plunderers are going to be even more strongly entrenched. They must be fought. My mail is evidence that men are ready to fight. While this mail has been heavy, I have appreciated it because of the insight it afforded into the result of code features in individual and collective cases. I hope there may be more such letters, reciting the specific experience of those who have suffered injustices under the codes. It seems to me that our gravest danger lies in the delegation of power to business through its code authorities which are too often the monopolists themselves. We give them power to rest upon a false base of costs of production by permitting a return upon overcapitalized structures. Perhaps, in the overhauling of codes, the N.R.A. authorities will destroy the power now held by monopolies on code authorities by giving representation upon same to number of industrials involved rather than upon the present basis of quantity of production.

Certainly, we should by now have had enough of domination by the monopolies whose leaders are bent alone upon accumulation of profits. Surely, their selfishness is evident to all. The executives of these monopolies are turning heaven and earth to control the N.R.A. machinery. Why would not they? If they can control production and all producers, they can control price. If they can control price, then the public, the consumer, can be damned, and monopoly can go on paying returns on the overcapitalized structures they established a few years ago when a liberal amount of water was poured into these structures to accomplish the gigantic fortunes won by the few.

REGULATING BIG BUSINESS

We cannot, we must not, even try to rebuild business on this overcapitalized structure. If we do try to do this, we but build, or try to build, another folly. The people cannot go on paying prices which will net a return on the water and which will continue the exorbitant salaries paid big business executives. If small business, without watered stock to pay dividends on and without excessive executive salaries and bonuses to be paid, can sell for less than big business can, it should be permitted to do so. Yet, under the N.R.A. program, the tendency thus far has been to deal most tenderly with the profiteers, cuddle them, and give them the large voice in charting the course that business is to pursue in the future.

Some quiet talk prevails about the need for encouraging monopoly—about fewer businesses and stronger businesses. Upon what theory? Upon the mistaken theory that if there are fewer, business will be easier to regulate. What tommyrot! When, during the lifetime of business in America has it been easier to control a monopoly than a number of small business establishments? The facts are that the bigger business has grown, the more completely has it controlled Government. Some question exists right now as to which is the strongest, big business or the Government.

The danger under what appears at times to be the policy of N.R.A. is that the control which Government would have over business is control confined to the small operator rather than of the more obnoxious violators of fair play and decency.

N.R.A. APPRECIATES DANGER

But appreciation within the N.R.A. of the grave danger confronting small business as a result of code agreements and enforcement, of which appreciation I have seen large evidence during late days, will bring about reform of policies that will make N.R.A. play fairly with all, giving advantage to none, certainly not to monopoly; and then out of the N.R.A. program will come a new business life that will revert to the advantage of the many, not to the building of enlarged fortunes alone for the few.

Which brings me to my closing thought. I ask: What has big business and monopoly contributed to the cause of progress? It has contributed but little more than that which it has bought or stolen from small, courageous business men and enterprises. If there was proven to be profit in any enterprise, into it has gone big business, but not until profit was assured.

The small, courageous independent venturer in the business world has been the real contributor to progress. If we would thrive, we should encourage small business in every possible way. Certainly we do not want to go back to that boasted rugged individualism of other days. Why must one be accused of arguing in support of it when he urges a course that will accomplish that state which finds the reward of toil going to the greatest possible number of toilers? Certainly departure from rugged individualism does not mean that we shall have to surrender our interests in a way such as will enslave the many and turn even richer rewards to big business and the cause of easy wealth for those who have it all now.

NEW OR OLD DEAL

The facts are that our so-called "captains of industry" have learned nothing. Profit remains their constant watchword. Yet today they strut as never before, leading the industrial-recovery parade—the parade to a new deal. Seriously, any program supporting overcapitalized industrial structures is not in any sense a new deal. It is the old deal over and over—the deal that got us into our present economic mess. I cannot believe our President sponsors any such deal, and I am sure that these approaching days are going to see the adoption of policies by N.R.A. such as will permit the sun to shine again for the consumer and for the owners and employees of small business ventures still remaining despite the onslaughts of monopoly and its unfair practices. Without the adoption of these policies then well may the industrial plunderers adopt the Last Round-up as their theme song, go forward stamping out the last sign of competition for monopoly, and fasten upon the consumer the burdens which lack of competition always brings.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H.R. 7295) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

UNITED STATES MONETARY SYSTEM

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 6976) to protect the currency system of the United States, to provide for the better use of the monetary gold stock of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Byrd	Dickinson	Hale
Ashurst	Byrnes	Dieterich	Harrison
Austin	Capper	Dill	Hatch
Bachman	Caraway	Duffy	Hatfield
Bailey	Carey	Erickson	Hayden
Bankhead	Clark	Fess	Hebert
Barbour	Connally	Fletcher	Johnson
Barkley	Coolidge	Frazier	Kean
Black	Copeland	George	Keyes
Bone	Costigan	Gibson	King
Borah	Couzens	Glass	La Follette
Brown	Cutting	Goldsborough	Lewis
Bulkley	Davis	Gore	Logan

Lonergan	O'Mahoney	Schall	Tydings
McAdoo	Overton	Sheppard	Vandenberg
McCarran	Patterson	Shipstead	Van Nuys
McGill	Pittman	Smith	Wagner
McKellar	Pope	Steiwer	Walcott
McNary	Reed	Stephens	Walsh
Murphy	Reynolds	Thomas, Utah	Wheeler
Neely	Robinson, Ark.	Thompson	White
Norris	Robinson, Ind.	Townsend
Nye	Russell	Trammell

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I desire to announce that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is still detained from the Senate on account of illness.

I desire also to announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] are necessarily absent from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

[Mr. WHEELER resumed and concluded the speech begun by him yesterday. His speech entire is as follows:]

Friday, January 26, 1934

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, as I have said, I feel that it is not entirely fair to me to be forced to undertake a discussion of the amendment at this late hour. I appreciate that most of the Members of the Senate have been here from 11 o'clock until the present time listening to the debate on the bill and the various amendments proposed to it, and that everyone is weary and wants to go home. It is not fair, it seems to me, to be obliged to offer the amendment at this late hour and attempt to discuss it before the Senate under such circumstances and conditions.

This matter, Mr. President, is one of vital interest not only to the administration but to all the people of the United States, and there are millions of people in the United States who are interested in this subject who, if we are forced, may I say, to take a vote upon the amendment under such circumstances as now confront us, will resent that action.

I have gone along with the administration on the pending bill. I am in favor, Mr. President, of the bill proposed by the administration, but I desire to say here and now, without fear of contradiction, that if we simply cut down the gold content of the dollar, without issuing any currency whatsoever, or any more currency than has been issued at the present time, commodity prices in this country will not and they cannot be increased. Commodity prices cannot be increased simply by cutting down the gold content of the dollar and taking the proposed $2,000,000,000 fund and putting it in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury for the purpose of dealing in foreign exchange. I challenge any man upon the floor of the Senate to point out to me how such action can raise commodity prices in the United States, outside of the prices of commodities that have to be sold upon the world markets.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator's theory is, is it not, that the more dollars we have the higher prices will go?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. If we have more gold dollars than we had before will not prices rise?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; but we cannot make any more gold out of what we have.

Mr. CONNALLY. It can be done under the pending bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, it can be; yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does not the Senator trust the President to do it?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes. Permit me to say to the Senator that I trust the President, and I trust him much more implicitly than do some of the other Senators who voted for him, because I will say I was one of the first men who came out for him for President of the United States. Yes; I trust the President implicitly. But let me call the attention of the Senator to the fact that with the gold we have at the present time we could expand the currency of the United States to the extent of four or five billion dollars without ever cutting the gold content of the dollar one iota. Not only that, but we could expand the currency of the United States under the powers given to the President by the Thomas amendment. We could have remonetized silver under the Thomas amendment. What I am contending, however, is that that has not been done, and therefore I am proposing the amendment. There has not been any currency expansion up to the present time, and commodity prices in this country have not risen to any great extent, except by reason of the fact that money has been spent by the Government in connection with the various operations which it is conducting, in the carrying out of which money is being paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

We all know what took place right after the Thomas amendment was adopted and after the Congress of the United States adjourned. The prices of commodities in this country immediately began to rise. Why did they rise? Because of the fact that there was a general feeling upon the part of everybody in the United States that there was going to be inflation; that public works were going forward, and that other matters were going to be taken up; but when statements were given out from Capitol Hill in Washington that there would be no inflation, and that public works were being held up, we all know what took place. We found commodity prices immediately dropping throughout the United States, and we found employment decreasing. Then it was that the administration took money and put men to work under the C.W.A. We have them there today, and the problem that confronts our Government is not how to keep them in the C.W.A. but how to take them off the C.W.A. rolls and have them absorbed by industry.

Mr. President, I have pointed out on the floor of the Senate repeatedly that it was absolutely necessary for our Government to go off the gold standard and depreciate its currency if we were going to meet the competition of Great Britain and other countries. As the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] pointed out this afternoon, we can cut the gold content of the dollar, but by simply cutting the gold content of the dollar and raising the price of gold we are not for a moment going to meet the difficulty that exists in the world today, and that is to furnish a monetary base for those countries that have no gold or no primary money.

What the President has already done I approve. What he has already done with reference to meeting European competition has helped to the extent that commodities have gone up where they have had to be sold in competition in foreign exchange. For instance, copper has been helped; wheat has been helped to some extent, and cotton has been helped to some extent; but I am sure the Senator from Texas and Senators from other cotton-growing States would not for a moment contend that the cutting of the gold content of the dollar has been responsible for the rise in the price of cotton. On the contrary, what saved the cotton industry, to a large extent, were the loans which were made by the Department of Agriculture on cotton, and which, in other words, fixed definitely the loan price upon cotton, and the same thing is true of corn and hogs. Otherwise, the price of cotton would have gone down; the price of hogs and the price of corn would have gone down.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REYNOLDS in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. WHEELER. I do.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not want to interrupt the Senator and consume too much time, but I must candidly state with regard to cotton that the price of cotton reflected immediately the change in the gold value of the dollar under the operations of the President when he brought the price of gold up to $34 an ounce. Every time gold went up cotton went up. The reason for that is that a Britisher or a Frenchman could buy cotton for 6½ cents in gold in his own money, and that meant 10 cents to us here in the United States. All cotton exporters knew that. I have talked with them about it, and I know that to be the fact. Every time the gold content of the dollar was changed, or the gold value of the dollar was changed, cotton went up, because it is an export crop and its price is fixed in foreign gold money.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, there is no question about the correctness of what I said a moment ago; it did help the price of cotton; but it did not put the price of cotton where it is today. Representatives of all the cotton-producing States came here; their testimony was taken before the Committee on Agriculture, and there was not one of the experts who came before the Agricultural Committee who did not testify that if it had not been for the loans that had been made on cotton the price of cotton would have gone down and would have remained down; and there is a question as to whether or not it would not have gone much lower than it did if it had not been for the pegging of the price by those loans.

However, I do not intend to get into a discussion of that particular feature, Mr. President. I wanted to point out some of the features of the amendment I have offered, and call attention to the fact that it provides that—

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to purchase silver, at the rate of not less than 50,000,000 ounces per month, until there shall be added to the monetary resources of the United States 1,000,000,000 ounces of silver.

The other limitation is that whenever 371¼ grains of pure silver shall equal in purchasing power 23.22 grains of pure gold the Treasury of the United States shall cease buying silver.

What will that do? I think, Mr. President, no one will contend for a moment that the Government of the United States can possibly purchase to exceed from 250 to 300 million ounces of silver. I want to call attention to the further fact that this proposal will not cost the Treasury of the United States one 5-cent piece, because, under the amendment, silver certificates are going to be issued against the silver purchased. In other words, there will be issued certificates of deposit.

The amendment further provides:

And the silver so purchased shall be held in reserve in the Treasury against the issue of certificates of deposit payable to bearer on demand in silver bullion as hereinafter provided. Such silver certificates shall be issued by the Treasury in an amount which, in the aggregate, shall equal the cost of such silver to the Treasury. Upon presentation of any such silver certificates the Treasurer of the United States shall redeem the same by the delivery of the face value thereof in silver bullion of the gold equivalent value at the time of demand, to the end that the silver delivered shall be measured by value rather than by weight. The silver certificates issued under the provisions of this subsection shall be legal tender for all debts, public and private, public charges, taxes, duties, and dues.

In other words, Mr. President, the silver certificates will be certificates of deposit. This identical system is at the present time in vogue in the Netherlands and in other European countries; and the silver certificates which are in circulation there are discounted at the banks throughout Europe at their full face value, at their value in gold. Under this amendment the certificates would not be redeemable in gold but would be redeemable in silver bars.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. If I understand correctly, what the amendment proposes is not the establishment of a bimetallic standard but the maintenance of the gold standard, and silver is to be measured in terms of gold?

Mr. WHEELER. That is exactly correct. The amendment does not provide for the bimetallic system; it does not bring about the free and unlimited coinage of silver; but I challenge any Senator in this body to show that the silver certificates which would be issued under the provisions of the amendment would not be backed up by more than any other kind of currency we have in the United States, because they will always be redeemable in an amount of silver that will be equal to their face value in gold.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The able Senator from Montana is seeking to supply supplementary currency?

Mr. WHEELER. Exactly.

Mr. President, the President of the United States, when he issued his proclamation recently, stated, among other things:

Whereas from investigations made by me I find it necessary, in aid of the stabilization of domestic prices and in accordance with the policy and program authorized by Congress which are now being administered and to protect our foreign commerce against the adverse effect of depreciated foreign currencies—that the price of silver be enhanced and stabilized.

What?—

So, Mr. President, in offering this amendment to this bill I am doing exactly what the President of the United States said in his proclamation he desired to do and that it was necessary to do in order to stabilize the price of commodities in the United States.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH. It was stated in the debate this morning that this country and one or two other countries own practically all the monetary gold or the coverage against which gold certificates are issued.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator's amendment should be adopted providing for the purchase of silver and its use as a supplementary currency, would that not enable oriental countries to trade with us upon the basis of our recognition of silver as a supplementary currency? In other words, if those countries have no gold upon which to stabilize their circulating medium, how are they to trade with us except in accordance with such fluctuations as are incident to mere barter?

Mr. WHEELER. There is not any question but that the Senator is absolutely correct.

Let me say to the Senator that I received a cablegram from a business man in Shanghai, China, in which he said that he hoped this amendment would be adopted, because it would stabilize the currencies of the Orient and make it possible for the people of those eastern countries to buy from the people of the United States rather than to do what some of their manufacturers have been doing, dumping their products upon this market and dumping their cotton manufactured goods upon the markets of the countries of the rest of the world at a cost far below what they can be produced for in the United States.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. May I right here at this point refer to a sentence in the President's message delivered on the 15th of January?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, indeed.

Mr. ADAMS. The President stated in his message of January 15, a week ago Monday:

The other principal precious metal—silver—has also been used from time immemorial as a metallic base for currencies as well as for actual currency itself. It is used as such by probably half the population of the world. It constitutes a very important part of our own monetary structure. It is such a crucial factor in much of the world's international trade that it cannot be neglected.

Mr. WHEELER. That is exactly the point.

I wish now to call to the attention particularly of Senators from the cotton-growing States and the cotton-textile States some startling figures which were given to me by the Department of Commerce.

Mr. President, I have watched oriental countries capture our foreign textile markets and invade our home market because of their lower production costs, due to their depreciated currencies. We are debating the pending gold bill, and the reason why we are proposing to pass the bill is to meet the depreciated currencies of Europe; but there is nothing in this bill, and nothing has been done up to the present time, to meet the situation caused by the depreciated currencies of the Orient.

When Japan went off the gold standard the yen depreciated 60 percent. This lowered her production costs accordingly and gave her an advantage over the gold-standard countries that soon manifested itself by a tremendous increase in her textile export trade.

I obtained the following figures from the United States Department of Commerce: In 1912 the number of cotton spindles in Japan was 2,177,000, while in 1932 the number was 7,965,000.

In 1912 Japan had 22,000 looms; 22 years later she had 79,000 looms.

During the same 20-year period, from 1912 to 1932, her exports of cotton goods increased as follows:

The number of yards exported to China in 1912 was 168,000,000; in 1932 it was 194,000,000. This increase was not very great, due to the fact that China was also developing her textile industry during the same period of time. But let us see what happened in other countries. In 1912 Japan exported to India 8,000,000 square yards, and in 1932 645,000,000 square yards. During the same period of 20 years her exports to East India increased from 2,000,000 yards to 352,000,000 yards, and to Egypt the increase was from 36,000 yards to 195,000,000 yards.

To Australia the increase was from 3,000,000 yards to 36,000,000 yards; to the Philippine Islands it was from 5,000,000 to 21,000,000 yards, and to South America from 76,000 yards in 1912 to 27,000,000 yards in 1932.

In China the number of spindles in 1915 was 1,009,000 and in 1932 it had increased to 4,612,000, while during the same period the number of looms in China increased from 4,564 to 40,000. The increase in production of cotton yarn was from 225,000,000 pounds in 1915 to 933,000,000 pounds in 1932. Her increase in production of cloth was from 50,000,000 yards in 1915 to 800,000,000 yards in 1932.

A prominent individual connected with the Government of the United States said to me, "If you remonetize silver and raise the price of silver to $1.29, and the effect will be—to do what? It will be to stop the industrialization of China." I said, "Yes; it will to some extent retard the industrialization of China, but you must remember that every time you open a cotton mill in Shanghai or Bombay or Tokyo or any of those other places, you likewise put men on the streets who are manufacturing cotton textiles in the United States."

The same thing is happening likewise in the cigarette and tobacco industry. Formerly China was one of the greatest markets in the world for American-made cotton goods and it was one of the greatest markets in the world for American-made cigarettes. Today, by reason of depreciated currency and the low price of silver, we find China manufacturing cigarettes. We find them going into the manufacture of textiles, of boots and shoes, of soap, and engaging in all the light industries. I want to predict here and now that if the price of silver remains down where it is, in 25 years the Orient will put the manufacturers of the United States out of the so-called "light industry."

Italy is complaining. A textile manufacturer the other day called my attention to the fact that their importations are coming into this country, and some are coming in with an N.R.A. stamp. They are laying their products down cheaper in New York City than they could be manufactured by the textile interests in the city of New York.

The effect of raising the price of silver, the effect of doing what I propose in this measure, is to increase the cost of production to the manufacturer in China and in all silver-using countries. It is bound to raise the cost of production to cotton and tobacco manufacturers in all silver-using countries, the same as it has tended to increase the cost of production of wheat in the silver-using countries that produce wheat.

Let me call attention to the fact that Queen Victoria in 1889 appointed what was known as "the British Royal Commission." That commission held hearings. In the testimony given at that time by the then experts and economists of Great Britain it was said that as we depress the price of silver we make it possible for the English pound to purchase more rupees in India, and with the purchase of more rupees in India more goods can be purchased. As the price of silver goes down, likewise the price of cotton and wheat and other products in the North American Continent will go down.

That has been the history of the reduction of the price of silver. Why was it the British Government desired to keep down the price of silver? It was because of the fact that the British Isles comprise a manufacturing nation. Her ships were taking manufactured products throughout the world. She was getting cheap raw materials from North America, Canada, Australia, and India. She wanted the cheap raw materials in those countries, and in return she wanted to sell them her manufactured articles at a higher price. With her ships and cheap raw materials she could undersell and control the commerce of the entire world, which she did for years.

But what happened? Finally some smart Britishers and some Japanese went into India. Who controls industry in Shanghai and in Hong Kong at the present time? The people who control the textile industry in those places are either the Japanese or the British. Does the Chinaman get any benefit whatever out of it? Not the slightest except that he is given a little more money. The men who are making money by reason of the depreciation in the price of silver are the Japanese manufacturers who are located in those particular countries, and the British manufacturers as well.

The chairman of the board of directors of the Midland National Bank, who for many years was president of one of the biggest banks in India, said to me last spring: "I know of a friend of mine whose company is in the manufacture of textiles in Hong Kong. They made 300 percent upon their investment because of the depreciation of the price of silver. I know another man in Shanghai, a Japanese manufacturer, who made 30 percent upon his investment. He paid 10 percent dividends and set aside 20 percent in reserve."

These manufacturers said, "We not only can get the cheap raw materials over here, but by reason of the depreciated price of silver we can likewise get cheap labor, and we can undersell in the world market any manufacturer in the world."

Not only would the remonetization of silver or the raising of the price of silver to a high price act as a tariff barrier to the dumping of these goods of the Orient upon our country, but likewise it would raise their cost of production so we would be able to compete with those countries in the foreign markets.

Almost every morning as we pick up a paper we see headlines saying there is great possibility of war between Japan and Russia next spring. We not only see it in the newspapers, but it is common talk that there will be a war. What happened when the last war came, when England wanted to pay her Indian soldiers? She had to come to the United States and get the silver from the Treasury in order to pay her Indian soldiers in India. If we do not buy the silver for any other purpose than as a "washer", it would be the greatest asset we could possibly have in the event of a war in the Orient.

I have called attention to what China and Japan have done. In India the increased production in textiles was not so pronounced. The number of spindles in India in 1912 was 6,400,000, and in 1932 it was 9,500,000. The number of looms was 89,000 in 1912 and 186,000 in 1932. The production of cotton yarn in India was 688,000 pounds in 1912, while in 1932 it was 1,016,000 pounds. The production of cotton cloth increased from 2,350,000 yards in 1912 to 4,670,000 yards in 1932.

During this same period of time, and I want to impress this upon the Senate, particularly Senators from the cotton-manufacturing States, American exports were decreasing as follows: To British India, from 13,000,000 yards in 1913 to only 2,000,000 yards in 1932. To China our exports decreased from 80,000,000 yards in 1913 to 1,420,000 yards in 1932.

Why was this? It was because of the depreciation of the price of silver that those people were unable to buy from a country that was on the gold standard and with a high-priced dollar. They had to buy from countries that were upon the silver standard. They are buying from Japan and China and starting in the textile business themselves. They were forced to do it by reason of the fact that they were unable to buy these products in the United States, because they had to give us so many more of their silver dollars in order to get our gold dollar.

Senators may philosophize all they want to, they may say that we can trade goods for goods, they may listen to theorists and experts; but they cannot dispute the cold figures and the cold facts that are given to me by the Department of Commerce of the United States. They cannot dispute the fact that the low price of silver has driven the American manufacturer out of the oriental market and has built up the foreign manufacturer in China, in India, and in Japan.

I desire at this point to call attention to the statement of Mr. Denny, one of the leading economists of Great Britain. He has this to say:

> In countries where silver is the currency, as, for instance, China, where the drop in silver between the year 1926 and 1931 is approximately 50 percent, he would have to pay twice as much in his silver money as he would have done in 1926, or, expressed in goods, he would have to produce twice the quantity to pay for goods purchased in the United States.
>
> It will be seen at once, therefore, that the greater the departure of the currency of a country from the gold standard the more difficult it becomes for that country to deal with another country which remains on it. Contrariwise, two countries which have both left it may find that their position relative to each other is practically unchanged, and naturally the tendency would be in such cases for those countries to deal with each other rather than with the gold-standard countries.

A striking example of this fact is found in an Associated Press dispatch in the Washington Star of January 4, 1934, to this effect:

> The United States may expect a restricted market for its raw cotton in Japan this year as a result of an Indo-Japanese commercial agreement obligating Japan to buy 1,500,000 bales of Indian raw cotton annually.
>
> This is in return for exportation of 400,000,000 square yards of Japanese cotton textiles to India each year.

Mr. President, I am aware that it may be said that the figures I have given with reference to the exportations from Japan have no bearing upon the case because it will be urged that Japan has been upon the gold standard.

Notwithstanding the fact that Japan has been upon the gold standard, however, her money and her exchange are affected by the price of silver because of the fact that a large amount of her trade—and practically most of her trade—has been in the Orient. The Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] has been in Japan, and I am sure he will verify the statement I make, because he knows something with reference to that particular subject.

If the price of silver remains down, not only are the oriental countries going to drive us out of the production of manufactured goods but there is bound to be a stimulation of the production of raw cotton in the silver-using countries, because, if their silver remains down, and we have a high-priced dollar, there is only one thing they can do: They must buy their cotton from silver-using countries where they can get it cheaper than they can in the United States. If we put up the price of cotton in the United States of America, immediately, by reason of their exchange, they must and will of necessity buy their cotton from India and other silver-using countries. As we restrict the production of cotton in this country, they will stimulate production in these other countries to take the place of the amount of cotton that we cut down in the United States.

The result of that is this, and I challenge any manufacturer or any man who has made a study of the figures and the facts that have been presented to me to disprove the assertion: Not only are the oriental nations going to buy their cotton and their other raw materials from silver-using countries, and thus have the benefit of cheap raw materials, but likewise, by reason of the depreciated price of their silver, they are going to have lower manufacturing costs, and they will be able to undersell the United States of America in any place in the world, and will do it just as surely as we are sitting in these seats today.

Mr. President, I am not interested merely in the rehabilitation of silver. Notwithstanding the fact that I happen to come from a silver State, I have said repeatedly on the floor of the Senate and I have said to the executive branches of the Government that I am not interested in doing something to subsidize the mining companies of my part of the country. I am not the slightest bit interested in that. While I want to see them prosper, I am not interested in seeing them get a subsidy. I am interested in silver if it is going to do something to help the manufacturers of this country; if it is going to help put men to work in the factories of this country; if it is going to create a buying power so that we can sell our surplus products; if it is going to take these men off the C.W.A., as ultimately they must come off, and put them back into industry. I say without fear of contradiction that nothing that has been done up to the present time, except the depreciation of our present dollar, has done one thing to increase our exports or to help commodity prices in this country, and the depreciation of the dollar has helped only to the extent that it has helped those commodities that have to be sold upon the world market.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator will concede that in the last analysis any country buying from the United States products such as cotton, for example, must pay for those products in goods.

Mr. WHEELER. There is no question about that.

Mr. TYDINGS. In other words, unless we can buy the products of the Orient, they cannot buy the products of the United States.

Mr. WHEELER. I would not agree to that entirely with reference to the Orient, because the Orient is in a somewhat different position from the rest of the countries of the world with reference to that particular subject.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me put it in a different way. Let me ask the Senator how much monetary silver there is in China.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think anybody can say definitely how much monetary silver there is in China. Someone has said that there is approximately from 250,000,000 to 350,000,000 ounces of monetary silver in the world that is not being used at the present time.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think that is true; but what I wanted the Senator to estimate was the amount of monetary silver in China at the present time.

Mr. WHEELER. I could not estimate it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. WHEELER. I do.

Mr. PITTMAN. That can only be estimated by taking the amount of silver that has been produced and deducting from that the depreciation, the loss from abrasion, natural losses, and those things.

Mr. TYDINGS. I was going to say that the United States Bureau of the Mint some time ago—about 2 years ago, I think, in 1931—at the price of silver then prevailing, estimated that there were $654,698,000 worth of monetary silver in China. Taking that as a basis for this argument, assuming that there is approximately $700,000,000 worth of silver in China, if China were to purchase $700,000,000 worth of American products, and there were no other monetary silver in China, that would be the limit of China's buying capacity.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. The point I am trying to bring out is that in the last analysis China keeps her silver in China, so that she can buy another allotment of cotton by selling to somebody else some goods for which she gets money, and in the end uses that same money to buy our goods.

Mr. WHEELER. Exactly. There is no question about it.

Mr. TYDINGS. While I do not contend for a moment that the Senator's argument is not well taken, I did want to bring out the point that the money is only an incident to the transaction, and in the last analysis we simply swap goods for goods; and under the present economic set-up in the world, one reason, in my judgment, why we have no market today, is that we have a set of tariff restrictions and embargoes that curtail and limit trade rather than encourage and accentuate it.

Mr. WHEELER. There is no question but that the trade restrictions do that; but let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that the statement is repeatedly made that we trade goods for goods, and consequently that it does not make any difference what kind of money is used.

Mr. TYDINGS. I did not say that.

Mr. WHEELER. No; I understand that the Senator did not say it, and I do not say it; but the statement has been made to me by economists and by some bankers that we simply trade goods for goods, and it does not make any difference what the price of silver is, or how much the currency is depreciated. That is the old argument that was always made by the monometallists and the gold-standard people. What has happened since the break-down of the gold standard, however, has demonstrated beyond a question of a doubt that the depreciation of the currencies of the various countries acts as a restriction upon a country with depreciated currency in selling to or buying from a country that is off the gold standard.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield right there?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. I agree with the Senator, and I want to qualify my agreement with this illustration: If silver goes down in price in India or in the world, as far as the trade between one Chinaman and another Chinaman in China is concerned, probably the price of silver is secondary.

Mr. WHEELER. Exactly.

Mr. TYDINGS. But when it comes to international trade, I think the Senator's point is absolutely sound—that they translate their products into money in China; and therefore, when that is out of relationship with our money, it diminishes or increases the amount of trade as the price of silver fluctuates up or down.

Mr. WHEELER. Exactly; and that is the reason why the argument of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] with reference to our depreciating our currency in foreign exchange has no application to prices in this country, for the simple reason that it was clearly demonstrated that when Great Britain depreciated her currency the price of commodities did not rise commensurately with the amount of the depreciation.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. The figures that the Senator from Maryland quoted were in dollars.

Mr. TYDINGS. They were in dollars.

Mr. PITTMAN. As a matter of fact, they were based, as I recollect, on a silver price of about 30 cents an ounce.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think that is correct.

Mr. PITTMAN. As a general thing, in dealing with silver we are dealing with ounces, and I think the figures are as nearly correct as we can get them. There are probably 2,000,000,000 ounces of hoarded silver in India. There are probably 250,000,000 to 350,000,000 ounces of current silver in the large banks, like those of Shanghai. There are probably 6,000,000,000 of hoarded silver in India, and altogether there are probably 12,000,000,000 of silver in the world. Practically all of this silver is used for purchases—even the jewelry of India or chunks of silver in China.

If the Chinaman can buy four times as much with an ounce of silver in the United States, he will buy; his purchasing power in the United States is increased; and yet the silver that we receive in purchases here is less valuable than our own silver which we circulate here, the $800,000,000 worth of silver.

Just one other point as to this theory that a country can only buy as much goods as it sells. That is absolutely true as between two thoroughly developed countries like France and Germany. It was not true at all at the beginning of the settlement of this country, because we allowed a man to take a homestead, and it cost him nothing. A farmer from Great Britain came over here and paid him a thousand pounds for it. The day before the American farmer had nothing except a piece of land. The next day he had a thousand pounds, with which he could make purchases anywhere in the world. A prospector went out and found a coal mine in West Virginia or an iron mine in Michigan. Prospectors found mines everywhere. The prospector paid nothing for the mine. It was new wealth; and yet the British, the French, the Germans, and the Dutch came over here, and they paid millions and millions of pounds for this wealth. It was wealth in this country—new wealth. The man that had it could buy with it.

There are two factors. One of them is the shipment of money to a country, the income that cannot be figured on. The other is the natural wealth of a country that is brought into use as a buying power that formerly did not exist.

Just one other statement: If we can give to China $3,000,000,000 worth of purchasing power they will start in buying rails if they need them; they will start in buying engines, automobiles, machinery to dig canals, and so forth. They will open up that country; and as they open it up capital will flow in from the world to take advantage of those raw resources and again start buying power.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not in disagreement with what the Senator from Nevada has just said. The only point he brought out that I have not brought out is that as the silver comes here to buy raw materials, or rails, or what not, and goes back to China, it creates new wealth there to take the place of the silver which came out in the form of an inflow of capital, and keeps money in balance.

What I rose to bring out—it might be a good point to have these figures—was this:

In 1932 the United States Treasury Department issued a pamphlet called "The World Monetary Stock." That pamphlet claimed that from the year 1492, 15,170,272,102 ounces of silver had been found in all the world. The pamphlet went on to show that the average amount of silver produced each year in relation to the gold production was constant, that it was around 93 percent, but that the value of the silver fluctuated anywhere from 24 to 70 percent of the value of the gold, which I think illustrates what the Senator has been saying.

[At this point Mr. WHEELER yielded the floor for the day.]

Saturday, January 27, 1934

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, as I said last night, I hope that nothing I may say and nothing I may do with reference to the pending amendment will be construed or can be construed by anyone as an attempt in any wise to hinder the President's program. On the contrary, I am thoroughly convinced, as are many other Members of this body and of the House of Representatives, that instead of hindering the President's program the amendment which I am offering to the gold reserve bill will materially assist in doing the very thing which he by his proclamation of May 12, 1933, said that he wanted to do. In that proclamation he stated:

By proclamation to fix the weight of the gold dollar in grains 0.9 fine, and also to fix the weight of the silver dollar in grains 0.9 fine, at a definite fixed ratio to the gold dollar at such amounts as he finds necessary from his investigation—to stabilize domestic prices or to protect farm commerce against the adverse effect of depreciated foreign currencies, and to provide for the unlimited coinage of said gold and silver at the ratio so fixed.

To do what?—

Then he stated:

Whereas, from investigations made by me, I find it necessary, in aid of the stabilization of domestic prices and in accordance with the policy and program authorized by Congress, which are now being administered, and to protect our foreign commerce against the adverse effect of depreciated foreign currencies, that the price of silver be enhanced and stabilized.

When that proclamation was issued, it provided for the purchase of domestically mined silver at approximately 64½ cents an ounce. That, of course, was of assistance and value to the western mining interests. As to that there can be no question whatsoever. In effect, it amounted to a subsidy to the silver-mining interests to the extent of the difference between the world market price and the price of 64½ cents. I have never fought for a subsidy for the mining interests, and I have never been interested in the price of silver from the standpoint of simply granting a subsidy to the mining interests. I have been interested in it because of the firm conviction which I now have and which I have always had, and which the President apparently has, to the effect that only by raising the world price of silver can we affect world commodity prices as distinguished from domestic prices.

The amendment which I have offered is exactly in line with the statements which have been made by the President of the United States in his speeches during the campaign, one of which was made in my home city of Butte, Mont., and in his statements to the Congress. It is in line with his proclamation and with his desire to reestablish commodity prices at the 1926 level. I think every Member of the Senate is in accord with the President's idea of raising commodity prices to the 1926 level. I think it is a most commendable idea.

While I have offered the amendment as a compromise, it does not, as I said yesterday, open the mints to the free coinage of silver. It does not establish the 16-to-1 ratio between silver and gold, as I had wanted to do and as I had asked should be done in bills previously introduced by me. But the amendment does propose to raise the price of silver in the world market. It does give to the administration an opportunity, not based upon argument, not upon the advice of college professors, to demonstrate the correctness of the theory which I have advanced and which many other Members of the Senate have advanced and which the great leaders of the Democratic and Republican Parties in the past have advanced, namely, that if we raise the price of silver we are going to help our foreign trade in the Orient and in all silver-using countries, and, in addition to that, we are going to make it possible for the opening up of China for capital exports to that country as well as to South and Central American countries. That was very ably explained yesterday by the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN].

While I am on this subject, let me invite attention to the fact that this is not a partisan matter. I quote from President Benjamin Harrison in his message to the Senate of April 26, 1892, in which he said:

It may not be inappropriate, however, to say here that believing that the full use of silver as a coined metal upon an agreed ratio by the great commercial nations of the world would very highly promote the prosperity of all their peoples.

That is taken from volume 9, page 238, of President's Messages.

Alexander Hamilton, the greatest Secretary of the Treasury of the United States up to the advent of Mr. Mellon, in his able and invaluable report in 1791 on the establishment of the mint, declared that—

To annul the use of either gold or silver as money is to abridge the quantity of circulating medium and is liable to all the objections which arise from a comparison of the benefits of a full circulation with the evils of a scanty circulation. It seems most advisable not to attach the unit exclusively to either of the metals because this cannot be done effectually without destroying the office and character of them as money and reducing it to the situation of merchandise.

This is exactly what has happened in the world at the present time. This is exactly what Alexander Hamilton predicted.

Let me invite the attention of the Members of the Senate to the fact that on the question of gold and silver, on the question of using those two metals as a standard to measure the exchange value of commodities of the Occident with those of the Orient, the only point that could be agreed upon by both Hamilton and Jefferson was that in this Nation we should have a bimetallic standard.

Some people look upon bimetallism as Bryanism. Some have said, "I should like to vote with you except that it would be looked upon as Bryanism." Bryan was not the author of this plan. It was none other than Alexander Hamilton and Thomas Jefferson who were the authors and fathers of this system of money in the United States. It was written not only into our monetary laws, but likewise in the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator might add that bimetallism was established in all parts of the world generally when we drafted the act of 1792; so that they simply accepted as a fait accompli the bimetallic or double standard which existed throughout the world.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, John A. Logan, speaking in 1899, said:

The cause of our depression is money famine and nothing else.

What was true then is true now. As the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] pointed out yesterday, the trouble is at the present time that there is not sufficient primary money in the world upon which to base the currencies and the credits of the world. Consequently, after the war we had the greatest currency and credit inflation that the world has ever seen, based not upon any metal, not upon primary money but based entirely upon a paper foundation.

I wish we could for just a moment visualize the idea that this condition was due not only to a money famine but likewise that it was due to the fact that there was not enough primary money in the world. What took place after the war? We all know that in 1920 and 1922, after the tremendous credit and currency inflation caused by the war, the international bankers met, first, I think, at Berne, Switzerland, and again at some other place and said, "Let us put the world back upon the gold standard."

They attempted to do it, and they practically even turned over to Germany a tremendous amount of gold for the purpose of putting Germany back on the gold standard. But because France was a creditor nation, and our position in the world changed from that of a debtor nation to that of a creditor nation, and because these two nations had 70 percent of all the gold in the world, the other nations, as they lost their gold, had to contract their currencies if they wanted to remain upon the gold standard. They contracted them to a point where they could not longer contract them, because as they contracted their currencies the price of their commodities went down. Finally, one after another, they went off the gold standard, until practically 40 nations in the world had abandoned it. Then they started to depreciate their currencies, with the result that finally our Nation, notwithstanding the fact that it had all the gold it could possibly use and more gold than it could use, was forced off the gold standard, not because we were losing our gold, but because we were losing our commerce and our business. That is the reason why we went off the gold standard. We went off it because we wanted to protect our foreign trade as against the competing nations of the world that were unable to trade with us because of their depreciated currencies.

I have heard men talk, I think, on the floor of the Senate, about what happened to France when she cut the gold content of her franc. Let me call attention to the fact that what France did was not first to cut the gold content of her franc. What France actually did was to go to a paper inflation. She put out so much paper that her franc gradually went down until her money became worth very little. Then, instead of first cutting the gold content, France, by issuing paper currency, devaluated her money, and then finally stabilized it at a higher value than her money had at the time it was stabilized.

To those who think that just because we are going to cut the gold content of the dollar we are going to have any more money in circulation or that our action is going to help commodity prices in this country, I desire to state that they are going to have a rude awakening unless more currency shall be issued upon the value of the gold that is already outstanding.

I desire to make a prediction. I noticed an article in the Hearst papers this morning to the effect that the administration had entered into some kind of arrangement with great Britain to stabilize the dollar at 60 cents. Rumor has it that no more currency is to be issued. Let me predict that if we shall simply cut the gold content of the dollar, and no more currency shall be issued, and silver shall not be used for the purpose of increasing the amount of money in circulation, we will have a continuance of low commodity prices.

It is not simply a question of cutting the gold content of the dollar. If anyone of us had $20 or $50 and we simply cut the gold content of the dollar, but the equivalent of the gold thus released was not permitted to be used and put in circulation, it would have no effect upon domestic commodity prices.

What the administration thus far has done has been to depress the dollar by buying gold, and cheapening the dollar in that way with reference to gold. The officials of the administration have depressed the dollar by artificial means in the world market; and by thus depressing it forcibly in the world market they have aided our foreign trade and our foreign commerce, because in that way they have depreciated our currency in foreign markets. But the moment they stabilize it at any figure, unless more currency shall be placed in circulation and unless credit shall be loosened up tremendously, just that minute we will see the dollar go up, because in comparison to our natural resources, in comparison to the virility of the American people, we have less money in circulation at the present time than almost any other nation in the world.

I desire now to quote James G. Blaine, who for many years was the guiding genius of the Republican Party. He said upon the floor of the House on February 7, 1878:

> On the much-vexed and long-mooted question as to a bimetallic or nonmetallic standard, my own views are sufficiently indicated in the remarks I have made. I believe the struggle now going on in this country and in other countries for a single gold standard would, if successful, produce wide-spread disaster in and throughout the commercial world.
>
> The destruction of silver as money and establishing gold as the sole unit of value must have a ruinous effect on all forms of property except those investments which yield a fixed return in money. These would be enormously enhanced in value and would gain a disproportionate and unfair advantage over every other species of property. If, as the most reliable statistics affirm, there are nearly $7,000,000,000 of coin or bullion in the world, not very unequally divided between gold and silver, it is impossible to strike silver out of existence as money without results which will prove distressing to millions and utterly disastrous to tens oft thousands.

As my distinguished colleage from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] said on yesterday, had it not been for the tremendous amount of gold which was found just after 1896, or about that time, in South Africa, every prediction made by James G. Blaine and other leading Republicans at that time on the floor of the House of Representatives and on the floor of the Senate would have come true. It was because of the tremendous new production of gold at that time in South Africa, and because of the development of new machinery for the purpose of recovering gold from low-grade ore, that that disaster was prevented.

Again, Mr. Blaine said:

> I believe gold and silver coin to be the money of the Constitution; indeed, the money of the American people, anterior to the Constitution which the great organic law recognized as quite independent of its own existence. No power was conferred on Congress to declare either metal should not be money.

He went so far as to say that:

> Congress has therefore, in my judgment, no power to demonetize silver any more than to demonetize gold.

Senator John Sherman, of Ohio, said in 1869:

> The contraction of the currency is a far more distressing operation than Senators suppose. Our own and other nations have gone through that operation before. It is not possible to take that voyage without the sorest distress. To every person except a capitalist out of debt, or a salaried officer or annuitant, it is a period of loss, danger, lassitude of trade, fall of wages, suspension of enterprise, bankruptcy, and disaster. It means ruin of all dealers whose debts are twice their business capital, though one third less than their actual property. It means the fall of all agricultural production without any great reduction of taxes. What prudent man would dare to build a house, a railroad, a factory, or a barn with this certain fact before him?

Are we not experiencing exactly that situation at the present time?

John G. Carlisle, then a Member of the House of Representatives, said on February 21, 1878:

> I know that the world's stock of precious metals is none too large, and I see no reason to apprehend that it will ever be so. Mankind will be fortunate indeed if the annual production of gold and silver coin shall keep pace with the annual increase of population and industry. According to my views of the subject the conspiracy which seems to have been formed here and in Europe to destroy, by legislation and otherwise, from three seventhe to one half the metallic money of the world is the most gigantic crime of this or any other age. The consummation of such a scheme would ultimately entail more misery upon the human race than all the wars, pestilences, and famines that ever occurred in the history of the world.
>
> The absolute and instantaneous destruction of half the entire movable property of the world, including houses, ships, railroads, and other appliances for carrying on commerce, while it would be felt more sensibly at the moment, would not produce anything like the prolonged distress and disorganization of society that must inevitably result from the permanent annihilation of one half of the metallic money of the world.

The then junior Senator from Texas, Mr. Roger Q. Mills, on the 3d of February 1886, on the floor of the Senate, said:

> But in all the wild, reckless, and remorseless brutalities that have marked the footprints of resistless power there is some extenuating circumstance that mitigates the severity of the punishment due the crime. Some have been the product of the fierce passions of war, some have come from the antipathy that separates alien races, some from the superstitions of opposing religions.
>
> But the crime that is now sought to be perpetrated on more than 50,000,000 of people comes neither from the camp of a conqueror, the hand of a foreigner, nor the altar of an idolator. But it comes from those in whose veins runs the blood of the common ancestry who were born under the same skies, speak the same language, reared in the same institutions, and nurtured in the principles of the same religious faith. It comes from the cold, phlegmatic, marble heart of avarice—avarice that seeks to paralyze labor, increase the burden of debt, and fill the land with destitution and suffering to gratify the lust for gold—avarice surrounded by every comfort that wealth can command, and rich enough to satisfy every want save that which refuses to be satisfied without the suffocation and strangulation of all the labor of the land. With a forehead that refuses to be ashamed it demands of Congress an act that will paralyze all the forces of production, shut out labor from all employment, increase the burden of debts and taxation, and send desolation and suffering to all the homes of the poor.

Wendell Phillips said—and it is very significant to remember at this particular moment what he said:

> In other words, it was the currency which, rightly arranged, opened a nation's wellsprings, found work for willing hands to do, and filled them with a just return, while honest capital, daily larger and more secure, ministered to a glad prosperity. Or it was currency, wickedly and selfishly juggled, that made merchants bankrupt and starved labor into discontent and slavery, while capital added house to house and field to field, and gathered into its miserly hands all the wealth left in a ruined land.

The first question, therefore, in an industrial nation is, Where ought control of the currency to rest? Every writer of political economy, from Aristotle to Adam Smith, allows that a change in the currency alters the price of every ounce and yard of merchandise and every foot of land. Whom can we trust with this despotism? At present the banks and the money kings wield this power. They own the yardstick and can make it longer or shorter, as they please. They own every pound weight and can make it heavier or lighter, as they choose. This explains the riddle, so mysterious to common people, that those who trade in money always grow rich, even while those who trade in other things go into bankruptcy.

Why was the metallic standard adopted? It was adopted because the people did not dare to trust the monetary standard to the despotism of any particular individual. Wendell Phillips expressed the thought in language that should be brought home to the American people at this very moment.

President William McKinley said:

I am for the largest use of silver in the currency of the country. I would not dishonor it. I would give it equal credit with gold. I would make no discrimination. I would utilize metals as money and discredit neither. I want the double standard.

Mr. President, there are those who have stated that we cannot adopt the double standard in this country at this time, because, it is said, we would be flooded with silver. I challenge any intelligent economist who has studied the subject of silver and knows anything about it to say that even were we to adopt the bill heretofore introduced by me, providing for the free and unlimited coinage of silver, this country would be flooded with silver, much less so if the compromise which I am now offering should be adopted.

The economist of one of the largest banks in New York City stated to me that at the present time unquestionably it would be impossible for China and India to send their silver to this country, because it is the only currency they know and the only currency they have, and if they should divest themselves of their silver it would be impossible for them to carry on business.

Someone may say, "But they could have a paper currency over there the same as in other countries." Not at all. Anyone who has traveled through China knows that that is an impossibility, because, as we all know, various war lords control different parts of China. Anyone who has traveled through that country will readily appreciate why it is that the people of China have to use a silver standard and why they have to have silver as money. It is because of the fact that when one war lord governs one place, and another war lord governs another place, and another war lord governs still another place, they might issue paper currency in one particular province which would have absolutely no value outside of that province. They cannot get enough gold to circulate as money, and the 500,000,000 people in China have no confidence, and can have no confidence under existing conditions, in a paper monetary system. So they are forced, not because they might not want to but by reason of the economic situation and by reason of the conditions existing in their country, to have silver coin of a certain weight and fineness circulated as money, so that regardless of what war lord is in power or what province it goes to, that money will have exactly the same value in all parts of China.

The economist to whom I referred said to me, therefore, that it is impossible for China to ship its silver to this country and the people there still to continue to carry on their trade and commerce. It should be apparent to any man who has ever studied the subject and who has ever visited China, that what this economist said to me is correct.

I likewise talked to one of the best-known economists in this country, residing here in the city of Washington, who by reason of his particular position was unable to come before the committee to testify, but who said identically the same thing. He said there was no question at all but that if we remonetize silver, if we raise the price of silver, for every penny in value we raise it, for every 5 cents in value we raise it, so likewise we raise the cost of production to the manufacturers in the silver-using countries.

Let me say to Senators from cotton- and tobacco-producing States, that as we raise the value of silver we likewise, beyond the peradventure of a doubt, raise the cost of production of cotton and tobacco in every silver-using country.

It is beyond my comprehension, Mr. President, why men who come from States that produce cotton, that produce tobacco, that are engaged in textile manufacture, cannot see the value which the raising of the price of silver would have to the industries of their respective States, how it would put men to work in their fields, bring prosperity to their farmers, and take men off the streets and put them back into the factories where they belong, instead of its being necessary to have them upon the rolls of C.W.A.

Mr. President, because of passions, because of political prejudices, are we afraid to do what we feel and know and believe ought to be done? What is the Senate of the United States coming to if men elected as representatives of the people of the Nation are afraid to express their honest convictions upon the floor of the Senate? What is going to become of representative government if we, the representatives of the people who sent us here, are afraid to stand on the floor of the Senate and express our honest convictions?

On yesterday I was asked whether I trusted the President of the United States. Yes; of course, I trust him. As I said then, and now repeat, I trusted him before the convention in the city of Chicago; I trusted him in that convention in Chicago; but that I trust him, that I like him, Mr. President, is no reason under the sun why I should stand on the floor of the Senate and be afraid to voice my honest convictions upon this or any other fundamental principle which affects the people of the United States or of my constituency. If the Members of the House of Representatives and the Members of the Senate become so cowardly that they are afraid to assert their manhood and their convictions and their principles upon the floor of Congress, then representative government in this country is at an end.

Mr. President, I am for the amendment because I know it is right. I know that every great thinker of this country who has served in Congress who has not been affected by greed and selfishness and avarice has stood and argued in favor of it upon the floor of Congress. I would present this cause upon the floor of the Senate and I would argue for it, believing in the principles of it as I do, even though I knew it would mean my defeat tomorrow.

Men may disagree with me. Never for one moment because a man honestly differs with me do I dislike him for it. I admire a man even though he disagrees with me if he has the courage of his convictions to stand in the Halls of Congress and disagree.

Mr. President, I am not asking for the remonetization of silver in the amendment now offered to the bill; I am simply asking that this amendment be put into the bill as an experiment, to demonstrate beyond peradventure to those who say that we cannot remonetize silver, and that it will wreck our financial system, that it can be done; and I say in all seriousness and without fear of contradiction that if we shall adopt this amendment to the bill we will be doing the administration a favor rather than a disfavor.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, can the Senator give me an estimate of the number of men employed directly in the mining of silver?

Mr. WHEELER. I cannot state the exact number, but I will say that if this amendment were enacted into law the result would be that men who are now on the rolls of the C.W.A. in 11 States of the Union would be put to work in the silver mines. It would result in taking off the pay roll men now being paid out of money supplied by the Government to do possibly more or less useless things; it would result in taking them off what amounts practically to a dole and employing them in a way that would create wealth. It would result in their being employed in doing something that would not only be useful and would result in the creation of new wealth but would give our farmers purchasing power and would give purchasing power to 500,000,000 people in China, who want to purchase commodities produced by our people but are unable to do so at present because of the fact that they have to pay a greater price in their silver currency.

I now desire to call attention to a letter I have received from Mr. Frank B. Cook, of Salt Lake City, one of the best students of this subject of whom I know. He says:

I have recently been appearing before some of the lunch clubs in this city for the purpose of discussing the so-called "silver question" and find that the principal inquiry is, Will we not be flooded with silver if we open the mints to free and unlimited coinage?

My answer is that France held her mints open to free coinage of either metal from 1803 to 1874 at a ratio of 15½ to 1. During part of this period, 1834 to 1873, our mints were open at 15.998 to 1. France therefore valued silver more highly than we did. Notwithstanding this, by referring to the report of the Director of the Mint for 1880, page 59, it will be seen that, while in 1850 she had in circulation 2,126,607,000 francs in gold and 3,326,146,000 francs in silver, in 1873 she had 6,005,897,000 gold francs and 2,367,490,000 silver francs. This does not support the statement either that silver drove gold out of France or that any country would be deluged with the white metal by establishing unlimited demand at a stated ratio.

M. Robert Masson, at the annual banquet of the New York City bankers, January 19, 1914, explained how France at that time protected either metal as follows: How is this successful policy of the Bank of France materially possible? Precisely because it has the option to pay in silver as well as gold. When the situation is such that withdrawals of yellow metal is to be feared, the bank quotes a premium on gold. At present, for instance, the quotation is about one tenth of 1-percent premium; that is to say you will only get $999 in gold against $1,000 in notes. If you want to get $1,000 cash, you can get them, but in silver. I do not know when this rule went into effect, but it was continued up to the time of the World War.

I have asserted and do assert that, if the United States remonetized silver, we would not be flooded with silver for the following reasons:

First. It is human nature to retain possession of an article as the value (price) increases.

Second. The only important sources from which we could be flooded are from the hoarded silver of India and China. I quoted Dr. Arendtz, of Harvard. "The story about huge stocks of silver waiting to be dumped on the United States is simply a myth. The portions that are undoubtedly held in India and China in private hoards would not come out. Of that I have no doubt whatever, because those savings are the savings of the poor and middle-class people. They are kept not for speculative purposes, but, like savings deposits of the poor and middle-class people here, a man there will accumulate a little silver by way of ornaments or of silver bullion, against the marriage of his daughter or a death in the family, or his own death or famine, and all experience has shown that that comes out only when the contingencies arise and never because of a change in the gold value of the silver they have hoarded. A price of $1.35 or $1.38 in 1919 which we had brought no more than 50,000,000 ounces out of China. I think that shows pretty clearly that those hoards will not come. They are performing their function and will stay there. You won't get those."

Third. During a period of at least 75 years, which covers a time when the gold price of silver was both high and low and when, through selfish legislation, silver as a basis money was discredited, India bought more each year than she sold and with the exception of 2 years, China did likewise.

Fourth. Any silver which would come to us would result in a flood of orders for wheat, cotton, lumber, oil, tobacco, etc., from the Orient.

Fifth. The United States is a strong creditor nation and the balance of trade is in our favor. Unlimited demand at a stated ratio would immediately establish the price in every capital of the world. To think otherwise we must admit that a country able to extend credits of billions of dollars to foreign nations and their people cannot establish and maintain a price of a commodity of limited amount. Notwithstanding statements to the contrary, no country can properly spare a single ounce of silver from its monetary supply. A glance at the report of the Director of the Mint for 1933, pages 96 to 99, inclusive, will show this.

I will appreciate any comment you may care to make on what I have written.

With best wishes, I remain, sincerely,

F. B. COOK.

Let me likewise, Mr. President, call attention to a statement of a distinguished economist from another country, Mr. José Luis Requena, a Spaniard, whose book, entitled "The Crisis in the Gold Standard", has been translated into English. He said:

It is not true that such a thing is impossible—

Referring to silver—

It is not true that such a thing is impossible. Let us imagine for a moment that the United States, say, took the initiative and rehabilitated silver as a coin for its currency, and consequently seized and controlled Asiatic markets, like China, and India, likewise, in spite of British dominance, and the trade of the whole of Latin America and perhaps also of a number of other countries in the rest of the world, and we would then see how the other preponderant nations, England, France, Germany, Italy, and even Japan, would fold their wings and alight on the same competitive field.

We have taken the United States as the subject for our example, because it is at present the power wielding most influence in world economy. In regard to that nation, Dr. F. Mlynarcki says: "The share contributed by the United States to the total volume of world production is 33 percent. The proportion of raw materials produced by it is even higher. The American output of coal, pig iron, steel, zinc, lead, and tobacco amounts to about 40 percent of the world's production, and copper and cotton to 50 percent, maize to 60 percent, and petroleum to over 70 percent. The whole world is now dependent to a much greater extent on American production, than it was on English prior to the World War. * * * He whose interest in a business amounts to 33 percent has the control; a country furnishing 33 percent of the production of the whole world controls all the others, for good or ill."

So, Mr. President, not only did the economist for the leading banking house in New York, not only did a distinguished economist here in this city connected with one of our institutions, not only did other distinguished economists take this position but Mr. Requena and everyone else who has given serious consideration to the subject have predicted exactly the same course of events under the bill which I previously offered for the free and unlimited coinage of silver.

Let me call attention to the fact that the certificates of deposit which would be issued under my amendment would be the soundest money that could possibly be suggested or which this Government would have, because always back of those silver certificates would be silver bullion to equal their gold value. It would absolutely be the soundest and the safest currency that could possibly be had in this country. The same kind of currency circulates in Europe at the present time. It is issued by the Netherlands, and is accepted at 100 cents upon the dollar throughout the entire length and breadth of Europe. The gold certificate, as has been pointed out here, is no longer redeemable in gold. The only certificate which would be redeemable would be the silver certificate. The silver dollar at the present time is redeemable only in approximately 70 cents gold. If this amendment shall be adopted, the silver certificate will be redeemable in its absolute face value in gold, and likewise every solitary silver certificate in the United States will be redeemable at 100 percent silver in its gold value.

Mr. President, in line with what I have been saying with reference to the demonetization of silver, I wish to call attention to an article which recently appeared in the Washington Herald of January 19 entitled "Economic Slavery", by Robert H. Hemphill, a financial authority. In this article he says:

The issuance of bonds due to the cost of the Civil War precipitated a crisis which came near resulting in the repeal of the National Bank Act and the issuance of full legal tender money by the Government.

Salmon P. Chase, Secretary of the United States Treasury and subsequently Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, eventually realized that he had been imposed upon by his friends, international bankers, and denounced the National Bank Act as follows:

"My agency in procuring the passage of the National Banking Act was the mistake of my life. It has built up a monopoly that affects every interest in the country. It should be repealed. But before this can be accomplished the people will be arrayed on one side and the banks on the other in a contest such as we have never seen in this country."

Then Mr. Hemphill goes on to say:

During this campaign, on March 12, 1893, the National Bankers Association sent out to all banks what was known as "the panic circular", as follows:

"DEAR SIR: The interests of national bankers require immediate financial legislation by Congress. Silver, silver certificates, and Treasury notes must be retired and the national bank notes, upon a gold basis, made the only money. This requires the authorization of $500,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 of new bonds as a basis of circulation. You will at once retire one third of your circulation and call in one half of your loans. Be careful to make a money stringency felt among your patrons, especially among influential business men. Advocate an extra session of Congress for the repeal of the purchase clause of the Sherman law; and act with other banks of your city in securing a large petition to Congress for its unconditional repeal, as per accompanying form. Use personal influence with Congressmen; and particularly, let your wishes be known to your Senators. The future life of national banks as fixed and safe investments depends upon immediate action, as there is an increasing sentiment in favor of governmental legal tender notes and silver coinage."

In other words, Mr. President, this was done for the very purpose of securing the repeal of the Sherman law, which provided for a larger use of silver in the coinage of the United States.

With reference to the subject whether or not we will be flooded with silver, let me call attention to the fact that I think it was at a conference held here in the city of Washington by the so-called "Committee of the Nation" at which Professor Warren made the statement that, as a matter of fact, there was not silver enough in the world to raise commodity prices back to the price levels of 1926. In other words, instead of his fearing that we would be flooded with silver, instead of his fearing that we would have inflation enough, he said if we remonetized silver there would not come to this country enough silver and we would not have enough silver to raise commodity prices back to the level of 1926.

I wish also to call attention to a quotation from the same author from whom I quoted a few moments ago in his book entitled "The Crisis and the Gold Standard", giving a few statistics with reference to the production of gold and silver. He says:

Production of gold from 1493 to 1930, that is, over a period of 437 years, reached the enormous quantity of 32,479,547 kilograms. Production of silver over the same period amounted to 470,673,514 kilograms, the ratio between them being thus 14.5.

Taking a much shorter period, from 1873 to 1929, and calculating the output in ounces, the result obtained is in the form of figures absolutely ignored in those discussions. During that period of 56 years gold production amounted to 748,428,327 ounces of fine gold, as compared with 9,023,620,654 of silver, being a ratio between both metals, by weight, over that 56-year period, averaging 13.6. It should be noted that in some years, like 1914, 1915, and 1916, the ratio just mentioned dropped to 8.1, 7.6, and 8.2, respectively. Lastly, gold production in 1929 came to 19,496,721 ounces of fine gold and 262,598,000 ounces of silver, being a ratio of 13.4. As regards 1930, we find that production amounted to 20,160,355 ounces of gold and 248,139,133 of silver, according to data furnished by the New York Bureau of Mint. (World Almanac.) The ratio for that year dropped a trifle lower, as it was 12.4.

From the data herein quoted it would appear beyond a doubt that production of silver with respect to gold has not, over something more than 4 centuries, exceeded an average of 15 to 1. This factor would seem to be decisive if we were not obliged, in all faith, to admit that that low ratio is due to the considerably increased supply of gold yielded by the mines of the Transvaal and Rhodesia in the last few years.

But for a period of over four centuries, as this author points out, it has not been over 14 to 1.

Mr. President, I have invited attention to what it would mean to this country if we stabilized the price of silver at a ratio approximately relative to the price of gold. I have always contended that if that should happen it would increase the buying power of millions of Chinese, and particularly it would raise the costs of the manufacturers in that country so that the manufacturers of this country would be able to compete with them in the world markets. I think no one can contradict the statement I have made that as we raise the price of their money we increase the cost of production in all silver-using countries.

If that be true, what would it mean to the countries that produce silver, if silver were actually stabilized as money and was not simply a commodity fluctuating up and down? I can give an example of what it would mean. It would mean, as the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] has pointed out, that in a backward country like China capital would be transferred to that country and the development of railroads, for instance, would take place. It would mean in Mexico and other South American countries that there would be capital exports from this country.

I can give a striking example of what would happen. Between 1880 and 1890 all the railroads and many other works in Argentina were constructed with British capital and this brought a wave of prosperity which culminated in a great boom in British railroad and industrial stocks in 1888 and 1889, yet the population of Argentina at that time was only 6,000,000.

If this was the result of supplying the needs of 6,000,000 people, what might it be from supplying the needs of the 1,130,000,000—200 times as many—of the silver-using countries? I am informed that the total exports to these countries in 1929 and 1930 were $1,250,000,000; in 1931-32 they had shrunk to $490,000,000, which represents a paltry 44 cents per head for these 1,130,000,000 customers. I estimate that the purchases of these people would be many times what they are now.

It has been estimated by some that their purchases would be 100 times what they are today, but assume, for the sake of argument, that they were only 10 times; it would mean $5,000,000,000 coming into this country instead of the miserable present $497,000,000, which is all that can be squeezed from two thirds of the world starved and reduced to misery by the actions of those who destroyed our silver and who today control the economic destinies of the world.

And yet we are saying that the way to increase prices in this country is to destroy commodities, that we are suffering from overproduction of cotton when people throughout the Orient are going half naked. We are saying that the way to create wealth is to destroy wealth, that the way to raise the price of wheat is to destroy wheat; that in the midst of plenty there is starvation. In a radio address the other night, speaking upon this subject, I asked if anybody ever heard of a jackass in a field where there was plenty of hay starving to death because there was too much hay? Did anybody ever hear of a worm dying because when he was in the midst of an apple there was too much apple? Did anybody ever hear of any animal in the world except human beings starving and dying because of the fact there was too much food, or going naked because there was too much clothing?

The philosophy we are adopting in destroying hogs and other food and in destroying cotton is morally wrong when the world is full of starving people; and likewise it is morally wrong to destroy the commodities from which clothes are made when countless people are almost naked. It is morally wrong, it is legally wrong, and those who continue to do it are going to be punished if there is, as we believe there is, a just God.

What is needed in this country today, as well as throughout the world, is the means to purchase the things which are produced. The reason why we have not the means is that there is not only a shortage of gold, but whatever gold there is has been sterilized and confined to two or three countries. When we shall have cut the gold content of the dollar we are not going to provide basic money; we are not going to provide primary money for those countries that are not now on the gold standard and that cannot get any more gold. There is no intention to let that gold be redistributed at all. There is no intention to let that gold be put in the hands of other countries for the purpose of enabling them to have a primary money upon which they may issue currency and obtain credit so that they may buy our products—not at all, Mr. President.

Unless we shall create more currency and more credit than are in existence today it will be impossible to raise commodity prices in our country. If we create paper currency, if we have only a paper currency, commodity prices in this country may be raised, but that will not affect world commodity prices.

As I pointed out the other day, when Germany went to a paper basis and created a tremendous amount of paper currency, she did raise commodity prices in that country. As the increased amount of currency was issued, people said they would rather have commodities than that kind of currency, so they bought commodities with the money.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am very much impressed with what the Senator has said. I think he is making a very sound argument. Does he not believe that in the last analysis the thing the American people need is a market for the sale of their goods?

Mr. WHEELER. There is no question about that at all.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it not the Senator's viewpoint that the only real increase that will come in commodity prices, one that will be basically sound and endure, will be through a revival of international trade?

Mr. WHEELER. There is no question about that at all. When I am seeking by this amendment a larger use of silver I am contending for exactly that thing. I am asking that we be able to put ourselves in position where we can sell our surplus products to South America and to the Orient rather than to have to plow them under and destroy them. I am asking that we find markets for our surplus farm products, for our surplus cotton, our surplus wheat, and our surplus manufactured articles as well. Until that is done there is no more possibility of prosperity returning to this country than there is that I am going to fly. Economists may say what they wish to the contrary, but history teaches that it cannot be done in any other manner.

There has been some talk about living within ourselves. It is going to be a physical impossibility for this Nation to live within itself, and why? Because of the fact that we sell 50 percent of our cotton abroad. If we have to do that, we cannot automatically cut down that 50 percent without destroying the purchasing power of a tremendous number of our people. If we produce only 5 percent more than we ship abroad that would be a different thing, but when in the case of a commodity such as cotton, upon which so many people depend for a living, we cut down the 50 percent which is shipped abroad we destroy the earning capacity and buying capacity of millions of people througout the United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I would like to point out to the Senator that from 1893 down to date, a period of 40 years, there has not been a single year in which the United States has not sold more commodities in dollars to the world than the world has sold to the United States. The balance of trade for 40 years without one exception has been in our favor. During that period of time we have sold $119,000,000,000 of American commodities while buying only $84,000,000,000 in return. The favorable balance of trade is approximately $35,000,000,000. That has permitted Americans to go abroad and keep trade in substantial balance.

What I am unable to understand is how there can be any fundamental and lasting recovery until we get back the markets which we used to supply. I cannot see how we can get back those markets unless we take goods in exchange for our goods, money being an incident to the transaction.

I am glad the Senator has gone into this subject, because I am in full accord with what he has said on that phase of the problem.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator very much for his statement.

Mr. President, I have talked so long on this subject that I hesitate to say anything further, but I do want to invite the attention of the Senate to an article which is written by a man who is not from any State in which there are silver mines. It is not written by a man who is interested in silver in the remotest way. He has devoted his entire life to finance; but not as a college professor, not as one who studies in the classroom without any practical experience, not as one who is impractical, but as one who, by training and experience, has been a success in the business and financial world. He is the founder of the Tuck School of Business Administration at Dartmouth College. He has been so much interested in the education of our youth along sound economic lines that he established at that college, which is one of the greatest educational institutions in the United States, a school of business administration.

I refer to Edward Tuck, a man recognized throughout New England, a man whose home is in New Hampshire, remote from any mining of any kind or character. Mr. Tuck is at the present time, I think, in Europe; but he knows international exchange and international money as probably few men in the United States of America know it. He is a Republican—not a Progressive Republican but one who always has been on the conservative side—one of the leaders in Republican thought in New England States. I am not going to read all of his article, which appeared in the January number of Scribners but will quote from it the following:

> Money is an instrument of valuation, established by law, to measure, compare, and exchange values, and to serve as a legal tender for debts. The material of money is in principle unimportant, except so far as it is liable to affect the aggregate amount in existence—the total monetary mass. The value (purchasing power) of money is increased or decreased, ceteris paribus, in inverse proportion to its volume.

That is exactly what I have endeavored to say. If we simply cut the gold content of our dollar, but have no currency expansion, we will have no commodity price increase in this country. Let there be no mistake about that.

> Indefinite issues of paper money create redundancy and depreciation. Comparative fixity or limitation of supply is therefore requisite to give reasonable stability to the value of money. Paper money can be increased in amount indefinitely, at the will of the sovereign or of the legislators, while metallic money is susceptible of only a limited and measurable annual increase, which distributes itself among the nations. Added to the total accumulated monetary mass existing throughout the world, this increase forms but a very small percentage, and serves barely to supply the needs of constantly increasing population, production, and commerce. For these reasons it is agreed that metallic money alone constitutes a safe standard of value. From very early days, gold and silver have been selected by nations whose civilizations are built upon trade as the world's money metals. Hence they have received the name of "the precious metals."
>
> It is the legal function of money that gives to the metal its great value. It is the legislator who bestows upon the metal this function. The legislator can withdraw the money function and thereby destroy the metal's great value. Hence the term, "intrinsic value", applied to money, is misleading. Its value is almost entirely extrinsic. Aristotle says:
>
> "Money itself is only a frivolity, a futility; it has value only by the law and not by nature, inasmuch as a change of agreement among those who use it can depreciate it completely."
>
> If an example be needed to prove conclusively the accuracy of the great philosopher's conception of money, we have it in the monetary history of the last 60 years as regards silver.
>
> Bimetallism is the privilege of unlimited coinage of both gold and silver as full legal-tender money, at a ratio of weight fixed by law. This does not mean, as some suppose, redemption or convertibility of one metal by or into the other. Both metals stand on a perfect equality before the law. In the United States the silver dollars and silver certificates at present outstanding—465,000,000 in all—always stood at a parity with gold by reason of their equal legal tender quality for all debts. There is no good reason to doubt that the whole amount of silver belonging to our Government, including the silver bullion, could be paid out—were specie payments resumed—in dollars or in certificates, and retained in circulation at par with gold, as was the case prior to our going off the gold standard with the silver dollars and certificates then outstanding.
>
> Turgot, the great economist and Minister of Finance to Louis XVI, said:
>
> "Gold and silver are constituted money, and universal money, by the nature of things, independently of all convention and all law."
>
> Daniel Webster said in the United States Senate in 1836:
>
> "Gold and silver is the money of the Constitution. The constitutional standard of value is established and cannot be overturned. To overturn it would shake the whole system. Gold and silver at rates fixed by Congress constitute the legal standard af value in this country, and neither Congress nor any State has authority to establish any other standard or dispose of this."

Michel Chevalier is quoted by Mr. Tuck. Then he says:

> Many writers on economics today cite statistics of deposits, and prices compared with those of previous periods, seeking to prove thereby that the actual volume of gold suffices for the present needs of commerce and money circulation. If this is the case, how does it happen that not a single important nation can pay its obligations, either of maturing bonds or of its demand notes, in gold coin? Even in France, nominally still on the gold standard, napoleons are unobtainable except by purchase in the market at a premium equivalent to the price of gold in London.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> The people began to realize that the annual increase in the production of gold is not keeping pace with the expansion of the world's production of staple commodities, and especially with the prodigious increase in existing debts. Chief among these debts are those of the governments of all countries in seeking to supply the deficiency of metallic money by vast issues of paper promises to pay money on demand, which are universally dishonored, but to which the paper inflationists insist the United States shall add still further.

This world-wide paper-money inflation exists today to an unlimited excess and with augmenting depreciation in coin value.

That is why we had the great inflation of paper currency. It was because we did not have sufficient metallic money upon which to base the currencies of the country.

This increase in the coinage of both metals with its vivifying power was never considered money inflation. It was, in fact, the supply of a needed expansion of basic metallic money for increasing population and commerce. It is manifest today that gold alone does not suffice to satisfy this constantly growing need, and thereby the world is now threatened with financial ruin.

To the demonetization of silver, first by England in a fit of extreme insularity after the triumph of Waterloo, and subsequently by the United States, Germany, and (in consequence) France, may unquestionably be traced the present universal collapse. The eminent American economist, Prof. Francis A. Walker, author of a standard work, Money, published in 1877 and 1891, declared with emphasis:

"The history of the century would be searched in vain for a political blunder of equal enormity."

Fully 60 years ago the most acute and erudite students of monetary science warned the world of the inevitable consequences of this extrusion of silver as a joint monetary standard with gold. In the month of April 1870 Wolowski, a distinguished French economist, before a French currency commission, pointed out with remarkable accuracy the inevitable fall in price of all commodities as well as the great decline in the value of agricultural land and the increased burden of mortgages which the demonetization of silver would entail. He said:

"What the proposed change means is a veritable monetary revolution, and the worst of revolutions—one that leads to the unknown. Violent attacks are being made in our day on property. There is little to fear from open attacks upon the laws of human society that have grown up with man, emanating from his very nature. But I do not feel that there is the same security when it is a question of attacks which are the more perilous because those who make them are often not aware of their serious nature. Such would be the proposed measure regarding the demonetization of silver."

In 1871, 2 years before our own country demonetized silver, Ernest Seyd, well-known English author of Bullion and Foreign Exchanges, made this remarkably accurate forecast:

"It is a great mistake to suppose that the adoption of the gold valuation by other states besides England will be beneficial. It will only lead to the destruction of the monetary equilibrium hitherto existing and cause a fall in the value of silver from which England's trade and the Indian silver valuation will suffer more than any other interests, grievous as the general decline of prosperity all over the world will be. The strong doctrinism existing in England as regards the gold valuation is so blind that, when the time of depression sets in, there will be this special feature: The economical authorities of the country will refuse to listen to the cause here foreshadowed; every possible attempt will be made to prove that the decline of commerce is due to all sorts of causes and irreconcilable matters. The workman and his strikes will be the first convenient target; then speculation and overtrading will have their turn. Later on, when foreign nations, unable to pay in silver, have recourse to protection, when a number of other secondary causes develop themselves, then many would-be wise men will have the opportunity of pointing to specific reasons which in their eyes account for the falling off in every branch of trade. Many other allegations will be made, totally irrelevant to the real issue, but satisfactory to the moralizing tendency of financial writers."

At the foundation of our Government all Europe used what was then called the "double standard", the coinage of gold and silver at a fixed ratio of weight. Our own original standard money unit, as declared in 1792, was the Spanish silver dollar of 412½ grains.

I call attention, as I said a moment ago, to the views expressed in this article, because it is written by a man who does not come from a silver-producing State. Many men think that we of the West are interested in this question only because we produce silver; but here, let me say to the Senator from Massachusetts, is a New Englander, Mr. Edward Tuck, who I am sure the distinguished Senator knows, who, I know he will agree with me, is a man of great education and a profound student of economics, a great financial authority, who has no interest whatsoever in mines, mining, or anything else, but is interested only in the welfare of this Nation as a whole, and particularly interested in the welfare of his own native section of the country, New England.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator, in his long campaign for silver, has frequently been confronted with the argument that silver legislation meant a cheap dollar, has he not?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. Has not that been the standard argument—that if we had a cheap dollar we would have low wages and low prices to the farmer?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. I am wondering if the Senator will be good enough to reconcile the argument of those who oppose silver upon the ground that it would create a cheap dollar with the advocacy by the same people of a stabilization fund of $2,000,000,000 in order to give us a cheap dollar, which is based upon the premise, it is said, that other countries are establishing cheap currencies.

A cheap currency in Japan, in Germany, in England, in France, means but one thing—that they are producing the products which they export at a lower cost because they are paying their artisans and paying their farmers less for their labor. I hope the Senator can explain to me why, if we cheapen our dollar at great expense to us, it will not result in lower wages and lower prices to our farmers.

Mr. WHEELER. I shall be very happy to do so.

The difference, as I said, between a paper inflation and a remonetization of silver is this: A paper inflation has already taken place, and will continue to come about in this country. As I said, a tremendously large paper inflation is bound to be forced on us if we continue to issue bonds and more bonds and keep spending the money that we are having to spend for the C.W.A. and other things. I am not saying that that is not the right thing to do at the present time as a temporary expedient, but Mr. President, it is not going to raise commodity prices, and it is going to bankrupt the Nation if it is continued indefinitely.

What I am seeking to do, as the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] suggested a moment ago, is, first of all, to find a market for our surplus products, to feed the hungry mouths of the people of this and other countries, which can be accomplished by giving them a greater monetary base. The cheap dollar that is spoken of is the inflated dollar, the dollar which would correspond to the German paper mark, or the Austrian paper krone, or the Russian ruble. I am seeking to prevent such depreciated currency being issued in the United States. The way to do it is not by means of the method we have pursued, in my judgment, but the way to do it is to find markets for our surplus products, which will mean more employment in our factories and in our industries for the people who are now on the streets and those who are on the rolls of the C.W.A.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from Montana has been frequently labeled as radical in some of the magazines and newspapers. I never heard a sounder or more conservative and constructive argument than the one he has made today. It looks to me as if he had taken the conservatives and put them in the radical camp, and had become conservative himself.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no; if that is true, do not thank him, for heaven's sake. The Senator does not want to get in with the conservatives.

Mr. WHEELER. No. It depends on what the Senator from Maryland means by "conservative."

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator permit me further to impose upon his time?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Ever since 1920 we have frequently heard that the economics of Adam Smith have been tried and failed. Everyone will concede, I think, that from 1920 there never has been a greater economic abortion in the world than that which our own country and the other nations have forced upon humanity. As a matter of fact, we would have had the depression in 1921 as the result of the World War had it not been that we were making loans to our customers with which they were buying our goods, and the minute we stopped making those loans the whole economic fabric crashed.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course.

Mr. TYDINGS. And the economics of Adam Smith have not had a chance since the World War.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, if in 1920 and 1921 we had not loaned tremendous sums of money to Europe they could not have bought from us the products which they did buy and we would have had an economic crash at that very time, as the Senator from Maryland has said. We were, in effect, exporting gold to the countries of Europe. When we stopped exporting gold to those countries so as to give them the gold with which to buy our goods from us they could no longer buy goods from us, and we had an economic crash in the United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator care if I interrupt him further?

Mr. WHEELER. No.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator knows, however, that today many people who are advocates of an intense nationalism, with the plowing under of crops and all the other methods of curtailing production, predicate their belief that that is the thing to do upon the assumption that sound economic principles—they call them Wall Street principles—have been in play since 1920 and failed. As a matter of fact, Wall Street and the so-called "industrialists" who have dominated the political life of the country since 1920 were advocates of a policy which was not sound, and not economically set up so as to result in a balance of trade. I am glad the Senator is harking back to that mistake and seeking, so far as he may, to correct it with his amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. I agree entirely that that is the mistake which was made. For instance, Mr. Mitchell, formerly president of the National City Bank of New York, said a short time ago in a speech in Chicago that the thing to do was to put the countries of the world back on the gold standard. I ask now, how are we going to put those countries back on the gold standard? There is only one way in which we can put them back on the gold standard, and that is by taking our gold and giving it to them. We cannot do it otherwise. They attempted to take the gold by depreciating their currencies and depreciating their prices in the world markets so as to get gold, and they did it to such an extent that they were afraid of revolution and they were forced off of the gold standard. Then currencies were contracted all over the world; and we, of course, were left with the high-priced dollar; they could not trade with us, and they started trading with one another.

England, the father of the gold standard, had to leave it. But now, when we have depreciated our currency so as to meet the competition of Great Britain, what are they seeking to do? They are saying that we ought to stabilize our dollar. They say they want no silver legislation. Why do they not want any silver legislation? Because the banking interests of Great Britain want to dominate our money; and if we stabilize the dollar with reference to the pound they are going to manage the money, and they are going to fix the prices of commodities throughout the world, and are going to do it to the detriment of the United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one more interruption?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Coming down particularly to the Senator's amendment, he provides therein:

> (b) The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to purchase silver, at the rate of not less than 50,000,000 ounces per month, until there shall be added to the monetary resources of the United States 1,000,000,000 ounces of silver, except that whenever 37¼ grains of pure silver equals in purchasing power 23.22 grains of pure gold the purchase of silver under this subsection shall be suspended.

That is the real meat of the Senator's amendment.

May I ask the Senator with what medium of exchange will the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States pay for the silver he purchases?

Mr. WHEELER. He will issue silver certificates in payment therefor, and the silver certificates will be redeemable in silver bullion. So it will not cost the Government of the United States a 1-cent piece. What the Secretary of the Treasury will do will be to issue what will be a certificate of deposit, as a matter of fact. The silver will be taken to the Treasury of the United States, which will issue a silver certificate redeemable at all times in silver of equal amount.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator, therefore, means, I suppose, that silver shall only be purchased within the continental United States?

Mr. WHEELER. No; I think it could be purchased anywhere, but——

Mr. TYDINGS. But then it would have to be paid for in gold?

Mr. WHEELER. No; we would not have to pay for it in gold, because the amendment expressly provides that it shall only be paid for with silver certificates.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not taking issue with the Senator but trying to understand his thought. The Senator then means——

Mr. WHEELER. It cannot be paid for in gold dollars, because the gold is not available.

Mr. TYDINGS. That was what I was wondering about. The Senator means, therefore, that if we were to go out and buy silver, we could buy it in India?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Very well. If we bought silver in India, could we make payment in India with United States paper certificates predicated upon silver bullion?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes. If we bought silver in India, they would have to take their payment in silver certificates, or take surplus goods which we want to get rid of from the United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator's proposition may work out that way, and certainly so long as we purchased the silver in the United States it would; but I am frank to say that I have some misgivings about the Indian Government accepting United States paper dollars, or any other government accepting United States paper dollars.

Mr. WHEELER. If that were true, then the only silver we could get would be silver in the United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes. Of course, the Secretary of the Treasury could pay for it in gold.

Mr. WHEELER. He could if gold were free, but he cannot under the provisions of my proposed amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. The President could, however, issue an order to take care of the situation. I was just coming down to the economics of it. In such case we would be swapping gold for silver, and that would not be a good thing to do.

Mr. WHEELER. That could not be done under the provisions of my amendment, because a silver certificate is not redeemable in gold but is redeemable in bullion silver. The silver certificate could be used in payment of taxes; it could not be redeemed in gold; it is only redeemable in silver bullion. It could not be redeemed in gold even if we had free gold. Under the terms of the pending bill our gold will be held in the Treasury of the United States. Consequently the holders of silver certificates could not get gold. They could not get gold anyway, because the certificate is redeemable only in silver bullion.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me read this sentence from the amendment:

> Such silver shall be purchased, at home or abroad, wherever silver shall be procurable at or under the value specified above, with any direct obligations, coin, or currency of the United States authorized by law, or with any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated—

And so on, and so on. It seems to me under that provision—it may be a good provision, but I am merely trying to find out what can be done—that the Treasurer of the United States could send gold certificates to India with which to buy the silver.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course gold certificates could not be used for such purpose at the present time because they are not available. One could be prosecuted if he tried to pass a gold certificate.

Mr. TYDINGS. There are many of them in circulation.

Mr. WHEELER. But the Senator had better not be caught with any.

Mr. TYDINGS. Paper money, I am talking about. We are still allowed to own paper money. It has not been requested so far that it be turned in. So the Secretary of the Treasury could send gold certificates to India and make payment in gold certificates. Therefore, in effect, in that case we would be swapping our gold for silver.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that is not my purpose at all. My purpose, my idea is that when silver is bought it shall be paid for with silver certificates, which are only redeemable in silver bullion. If the Indian does not want to take such certificates, or if anyone else does not wish to take them, they can take in payment for silver products manufactured in this country.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not mean to say that the gold would not come back to this country, and that it would not be a sound transaction. What I was trying to find out was what could be done under the language of the proposal?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I do not believe we could, in 1896, have maintained the policy of bimetallism in the United States independently and alone. We could not have done it for the simple reason that at that time we were a debtor nation, as distinguished from being a creditor nation, such as we are at the present time. But now, being a creditor nation, if we raise the price of silver we increase the exportation of manufactured articles and raw materials from this country to the Orient, and consequently we increase our position as a creditor nation with the Orient.

The raising of the price of silver is, let me say to the Republicans in the Senate, like putting a tariff wall against Japanese and Chinese products which are shipped into our country in competition with our own products. The situation created by Far Eastern competition in our home market cannot be cured by a tariff, because those countries can depreciate their currency and lower the price of their products. If we raise the price of silver we automatically raise the cost of production of our competitors. We make it possible for them to buy from us, but we make it impossible for them to dump their products upon us at prices below the cost of production in this country. In other words, we make it not only possible for ourselves to compete with the oriental in this country, but we make it more possible to compete with him in the world market.

I previously pointed out how the low price of silver has affected our cotton textile trade during the last 20 years.

The figures I presented, concerning our trade with China, which were furnished me by the Department of Commerce, astounded me. Notwithstanding the fact that China has increased her consumption of manufactured cotton goods in the last 20 years, our sale of cotton goods to China has dropped from 80,000,000—I think those were the figures I gave yesterday—down to 2,000,000 square yards. Why? Because of the low price of silver. And as I pointed out last night, not only is Japan starting in to buy raw cotton from us, and making that cotton into the manufactured goods but now as we are starting to raise the price of cotton she is going down to India. She made a deal this month, in January, to buy raw cotton of India in exchange for cotton manufactured goods in the United States of America.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator provides in his amendment for the purchase of 50,000,000 ounces of silver per month until a billion ounces shall have been purchased, which means that over a period of 20 years it is proposed to purchase 50,000,000 ounces a month?

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator it is impossible to obtain a billion ounces of silver.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is not the point I am coming to. If it were possible, if that could be done——

Mr. WHEELER. It is not possible.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is provided in the amendment that this silver may be paid for by the Government or by the Secretary of the Treasury in any lawful money, which might be silver certificates or any other money that is lawful, except gold, for of course the Secretary could not pay for it with gold or gold certificates.

Assume that an owner of silver brings a hundred thousand ounces into the Treasury and gets silver certificates in return for it and that bullion is held in reserve against the additional silver certificates that might be issued based not upon weight but upon the value of the silver, would not that result in the issue of $2 in silver certificates for every dollar's worth of silver that is bought and held in the Treasury?

Mr. WHEELER. Not at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. Why not?

Mr. WHEELER. Because, as a matter of fact, under the amendment only silver certificates are going to be issued for the amount of silver that is obtained.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that; but certificates are to be issued to the holder of silver in the first instance when he brings the silver to the Treasury, and——

Mr. WHEELER. The amendment does not provide that silver certificates shall be issued in addition to that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Why not? What does it mean? It provides that such silver shall be paid for in—

> Coin, or currency of the United States, authorized by law, or with any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, at such rates and upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem most advantageous to the public interest; and the silver so purchased—

That means after it has been brought into the Treasury and silver certificates or some other form of money has been paid for it—

> And the silver so purchased shall be held in reserve in the Treasury against the issue of certificates of deposit payable to bearer on demand in silver bullion as hereinafter provided.

Then the amendment provides:

> Such silver certificates shall be issued by the Treasury in an amount, which, in the aggregate, shall equal the cost of such silver to the Treasury. Upon presentation of any such silver certificates the Treasurer of the United States shall redeem the same by the delivery of the face value thereof in silver bullion.

Mr. WHEELER. Is it not apparent to the Senator that if the silver certificates are redeemable in silver bullion but one certificate can be issued against an equal amount of silver bullion, because silver dollars would not be issued.

Mr. BARKLEY. It should not be when there has already been issued one certificate in payment of the silver in the first instance, that the Treasury could issue another one on the impounded silver as, it seems to me, the amendment provides.

Mr. WHEELER. All I am trying to do is to give some more discretion to the Secretary of the Treasury. The Senator has been advocating upon the floor of the Senate that we should give the Secretary all these powers. I simply want to give him discretion to the extent that he can buy silver and issue certificates against it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does this amendment harmonize with, or does it counteract or nullify, the provisions which we included in the Thomas amendment at the last session with reference to the purchase of silver?

Mr. WHEELER. It harmonizes with it entirely, in my judgment. In the Thomas amendment—and as a matter of fact the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and I wrote the provision with reference to silver very hurriedly, in a few minutes' time—it was provided that the President of the United States might by proclamation remonetize silver upon any basis that he wanted to remonetize it up to 16 to 1, or at any definite fixed ratio.

Mr. BARKLEY. Subsequently to that, of course, the London agreement in regard to silver was entered into, in which the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] had a large part. Under that agreement we have three situations, it seems to me, which we have to keep in mind in connection with the effect of this amendment. We have the Thomas amendment, to which the Senator has referred; we have the London agreement, which we are trying to carry out; and now we have this amendment, which, it seems to me, presents a third prong to the silver situation, which I am unable to harmonize with the other two.

Mr. WHEELER. I am sure that if the Senator had studied the subject carefully he would be able to harmonize it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I want to say that there is nothing in this amendment out of harmony with the London agreement. Under that agreement 66 governments agreed to abandon the practice and policy of depressing the markets of the world with silver derived from melting up and debasing silver coins. They further agreed to replace the low-value paper currency with silver coin, which would furnish a market for silver. They further agreed that they would never again permit a law to be passed that would depreciate the price of silver in the world. In other words, those three things removed the cause of the depression in silver throughout the world. That has not anything to do with the purchase of silver in our country.

Mr. WHEELER. It entirely harmonizes with it.

Mr. PITTMAN. The only other agreement was that two countries said, "We cannot stop right away; we have got to sell 35,000,000 ounces a year for 4 years, but we will limit that, and after we get through with that we will enter into the general agreement, provided the five countries where silver is mostly produced, namely, the United States, Canada, Mexico, Peru, and Australia, will take from their own mines in the aggregate 35,000,000 ounces a year for those 4 years. The President has proceeded to do that under his proclamation; so that there is no conflict there.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Montana will yield further, I am wondering, though, whether we have gone far enough in carrying out the original Thomas amendment, which provided, as we know, certain things with reference to the purchase of silver, and the London agreement, to make us feel sure-footed in taking this additional step with reference to the purchase of silver. I wonder whether the administration feels that it has gone far enough in that direction to justify the change in the situation which, it seems to me, will be produced by this amendment? I am seeking information.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am satisfied it does not conflict with the London agreement, which we have ratified and which now has been ratified by four governments and probably will be ratified by all of them within the next few days. I am satisfied it does not conflict with the so-called "Thomas amendment" in the act of May 23 last in any way whatever. It simply is another method for the President to get more basic silver in the United States.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, does the Senator know whether the officers who would deal with this question feel that this amendment is needed in order that they may go forward with such program as has been already authorized either by the Thomas amendment or the London agreement?

Mr. WHEELER. I can answer that, I think, to the satisfaction of the Senator. Let me say that the London agreement has nothing to do with this amendment. Of course, if we are going to stop with the London agreement and do nothing more, that is one question; but let me say that the London agreement and what the President has done with reference to silver, as I pointed out when the Senator was absent from the Chamber, help the situation, acting as a subsidy, as a matter of fact, to the mining companies of the country at the present time; but they have not, to any great extent, materially helped to raise the world price of silver.

What was done at London was very helpful in that these countries have agreed that they will not melt up any more silver. Consequently, if this amendment were agreed to, it would mean that there would not be any flooding of silver because of other countries melting their silver.

Mr. PITTMAN. I wish to say, if the Senator will allow me, that he has made an accurate statement. As the Senator knows, and as most of the other Senators know, there has never been a natural oversupply of silver. As a matter of fact, silver has only increased about 2 or 3 percent per annum over a great many years, about the same percentage that gold has increased. Furthermore, as a matter of fact, while silver was falling in price rapidly, production throughout the world was also falling rapidly. It was due to an oversupply, as we all know, caused by governments melting up silver coin, taking half the silver out, and putting in alloy and selling that silver.

India, that had the greatest amount of silver coins in the world, amounting probably to a billion ounces of silver, had the authority to melt up its silver coins at any time and to sell any quantity of the silver at any price, and India proceeded to do it. India had more silver coin which she could melt up and sell than the world could supply from the mines for 4 years. So long as that went on, it was exceedingly difficult for any government to attempt to reestablish the monetary situation with regard to silver. That circumstance prevented it. The agreement probably will have its affect on the world price a little later; it has not as yet.

We now know, since the unnatural supply has been eliminated, that there can be but 160,000,000 ounces of silver on the markets of the world in 1934, because that was all that was produced from the mines of the world in 1933, and we know the conditions are more adverse than they were in 1933. So, of course, when the people of China and of India and of all other countries, such as Mexico and South American countries, find that there is going to be a shortage in the supply of silver, 30 percent below a normal supply in 1934, and probably for 3 or 4 years to come, they will do as they always have done; they will start buying.

That may be probably 3 or 4 months from now; nobody knows; but in the meantime it would be undoubtedly a great help throughout the world if some of that which we call floating silver—and there may be three hundred or four hundred million ounces of it—speculative silver that brokers hold in various countries could be absorbed in the United States. It would tend to the stabilization of the exchange value of silver coin throughout the world; it would tend to bring it back to its normal price, and not only bring it back to its normal price but stabilize it at its normal price; and in doing that there is not any question of the favorable effect on our trade.

Let me interject right here—I was talking to a very distinguished British economist who said, "You have not lost your trade with China and we have not lost our trade with China on account of the fall in the price of silver; we lost it everywhere on account of the depression"; but, like some economists who know nothing about the production of silver or the consumption of silver or the amount of silver or about anything in any other country except their own, he did not realize that during the last 4 or 5 years, while the depression was threatening every other country in the world, China was booming.

The prices of lots on the Bund in Shanghai were higher than the prices of lots in Wall Street. Things were booming there for the reason the Senator from Montana has given, namely, that gold was flowing into China to exchange for her cheap silver money, which passed at par in China, for the purpose of building factories, buying houses, building hotels, and for general development. The loss of 75 percent of our export trade in manufactures and the loss of 75 percent of the export trade in manufactures of Great Britain was not on account of the distress and poverty in China, as it was in other parts of the world, but was wholly on account of the tremendous difference in the exchange value of their money, owing to the lower price of silver as compared with the money of Great Britain and this country.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I recall to the Senator's mind the inquiry of the Senator from Maryland as to a detail of the bill? It is my understanding that the Senator only contemplated the purchase of silver through silver certificates, those certificates being redeemable in bullion at their gold value.

Mr. WHEELER. Exactly.

Mr. ADAMS. I have this suggestion to make, that in the amendment there is something more than that included, which I think could be stricken out with advantage. The terminology is similar to and parallel with that of section 8 of the gold bill with which we have been dealing, and provides that silver may be purchased at home or abroad with any direct obligation, coin or currency, of the United States. It was not the contemplation of the Senator, as I understand, to authorize the purchase of silver with bonds or with currency or with coin, but to limit the purchase to silver certificates of the kind provided. So I suggest that that language which goes beyond the Senator's intent, be eliminated from the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. If the Senator will work that out, I shall be glad to accept such an amendment because that is all that is intended. The only reason why I put in the provision, as I said to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], was to give discretion to the Secretary of the Treasury. I have no objection to its being stricken out. If we issue the silver certificates, the United States is the place where they will do good. The people of the eastern countries will use them in the United States for the purpose of buying our manufactured articles, thus doing exactly what we want them to do, and enabling us to sell our surplus of manufactured articles and farm products. When we shall do that, and not until we shall do that, will prosperity return to the United States.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Reverting to the earlier discussion of the eloquent Senator from Montana, may I express the hope that Dr. Tuck's article in Scribner's Magazine may be appended in full at the conclusion of the Senator's remarks?

May I also address an inquiry to the Senator from Montana? Now that the Senator—adopting the more or less humorous expression of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]—has joined the conservatives, perhaps the Senator will be good enough to explain why the conservatives of this country have for years discriminated against the use of silver in our coinage. Recently I requested data concerning the ratio in various years of silver dollars in stock and in circulation to the total money in stock and in circulation in this country. The reply was that the ratio in 1890 was 14 percent; in 1895, 18 percent; in 1900, 14 percent; in 1905, 12 percent; in 1910, 10 percent; in 1915, 9 percent; in 1920, 3 percent; in 1925, 4 percent; in 1930, 4 percent; and in 1932, 3½ percent.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator for those figures.

Mr. President, I apologize for having taken so much time, and I now want to conclude. The reason why silver has been discriminated against is that if we have only a gold currency it is much easier for certain banking groups to control world finance, and particularly, as in this instance the British have done, to control the price level.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I suggest that, even within the conservative limits of so-called "sound" money, there has been—if the figures given are accurate—obvious, continuous, and unjustified discrimination against the use of silver.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I merely desire to refer again to the fear I expressed a while ago, which I am frank to say is based upon two or three paragraphs in the President's message which he sent here in connection with the bill we are now considering. If the Senator does not object, I should like to read those paragraphs.

Mr. WHEELER. I shall be glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. After discussing the gold bill and the stabilization fund, the President said:

> The foregoing recommendations relate chiefly to gold. The other principal precious metal—silver—has also been used from time immemorial as a metallic base for currencies as well as for actual currency itself. It is used as such by probably half the population of the world. It constitutes a very important part of our own monetary structure. It is such a crucial factor in much of the world's international trade that it cannot be neglected.
>
> On December 21, 1933, I issued a proclamation providing for the coinage of our newly mined silver and for increasing our reserves of silver bullion, thereby putting us among the first nations to carry out the silver agreement entered into by 66 governments at the London Conference. This agreement is distinctly a step in the right direction and we are proceeding to perform our part of it.
>
> All of the 66 nations agreed to refrain from melting or debasing their silver coins, to replace paper currency of small denominations with silver coins, and to refrain from legislation that would depreciate the value of silver in the world markets. Those nations producing large quantities of silver agreed to take specified amounts from their domestic production, and those holding and using large quantities agreed to restrict the amount they would sell during the 4 years covered by the agreement.
>
> If all these undertakings are carried out by the governments concerned, there will be a marked increase in the use and value of silver.
>
> Governments can well, as they have in the past, employ silver as a basis for currency, and I look for a greatly increased use. I am, however, withhholding any recommendation to the Congress looking to further extension of the monetary use of silver because I believe that we should gain more knowledge of the results of the London agreement and of our other monetary measures.

I take for granted that that language is to be interpreted as a feeling on the part of the President that an amendment such as that which has been offered by the Senator ought not to be engrafted onto this measure.

Mr. WHEELER. I will say to the Senator quite frankly that the President takes the position that he prefers not to have it done in this way on this measure. But we know perfectly well that in this body and in the other body the overwhelming sentiment is in favor of doing something with reference to promoting the larger use of silver. The President had the power given to him under the Thomas amendment to remonetize silver if he wanted to do so. Nothing was done about it; though, of course, he did take a step in the right direction.

If we in this body take an affirmative stand with reference to this matter, it is going to help the President's program more than any other thing that has been done by the Congress. If every man in this body is going to sacrifice his principles and not advocate the things in which he believes, merely because someone says he thinks it ought to be put off a little longer, then we might as well disband the Senate of the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course the Senator understands that I do not advocate any Senator's surrendering his principles.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, of course; I understand that.

Mr. BARKLEY. But along with the advocacy, as a matter of principle, there is also an important equation in the matter of policy. The time element, it seems to me, enters into the situation somewhat. A man might be an enthusiastic free silverite—and I am not going to get into a discussion of that subject at all—but he might have some doubt about whether an amendment such as that now offered ought to be put upon a bill that deals wholly with the devaluation of gold and the setting up of a fund to engage in international transactions.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me answer that by saying that I offered this as an amendment to the banking bill and was told it must not be attached to that measure. I offered it to other bills and was again told the same thing. If it is not right to offer it in connection with a measure dealing with money, then it has not any business being offered at all.

There is no man in the Senate who has a higher regard for the President of the United States than have I, but I am not willing to surrender my principles and views because some professor has said this is not the particular time to take certain action. I want to be helpful. I have gone along with the President of the United States, both before the convention and after the convention; I have gone along with him in the Congress; but I do not want to be stifled when I believe in a principle. I think it is the time to do what my amendment proposes. I think every Member of the Senate who believes in it and votes for it will be helping the President rather than hurting or retarding his program.

With that statement, Mr. President, I am ready to yield the floor.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, before he takes his seat may I ask the Sentor from Montana a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the Senator from Montana, having observed the fullness to which his discussion has gone, if he will give me information as to one point that is constantly paraded as a reason why silver and gold cannot go together. Sometime past a writer of the English domain, by the name of Gresham, proclaimed the theory that if silver and gold were presented together, it would drive gold into hiding on the theory that that which is the greatest loses itself or is taken care of by others to be hidden from usage if the lesser can be used to serve the purpose. If that be true, and silver and gold were treated upon the theory of the eminent gentlemen who represent the silver cause, is it true there is any foundation for what is called the Gresham law that gold would be taken out of existence in the nature of something like a fugitive? Has that been proved as a matter of experience?

Mr. WHEELER. I hesitate to argue with the Senator from Illinois with reference to the silver question, because one of the most able arguments I ever read on the question of remonetization of silver was made by the distinguished Senator from Illinois when he was a Member of the House of Representatives. Knowing his understanding of the subject, I hesitate to say anything in his presence with reference to it. I have sat at his feet to study the silver question.

I am sure the Senator realizes that where there is a definite and fixed value for a commodity, and there is created an unlimited demand for it upon a definite and fixed ratio, such a thing as the Gresham law cannot possibly work. What was known as the "Gresham law" came into vogue or effect when France was paying more for silver than we were; so silver left this country and went to France, and gold came to this country in return. That result came to be known as the "Gresham law."

What I am seeking to do is to have the value fixed upon a definite ratio so that the workings of the Gresham law would not be effective. Of course, if England paid more for silver than we, silver would go to England. But that is not so at the present time, and that principle could not possibly apply. I am satisfied that if the amendment shall be adopted, we will ultimately get a world agreement with reference to the remonetization of silver, because Great Britain and France will have to come to such an agreement or lose their trade, not only in the Orient but in Central and South America.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I desire to present briefly a viewpoint which I feel justifies support of the pending amendment.

It has been assumed throughout the debate upon the bill that the inevitable result of the devaluation of the dollar through the reduction of the gold content would be enhancement of the commodity price level in this country. Some doubt was expressed, I think, by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]; but, generally speaking, all of those who have debated the bill have done so upon that assumption.

Upon yesterday the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] presented a powerful argument for relief of debtors in this country, all predicated upon the theory that the bill, when passed, would result in enhancement of commodity prices.

I do not at this time take a dogmatic stand with respect to that question. I do not array my own personal judgment against that of others whose opportunity for knowledge and whose right to speculate upon the subject are equally as good as mine. I do want to point out, however, that there is no assurance in the bill that any such enhancement in the price level will result.

In the field of economics we find sharp differences of opinion upon this subject. There is one group—conspicuous among them being Professor Warren, who is one of the advisers of the President, so it is said—who believe that there is a mathematical relationship between devaluation of the monetary unit and the price level. There are others who absolutely refuse to accept this theory and who contend that devaluation will not, in and of itself, result in any relief, either to debtors or to producers, by enhancement of domestic prices.

Let us examine the situation. We know that the leading nations of the world have in recent years cut down the gold content of their units, or they have left the gold standard and have depreciated their paper money, or by other devices have brought about a lower monetary level. In some cases they did it to meet the necessities of their situation. In other cases they did it with the expectation of enhancement in price level; and I am assuming that those who advocate this bill upon the theory of enhancement believe that it will mean a readjustment in prices upward to such an extent that there will be debtor relief and relief for producers.

Now, I desire to state briefly the experience of the countries that have attempted the manipulation of monetary systems and to see whether there is any assurance that in our experience there will result any enhancement of prices.

In a very recent book published by the Institute of Economics of the Brookings Institution we find a very excellent, temperate, and to me a satisfactory, treatment of the subject by Dr. Pasvolsky. I will read briefly a paragraph from this book:

> Great Britain and Sweden abandoned the gold standard in September 1931 and Japan in December of that year. The depreciation of their currency units, the accompanying changes in the price of gold, and the movements of wholesale commodity prices are shown in the following table for the 18-month period prior to the depreciation of the American dollar.

I shall not read the table, but will proceed with the text:

> In Great Britain and Sweden, although the currency depreciated by roughly 30 percent, which means a rise in the price of gold of more than 40 percent, there was a slight decline in the level of commodity prices. In Japan the price of gold more than doubled, yet the general level of commodity prices registered a rise of only 19 percent.
>
> The failure of commodity price levels in Great Britain, Sweden, and Japan to respond fully to the rise in the price of gold, as measured by the depreciation of the pound, the krona, and the yen, cannot be explained by a corresponding rise in the world value of gold during the 18 months in question. Changes in the world value of gold would be indicated by the movement of commodity prices in countries still on the gold standard, the most important of which were the United States and France. During this period prices in the United States fell by 16 percent and in France by 18 percent. With allowance for this factor, the commodity price levels in Great Britain and Sweden should, in accordance with the theory, have been approximately 120 instead of 99 and 98, respectively, and in Japan about 190 instead of 119. With reference to Great Britain and Sweden, the most that can be said is that depreciation of the currency and the consequent rise in the price of gold prevented as large a decline in commodity prices as might otherwise have occurred during that period. In the case of Japan, an enormous rise in the price of gold was accompanied merely by a very moderate rise in the commodity price level.

Then the author examines the experience of certain countries which some years ago devalued their currency units. I quote again:

> Since 1927 the gold content of the French franc has been fixed at almost exactly one fifth of the pre-war weight. According to the theory the commodity price level should have become almost five times that of the United States (which was based on an unchanged currency unit) and should have moved during the 6 years 1927–32 in exact proportion with American prices at the ratio of 5 to 1.

And then the author points out that this result was not attained.

Mr. President, I am not going to take the position that the devaluation of the gold dollar will not in any case result in price enhancement. It may very well over the years, and given sufficient time, result in some appreciation in price. I think possibly it will attain that result. But certainly, in the face of the experience of the great nations of the world which in the last 6 years have depreciated their currencies and cut down the gold content of their monetary units without any resultant increase or with no substantial resultant increase in price level, it can not be safely concluded than any act of our Government in decreasing the gold content of the dollar will result immediately in appreciated prices in this country. At most, the result will be speculative and uncertain; and we are confronted with the fact that this bill will produce an uncertain and speculative result so far as price enhancement is concerned; but there is one certainty, and that is that we are going to introduce into our monetary system some very powerful agencies of ultimate inflation.

I shall not discuss that subject now; the net result of the whole thing is that although there is no guaranty of price enhancement at this time, or within a few months, or within a period essential to the relief of those in distress at this time, there is a guaranty that finally, and at the end of the experience, there will be a runaway of credit in this country, and a boom that will make the experience of 1929 look conservative in comparison.

Now, Mr. President, I desire without further discussion to offer for the RECORD three tables prepared by the division of Economic Research in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. These tables deal, respectively, with the experience of Great Britain, Japan, and Sweden; and they show by combined commodities and in some detail the experience of those countries with respect to price levels following their depreciation of currency units. It is disclosed that in Japan the combination of all commodities shows, for the period covered, an enhancement of 27 percent plus. In Sweden there is shown an enhancement of 2.8 percent, and in the United Kingdom there is shown an enhancement of 3.7 percent. These figures are so out of relation with the depreciation of their currency units that it may be safely concluded that other factors were more powerful than currency depreciation in affecting the price adjustment in those countries.

I send these three tables to the desk and ask that they may be incorporated in my remarks at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BONE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The tables are as follows:

JAPAN

[1920=100 percent]

	September 1931	October 1933	Change
Combined commodities	48.7	62.3	+27.9
Cereals and vegetables	51.7	72.3	+39.8
Beverages and seasoning	69.7	70.9	+1.7
Meat and fish	52.7	65.3	+23.9
Clothing	36.9	54.6	+48.0
Building material	41.5	54.7	+31.8
Manure and fodder	45.0	60.4	+34.2

SWEDEN

[1913=100 percent]

Combined commodities	107	110	+2.8
Vegetable foodstuff	100	101	+1.0
Animal foodstuff	109	108	−0.9
Feed	84	95	+13.1
Fuel and oil	91	97	+6.6
Metal and metal products	95	96	+1.1
Lumber	154	149	−3.2
Pulp and paper	135	138	+2.2

UNITED KINGDOM

[1930=100 percent]

Combined commodities	83.0	86.1	+3.7
Cereals	78.0	80.5	+3.2
Iron and steel	90.3	95.3	+5.5
Coal	101.9	104.1	+2.2
Wool	74.4	99.9	+34.3
Cotton	71.8	80.6	+12.3
Metals and minerals	77.1	87.8	+13.9

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, if time permitted I should like to develop the idea that although there is no certainty of price enhancement in this bill as it presently stands, there is a certainty of ultimate credit expansion sufficient in amount to destroy America completely. In deference to those who are interested in this silver amendment I am not going to take the time now to refer to that. If I can obtain recognition later in the day I may attempt to point out the testimony adduced before the committee, and to draw some conclusions from that testimony with respect to the inherent dangers that lurk in this bill.

To proceed with the matter that is immediately before the Senate, let me point out that in this proposal of the Senator from Montana to purchase silver at the rate of 50,000,000 ounces per month, we would employ an influence, the result and tendency of which we can reasonably well measure. We have here an influence which will operate to increase the price of silver. It will operate to increase the buying power of all the people in the silver-using countries on the earth. It means that to the extent that buying power is enhanced, our foreign trade is going to be benefited. It means, with respect to every commodity of which we have an exportable surplus, that we are going to have a better market. It means that every commodity, the price of which in the domestic field is fixed by the export price, is going to be influenced upward. It means that for the uncertainty of immediate price enhancement which presently exists in the gold bill there will be substituted a fair degree of certainty. The exact amount we do not know, it is true, and yet the trend I think is undeniable; and by reason of this substitution of certainty in price enhancement, there is offered a hope for the American people. In my area of the country it means a great deal to know that the silver-using countries of the world, substantially half of all the population of the world, are going to deal with us in a currency of enhanced buying power.

Undoubtedly the advantages to be derived from that increase in the buying power of foreign countries will be reflected in our domestic markets. So I say, Mr. President, without any attempt to enlarge or develop this subject to the extent that it well deserves, and paying due deference to the rights of others who want to take part in this debate between now and the hour of 2 p.m., that there is in this amendment a real and tangible hope. There is in this amendment a proposal that will mean something to the American people. It will mean something in terms of present-day benefit. It will mean something in terms of expanded trade. It will mean something in terms of wider markets. It will mean something in terms of business improvement that will be fairly immediate, the result of which we may feel within the next few months to come. I feel that if there is any justification at all for this bill it will be enormously increased by the addition of the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

If time permitted I should like to refer more in detail to the agricultural situation with respect to the necessity of finding an outlet for surpluses. Probably it would be trite to enlarge upon it. This body has dealt over the years with the problem. We know the enormous amounts spent to stabilize upward the cotton and wheat and other markets. We know the great sacrifice that our people have made in order to provide the funds to carry out these stabilizing influences. Let me point out to you that at the present price of silver the entire purchases contemplated under the amendment of the Senator from Montana will not cost us any more than the amount we have already lost in stabilization enterprises that have not proved effective; and as a substitute for those stabilization enterprises, affecting the greater part of our agricultural industry in this country, and embracing in their scope both cotton and wheat, horticultural products, and many other things—for those unsatisfactory enterprises we have here something that gives promise of a sure and certain result in behalf of our people.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

Mr. STEIWER. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. DILL. The fact is that under this amendment it will not cost the Government anything, because it can issue silver certificates to circulate as legal-tender money to the amount which is paid for the silver.

Mr. STEIWER. Conceivably that is true; but I made the statement on the assumption that we were to pay in something other than silver certificates, and on the theory that every dollar invested will be a dollar out of the Treasury. I appreciate that the Senator from Washington is correct, and that result may not obtain.

Now I yield the floor, and I do so with the statement that although I have never been an advocate of bimetallism, although I have recognized the supposed force of Gresham's law, I see no evil in the proposal made by the Senator from Montana. I see nothing that should cause us to hesitate with respect to it; but I do see so much good and opportunity for the interests of that great mass of our producers who are compelled to sell in the export markets of the world that I hope this body will give full consideration to the plight in which they find themselves at this time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Couzens	Kean	Robinson, Ark.
Ashurst	Cutting	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Davis	King	Russell
Bachman	Dickinson	La Follette	Schall
Bailey	Dieterich	Lewis	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dill	Logan	Shipstead
Barbour	Duffy	Lonergan	Smith
Barkley	Erickson	McAdoo	Steiwer
Black	Fess	McCarran	Stephens
Bone	Fletcher	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Borah	Frazier	McKellar	Thompson
Brown	George	McNary	Townsend
Bulkley	Gibson	Murphy	Trammell
Byrd	Glass	Neely	Tydings
Byrnes	Goldsborough	Norris	Vandenberg
Capper	Gore	Nye	Van Nuys
Caraway	Hale	O'Mahoney	Wagner
Carey	Harrison	Overton	Walcott
Clark	Hatch	Patterson	Walsh
Connally	Hatfield	Pittman	Wheeler
Coolidge	Hayden	Pope	White
Copeland	Hebert	Reed
Costigan	Johnson	Reynolds

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, in view of statements made during the course of the debate as to the attitude of the President and of the administration respecting the pending amendment, I feel it obligatory to make a brief statement defining the President's attitude as he has communicated it to me in writing.

The President regards the pending amendment as in conflict with the policy set forth in his message on the subject of monetary units, and particularly with respect to the last seven paragraphs in the message. His letter to me states, "that it is better to wait for the operation of the Pittman agreement", adopted at the London conference, than to undertake now "to order the purchase of silver under the terms of this amendment."

The President believes that he has "authority under existing law to buy such amounts of silver from time to time and at such prices as may seem desirable."

It is pointed out also that the amendment would require, not merely authorize, the purchase of a billion ounces of silver, if necessary, at the rate of 50,000,000 ounces per month, to force the price to $2.15 an ounce if there should be a 40-percent devaluation, and to $2.58 an ounce if there should be a 50-percent devaluation. The minimum rate of purchase specified in the amendment is 600,000,000 ounces a year, which is nearly four times the total world production during 1933, the latter being stated to me by the Treasury to have been about 160,000,000 ounces.

The Treasury states: "The amendment requires outright purchase by currency or security of the United States, and while provision is made for the issuance of silver certificates against the silver so purchased in an amount equal to its cost, the plan does not yield the profit which accrues to the Treasury under the seigniorage plan adopted by the President with reference to the purchase of newly mined silver under the authority of the Thomas amendment.

"More than half a billion dollars in silver certificates are now outstanding. They are redeemable in silver dollars containing 412½ grains, troy, of standard silver.

"The amendment, on the other hand, provides that silver certificates shall be issued by the Treasury in an amount which, in the aggregate, shall equal the cost of such silver to the Treasury. Upon presentation of any such silver certificates the Treasurer of the United States shall redeem the same by the delivery of the face value thereof in silver bullion of the gold-equivalent value at the time of demand, to the end that the silver delivery shall be measured by value rather than by weight.

"The effect of this provision on the standing of the half billion dollars of silver certificates now in circulation requires most careful consideration, since presumably large amounts of silver could be obtained at or near the present market price of about 45 cents an ounce. Any disparity in the metallic reserve and redemption of the two types of silver certificates as would result from this amendment raises serious questions as to its wisdom.

"The new silver certificates, with their greater metallic backing, would tend also to bring the parity value of our present silver dollars into serious question. Grave dangers to the maintenance of parity would therefore be created by this amendment."

The ratio proposed as the objective of the pending amendment is 16 to 1. The relative values of silver and gold ranged from 30 to 1 to 39.84 to 1 during the period 1894 to 1916. Thereafter gold lost so much in value that the ratio dropped to 15.31 to 1 in 1920, but reached 35.26 to 1 by 1928. The ratio aimed at in the pending amendment is therefore twice the ratio that prevailed before the World War or that that prevailed in 1928.

"At the present time the ratio is almost 80 to 1. This, of course, may not continue."

It probably would not continue.

"The amendment would cause a sharp rise in the price of silver, but this would probably be followed by a striking collapse unless some continuing program were adopted. Such a continuing program is now authorized and the program is being carried forward, as heretofore stated, under the Thomas amendment."

Some reference has been made during the debate about the effect of the adoption of the policy incorporated in the Wheeler amendment on our foreign commerce. That is recognized, I think, by all who hear me as a subject of the very greatest importance. The effort to work this matter out in concert with other silver-using nations is now in progress.

With respect to China, which has been mentioned in the debate, I think by the Senator from Oregon and by other Senators, it is believed that if the amendment should be carried into effect it would result in very violent deflation and probably bring about a silver embargo in China. A large silver reserve is probably desirable in the long-term view of the situation in the Orient.

"If it is to be built up, however, it should be built up gradually and as a part of a world-wide plan for rehabilitating silver to which the United States is committed in its agreement with 36 nations at the London Conference."

I think we all realize that the subject matter of the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is of the very greatest importance. The Senator has devoted himself with care and diligence to the study of this problem. The President does not feel that this is an opportune time to order the purchase of the very large amount of silver contemplated by the amendment, and feels that it would operate to impair the effectiveness of the international agreement already referred to.

Mr. President, I have concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I desire to offer some amendments to perfect my own amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has the right to modify his amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. First, I desire to say to the Senator from Arkansas that I know he quoted in all sincerity the statements that were furnished him by some of the professors or economists connected with the Treasury Department. The same arguments have been presented to me.

I desire to say, however, that the adoption of the proposed amendment could not cause deflation in China to the extent that some of the professors have indicated it would. They totally misunderstand what the actual situation in China is. There is no paper in circulation in China; their circulating medium is simply silver. However, I am not going to argue the matter, but merely wish to perfect my own amendment. It has been suggested to me by some Members of the Senate that they should like to have me modify my amendment. I am going to modify it so as to provide that—

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to purchase silver at the rate of not less or more than 25,000,000 ounces for 2 months and ten or more million ounces thereafter until there shall be added to the monetary resources of the United States 750,000,000 ounces of silver.

Furthermore, at the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], I ask to perfect my amendment on page 2 by striking out on that page, in line 3, after the period, all down through the period in line 13, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

Such silver shall be purchased, at home or abroad, wherever silver shall be procurable at or under the values specified above, at such rates and upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem most advantageous to the public interest; and payment therefor shall be made with silver certificates of deposit payable to bearer on demand in silver bullion. The silver so purchased shall be held in reserve in the Treasury against the issue of such certificates of deposit.

That will eliminate entirely the objection which has been made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is modified as requested.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time for debate has expired.

Mr. WHEELER. I am going to ask unanimous consent that I may explain the amendment in a very few words.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator may proceed.

Mr. WHEELER. I wish simply to say that the modifications, I think, eliminate entirely the objection which has been raised by the Treasury Department and meet the suggestion made by the Senator from Kentucky to the effect that the silver could be paid for in gold bullion. Under the amendment, as modified, it can only be paid for in silver certificates which can only be used in the United States for the purchase of our surplus production.

Mr. President, I submit the amendment.

The amendment of Mr. WHEELER and Mr. KING, as modified, is as follows:

On page 12, line 20, after "SEC. 8." insert "(a)."

On page 13, after line 10, insert the following new subsection:

"(b) The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to purchase silver, at the rate of not less or more than 25,000,000 ounces per month for 2 months and 10 or more million ounces thereafter, until there shall be added to the monetary resources of the United States 750,000,000 ounces of silver; except that whenever 371¼ grains of pure silver equals in purchasing power 23.22 grains of pure gold, the purchase of silver under this subsection shall be suspended. Such silver shall be purchased, at home or abroad, wherever silver shall be procurable at or under the values specified above, at such rates and upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem most advantageous to the public interest; and payment therefor shall be made with silver certificates of deposit payable to bearer on demand in silver bullion. The silver so purchased shall be held in reserve in the Treasury against the issue of such certificates of deposit. Such silver certificates shall be issued by the Treasury in an amount, which, in the aggregate, shall equal the cost of such silver to the Treasury. Upon presentation of any such silver certificates the Treasurer of the United States shall redeem the same by the delivery of the face value thereof in silver bullion of the gold equivalent value at the time of demand, to the end that the silver delivered shall be measured by value rather than by weight. The silver certificates issued under the provisions of this subsection shall be legal tender for all debts, public and private, public charges, taxes, duties, and dues."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], as modified.

Mr. CLARK and other Senators asked for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. WHEELER. I suggest the absence of a quorum. There are several Senators who desire to be present to vote on this amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Couzens	Kean	Robinson, Ark.
Ashurst	Cutting	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Davis	King	Russell
Bachman	Dickinson	La Follette	Schall
Bailey	Dieterich	Lewis	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dill	Logan	Shipstead
Barbour	Duffy	Lonergan	Smith
Barkley	Erickson	McAdoo	Steiwer
Black	Fess	McCarran	Stephens
Bone	Fletcher	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Borah	Frazier	McKellar	Thompson
Brown	George	McNary	Townsend
Bulkley	Gibson	Murphy	Trammell
Byrd	Glass	Neely	Tydings
Byrnes	Goldsborough	Norris	Vandenberg
Capper	Gore	Nye	Van Nuys
Caraway	Hale	O'Mahoney	Wagner
Carey	Harrison	Overton	Walcott
Clark	Hatch	Patterson	Walsh
Connally	Hatfield	Pittman	Wheeler
Coolidge	Hayden	Pope	White
Copeland	Hebert	Reed
Costigan	Johnson	Reynolds

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], as modified. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEWIS (when Mr. BULOW's name was called). I am authorized to state that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW] is necessarily absent.

Mr. KEAN (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW], and therefore I am obliged to withhold my vote.

Mr. LEWIS (when the name of Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma was called). I am instructed to state that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is absent from the Senate because of illness. He is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF]. I am also asked to state that if the Senator from Oklahoma were present he would vote "yea", and that the Senator from Rhode Island, if present, would vote "nay." I ask the Senator from Rhode Island if my statement concurs with his information?

Mr. HEBERT. The Senator has stated what is my understanding.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GORE. On this vote I am paired with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay", and if the Senator from South Dakota were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. HEBERT. I am requested to announce that on this question the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG]. If the Senator from Delaware were present, he would vote "nay", and the Senator from Louisiana, if present, would vote "yea."

I also wish to announce the necessary absence of the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK].

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am requested to announce that if the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW] were present he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 45, as follows:

YEAS—43

Adams	Cutting	Hatch	McNary
Ashurst	Davis	Hatfield	Murphy
Bone	Dickinson	Hayden	Norris
Borah	Dill	King	Nye
Capper	Duffy	La Follette	Overton
Caraway	Erickson	Logan	Pittman
Clark	Frazier	McCarran	Pope
Costigan	George	McGill	Reynolds

Robinson, Ind.	Smith	Thompson	Van Nuys
Russell	Steiwer	Townsend	Wheeler
Shipstead	Thomas, Utah	Tydings

NAYS—45

Austin	Connally	Hebert	Schall
Bachman	Coolidge	Johnson	Sheppard
Bailey	Copeland	Keyes	Stephens
Bankhead	Couzens	Lewis	Trammell
Barbour	Dieterich	Lonergan	Vandenberg
Barkley	Fess	McAdoo	Wagner
Black	Fletcher	McKellar	Walcott
Brown	Gibson	Neely	Walsh
Bulkley	Glass	O'Mahoney	White
Byrd	Goldsborough	Patterson
Byrnes	Hale	Reed
Carey	Harrison	Robinson, Ark.

NOT VOTING—8

Bulow	Hastings	Long	Norbeck
Gore	Kean	Metcalf	Thomas, Okla.

So the amendment of Mr. WHEELER and Mr. KING, as modified, was rejected.

Mr. FESS obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I desire to offer an amendment and have it read at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

On page 20, between lines 11 and 12, insert the following new sections:

"SEC. 16. Title V of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof three new sections to read as follows:

"'PAYMENT OF CERTIFICATES BEFORE MATURITY

"'SEC. 509. (a) The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is authorized and directed to pay to any veteran to whom an adjusted-service certificate has been issued, upon application by him and surrender of the certificate and all rights thereunder (with or without the consent of the beneficiary thereof), the amount of the face value of the certificate as computed in accordance with section 501.

"'(b) No payment shall be made under this section until the certificate is in the possession of the Veterans' Administration, nor until all obligations for which the certificate was held as security have been paid or otherwise discharged.

"'(c) If at the time of application to the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs for payment under this section, the principal and interest on or in respect of any loan upon the certificate have not been paid in full by the veteran (whether or not the loan has matured), then, on request of the veteran, the Administrator shall (1) pay or otherwise discharge such unpaid principal and so much of such unpaid interest (accrued or to accrue) as is necessary to make the certificate available for payment under this section, and (2) deduct from the amount of the face value of the certificate the amount of such principal and so much of such interest, if any, as accrued prior to October 1, 1932.

"'(d) Upon payment under this section, the certificate and all rights thereunder shall be canceled.

"'(e) A veteran may receive the benefits of this section by application therefor, filed with the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs. Such application may be made and filed at any time before the maturity of the certificate (1) personally by the veteran, or (2) in case physical or mental incapacity prevents the making or filing of a personal application, then by such representative of the veteran and in such manner as may be by regulations prescribed. An application made by a person other than a representative authorized by such regulations, or not filed on or before the maturity of the certificate, shall be held void.

"(f) If the veteran dies after the application is made and before it is filed it may be filed by any person. If the veteran dies after the application is made it shall be valid if the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs finds that it bears the bona fide signature of the applicant, discloses an intention to claim the benefit of this section on behalf of the veteran, and is filed before the maturity of the certificate, whether or not the veteran is alive at the time it is filed. If the death occurs after the application is made but before the negotiation of the check in payment, payment shall be made to the estate of the veteran irrespective of any beneficiary designation, if the application is filed (1) before the death occurs, or (2) after the death occurs, but before the mailing of the check in payment to the beneficiary under section 501.

"(g) Where the records of the Veterans' Administration show that an application, disclosing an intention to claim the benefits of this section, has been filed before the maturity of the certificate, and the application cannot be found, such application shall be presumed, in the absence of affirmative evidence to the contrary, to have been valid when originally filed.

"SEC. 510. If at the time this section takes effect a veteran entitled to receive an adjusted-service certificate has not made application therefor he shall be entitled, upon application made under section 302, to receive at his option either the certificate under section 501 or payment of the amount of the face value thereof under section 509.

"SEC. 511. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, in the exercise of his powers to make regulations for payment under section 509 shall to the fullest extent practicable provide a method by which veterans may present their applications and receive payment in close proximity to the places of their residence.

"SEC. 17. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to cover into the adjusted-service certificate fund, out of any profit covered into the Treasury under section 7 of this act, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of section 16 of this act."

[Change the numbers of the succeeding sections.]

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. FESS. Certainly.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have on the desk an amendment presented yesterday which I believe is the next amendment in order. I do not, of course, desire to interrupt the Senator from Ohio—I cannot interrupt him in fact—but I give notice that immediately after he concludes I shall offer the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is perfectly agreeable to me. I simply asked to have my amendment read. Following disposition of the amendment of the Senator from Nevada I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of my own amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. Very well.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the debate on the proposal now before the Senate, while brief, has been of a very high order. The address yesterday by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] was eloquent and rather persuasive. It was eloquent in the purposes which the Senator had in mind when he announced his reasons for his support of the bill. These reasons, as stated in the onset of his argument, have been reprinted throughout the country. They are clearly stated in plain language and are not difficult to understand as he expressed the purposes.

First, he said he is for the bill as an extraordinary measure addressed to extraordinary circumstances. The objection I would have to that being a justification for support of the bill is that the same reason could be given for the support of any kind of revolutionary proposal, even to the extent of suspending the Constitution of the United States. There is nothing so radical that it might not be urged to support if on the ground that it is offered because it is an extraordinary measure to meet extraordinary circumstances.

The Senator's second point was:

As a step in the direction of redemption in gold and also in the direction of keeping our party pledges and the assurance given the country in the campaign and in the hour of his inaugural by our President.

Long ago I ceased to be impressed with party pledges as expressed in party platforms. Too often such a pledge is made, in the language of President Woodrow Wilson, as "an opportunity to get in on, but not to stand on after you have gotten in", so I am not particular about that part of it.

But I am particular about the first part of the second statement that the bill "leads to the restoration of the gold standard." I know it is generally conceded that the proposal to stabilize somewhere between 50 cents and 60 cents is a proposal to stabilize on the basis of gold. But under the construction of this bill there is no such thing as a gold basis. If the bill we are now considering is to become the law, there is no gold basis, and stabilization therefore on a gold basis on such a plan as here written is a statement without meaning.

It is true that many people say that the worst thing that could happen to our country would be to be continued under this uncertainty where nobody can tell what the dollar will be worth from day to day. Therefore the one thing essential is stabilization. The Senator from North Carolina believes that stabilization is coming, and it is to be placed on the basis of gold which, in his language, would be "a restoration of the gold standard." There is no such promise either in this bill or in anything that the President thus far has said.

The third statement of the Senator from North Carolina is that "it is a means of raising our prices in the world market and of stimulating them at home." I know that is the ostensible reason for the weakening of the dollar. I do not agree with many of those who differ from the proponents of the measure that it will not show an increase in the prices of foreign commodities. I think it will show an increase in the markets of the world, because in the degree that we cheapen the dollar it will be depreciated in the terms of foreign currency. I assume it will register to the degree it cheapens the rise in price. If it does not, then I cannot understand common arithmetic.

I do agree with those who say that it will not necessarily lead to an earlier increase of price in domestic production. I think it will do so in time. It may come sooner than those of us who are studying it expect. But if the purpose is to increase the price of commodities at home, and that purpose is carried out, then everyone knows that the increase of that commodity price will be at the expense of the great majority of our people who do not deal in commodities; so that the very success of this proposal to raise the prices of commodities at home would place its greatest burden on the large proportion of our people. Just how far to go is an unknown quantity.

The fourth reason given by the Senator from North Carolina for his support of the bill is that it will serve "as a means of protecting and stabilizing our currency and, therefore, our commerce at home and abroad." It is true that if we stabilize the currency so that it has a fixed purchasing value, it will assist commerce, both at home and abroad. That is the one great demand for establishing stabilization—as a means of relieving an otherwise impossible situation as between debtor and creditor.

Probably the most convincing thing the Senator said was what he said about the debtor class, in which he estimated debts to the amount of $220,000,000,000. Of course, he means Federal debts, State debts, county debts, municipal debts, township debts, and individual debts. It might be, if we take the accumulation of all those debts, that the sum will mount beyond the $200,000,000,000 mark. When we speak of the debtor class, however, we refer generally to the people who are overburdened with debt, who are threatened with foreclosure and the loss of their property. When we refer to it in that sense the debt does not appear to be as great as the insurance policies and the deposits in the form of insurance policies and in the form of savings in savings banks; but if we take all sorts of debts, I do not know what the limit is.

I want to congratulate any Senator who is bold enough to say that the purpose of this bill is repudiation on the matter of debt paying to the extent that the dollar is devalued. Senators do not like the ugly term "repudiation", but it makes it no easier to call it "inflation", and does not change the odor of it in the slightest degree. It is repudiation of an obligation that has been incurred in good faith; and some of those obligations were incurred when the dollar was low, as well as some of them were incurred when it was high. When we repudiate on the basis that the dollar today buys more than it did when the debts were incurred, that is true only in a sense, because some of these debts were incurred when the dollar was not as it is today; some of them were incurred when it was higher and some when it was lower. If we do this for one, it should be done for the other; and while one would require the devaluation of the dollar, the other would require an increased value of the dollar.

The sixth statement of the Senator from North Carolina is that while recognizing its novel character and its dangers, he considers the proposed legislation a necessity under the circumstances.

As I stated in discussing the first reason, that argument can be offered with reference to any kind of proposal for legislation that may be made here.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COPELAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. THOMPSON. Was not that identical question decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in a case reported in 79 Wallace, page 457? This was a suit growing out of the confiscation of some sheep in Texas. At the time of the trial we had the greenbacks in circulation. The case was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States. Mr. Justice Strong, delivering the opinion of the Court, said:

> The controlling questions in these cases are the following: Are the acts of Congress known as the "Legal Tender Acts" constitutional when applied to contracts made before their passage; and, secondly, are they valid as applicable to debts contracted since their enactment?

Mr. Justice Strong held in the affirmative on both of these questions, as shown by the second and third syllabi, which I read:

> 2. The acts of Congress known as the "legal tender" are constitutional when applied to contracts made before their passage. Hepburn v. Griswold (8 Wall. 603) on this point overruled.
> 3. They are also valid as applicable to contracts made since.

And in the course of the opinion the Court illustrated the identical idea upon which the honored Senator is now discoursing.

Mr. FESS. No, Mr. President; he was talking about the matter of constitutionality.

Mr. THOMPSON. That was just the question that they were talking about—whether it was repudiation or whether it was not repudiation.

Mr. FESS. The Senator misunderstood me. When I said the Senator was talking about constitutionality, I meant that the Senator from Nebraska is talking about the constitutionality of the proposed legislation. I am not talking about its constitutionality. I have not touched on it, and I do not intend to do so.

Mr. THOMPSON. Then, on the moral question, may I ask the Senator another question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield further?

Mr. FESS. No, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator refuses to yield.

Mr. THOMPSON. All I wanted to ask the Senator, in all kindness, was a question on the moral side of the matter.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I do not think it is moral for the Government to do what the Government would not permit a private citizen to do. The Senator may have a thousand bushels of wheat deposited in a warehouse, for which he has a warehouse receipt. If he took the warehouse receipt and asked for the thousand bushels of wheat that he owned, what would he think if he were told that he was to take only 500 bushels of wheat? I do not care whether the Government says it shall be done or not; I am talking about the common honesty of such a proposal as that.

Now I proceed.

Mr. THOMPSON. I thank the Senator for his courtesy.

Mr. FESS. I appreciate fully the Senator's gratefulness.

Mr. President, there is a group of thinkers, not only in the country but in this body, that regards the solution of the problem in terms of volume of currency. I do not think anyone could express that better than the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] did on yesterday. He is an advocate of the quantitative theory of money. He holds that prices in this country are to be determined by the amount of currency that is in circulation. So far as the price level is concerned, it is, of course, affected by the volume of currency, provided the volume of currency is beyond the uses of currency, and therefore becomes cheap. In that case the cheap currency, because more is in circulation than can be used, will reflect itself in an artificial increase of the prices of commodities. Nobody questions that. That is the reason why the cost of living will go out of sight if we start on the road of inflation and it gets beyond us. We shall be on the road that Germany took, and we shall be on the road on which France had her downfall in 1792 and 1795.

If I were a subscriber to the theory that what we need is an increased volume of currency, I certainly should not have voted against the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. I even have some sympathy for that sort of legislation, outside of increase of the volume of currency. In fact, that is the least important feature of the amendment. I agree with those who have supported that kind of legislation that it might give us a better trade possibility in the Orient. I do not dispute that. It would give an additional market to silver in the Western States. I do not dispute that. It would also, I think, have more or less of a salutary effect upon the metallic basis of our money. I am, therefore, in a degree sympathetic with the efforts of those who have been promoting that sort of legislation, largely for the reasons I have mentioned; and certainly the old argument of Gresham's law, which is the outstanding, conclusive argument against bimetallism unless it is by agreement of the leading countries of the world—the old argument that poor money will drive out of circulation good money, and therefore that we should not pass silver legislation—has no force whatever now, because it is not applicable at the present time.

If we had gold in circulation as we had had it up to the time of the abandonment of the gold standard and the recall of gold coin, then, of course, silver would drive the gold out of circulation if silver were coined at a fixed ratio with gold, and we permitted the two to circulate freely. But gold is out of circulation. Gold has ceased to be a medium of exchange. Gold has ceased to be a measure of value. Silver today can, therefore, be coined and put in circulation without having any serious effect upon gold, because gold is out of circulation under the legislation that heretofore has taken place, and especially under the proposed legislation that we are now considering.

So that if the volume of money were the determining factor in the solution of our problem of prices, I certainly would have voted, if I believed it, for the silver amendment offered by the Senator from Montana. But I do not agree, except under certain conditions where the volume of money gets beyond our control, that it has any appreciable effect upon prices. It is not the volume of money that is in circulation, it is the amount that is at work, that determines the value of money.

We today do our business, and the world does its business, on a basis of 10 percent cash and 90 percent credit. If we did $10,000,000,000 worth of business, we probably would have less than a billion dollars in cash. We would do $9,000,000,000 worth of work without ever seeing a dollar, because it would be done on the basis of credit.

That is what is taking place and has taken place in the country ever since we have been on the credit system, which was inaugurated at the very beginning of our Nation. So that if we increase the circulating medium, that does not mean that we are going to have better business. There is not anything so conclusive in refuting such an idea as our own history.

We never had a higher rate of business than in 1928 and 1929. We are proposing now to get back to the basis of 1926. What was the amount of circulation in 1926?

In 1926 we had a stock of money of $8,000,000,000. We had a circulation of $4,800,000,000. Our circulation per capita was $41. That is the time to which we are proposing to return as far as prices are concerned. We never were on such a high exchange basis as in 1928 and 1929.

What was the circulation in those years of our greatest business activity? In January of 1928 we had a circulation per capita of $39.71. That was about $1.50 less than in 1926.

On January 1, 1929, we had a per capita circulation of $39.07, which is 64 cents per capita less than it was in 1928. We were then at the very height of our business activity. There was such a demand for an increased circulation that the preceding administration responded by legislation in Congress in the form of what is known as the Borah amendment. Then came a second item of legislation to increase the amount of circulation. It came, as the Senate will recall, in the strengthening of the Bank Act, in the early days of this administration.

What has happened? In January 1932, at the low point of business activity, we had a per capita circulation of $45.26—$6 per head greater than at the height of business activity in 1929. In December of 1932 it was $45.33. In January of 1933 it was $45.06, 27 cents less than the month before.

Then came, in 1933, the impulse, when we authorized large issues of Federal Reserve bank notes, when there was a leap from $45 to $52.23 per capita, an increase of $7, with no such increase in the price of commodities.

I again state that I will admit that when we increase the circulating medium to the point where the money itself becomes of less value, then the prices will increase; but as long as we maintain the sound value of money it is not a question of what form of money is in circulation, but the question is how much money or how little idle money is at work.

Mr. President, I have from the Treasury Department a statement of the money in circulation from 1916 until November 1933. It is very suggestive on this particular question, and I ask unanimous consent to have it inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Money in circulation

June 30	Amount in circulation	Per capita
1916	$3,649,258	$35.63
1917	4,066,404	39.05
1918	4,481,697	42.33
1919	4,876,638	45.95
1920	5,467,589	51.32
1921	4,910,992	45.38
1922	4,463,172	40.62
1923	4,823,275	43.24
1924	4,849,307	42.84
1925	4,815,208	41.92
1926	4,885,266	41.92
1927	4,851,321	41.04

Circulation statement of United States money

	Total amount of money in United States	Amount in circulation	Per capita 1928
Jan. 31	$8,405,886,981	$4,677,054,676	$39.71
Feb. 29	8,360,797,917	4,690,430,100	39.79
Mar. 31	8,259,996,956	4,748,934,015	40.24
Apr. 30	8,225,271,179	4,748,458,057	40.20
May 31	8,123,846,787	4,744,074,316	40.12
June 30	8,118,085,757	4,796,621,260	40.52
July 31	8,142,809,667	4,700,535,405	39.67
Aug. 31	8,157,252,148	4,802,819,937	40.50
Sept. 30	8,216,251,118	4,846,198,357	40.82
Oct. 31	8,251,383,421	4,806,229,636	40.44
Nov. 30	8,281,523,377	4,990,114,367	41.95
Dec. 31	8,431,099,373	4,973,168,182	41.76
1929
January	8,211,982,901	4,656,617,424	39.07
February	8,220,939,222	4,698,362,323	39.38
March	8,251,925,759	4,747,683,122	39.75
April	8,333,935,461	4,675,646,777	39.11
May	8,390,727,470	4,737,635,931	39.59
June	8,538,796,197	4,746,296,567	39.62
July	8,693,315,134	4,716,862,547	39.34
August	8,700,957,998	4,839,858,913	40.32
September	8,713,685,198	4,819,274,941	40.11
October	8,769,600,181	4,838,184,799	40.23
November	8,836,658,420	4,929,421,487	40.95
December	8,732,677,064	4,864,824,312	40.37
1930
January	8,391,138,171	4,562,027,826	37.82
February	8,404,235,320	4,578,508,351	37.92
March	8,361,374,774	4,549,188,947	37.64
April	8,341,915,914	4,476,066,785	37.00
May	8,325,418,198	4,551,467,934	37.59
June	8,306,564,074	4,521,987,972	37.31
July	8,243,582,415	4,426,493,631	35.90
August	8,254,874,060	4,533,196,558	36.71
September	8,317,422,017	4,501,478,377	36.42
October	8,345,776,283	4,492,603,809	36.30
November	8,451,218,043	4,660,315,130	37.59
December	8,713,875,325	4,890,123,348	39.41
1931
Jan. 31	8,642,545,161	4,609,687,314	37.11
Feb. 28	8,560,358,013	4,620,413,509	37.15
March	8,598,058,403	4,607,913,611	37.00

Circulation statement of United States money—Continued

	Total amount of money in United States	Amount in circulation	Per capita
1931—Continued
April	$8,682,179,320	$4,652,414,437	$37.31
May	8,782,098,264	4,702,275,432	37.66
June	9,079,623,857	4,821,933,457	38.57
July	9,153,302,326	4,837,084,512	38.65
August	9,361,212,548	5,052,027,109	40.31
September	9,285,383,803	5,246,063,907	42.20
October	9,062,065,781	5,540,016,110	44.54
November	9,214,178,615	5,536,142,677	44.48
December	9,421,224,505	5,646,772,888	45.34
1932
January	9,378,002,702	5,641,205,046	45.26
February	9,320,730,167	5,603,542,630	44.93
March	9,266,558,476	5,459,085,385	43.74
April	9,200,274,968	5,464,626,961	43.76
May	8,977,167,490	5,479,626,520	43.85
June	9,004,423,481	5,695,090,322	45.55
July	9,109,739,560	5,726,262,264	45.85
August	9,246,050,907	5,692,053,976	45.56
September	9,331,280,031	5,653,349,722	45.22
October	9,367,601,015	5,627,581,274	44.99
November	9,451,735,753	5,647,569,816	45.13
December	9,704,040,113	5,674,941,484	45.33
1933
January	9,694,125,276	5,644,618,924	45.06
February	10,275,505,304	6,545,067,961	52.23
March	10,628,612,707	6,319,514,854	50.40
April	10,352,853,004	6,003,473,159	47.86
May	10,172,990,108	5,812,319,611	46.31
June	10,078,416,523	5,720,764,384	45.51
July	10,014,268,674	5,629,852,526	44.70
August	10,011,012,619	5,612,121,521	44.60
September	10,024,117,386	5,649,914,116	44.87
October	10,043,105,899	5,634,603,143	44.73
November		5,742,492,685	45.56

Mr. FESS. So much for the argument that we, in order to get any good results from this measure, must look to increase of circulation. Mr. President, the danger in this bill along that line is not, I believe, as well understood as it ought to be. If it were more money we needed, we could increase the circulation under our present system. For example, there are certain forms of money in circulation, in certain amounts, that will not increase. The silver will not increase unless we proceed along the lines suggested in the proclamation of the President. It will then increase to the amount therein stated. The national-bank notes may increase. They have already increased from $600,000,000 to over $900,000,000. The United States notes of $346,000,000, known as the greenbacks, will not increase unless the President exercises the authority we gave him to increase them to the amount of $3,000,000,000. If he does, then we will see what will be the effect on the prices of commodities.

The above items can only be increased either by act of Congress or by operation of the President under authority already granted to him. But there are increases of circulation that can be carried out without a single item of legislation from this body, or a single announcement from the President of the United States.

For example, the Federal Reserve Board can authorize the Federal Reserve banks to issue their notes or their bank notes on the basis, up to the present time, of a 40-percent reserve of gold. The Federal Reserve notes today outstanding are $3,202,000,000 plus. That is based upon 40 percent gold reserve. How much gold have these banks upon which they could issue Federal Reserve notes? Instead of 40 percent of $3,000,000,000, they have $3,500,000,000, and $3,500,000,000 in gold used as a 40-percent basis would enable them to issue, instead of $3,000,000,000, $9,000,000,000 of Federal Reserve notes. They can do so without any additional authority. If it is volume of currency that we need, no additional legislation is necessary to increase it. Operating under the present law, it could be increased three times the amount it now is.

That, however, is not all. Under the National Banking Act—our recent legislation—we have authorized the Federal Reserve banks to issue Federal Reserve bank notes on Government bonds. How many Government bonds are there? We are supposed to look to a public debt of over $30,000,000,000. It will be in some form—short-term certificates or long-term bonds. There is no limit to the amount of Federal Reserve bank notes that can be issued except that the amount is dependent upon the capital they have. If they have the capital to buy the bonds of the Government there is scarcely any limit that would be put upon the amount they could issue. So without writing a single item of new law, if we needed more currency, the agency is set up to increase it 4, 5, 6, 10 times what it now is.

Why is it not issued? Mr. President, that is the important point. Why is it not issued? Simply because we have wisely held the issuing power of notes to be circulated as medium within a corporation that is not responsive to political clamor as is the Government. The Federal Reserve Board will not respond to demagogy. The Federal Reserve Board will not reflect the manufactured effort of propagandizing. The Federal Reserve Board will issue no money beyond the needs of business. Having issued an increased number of notes to take up seasonal demands, when the seasonal demand is over then they will retire those notes, as they ought to, in the interest of stability and purchasing power of the dollar.

If that power is taken away from the Federal Reserve Board, a body that is independent, and given to the Government, a political body responding to the greatest possible pressure in a campaign that will be carried on demanding more money, we will have precisely the situation that Germany had and precisely the situation that France had. The only thing that saves our country from an inflation that would destroy the ability of business to carry on is that such power is not in a political body. It is in a business body.

I would call the attention of Senators to the argument that is heard in the Senate Chamber against the Federal Reserve Board. Why? Because it does not issue the amount of notes that its gold reserve would permit it to issue.

What else is charged? It is criticized because when it has once increased the amount of circulation in notes to meet temporary demand it decreases it when the demands of business no longer call for the additional money.

Here is a system which all of us thought would wisely respond to the business demands of America, that now is to be supplanted, where the issuing body may become a political body under the pressure of the greatest channels of popular clamor through wire and ether that recent politics can effect, and then we are on the road to uncontrolled inflation. That is the danger of this sort of legislation.

A great many people have contended that this is not inconvertible paper. They hold that it is not irredeemable currency. On the very face of it it is both. A Federal note cannot be converted into anything that has the basis of value in our history of gold. There has even been taken away from the United States note, the greenback, the $156,000,000 deposited as a redemption fund. That is gone. A greenback now is to stand only as a promise of the Government, just like a Federal bond stands. There is not an element of redemption in any of the money that we are to circulate after the proposed bill passes.

What does the bill say? Let me read:

Except to the extent permitted in regulations which may be issued hereunder by the Secretary of the Treasury with the approval of the President, no currency of the United States shall be redeemed in gold: Provided—

Hear me, Senators—

Provided, however, That gold certificates owned by the Federal Reserve banks shall be redeemed at such times and in such amounts as, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, are necessary to maintain—

The parity of the currency.

What is the option there? The Secretary of the Treasury has the option whether he will redeem or not, and what amount he will pay for that which is outstanding. And with the option resting with the Government, there is no redemption. The redemption to be effective is when the holder of the note on demand can demand the gold.

Mr. President, memory is extremely short. Back in the nineties, when there was a persistent effort to sell or to find a market for silver, there had been long discussion. First the law required that not less than two nor more than four million ounces of silver should be coined into money every month. That later was changed by the act called the "Silver Purchase Act", sometimes called the "Sherman Act." The original purchasing act was having the effect of driving out of circulation the gold dollar. As is always the case where two metals are circulating freely, if one is of less value it will drive out of circulation the good metal. That danger was intended to be met under the leadership of Sherman by what is known in our financial history as the "Sherman law." Instead of coining not less than 2,000,000 nor more than 4,000,000 ounces of silver every month, the Government was to purchase something like 54,000,000 ounces a year and issue for it certificates, Treasury notes, which are known in our history as "Sherman notes." The one distinctive thing in the note that was dangerous was the redemption requirement which was written on its face.

The United States will redeem this note at the Treasury at Washington in coin—

And so on.

The silver advocates insisted "in coin" means both gold and silver. Certainly "in coin" would include both, and the friends of silver claimed that when they demanded silver the Government had no choice but to give it to them; and when they demanded gold the Government had no choice but to give them gold; and they were right in both contentions.

President Cleveland, following his election, realized how that kind of legislation was operating. The holder of a Sherman note redeemable in coin, not "in gold" but "in coin", took it to the Treasury and demanded gold. Another one came demanding gold. The result was that the Sherman note created a vicious circle whereby it was used to drain gold from the Treasury. Up to that time under the law all the gold that was required to be in the Treasury was the $100,000,000 that had been provided under the resumption of specie-payments act back in 1879. That $100,000,000, which was for the purpose not of the redemption of the Sherman notes but for the redemption of greenbacks, was drawn out by the operation of the Sherman note. President Cleveland recognized the situation and called a special session of Congress, which is known up to this time as the "silver Congress", and he recommended the repeal of the silver-purchase clause of the Sherman Act.

Mr. President, that was in 1893. That is when William Jennings Bryan came to the front. He had come to Congress 2 years prior to that, in 1891, as I recall. I read the two speeches that William Jennings Bryan made, one on the tariff, the other on the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman Act. The latter was one of the outstanding speeches at that session, which was notable for the fierce character of the debate. That speech attracted my attention; and I took occasion one morning while in chapel at the university to comment on the two speeches made by a young man from Nebraska who gave his age as 36. That speech was on the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman Act, which was operating to drain the gold from the reserves which were placed in the Treasury for the redemption of the greenbacks. The law was repealed, and the fight started from that time.

It was in 1896 that the same young man made that remarkably eloquent speech in the Democratic convention of 1896 and outlined the issue for that year and for the next campaign.

The whole controversy turned on the phrase "in coin." If the Government should refuse to pay gold when it was demanded by the holder of the note, that was immediately a discrimination against silver, and it would place us on a silver basis. It was that redemption clause which was the turning point in the financial history of our country. The redemption feature has always been regarded as the only feature that maintains the parity of the currency.

We have $346,000,000 of greenbacks. Why are they worth a hundred cents on the dollar? It is because that fund in gold, up to the present time, has been resting in the Treasury for their redemption. We have the national-bank notes which are worth 100 cents on the dollar. Why? Because they are based on United States bonds, and up to within a few months have been redeemable or payable in gold. We have the Federal Reserve notes. Anyone can read on the face of the Federal Reserve notes the provision for their redemption:

Federal Reserve note. The United States of America will pay to bearer on demand $10.

And this appears on the face of the note—

Redeemable in gold on demand at Washington or in gold or lawful money at any Federal Reserve bank.

That is what Robert G. Ingersoll meant in 1876, speaking in the city of Indianapolis, when he said:

The greenback can stick up its head and say, "I know that my redeemer liveth", which makes it worth 100 cents on the dollar.

That is why the Federal Reserve note is worth 100 cents on the dollar. That is why every variety of our currency is worth its face value anywhere in the world where business is carried on.

What do we propose to do? To remove the redemption feature from the greenback, to remove it from the Federal Reserve note, to remove it from every form of currency that is outstanding. That is, that changing our redeemable currency into inconvertible paper is incontrovertible; that is the vice of the whole proposed legislation. Our currency will rest on nothing except the promise of the Government; and the promise of the Government is just as good as its ability and its willingness to keep its promise, its pledge.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator from Ohio think that it is quite a fair statement when he says there is nothing behind it except the promise of the Government to pay?

Mr. FESS. I think the statement is fair.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does not the Senator realize that all the gold bullion in the Treasury is behind the gold certificates?

Mr. FESS. It will not be after the passage of this bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. Well, what is it for? What function does it perform in the Treasury?

Mr. FESS. Do not ask me. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The occupants of the galleries will preserve order.

Mr. CONNALLY. But I am asking the Senator. He yielded to me and I am asking him and he ought to answer the question.

Mr. FESS. Do not ask me why bullion is placed in the Treasury, with no ability to use it to redeem certificates of the Government at the demand of the holder thereof.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. How much gold money has the Senator actually handled or used since the 1st of January of the past year?

Mr. FESS. I have not handled any gold, but I have handled money that represented gold.

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly, and that is what the Senator will handle under this bill.

Mr. FESS. No.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator will not handle any gold, but he will handle what is represented by gold.

Mr. FESS. Not at all. That is where the Senator is wholly in error. Every dollar that I have heretofore handled speaks on its face that it is redeemable at my demand in gold and not at the whim of the Government. When a piece of money is redeemable in gold on the demand of the holder it is redeemable, but when it is at the option of the payer then it is irredeemable.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. If it is true that the currency has been redeemable in gold, as argued by the distinguished Senator from Ohio, I will ask him if it would have been possible to have redeemed the outstanding certificates based on gold at the demand of the holder at any time during the last few years?

Mr. FESS. No; just as it never would be possible for all the depositors in any bank to secure all their deposits on any one day. Certainly not, and nobody ever held such a thought. If the Senator were afraid of a bank in which he had a deposit but found that that deposit was safe he would not want it; he would want it only when he was afraid he was going to lose his money. That is the way with money; that is the way with everything which is a symbol for something else. If, on the other hand, business of $1,000,000,000 is being done with about 0.1 cash, is it necessary to have $900,000,000 in gold to do a billion dollars' worth of business?

Mr. LOGAN. Then, do I understand the Senator to say that it is not the gold behind the money that makes it good, but it is the confidence of the people that the Government can pay in gold although everyone knows that it cannot do so.

Mr. FESS. It is the confidence that the holder of the note has in the Government that it will keep its faith with the people and that if they demand gold it will be given them. When they know it will be given them, they will not demand it, as the Senator knows, and as has always been the case; but they will demand it when they are afraid the Government does not have it.

Mr. LOGAN. The Government never does have it, does it?

Mr. FESS. The people will not even demand gold of the Government if they have confidence in the Government keeping its faith, as the Senator very well knows. That is the way in which business itself is carried on. The idea that any sensible man would stand on this floor and say that we cannot be on a gold basis because all the business done in the country cannot be done with gold is too silly to consider for one second.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield further to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. LOGAN. Why did England go off the gold standard?

Mr. FESS. She went off the gold standard because she could not help herself.

Mr. LOGAN. She could not pay any gold.

Mr. FESS. No, Mr. President, I have heard that over and over again. Great Britain was in a struggle because of her budget.

Mr. LOGAN. So are we. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. And we will be in a worse fix than England ever was if we do not look sharply.

Mr. LOGAN. Therefore, we would have to go off the gold standard for the same reason England did.

Mr. FESS. No. If the Senator will just hold his peace I am going to tell him something he has forgotten. [Laughter on the floor and in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order and the occupants of the galleries will refrain from any sort of demonstration.

Mr. FESS. Great Britain was engaged in the struggle of her life mainly because of the drains on her treasury from the dole system upon which she had entered and which she could not get rid of, just as we have entered upon it and just as we shall have the fight of our lives to get rid of it, as every Senator knows.

Ramsay MacDonald said, "There are two ways for us to balance the budget. One is to increase taxes sufficiently to take up the deficit and the other is reduce the expenses of the Government, including the dole." They decided on the latter plan. They have reached the level of taxation where they could not add anything to it. Their only alternative, in accordance with Ramsay MacDonald, was to reduce the expenses of the Government, including the dole. When that announcement was made, although it was after one of the greatest victories any cabinet ever had in Great Britain, there was a mutiny in the British Navy that most people overlooked.

The strong arm of Britain is not her defensive navy so much as her commercial navy. The main arm not only of Britain's self defense, but of her very commercial life, that represents 80 percent of her activities in the world, was at stake. The day after that mutiny took place the cabinet was called hurriedly into session and reversed the decision. Parliament met the day after the cabinet reversed the decision, and approved the cabinet change of position on reducing the expenses of the Government. That was the position of Great Britain when she could no longer balance the budget.

Now we are told something that is most surprising to me, in the statement made by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] yesterday. I never listen to the Senator from North Carolina that I am not impressed not only with the clear-headedness and courage which so distinguish him, but also with what I regard as his accuracy of statement. But if I understood him right he announced that we went off the gold standard because we had no choice, that we were forced off of it. That was a strange statement.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. FESS. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I stated and I am willing to reiterate that the United States suspended gold payments because, under the condition of panic and hysteria and speculating in gold, the gold was being very rapidly withdrawn from the banks and the Treasury and the Federal Reserve, and had we not suspended gold payments precisely the same thing would have happened to us that happened to Great Britain. I say that we acted in a timely way to preserve and protect our gold before it could be withdrawn.

Of course, the figures at the time of suspension of gold payments on June 5, 1933, according to our records, indicated that the sum of $1,600,000,000 of gold had been withdrawn in the few weeks preceding that date. Upon that statement I am perfectly willing to stand.

Mr. FESS. I may have misconstrued what the Senator said yesterday. I did not read his remarks as they appeared in the RECORD today, and therefore I may have misinterpreted what he said.

There was a time when we were in danger of losing our gold. That was when the foreign securities held by Americans were beginning to be called for from the Old World. When we saw $600,000,000 gold go out within a very short time, it looked as if we were going to be endangered. But the time came, as Senators will recall, when these securities were paid and further drains could not be made, and we were perfectly safe. When President Hoover announced that we were within 3 weeks of the danger of going off the gold standard, the distinguished senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] thought that there was not any such danger. Probably there was not; but at least the preceding President thought there was. However, that danger passed over, because the condition which enabled them to drain our gold without our approval had passed.

Mr. President, on the subject of our gold escaping or being withdrawn as the result of a fear on the part of anyone here or in Europe, I ask to insert in the RECORD figures which I have had prepared to show exactly the current of gold going from us and coming to us. From these figures the Senator from North Carolina will see that only 2 days out of the month did we lose more gold than we received; that we received new gold constantly every day except 2, and only on 2 days did we lose. That is wholly conclusive that there was no need of our going off the gold standard.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert these figures in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Date	Net gain or loss		Total
	By import or export	Through earmark
Feb. 20, 1933	+526	−10,051	−9,525
Feb. 21, 1933	+1,572	−13,998	−12,426
Feb. 22, 1933 (holiday)
Feb. 23, 1933	−3,044	−14,302	−17,346
Feb. 24, 1933	−1,174	−15,655	−16,829
Feb. 25, 1933	−2,971	−11,244	−14,215
Feb. 26, 1933 (Sunday)
Feb. 27, 1933	+304	−14,087	−13,783
Feb. 28, 1933	−530	−16,355	−16,885
Mar. 1, 1933	−10,210	−25,938	−36,148
Mar. 2, 1933	−108	−22,325	−22,433
Mar. 3, 1933	−7,271	−69,481	−76,752
Mar. 4, 1933 (bank holiday)
Mar. 5, 1933 (Sunday)
Mar. 6, 1933 (bank holiday)
Mar. 7, 1933 (bank holiday)
Mar 8, 1933 (bank holiday)
Mar. 9, 1933	+325		+325
Mar. 10, 1933	+510		+510
Mar. 11, 1933
Mar. 12, 1933 (Sunday)
Mar. 13, 1933
Mar. 14, 1933	+1,269		+1,269
Mar. 15, 1933	+72		+72
Mar. 16, 1933	+3		+3
Mar. 17, 1933	+127		+127
Mar. 18, 1933	−8,507	+8,508	+1
Mar. 19, 1933 (Sunday)
Mar. 20, 1933	+1,153	+650	+1,803
Mar. 22, 1933	+117		+117
Mar. 23, 1933	+294		+294
Mar. 24, 1933	−602	+700	+98
Mar. 25, 1933	−8,542	+8,547	+5
Mar. 26, 1933 (Sunday)
Mar. 27, 1933	+133		+133
Mar. 28, 1933	+2,385		+2,385
Mar. 29, 1933	+68	+1,453	+1,521
Mar. 30, 1933	+56		+56
Mar. 31, 1933	+2,688		+2,688
Apr. 1, 1933
Apr. 2, 1933 (Sunday)
Apr. 3, 1933
Apr. 4, 1933	+6		+6
Apr. 5, 1933	+520		+520
Apr. 6, 1933	+67		+67
Apr. 7, 1933	+43	+3,000	+3,043
Apr. 8, 1933		−3,000	−3,000
Apr. 9, 1933 (Sunday)
Apr. 10, 1933		+7,997	+7,997
Apr. 11, 1933	+274		+274
Apr. 12, 1933	+16		+16
Apr. 13, 1933		+18,701	+18,701
Apr. 14, 1933	+2,707		+2,707
Apr. 15, 1933
Apr. 16, 1933 (Sunday)
Apr. 17, 1933	+126		+126
Apr. 18, 1933	−3,993		−3,993
Apr. 19, 1933	+69		+69

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, reverting to what was said by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]——

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator at that point?

Mr. FESS. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I simply want to remark that there is a vast difference between gold shipped in and out of the country and the unknown and very difficult-to-be-disclosed record of withdrawals of gold for the purpose of hoarding. I do not think there can be any question that throughout the country at the time we suspended gold payment there was a gold hoarding movement, not alone involving the withdrawal of gold from the banks in the first 2 weeks of March.

Mr. FESS. Let us suppose that what the Senator from North Carolina has said has the significance that he attaches to it; it still remains the fact that we had in the country, at the very time about which he is talking, the largest deposits of gold by far of any country on earth, and to say that we were in danger of going off the gold standard when we have six times the amount of gold which Britain had at the time she went off the gold standard is hardly correct.

Referring to what the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] said, he assumed that the gold in the form of bullion in the Treasury is monetary and has a redemption value. If it is monetary it must have a value. If it has value it must be expressed in trade. There is no value that has no trade value. The only thing that gives a thing a value is the purchasing power it represents. This bullion is deposited in the Treasury and cannot be taken out except at the will of the Secretary of the Treasury, and then upon his caprice.

More than that, the theory of the Senator from Texas that the value of our currency will be equal to gold because the gold bullion is in the Treasury is denied by the letter sent to the Senator from Arkansas by the Attorney General on yesterday. Let me read his concluding remarks. The closing remark of Mr. Cummings' letter is this:

> These limitations are due to the fact that public law gives to such coinage a value which does not attach as a mere consequence of intrinsic value.

Listen:

> Their quality—

That is the term—

> Their quality as a legal tender is an attribute of law aside from their bullion value.

I invite the attention of the Senator from Texas to this particular sentence relating to the currencies:

> They bear, therefore, the imprint of sovereign power which fixes their value and authorizes their use in exchange.

What does that mean? It is not the value of the bullion. It is the sovereign imprint, it is the stamp of the Government, that makes the value of the currency. If that be true, then stamp the paper, start the printing presses, and put the sovereign impress on the paper, and pay the taxes without collecting them from the people.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator make that statement? Does he approve that statement?

Mr. FESS. I do not.

Mr. CONNALLY. Then why quote it and use that as the basis for argument?

Mr. FESS. I am quoting it to argue against the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is erecting a straw man that he himself says is an imaginary being, and then he proceeds to knock him down and to say what a great hero he is for knocking down the straw man.

Mr. FESS. That is the only thing I can do with certain Senators. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. I will admit the Senator is more effective when he is dealing with imaginary things than when he is dealing with actual things. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. Especially when I am appealing to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. That may be true. May I ask the Senator from Ohio a question?

Mr. FESS. Very well.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Ohio admits that he is quoting something in which he does not believe at all and then is basing his argument upon it. We shall start out with that premise.

The Senator said a while ago that as long as we have gold in the Treasury and the people hold gold certificates and are not afraid of the Government refusing to pay in gold, they would never present their certificates. Did he not say that?

Mr. FESS. No; I did not.

Mr. CONNALLY. What did the Senator say?

Mr. FESS. I said as long as a citizen had a piece of currency that he knew could be redeemed at any time in gold he would not want the gold if he believed the Government would keep its pledge.

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly. That is what I tried to say.

Mr. FESS. But the Senator did not say it.

Mr. CONNALLY. I accept what the Senator said. The Senator further said that in time of stress, when the people were afraid the Government was not going to redeem their gold money, is the only time they would want it.

Mr. FESS. Yes; I think that is the general rule.

Mr. CONNALLY. All right. Now, let us take those two statements and see where the Senator arrives.

Here is the Government, which has certain gold in the Treasury. It has more gold currency out than it has gold. In time of no trouble the people do not want the gold, and they do not present the currency; but when stress comes, and they are afraid that the gold is not going to be there, they rush to the Treasury for redemption of the currency. The result is that the first ones who get there get all the gold, and the rest of them are left with the bag to hold. Under this plan that will never occur.

Mr. FESS. No; because nobody can get anything now. [Laughter.] Certainly nobody can get it now.

Mr. CONNALLY. Under the Senator's plan, the very time that we ought to keep gold in the Treasury—because it would all be drained out the first day, and the rest of the holders of gold currency would not get any—you would wreck the Treasury. Under this plan, it says, "Wait. The gold is here. Your gold currency is good. Just keep down your excitement." The result would be that it would be for the general welfare, whereas under the Senator's plan they would drain all the gold out of the Treasury, and the rest of us who did not get there the first day would not get any. That is the result.

Mr. FESS. The only way to insure that the Government will always keep its pledge and never be embarrassed in the sense that the Senator is speaking of is never to elect to authority anybody who will disregard the sanctity of the Government's pledge. Then we will not have this difficulty that we have today.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. HATFIELD. The Senator takes the position that the stamping by the Government of a basic metal like gold does not add anything to its value. Is that correct?

Mr. FESS. Yes; just as if the Government stamps a chip, and calls it a biscuit, it would not be a biscuit.

Mr. HATFIELD. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. FESS. The idea that all we need to do, in the language of the Attorney General, is to put the sovereign imprint upon a certificate and that makes it current 100 cents on the dollar is repudiated by every fact in history from the time civilization has used money.

We tried that. We tried it in the Colonies before the Federal Government was born, with results that everybody knows.

We tried in 1781 to 1787, in the confederation period, properly known as the critical period of American history. We there put the stamp of the sovereign authority on our paper, with the direful result that it was not worth anything.

The Confederate States of America tried that. They issued irredeemable paper, and everybody knows the result.

We tried it in the greenback craze; and only the redemption that came later in the law prevented those notes from going to nothing.

France tried it, with the most direful results known in history.

Germany tried it, with what everybody knows as the most fearful results in the destruction of all the savings of the people who had laid aside something for a rainy day.

That is our danger here. We are going on the theory, stated by the Attorney General, that the value of money is not its value in currents of trade but is measured by the imprint of the Government's stamp.

How could anybody make such an egregious statement as that if he did not believe that the stamp of the Government gave the money its purchasing power? If that is true, why should we continue to tax the people?

Mr. President, those who are claiming that our currency is going to be based upon bullion that cannot be gotten out of the Treasury overlook the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury can buy and sell bullion. Observe these words:

That gold certificates owned by the Federal Reserve banks shall be redeemed at such times and in such amounts as, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, are necessary to maintain the equal purchasing power of every kind of currency of the United States.

That would sound as if there is a redemption; but it is broken down in the qualifying clause, "in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury"—that is, in the judgment of the redeemer, not at the demand of the holder. That destroys its convertibility. It cannot be converted by the will of the holder, as every other kind of money up to this day could be. That is why it is inconvertible and irredeemable.

Here is another thing:

That the reserve for United States notes—

That is, the $156,000,000 in the Treasury—and for Treasury notes of 1890—

Those are the Sherman notes—and the security for gold certificates—

That would be in the Federal Reserve System, because no individual is permitted to have a gold certificate—shall be maintained in gold bullion equal to the dollar amounts required by law, and the reserve for Federal Reserve notes shall be maintained in gold certificates—

Not gold—

or in credits payable in gold certificates maintained with the Treasurer of the United States—

In connection with that authority, I want every Senator to interpret this:

and he—

The Secretary of the Treasury—

may sell gold in any amounts, at home or abroad, in such manner and at such rates and upon such terms and conditions as he may deem most advantageous to the public interest * * *.

At home! Who can buy gold at home? It is illegal to possess gold. Who would want to offer anything for gold or anything that he has not any right under the law to hold or to sell?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FESS. In a moment.

"At home or abroad!" What does that mean? How much can the Secretary sell abroad? What can he do with it? Can he deposit the billions of gold in the International Bank at Basle? Can he convey all American gold to Britain? What is the meaning of that particular authority given to the Secretary of the Treasury? It is something that ought to be interpreted here. While I do not hold any of the subaltern views that a good many people hold, yet there is a power that may be enormously abused.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I just want to get the attitude of the Senator. Does the Senator favor going back on the gold standard and paying all obligations and redemptions in the old gold dollar of 23 grains?

Mr. FESS. If I had my way, that is what I would do.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is what the Senator means, then. He wants to go back on the gold standard and require the redemption of all debts, the payment of all obligations, in the old gold dollar of 23 grains. Is that right?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I hold that I have no right to say to a creditor, You cannot collect your debt.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is that the position of the Senator?

Mr. FESS. I have a right to do what I can do to assist the debtor in the payment of his bill. I have no right to say that that debt shall not be paid; and if I had a right to scale it down 50 percent I could scale it down, by the same right, 100 percent.

Mr. CONNALLY. I know the Senator's rights. The Senator has lots of rights; but what is his position? Did the Senator from Texas state correctly the position of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I will answer the Senator by reading this letter:

Dear Senator——

Mr. CONNALLY. I want the Senator's answer. I do not want some correspondent's answer. [Laughter.] I want to know the attitude of the Senator from Ohio. Does he favor going back on the gold standard and requiring the redemption of all indebtedness in the old gold dollar of 23 grains? That is a simple question.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the Senator is voting for a law that denies all redemption on the part of the person who holds the certificate. I have to exercise the same right to use my own plan of answering the Senator. I take away his redemption power in that respect.

Mr. CONNALLY. Well, then, that is——

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not think the Senator is quite fair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FESS. No; I do not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I may be very short-sighted, but I have known the Senator from Texas long enough to know that he is watching the clock, and so am I; so he might just as well sit down. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio brought the Senator from Texas into his speech. I did not interject myself into his speech; and I do not think it is fair to address a speech to a Senator and then not give him an opportunity to reply.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I suppose I ought to give the Senator all the time he wants to reply, but I know he will take all my time if I do, and I am not going to do it. The Senator opened up the subject earlier in the year. When I sat under his voice across the aisle, and was wonderfully impressed with his sincerity, and I interrupted him and said, "If inflation is to come at all, that would be a specific way to bring it about," I had not the slightest idea that the Senator was opening up a question—for nobody paid any attention to him when he opened it—that would grow to such dimensions that now he has almost every Democratic Senator supporting it today. There is not anything so surprising to me in this body as that very fact; and I spoke to the Senator about it only yesterday.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator, and forgive him for all of his brusqueness heretofore. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. Now, I will read this letter that I started to read a short time ago:

DEAR SENATOR: I was formerly a teacher in the public schools of this State, and I am now retired, living on a small farm. From the meager salary I received we managed to save a little for the rainy day, a considerable part of which was deposited in building and loans and banks which are now in the hands of receivers. Of course, they may pay out a small portion of the deposits, possibly 40 or 50 percent. Now that the dollar is to be devalued to 50 or 60 cents, our loss will be about twice as great; and the same is true of my life-insurance policy which I have carried through all the years when money was cheap and when money was high. Also a mortgage or two made in 1931 and 1932, when money was high, can now be repaid in cheap money; and last but not least, how about those Liberty bonds we bought after sending our own son to France and Italy for a year during the World War? Why should our Government repudiate its solemn contract? Why should the debtors receive all the consideration? Why not give the creditor some chance?

Many of these debtors have lost all their equity and will not be able to pay their debts even though the dollar were to depreciate to 10 cents. It is too bad, but it cannot be helped now; and the sooner they realize the condition, take the loss, and start over the better it will be for them.

I am not a plutocrat. I belong to the lower part of the middle-class people. The middle class seems to be getting the worst of this deal. Why should this class, which has been the very sinew of our Nation, be crushed between the upper and the nether millstones of depression and inflation? Why should innocent parties be made to suffer on account of the mistakes of those who plunged into obligations beyond their depth? If they made bad bargains with their eyes open, it is up to them to fulfill their obligations as best they can—

And so on. The sentiment seems a little harsh. This comes from a thinking citizen and is not unlike a great number of other letters, and certainly represents the sound judgment of a great mass of our people.

Mr. President, as certain as we go through with this legislation there will be such a revulsion in the near future that the people who have been talking about low prices will be talking about high prices. The people who are promising the farmer that the price of the thing he sells will go up and the price of the things he buys will go down will find the day of reckoning when the people awake to the effects of what I fear is an uncontrolled inflation, and I fear it because of the powerful voice of men like the Senator from Idaho, with his great ability and his genuine sincerity and his tremendous influence throughout the Nation, calling a remedy the increase of volume, without saying what the limit shall be.

There, Mr. President, is the trouble. That sort of thing feeds on itself. Right now I hear we are realizing some increase in prices due, it is said, to inflation. Not actual inflation, but, in a sense, psychological inflation. In fact, it is actual inflation because there is more currency in circulation now than there had been earlier. So there is some realization of increase of prices, and the proponents of this legislation say it is due to the promise that we will have cheaper money.

Right now people are saying, "If that is a good thing, then it is better to give us more."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator to say that the Senator from Idaho advocated an uncontrolled inflation?

Mr. FESS. No; I said the Senator was advocating the principle of an increased volume of currency, and I am afraid that will lead to uncontrolled inflation. I have no quarrel with the Senator from Idaho or anyone else who believes in the quantitative theory of money. That, as he said yesterday, represents a great school in America, and I have no quarrel with them. I do not agree with those who believe that the cure of the situation is the increase of volume. If that is the cure, then let us have the increase. But the difficulty is that when we start in on it new demands will be made, and when it is supported by organized back-fire from the people back home who think that is the way to do it, how are we going to manage it?

Mr. President, I have never known such confidence reposed in an individual as the Senate and House have reposed in President Roosevelt. There has never been anything like it in the history of America. It is the one outstanding wonder in my mind.

Here we have the silver question, which has been the subject of bitter contest for years, covering whole periods of our national life, in the discussion of which the greatest statesmen of America have engaged. This discussion has been going on in Senate and House during a good portion of our political history.

The Senator from Nevada presented what I think is a very reasonable bill on the subject, which was accepted.

We, without limit, have delegated to the President the authority to coin silver, free and unlimited, at a ratio to be fixed by him—an authority the like of which never was known in the history of any country. We have given this authority to him with respect to a subject that has been a bone of contention for ages, in which the greatest statesmen have engaged in the most bitter debates. We at one stroke say, "We will give the power to the President to do the thing upon which we have not been able to decide."

Not only that. We gave to the President the power to arrange for the sale of $3,000,000,000 of bonds to be, through the arrangement of the Secretary of the Treasury, sold in the open market by the Federal Reserve System, and we stated in that very law that in case the Secretary of the Treasury could not make the satisfactory arrangements with the Federal Reserve System, then the President is authorized to issue $3,000,000,000 of greenbacks, irredeemable.

The greenback issue has run through the debates of half a century. The greenback issue has been a question of dispute throughout our country. They were not called greenbacks until the Civil War, but the idea of inconvertible money has been with us ever since the Nation was born.

We even have builded into our history nom de plumes like that of Thomas H. Benton, who was called "Old Bullion." Why? Because he stood like the Rock of Gibraltar against cheap money of this kind. Yet with 100 years of debate, in the midst of a crisis the Senate and House delegates to one man the power to do what we never could agree to here.

When the question of the awful danger of such a thing was raised it was whispered everywhere, "You do not need to be afraid, because it will not be embraced." But I was afraid of it, and I am still afraid of it, although it has not been exercised.

That was not enough. In addition to that, in the light of a stupendous deficit that was coming, that was inevitable, we delegated to the President power without limit—except for the limit of 50 percent, to devalue the gold dollar not more than 50 percent. He has that power. The only thing the pending legislation will do is to fix a maximum above which he cannot go. We do not change the minimum. We do not change his authority. The authority still stays where it was given originally. The President has the authority to go down to 50 cents on the dollar—a thing that I doubt ever could have gotten through any other legislative body. When the question was raised, "Why do such a thing as that?" it was whispered, "It is necessary, to placate certain elements that will run wild if we do not do it."

The President has that power of free and unlimited coinage of silver at any ratio he fixes. That is in the authority given him. He has the power to issue $3,000,000,000 of greenbacks. He can do it at any time. He has the power to reduce the gold dollar not lower than 50 cents. All that is asked for in the pending bill is to fix a figure above which he cannot go.

If there ever was in the history of legislation such confidence in an individual I have never heard of it.

Mr. President, I do not think the President is an inflationist. The complaint I hear against him is that he does not inflate, that he does not exercise the power that is given to him. That is the common complaint I hear. That is the thing for which I like him. But I am asking: How long can he hold out?

We are spending now, if we keep up the rate through the year, $15,000,000,000 a year. Of course, we hope we will not keep that up. We must stop it sometime. As it is we are only spending in the year $10,000,000,000. How are we going to get the money? We cannot get it now by taxation. We may get it by borrowing, but we will have to get it by means of taxes later on.

The difficulty, Mr. President, is this: If it is only relief, as I fear it will be, next year we will be faced with the same demand. Then what are we going to do? A debt that is going to $32,000,000,000 for next year, and may go to $40,000,000,000 in a short time, is a terrific burden, and it ought to stir with concern every thoughtful American citizen. I do not know whether it can be in any way avoided, but if we get to the point where we cannot pay taxes and we cannot borrow, what next? Repudiation.

We are now proposing to authorize the President to take $5,000,000,000 of gold and by a decree make it $10,000,000,000, making $5,000,000,000 seignorage, and with the $5,000,000,000 that represents profit pay $5,000,000,000 of debt, if necessary. In this proposal a part of it, $2,000,000,000, is provided as a stabilization fund. The balance has some other function, but I assume it is to be used in the liquidation of obligations.

That is one way.

Another way is to add to that $5,000,000,000 of fiat money $3,000,000,000 of greenbacks already authorized. Can the President withstand the pressure in the face of obligations piling up? Nobody knows where the limit is; nobody knows how the obligations are going to be paid. Will we be forced to resort to such a thing as repudiation? If we are, we will be on the way that Germany took, we will be on the road that France took—we will be broke.

If this program will lead to stabilization, that much will be good. There has been much muddled thinking about France's stabilization and Britain's stabilization. France stabilized just as we redeemed specie payment in 1879. When she saw her franc going, as the mark had gone—it had gotten down to 3 cents, when it ought to be 20 cents—she put $110,000,000 in the bank and announced to all holders: "We will pay 3.9 to any holder of a franc who presents it." That, of course, stabilized her franc. But it was done because she was ready to pay in coin. Are we going to do that? If that is done, by that much is this legislation justified, if partial repudiation is ever justified, because the worst thing we can do is to continue the present uncertainty.

I thank the Senate for permitting me to speak on this subject, during which I had intended to introduce the observations of Dr. Andrew D. White on the greatest crisis in France, on the question of cheap money, but I do not have the time to do so. Suffice it to say that, in my judgment, Mr. President, we are treading very dangerous ground that will reveal itself within the near future.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada offers an amendment, which the clerk will read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 17, between lines 3 and 4, the Senator from Nevada proposes to insert:

Paragraph (2) of subsection (b) of section 43, title III, of an act entitled "An act to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, to raise revenue for extraordinary expenses incurred by reason of such emergency, to provide emergency relief with respect to agricultural indebtedness, to provide for the orderly liquidation of joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes", approved May 12, 1933, is amended as follows:

"By adding at the end of said paragraph (2) the following:

"'The President, in addition to the authority to provide for the unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio so fixed, under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, is further authorized to cause to be issued and delivered to the tenderer of silver for coinage, silver certificates in lieu of the standard silver dollars to which the tenderer would be entitled and in an amount in dollars equal to the number of coined standard silver dollars that the tenderer of such silver for coinage would receive in standard silver dollars.

"'The President is further authorized to issue silver certificates in such denominations as he may prescribe against any silver bullion, silver, or standard silver dollars in the Treasury not then held for redemption of any outstanding silver certificates, and to coin standard silver dollars or subsidiary currency for the redemption of such silver certificates.

"'The President is authorized, in his discretion, to prescribe different terms and conditions and to make different charges, or to collect different seigniorage, for the coinage of silver, of foreign production than for the coinage of silver produced in the United States or its dependencies. The silver certificates herein referred to shall be issued, delivered, and circulated substantially in conformity with the law now governing existing silver certificates, except as may herein be expressly provided to the contrary, and shall have and possess all of the privileges and the legal-tender characteristics of existing silver certificates now in the Treasury of the United States, or in circulation.

"'The President is authorized, in addition to other powers, to reduce the weight of the standard silver dollar in the same percentage that he reduces the weight of the gold dollar.

"'The President is further authorized to reduce and fix the weight of subsidiary coins so as to maintain the parity of such coins with the standard silver dollar and with the gold dollar.'"

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have submitted the amendment to the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency and also to the counsel of the Treasury Department, and have modified it in accordance with the wishes of the chairman of the committee and the counsel of the Department.

I must say, sir, that I reserve the right to offer a separate bill later on to carry out certain features of what I have in view, but I do not desire to embarrass the committee, or the chairman of the committee, or the Senate, by suggesting anything which it might be thought would cause delay, either on the floor of the Senate or in conference.

I will explain the amendment briefly. Under the law enacted May 23, 1933, the Government has been coining silver produced in the United States since the issuance of the President's proclamation. Under the proclamation, one half the bullion that is tendered for coinage is taken by the Treasury Department and placed in the Treasury of the United States. Unfortunately there is no law on the statute books today by which they may use the seigniorages in the Treasury of the United States. The amendment provides that the Treasury shall have authority to coin that silver into dollars and subsidiary coins and either to circulate it as currency or to issue bills or certificates against it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is that provision merely permissive?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; it is merely permissive.

One further comment: The amendment would also grant permission for the issuance of silver certificates against any other silver bullion or silver dollars which may be in the Treasury of the United States or which may come into the Treasury hereafter.

There is still another provision. Under the coinage proclamation at the present time the Treasury gives the coined silver dollar made out of half of the bullion to the tenderer of the silver. There is no provision of law by which they could tender to him a silver certificate if he desired it instead of the silver dollar itself. The amendment provides that they may have that authority.

The other material paragraph grants to the President the authority to charge a larger seigniorage for the coining of silver produced abroad than for that produced in the United States, or a different rate.

The necessity for that is that the President, in ratifying the London agreement, has obligated our Government to take at least 24,461,000 ounces of silver a year for 4 years from our mines. That is about the annual production of our country; and unless the President shall have the power to make the market price in the United States slightly above the world price, we probably will lose the silver from our country and the President will not be in position to carry out the agreement. That is the reason for that provision in the amendment.

The other provision, with regard to subsidiary coinage, was thought necessary by the Treasury Department because in the event of fixing any different ratio with regard to silver and gold it might become necessary to change the coinage ratio of the subsidiary coin.

I have submitted the whole matter to the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, as the amendment was originally offered, I had very serious objection to it, but as it has been modified by the Senator from Nevada I have no personal objection, and I think perhaps it would be well to have it adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I now offer the amendment which was read at the desk earlier in the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Indiana proposes, on page 20, between lines 11 and 12, to insert the following new sections:

SEC. 16. Title V of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof three new sections, to read as follows:

"PAYMENT OF CERTIFICATES BEFORE MATURITY

"SEC. 509. (a) The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is authorized and directed to pay to any veteran to whom an adjusted-service certificate has been issued, upon application by him and surrender of the certificate and all rights thereunder (with or without the consent of the beneficiary thereof), the amount of the face value of the certificate as computed in accordance with section 501.

"(b) No payment shall be made under this section until the certificate is in the possession of the Veterans' Administration, nor until all obligations for which the certificate was held as security have been paid or otherwise discharged.

"(c) If at the time of application to the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs for payment under this section the principal and interest on or in respect of any loan upon the certificate have not been paid in full by the veteran (whether or not the loan has matured), then, on request of the veteran, the Administrator shall (1) pay or otherwise discharge such unpaid principal and so much of such unpaid interest (accrued or to accrue) as is necessary to make the certificate available for payment under this section, and (2) deduct from the amount of the face value of the certificate the amount of such principal and so much of such interest, if any, as accrued prior to October 1, 1932.

"(d) Upon payment under this section, the certificate and all rights thereunder shall be canceled.

"(e) A veteran may receive the benefits of this section by application therefor, filed with the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs. Such application may be made and filed at any time before the maturity of the certificate (1) personally by the veteran, or (2) in case physical or mental incapacity prevents the making or filing of a personal application, then by such representative of the veteran and in such manner as may be by regulations prescribed. An application made by a person other than a representative authorized by such regulations, or not filed on or before the maturity of the certificate, shall be held void.

"(f) If the veteran dies after the application is made and before it is filed, it may be filed by any person. If the veteran dies after the application is made, it shall be valid if the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs finds that it bears the bona fide signature of the applicant, discloses an intention to claim the benefit of this section on behalf of the veteran, and is filed before the maturity of the certificate, whether or not the veteran is alive at the time it is filed. If the death occurs after the application is made but before the negotiation of the check in payment, payment shall be made to the estate of the veteran irrespective of any beneficiary designation, if the application is filed (1) before the death occurs, or (2) after the death occurs but before the mailing of the check in payment to the beneficiary under section 501.

"(g) Where the records of the Veterans' Administration show that an application, disclosing an intention to claim the benefits of this section, has been filed before the maturity of the certificate, and the application cannot be found, such application shall be presumed, in the absence of affirmative evidence to the contrary, to have been valid when originally filed.

"SEC. 510. If at the time this section takes effect a veteran entitled to receive an adjusted-service certificate has not made application therefor, he shall be entitled, upon application made under section 302, to receive at his option either the certificate under section 501 or payment of the amount of the face value thereof under section 509.

"SEC. 511. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, in the exercise of his powers to make regulations for payment under section 509, shall to the fullest extent practicable provide a method by which veterans may present their applications and receive payment in close proximity to the places of their residence."

SEC. 17. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to cover into the adjusted-service-certificate fund, out of any profit covered into the Treasury under section 7 of this act, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I shall not attempt any considerable discussion of the proposed amendment. In fact, I have only 10 minutes, under the rule. It requires no discussion because the Senate is familiar with what is sought to be accomplished by it.

In a word, it provides for immediate payment of the adjusted compensation certificates—commonly called the soldiers' bonus. If the amendment were to be adopted by the Senate and added to the bill, then the veterans of the World War who are entitled to the so-called "bonus" would be paid immediately out of any profits that may accrue as a result of the revaluation of the dollar.

The general impression is that this bill, if passed and signed by the President, will result in some $4,000,000,000 of profits to the United States Government through the revaluation process. The approximate amount due the veterans on their adjusted-compensation certificates is $2,000,000,000, or a little more. The bill provides that we shall turn over to the Secretary of the Treasury $2,000,000,000 to be used as a stabilization fund. It is also provided that the Secretary of the Treasury shall use this $2,000,000,000 fund practically in any manner he may see fit. His decision shall be final and not subject to review by any other officer of the United States.

I have not the slightest doubt in the world, in view of our experiences in the past in dealing with other nations in matters of this kind, that at the end of 3 years the Secretary of the Treasury will have lost the entire fund. Personally I am sorry to see Uncle Sam sitting in an international poker game, even though he has a "stack of chips aggregating $2,000,000,000", and that I believe is the language attributed to the President.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator suggested that in his opinion at the end of 3 years Uncle Sam will have lost the $2,000,000,000. Does he mean he probably will have lost it in the international poker game?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I think that in the end he will lose it all. The entire $2,000,000,000 will have gone. In fact, from reliable sources one hears today that the English, astute as they are in matters of this kind, have already lost a large portion of their stabilization fund. Yet we turn over $2,000,000,000 to a reputedly charming young man, Mr. Morgenthau, but who has absolutely no experience in matters of this kind. We make it unnecessary for him to submit any kind of report to the American people as to what he is doing with the $2,000,000,000 of their money that we give to him.

Mr. President, we have veterans all over the United States waiting for the payment of a debt that has been due since the day the armistice was signed. We acknowledged the debt in 1924. If we owed this debt at all, it became due in 1918 upon the signing of the armistice and not in 1945, so it is some 16 years overdue now. Untold thousands of veterans are ragged and hungry. I would far rather turn over $2,000,000,000 of the profits coming out of this venture to the veterans of the United States who are in dire need today than to give it to Mr. Morgenthau, the Secretary of the Treasury, to gamble in international finance with powerful nations abroad. It would do much more good and there can be no question about that.

Mr. President, these veterans come from every home in the land. From every household in the country some loved one has gone forth to war, and I think that statement is true of the World War alone. Therefore, if one desires to make use of the profits out of this venture and to contribute toward the purchasing power of the American people and thereby furnish fuel for the recovery machine, what better use could be made of it than to pay off this debt which the Government owes to the veterans?

Mark you, it must be paid anyhow in 1945 at the latest. Within 10 years, then, in some manner or other it will be necessary to raise $2,000,000,000 additional. How are we going to raise it 10 years from now? Our national indebtedness will be $32,000,000,000 within the next year; and very probably long before 1945, at the rate we are going now, it will be forty or forty-five billion dollars. Then, on top of that, it will be necessary to raise $2,000,000,000 additional to pay off these adjusted-service certificates. I should like to pay them off now out of some of this emergency money we have, and for that we will get some real value. We will at least discharge a debt we owe and have owed since the day of the armistice.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUTTING. Shall we not actually be saving the Government money by putting through such an amendment as the Senator proposes?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I think there can be no question about it, Mr. President.

Mr. CUTTING. And shall we not at the same time be increasing the purchasing power of the masses of the people?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Exactly; and we will place it in their hands at once. We have already arranged in this bill to turn over $2,000,000,000 to Mr. Morgenthau, the Secretary of the Treasury, to use in international financial matters. We have no means in the world of knowing what he will ever do with it—not the slightest. He never makes any report to anybody. The Senate has no right to ask him what he does with that money during the next 3 years, and that will not help purchasing power in this country in the slightest degree. This amendment merely proposes to take $2,000,000,000 of the profits from this gold venture and pay off a debt we owe and must pay off in the next 10 years at the latest. It will just add that large amount to the buying power of the American people, and it will go into every home in the land.

Because of that fact, Mr. President, I submit that the amendment ought to be accepted by the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to say that this amendment was never before the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate. Therefore it had no consideration there at all. If it should be adopted—which, I take it, is impossible—it would destroy what we have done here in the last 4 or 5 days. It is quite in conflict with what we have already acted upon.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I shall, of course, vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON]. I am surprised to hear the distinguished chairman of the committee, the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], say that such an amendment would destroy everything we have done in the last 4 days. That impels me to inquire just what we have done in the last 4 days.

I have sat here and listened to at least five sixths of the debate on this bill, and so far I have not yet heard a clear answer to the question propounded by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] at the beginning of the debate, namely, What is the purpose of this legislation?

I am going to vote for the bill. I had that intention before the debate started, and I still retain that intention. I believe that the bill is a step—perhaps an infinitesimal step—in the right direction.

The Government must be master in its own house. This bill, as I see it, makes the Government master so far as the bullion is concerned. To some extent, no doubt, it makes it master of its currency system, although my impression is that the Government last spring obtained every power with regard to its currency which is proposed under the present amendment; and I think I am backed in that statement by the message of the President of the United States, written as a preface to this bill.

Regardless of that, however, the fact remains that in normal times nine tenths of the money of the United States consists not of currency but of credit; and insofar as this bill is concerned, we are not dealing with that fundamental aspect of the question which confronts the United States.

I have read all the hearings before the Senate committee. I have admired the golden cobwebs spun by Professor Warren and Professor Rogers, yet, to my mind, although credit expansion may conceivably result from this bill, the credit which will thereby be produced will go to the wrong people. It will go to the bankers and not to the public.

I do not often have occasion to quote the remarks of Mr. Owen D. Young, and yet I believe what Mr. Young said on page 274 of the hearings is entirely sound. To a question by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]:

> How much expansion of credit, Mr. Young, do you think we really need?

Mr. Young replied:

> It is not the expansion of credit that we need. It is the use of credit which we need. We now have eight or nine billions of inert potential credit in our banking system, and we cannot get it used.

The place we want credit is in the hands of the consumer. I do not think it is necessary to argue that point at this time in the history of the United States. Three or four years ago people thought you were crazy when you talked about equating the purchasing power of the country with the productive power. Now everybody recognizes that, so far as speech is concerned. We talk about purchasing power, but we take little action about it.

In my judgment, the Government is going to have to finance the consumer as a consumer—not primarily as a worker—and it is going to have to do it very soon. It can be done only through the establishment of some central government agency—call it a central bank or call it what you will—which will monopolize the credit system of the country for the benefit of the public and not for the benefit of the bankers. Such an agency must eventually absorb, at a greater or lesser rate of speed, the present Federal Reserve System. Our distributive system must be strengthened by the Government acting directly as an agent for the consumer.

I know the administration is attempting to do a great deal to relieve the common man in this country. Its sincerity is unassailable. Yet, Mr. President, we all know that in the haste which has been necessary many Government agents and agencies have been working at cross purposes with other Government agencies.

In a speech made last August, for instance, General Johnson said:

> Do not forget that nobody expects employers to pay the increased cost of reemployment. That is not possible. The consumer, as always, pays the bill.

Mr. President, when we come to think of such a statement, how preposterous it seems. Essentially the consumer and the wage earner are one and the same person in this country. So we are asking the wage earner to pay his own wages. We are asking the consumer to subsidize the rise of prices which he will have to pay. We are trying to pull ourselves over the fence by our bootstraps.

Mr. President, there are still 6,000,000 American citizens walking the streets. There are 4,000,000, thank God, being employed today by the C.W.A., yet we are talking seriously of cutting most of them off the rolls. If we cut down on those 4,000,000, where is our purchasing power going to come from? Are we going to absorb it elsewhere? I have heard rumors to that effect. It has been reported that 1,000,000 of those men are to be absorbed by the Public Works Administration; that 1,000,000 will go back to private industry, and that 1,000,000—let me say to my friends from the agricultural sections of the country—are expected to go back to the farms.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, have I still 10 minutes time to speak on the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has 10 minutes time to speak on the bill.

Mr. CUTTING. I shall take the 10 minutes at this time.

Mr. President, such an absorption of C.W.A. labor seems to some of us entirely fantastic. Even assuming that we could absorb the men in the way that has been mentioned, we still have six millions who will not be absorbed through this program or through any other.

There are two parts of the Government program which, to my mind, alone account for what progress has been made toward the accomplishment of the goal which is before us all. One is the C.W.A. That has actually brought money where money was needed—money to the people who intend to spend it.

The second is the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which, however, preposterous we may consider the theory under which it operates, has actually brought some help to some people who are going to spend their allotment checks in consumption.

Outside of that what have we got? We have an N.R.A. which is based on the plan that the worker-consumer is going to pay the cost of providing himself with increased wages.

We have got the Public Works Administration, from which many of us hoped a great deal, which up to date, in the 7 months of its existence, has expended in grants to States and municipalities the sum of $50,000,000, as compared with the $250,000,000 spent by the C.W.A. in a few weeks. All the relief agencies of the Government together in the past fiscal year have spent a total of $700,000,000; yet the total emergency expenditures of the Government are listed at 7½ billion dollars.

There is something wrong, Mr. President, with that system. I am not uttering these words in any spirit of criticism. I feel myself as responsible for the present situation as any other Member of the Senate. But we have got to do something about it, and we cannot do something about it by spending 4½ days in discussing a bill which to my mind is not going to help feed one hungry human being in this country—which is not going to increase the purchasing power by one penny unless it is followed up by subsequent legislation.

Let us go ahead—I appeal to the Members on the majority side of the aisle—let us not have to say, as Lloyd George said in one of his most eloquent speeches at a crucial moment of the war, that "Everything that has been done so far was done too late." That is the danger which we face today. We are doing the right things perhaps. We are doing things which might have saved the situation 6 months or a year ago. We are doing them too late. We have got to speed up on this program if we are really going to meet the situation with which we are confronted.

Remember that while we have added considerable purchasing power, especially through the C.W.A., we have also cut down a great deal of purchasing power. We have cut $300,000,000 of purchasing power away from the people of the country through the Economy Act of last March. We have cut $600,000,000 through various forms of taxation amounting in essence to sales taxes. We cut away some $8,000,000,000 of purchasing power in closed banks at the very start of the program.

Mr. President, we have got to remedy this situation. We have got to remedy it at the present session. I am for the new deal. I believe, and I think an overwhelming majority of the people of this country believe, in the sincerity and good faith of the President of the United States, who is inaugurating the new deal. But I think there are too many people in the ranks of the administration who are at heart not "new dealers" at all, but old dealers in some other form.

The people of the country admire the President because he is not afraid to experiment. They admire him because he is willing to admit when an experiment has failed. But, Mr. President, sooner or later—and I think sooner—the time is coming when the people of this country are going to demand results. We have as yet few results to show them. We have got to get results, and we cannot afford to postpone them until it shall be "too late."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, in connection with the remarks of the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] on the subject of the constitutionality of the pending bill, at my request the Attorney General prepared a memorandum having relation to some of the authorities cited by the Senator from Vermont, and citing other authorities. I ask to have the memorandum printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OPINION BY THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES—RE: CONSTITUTIONALITY OF GOLD RESERVE BILL

Senator AUSTIN in his speech in the Senate on January 25 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 1322 et seq.) advances the argument that certain provisions of the gold reserve bill are unconstitutional in that they constitute a delegation of legislative power to the Executive.

He refers expressly to the following sections:

Section 6, which provides that except to the extent permitted in regulations which may be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, no currency of the United States shall be redeemed in gold, provided, however, that gold certificates owned by the Federal Reserve banks shall be redeemed at such times and in such amounts as, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, are necessary to maintain the equal purchasing power of every kind of currency of the United States.

Section 8, which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase gold, and section 9, which authorizes him to sell gold.

Section 10, which authorizes dealings in gold and foreign exchange for the purpose of stabilizing exchange value of the dollar.

Section 11, which inserts a limitation in the so-called "Thomas amendment", authorizing the President, by proclamation, to fix the weight of the gold dollar at such amounts as he finds necessary from his investigation to stabilize domestic prices or to protect the foreign commerce against the adverse effect of depreciated foreign currency.

Insofar as sections 8, 9, and 10 are concerned, they seek to confer upon the Executive purely administrative powers. The right to purchase and sell gold and foreign exchange cannot, by any stretch of the imagination, be construed as a legislative function.

The act of March 17, 1862 (R.S., sec. 3700; U.S.C., title 31, sec. 734), conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury the power to purchase coin. That power has been exercised on occasion. The provisions of sections 8, 9, and 10 of the bill are merely an enlargement of the power conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury in the act of 1862.

The other provisions to which Senator AUSTIN refers do not involve a delegation of legislative power to the Executive.

An examination of congressional legislation indicates that from the earliest days of the Republic Congress has had occasion to pass laws containing a general principle or a formula leaving to the Executive the determination of the occasion on which the general principle should be invoked and the manner in which it should be effectuated. Some acts included provisions that violations of any regulation that might be made by the Executive in carrying it into effect should be deemed criminal offenses. In a long line of decisions the Supreme Court has sustained the constitutionality of this type of legislation. It realizes that as a matter of practical administration of governmental affairs it is impossible to foresee and cover every detail by legislative enactment. Much must be left to the discretion of executive officials. The legislative branch of the Government need properly concern itself solely with enacting general principles, the detailed application of which must often be left to the judgment of administrative officers. Congress delineates and sketches a general outline; the Executive fills in the details.

These principles were summarized as follows in Mutual Film Corporation v. Ohio Industrial Commission (236 U.S. 230, 245):

"While administration and legislation are quite distinct powers, the line which separates exactly their exercise is not easy to define in words. It is best recognized in illustrations. Undoubtedly the legislature must declare the policy of the law and fix the legal principles which are to control in given cases; but an administrative body may be invested with the power to ascertain the facts and conditions to which the policy and principles apply. If this could not be done there would be infinite confusion in the laws, and in an effort to detail and to particularize, they would miss sufficiency both in provision and execution."

Within a few years after the adoption of the Constitution, during the second administration of George Washington, Congress, by the act of June 4, 1794, granted to the President authority to lay an embargo on all ships and vessels in the ports of the United States "whenever, in his opinion, the public safety shall so require", and under regulations, to be continued or revoked "whenever he shall think proper."

By the act of February 9, 1799, the President was given authority to remit and discontinue for the time being, the restraints and prohibitions which Congress had prescribed with respect to commercial intercourse with the French Republic "if he shall deem it expedient and consistent with the interest of the United States", and to revoke such order "whenever in his opinion, the interest of the United States shall require."

During the administration of Thomas Jefferson, Congress, by the act of December 19, 1806, delegated to the President the power to suspend the operation of the Nonimportation Act, "if, in his judgment, the public interest should require it."

By an act approved on May 1, 1810, by President Madison, who participated in the framing of the Constitution probably to a greater extent than any other single individual, Congress authorized the President to revive a former act as to Great Britain or France, if either country had not by a certain day so revoked or modified its edicts as not to violate the neutral commerce of the United States.

The act of March 3, 1815, conferred upon the President the power to declare the repeal as to any foreign nation of the several acts imposing tonnage and import duties, when he should be satisfied that the discriminating duties of such foreign nations, so far as they operate to the disadvantage of the United States, had been abolished.

It is a significant commentary on the topic under discussion that all of the statutes that have just been enumerated were enacted while many of the framers of the Constitution were still living and active in public life. It does not appear that the constitutionality of any of these statutes was ever called in question.

The act of May 31, 1830, contained provisions similar to those of the act of March 3, 1815.

By the act of March 6, 1866, the President was clothed with authority to declare inoperative the provisions of the act forbidding the importation of cattle whenever, in his judgment, that might be done without danger of the introduction or spread of contagious or infectious disease among the cattle of the United States.

The Tariff Act of October 1, 1890, authorized the President to suspend the free importation of sugar, molasses, etc., from any country which levied duties against importations from this country that he might deem unequal and unreasonable. The validity of this enactment was attacked as delegating legislative power to the President. The Court overruled this contention and sustained the validity of the statute (Field v. Clark, 143 U.S. 649, 680).

The act of March 2, 1897, prohibited the importation of inferior tea. It was provided that the Secretary of the Treasury should appoint a board of experts every year to fix and establish uniform standards of purity, quality, and fitness of all kinds of tea imported into this country. All tea inferior to such standards was to be deemed within the prohibition as to importation. In Buttfield v. Stranahan (192 U.S. 470, 496), the Supreme Court ruled that the statute was constitutional and did not involve the vesting of the Secretary of the Treasury with legislative power.

The Rivers and Harbors Act of March 3, 1899, authorized the Secretary of War to determine that certain structures constituted obstructions to navigation and to require their alteration or removal. Failure to comply with the order of the Secretary of War was made a criminal offense. The validity of this statute has been sustained in a number of cases and convictions for violations of the statute have been affirmed (Union Bridge Co. v. United States, 204 U.S. 364; Hannibal Bridge Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 194; Wisconsin v. Illinois, 278 U.S. 367, 414).

By the act of February 1, 1905, the Secretary of Agriculture was authorized to make rules and regulations to regulate the occupancy and use of forest reserves and to preserve the forests from destruction. Any violation of the act or of such rules or regulations was made a criminal offense. The Secretary of Agriculture promulgated a regulation prohibiting the grazing of stock in any forest reserve without a permit. The defendants were indicted on a charge of driving and grazing sheep on a forest reserve without a permit. Demurrers to the indictments were sustained, and the Government appealed to the Supreme Court. The latter tribunal reversed the judgments, holding that the statute was constitutional and did not comprise any delegation of legislative power to the Secretary of Agriculture (United States v. Grimaud, 220 U.S. 506).

The Transportation Act of 1920 authorized the Interstate Commerce Commission, whenever it was of the opinion that an emergency existed requiring immediate action, to suspend its rules as to car service and to make such reasonable rules with regard to it as in its opinion would best promote the service. The act provided that violations of such rules should constitute a criminal offense. On July 25, 1922, the Commission issued an order reciting that in its opinion an emergency existed and formulating certain rules in reference to furnishing coal cars to the mines. A conviction of a violation of this rule was upheld and the constitutionality of the act sustained in Avent v. United States (266 U.S. 127). In discussing this point, Mr. Justice Holmes stated that "Congress may make violation of the Commission's rules a crime."

The Tariff Act of September 21, 1922, contained the so-called "flexible" provision authorizing the President to increase or decrease rates of duty by proclamation in order to equalize them with the difference in costs of production in the United States and the principal competing country. The constitutionality of this provision was challenged as an invalid delegation of legislative power to the Executive. The Supreme Court reached the conclusion that the act was constitutional (Hampton & Co. v. United States, 276 U.S. 394).

The Supreme Court has applied the same principles in passing upon the validity of State legislation. Thus, in Sproles v. Binford (286 U.S. 374), the Court upheld the validity of a provision of the Texas Motor Vehicle Act which prohibited the transportation over State highways of certain overweight or oversized vehicles, but authorizing the highway department to grant special permits for limited periods exempting from its operation equipment that could not be reasonably dismantled.

In the pending bill, section 6 does not seek to confer upon the Secretary of the Treasury unlimited authority to use his own discretion to redeem or not to redeem currency in gold, but fixes a formula or a standard which he must apply in reaching his decision. In that respect this provision is similar to the statutes enumerated above and is within the rule laid down by the cases which have been heretofore discussed.

Section 12 modifies the Thomas amendment. Senator AUSTIN'S objection is directed against the original Thomas amendment, and in no event has any application to the proposed modification. The question of constitutionality of existing law is not here in issue. It may be noted, however, that the discretion conferred upon the President in the Thomas amendment is likewise controlled by a standard which he is required to apply, and thus falls within the doctrine discussed above.

Senator AUSTIN refers to the opinion of Chief Justice Marshall in Wayman v. Southard (10 Wheat. 1, 42). It is interesting to note that this case upheld the constitutionality of the provision of the Judiciary Act conferring upon the courts the power to establish rules, as against an objection that the statute delegated legislative powers to the courts.

The argument that has been advanced by Senator AUSTIN was likewise interposed against the constitutionality of section 2 of the Emergency Banking Act of March 9, 1933, in the recent case of United States v. Campbell, decided on November 16, 1933, by Judge Woolsey in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Judge Woolsey's opinion discusses this matter at considerable length and overrules the contention that section 2 of the act of March 9, 1933, involved any invalid litigation of legislative power to the Executive.

In Field v. Clark, supra, the Supreme Court had the occasion to consider the following provision of section 3 of the act of October 1, 1890, to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes (ch. 1244, 26 Stat. 567, 612):

"That with a view to secure reciprocal trade with countries producing the following articles, and for this purpose, on and after the 1st day of January, 1892, whenever and so often as the President shall be satisfied that the government of any country producing and exporting sugars, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, raw and uncured, or any of such articles, imposes duties or other exactions upon the agricultural or other products of the United States, which, in view of the free introduction of such sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides into the United States, he may deem to be reciprocally unequal and unreasonable, he shall have the power, and it shall be his duty, to suspend, by proclamation to that effect, the provisions of this act relating to the free introduction of such sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, the production of such country, for such time as he shall deem just, and in such case and during such suspension duties shall be levied, collected, and paid upon sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, the product of or exported from such designated country, as follows, namely."

In answer to the contention that this section delegated legislative power to the President, the Supreme Court said (pp. 690–693):

"It would seem to be unnecessary to make further reference to acts of Congress to show that the authority conferred upon the President by the third section of the act of October 1, 1890, is not an entirely new feature in the legislation of Congress, but has the sanction of many precedents in legislation. While some of these precedents are stronger than others, in their application to the case before us they all show that, in the judgment of the legislative branch of the Government, it is often desirable, if not essential for the protection of the interests of our people against the unfriendly or discriminating regulations established by foreign governments in the interests of their people, to invest the President with large discretion in matters arising out of the execution of statutes relating to trade and commerce with other nations. * * *

* * * * * * *

"That Congress cannot delegate legislative power to the President is a principle universally recognized as vital to the integrity and maintenance of the system of government ordained by the Constitution. The act of October 1, 1890, in the particular under consideration, is not inconsistent with that principle. It does not, in any real sense, invest the President with the power of legislation. For the purpose of securing reciprocal trade with countries producing and exporting sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, Congress iteself determined that the provisions of the act of October 1, 1890, permitting the free introduction of such articles, should be suspended as to any country producing and exporting them, that imposed exactions and duties on the agricultural and other products of the United States, which the President deemed, that is, which he found to be, reciprocally unequal and unreasonable. Congress itself prescribed, in advance, the duties to be levied, collected, and paid, on sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, or hides, produced by or exported from such designated country, while the suspension lasted. Nothing involving the expediency or the just operation of such legislation was left to the determination of the President. The words, "he may deem", in the third section, of course, implied that the President would examine the commercial regulations of other countries producing and exporting sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, and form a judgment as to whether they were reciprocally equal and reasonable, or the contrary, in their effect upon American products. But when he ascertained the fact that duties and exactions, reciprocally unequal and unreasonable, were imposed upon the agricultural or other products of the United States by a country producing and exporting sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, or hides, it became his duty to issue a proclamation declaring the suspension, as to that country, which Congress had determined should occur. He had no discretion in the premises except in respect to the duration of the suspension so ordered. But that related only to the enforcement of the policy established by Congress. As the suspension was absolutely required when the President ascertained the existence of a particular fact, it cannot be said that in ascertaining that fact and in issuing his proclamation, in obedience to the legislative will, he exercised the function of making laws. Legislative power was exercised when Congress declared that the suspension should take effect upon a named contingency. What the President was required to do was simply in execution of the act of Congress. It was not the making of law. He was the mere agent of the lawmaking department to ascertain and declare the event upon which its expressed will was to take effect. It was a part of the law itself as it left the hands of Congress that the provisions, full and complete in themselves, permitting the free introduction of sugars, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, from particular countries, should be suspended, in a given contingency, and that in case of such suspension certain duties should be imposed."

Referring to this decision (Field v. Clark) in Hampton & Co. v. United States, supra, the Court said (pp. 410–411):

"* * * It was contended that this section delegated to the President both legislative and treaty-making powers and was unconstitutional. After an examination of all the authorities, the Court said that while Congress could not delegate legislative power to the President, this act did not in any real sense invest the President with the power of legislation, because nothing involving the expediency or just operation of such legislation was left to the determination of the President; that the legislative power was exercised when Congress declared that the suspension should take effect upon a named contingency. What the President was required to do was merely in execution of the act of Congress. It was not the making of law. He was the mere agent of the lawmaking department to ascertain and declare the event upon which its expressed will was to take effect."

In Hampton & Co. v. United States, supra, the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of section 315 of the Tariff Act of September 21, 1922 (19 U.S.C.A. 154 et seq.), which provides:

"(a) That in order to regulate the foreign commerce of the United States and to put into force and effect the policy of the Congress by this act intended, whenever the President, upon investigation of the differences in costs of production of articles wholly or in part the growth or product of competing foreign countries, shall find it thereby shown that the duties fixed in this act do not equalize the said differences in costs of production in the United States and the principal competing country, he shall, by such investigation, ascertain said differences and determine and proclaim the changes in classifications or increases or decreases in any rate of duty provided in this act shown by said ascertained differences in such costs of production necessary to equalize the same. Thirty days after the date of such proclamation or proclamations such changes in classification shall take effect, and such increased or decreased duties shall be levied, collected, and paid on such articles when imported from any foreign country into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands, the Virgin Islands, and the islands of Guam and Tutuila): Provided, That the total increase or decrease of such rates of duty shall not exceed 50 percent of the rates specified in title I of this act, or in any amendatory act.

"(b) That in order to regulate the foreign commerce of the United States and to put into force and effect the policy of the Congress by this act intended, whenever the President, upon investigation of the differences in costs of production of articles provided for in title I of this act, wholly or in part the growth or product of the United States and of like or similar articles wholly or in part the growth or product of competing foreign countries, shall find it thereby shown that the duties prescribed in this act do not equalize said differences, and shall further find it thereby shown that the said differences in costs of production in the United States and the principal competing country cannot be equalized by proceeding under the provisions of subdivision (a) of this section, he shall make such findings public, together with a description of the articles to which they apply, in such detail as may be necessary for the guidance of appraising officers. In such cases and upon the proclamation by the President becoming effective the ad valorem duty or duty based in whole or in part upon the value of the imported article in the country of exportation shall thereafter be based upon the American selling price, as defined in subdivision (f) of section 402 of the act, of any similar competitive article manufactured or produced in the United States embraced within the class or kind of imported articles upon which the President has made a proclamation under subdivision (b) of this section.

"The ad valorem rate or rates of duty based upon such American selling price shall be the rate found, upon said investigation by the President, to be shown by the said differences in costs of production necessary to equalize such differences, but no such rate shall be decreased more than 50 percent of the rate specified in title I of this act upon such articles, nor shall any such rate be increased. Such rate or rates of duty shall become effective 15 days after the date of the said proclamation of the President, whereupon the duties so estimated and provided shall be levied, collected, and paid on such articles when imported from any foreign country into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands, the Virgin Islands, and the islands of Guam and Tutuila). If there is any imported article within the class or kind of articles, upon which the President has made public a finding, for which there is no similar competitive article manufactured or produced in the United States, the value of such imported article shall be determined under the provision of paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) of subdivision (a) of section 402 of this act.

"(c) That in ascertaining the differences in costs of production, under the provisions of subdivisions (a) and (b) of this section, the President, insofar as he finds it practicable, shall take into consideration (1) the differences in conditions in production, including wages, costs of material, and other items in costs of production of such or similar articles in the United States and in competing foreign countries; (2) the differences in the wholesale selling prices of domestic and foreign articles in the principal markets of the United States; (3) advantages granted to a foreign producer by a foreign government, or by a person, partnership, corporation, or association in a foreign country; and (4) any other advantage or disadvantage in competition.

"Investigations to assist the President in ascertaining differences in costs of production under this section shall be made by the United States Tariff Commission, and no proclamation shall be issued under this section until such investigation shall have been made. The Commission shall give reasonable public notice of its hearings and shall give reasonable opportunity to parties interested to be present, to produce evidence, and to be heard. The Commission is authorized to adopt such reasonable procedure, rules, and regulations as it may deem necessary.

"The President, proceeding as hereinbefore provided for in proclaiming rates of duty, shall, when he determines that it is shown that the differences in costs of production have changed or no longer exist which led to such proclamation, accordingly as so shown, modify or terminate the same. Nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize a transfer of an article from the dutiable list to the free list or from the free list to the dutiable list, nor a change in form of duty. Whenever it is provided in any paragraph of title I of this act that the duty or duties shall not exceed a specified ad valorem rate upon the articles provided for in such paragraph, no rate determined under the provision of this section upon such articles shall exceed the maximum ad valorem rate so specified.

"(d) For the purposes of this section, any coal-tar product provided for in paragraphs 27 or 28 of title I of this act shall be considered similar to or competitive with any imported coal-tar product which accomplishes results substantially equal to those accomplished to the domestic product when used in substantially the same manner.

"(e) The President is authorized to make all needful rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this section.

"(f) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary for the entry and declaration of imported articles of the class or kind of articles upon which the President has made a proclamation under the provisions of subdivision (b) of this section and for the form of invoice required at time of entry."

Briefly, this section empowers and directs the President to increase or decrease duties imposed by the Tariff Act, so as to equalize the differences which, upon investigation, he finds and ascertains between the costs of producing at home and in competing foreign countries the kinds of articles to which such duties apply; and it lays down certain criteria to be taken into consideration in ascertaining the differences, fixes certain limits of change, and makes an investigation by the Tariff Commission, in aid of the President, a necessary preliminary to any proclamation changing the duties.

In support of the constitutionality of section 315, the Solicitor General, in his brief in the Supreme Court, among other things, said:

"Petitioner asserts that the act is unconstitutional because the President is allowed under it to exercise discretion. He may exercise discretion and judgment, but it is in respect of matters of fact and the weight to be given to evidence and the inferences to be drawn from it. Once the facts are settled and difference in costs of production has been ascertained, he is bound to compute and proclaim the new tariff according to the discretions of the statute" (p. 21).

"The statute does not attempt an unlawful delegation of legislative authority. It delegates to the President the power to find facts, not the power to make law. He is to determine, with the assistance of the commission, the domestic and foreign costs of production and the difference between them. The rules to be applied to the facts so found, in order to determine the new rate of duty, are prescribed by the statute. Congress may delegate to others a fact-finding power which the legislature may rightfully exercise itself. Although Congress cannot delegate its power to make the law, it can make a law delegating a power to determine some fact or state of things upon which the law makes, or intends to make, its own action depend. The rule of law prescribed by this statute is that within the limits fixed in the statute tariffs shall be adjusted to equalize the difference in the costs of production of foreign and domestic merchandise" (pp. 8–9).

"It seems clear that the statute delegates only the power to find facts, not the power to make laws, and under elementary rules long settled it must be sustained against the charge that it unlawfully delegates legislative authority" (p. 26).

The Supreme Court concurred in the views of the Solicitor General and declared section 315 constitutional. In the course of its opinion the Court said (pp. 409–10):

"It is conceded by counsel that Congress may use executive officers in the application and enforcement of a policy declared in law by Congress and authorize such officers in the application of the congressional declaration to enforce it by regulation equivalent to law. But it is said that this never has been permitted to be done where Congress has exercised the power to levy taxes and fix customs duties. The authorities make no such distinction. The same principle that permits Congress to exercise its rate-making power in interstate commerce by declaring the rule which shall prevail in the legislative fixing of rates and enables it to remit to a rate-making body created in accordance with its provisions the fixing of such rates justifies a similar provision for the fixing of customs duties on imported merchandise. If Congress shall lay down by legislative act an intelligible principle to which the person or body authorized to fix such rates is directed to conform, such legislative action is not a forbidden delegation of legislative power. If it is thought wise to vary the customs duties according to changing conditions of production at home and abroad, it may authorize the Chief Executive to carry out this purpose, with the advisory assistance of a tariff commission appointed under congressional authority. This conclusion is amply sustained by a case in which there was no advisory commission furnished the President—a case to which this Court gave the fullest consideration nearly 40 years ago." (Here the Court refers to and discusses Field v. Clark, supra, and in conclusion uses the language quoted above in this memorandum in connection with that case.)

Other helpful cases on the subject-matter are: Frisher & Co. v. Elting, 60 F. (2d) (C.C.A. 2d) 711 (certiorari denied).

Frisher & Co. v. Bakelite Corporation, 39 F. (2d) (Ct. Cust. & Pat. App.) 247.

The unreported decision of Judge Coxe of the United States District Court for the southern district of New York, in the recent case of Kreutz v. Elting.

Attention is invited particularly to the exhaustive opinion of the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals in the Hampton & Co. case (14 Ct. Cust. & Pat. App. 350).

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I should also like to have printed in the RECORD a statement appearing in the metropolitan press under the headline, "McKenna Supports United States Money Policy", McKenna being a former Chancellor of the British Exchequer and now the chairman of the Midland Bank.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MCKENNA SUPPORTS UNITED STATES MONEY POLICY—EX-CHANCELLOR OF EXCHEQUER ASSERTS HE IS IN COMPLETE ACCORD WITH ROOSEVELT—HEADS ENGLISH BANK—DECLARES BRITAIN HAS ADOPTED PRINCIPLES OF MANAGED CURRENCY TO STABILIZE PRICES

LONDON, January 26.—Whole-hearted agreement with the basic premise of President Roosevelt's managed-currency theory was expressed today by the Right Honorable Reginald McKenna, one-time Chancellor of the Exchequer and now chairman of the Midland Bank, in his speech before the annual meeting of the shareholders of the bank.

He declared with approval that Great Britain has now adopted the principles of a managed currency with a view to maintaining a stable price level and asserted that in furtherance of this end "inflation has been undertaken, deliberately and on a large scale, during the past 2 years, and has been the most important element in our trade recovery."

CITES ROOSEVELT'S DIFFICULTIES

Explaining the apparent failure to restore prosperity through monetary action in the United States, Mr. McKenna pointed out:

"President Roosevelt has a battle against difficulties which our authorities are happily spared. He is called upon to bring about business recovery at the same time that he undertakes great social reforms, which elsewhere have taken generations to achieve; and he is required to do this largely through the instrumentality of an unresponsive banking system and in the face of problems created by inveterate habits of speculation, and occasional progress to panic and hoarding—a position which has no parallel in England."

ADVOCATES CHEAP MONEY

Therefore, Mr. McKenna urged that Great Britain should continue with the consistent maintenance of cheap, abundant supplies of money and that "until the world has learned how to secure stability of exchange without jeopardizing the stability of purchasing power, our inflexible task must be to demonstrate that a wise management of the monetary unit with no fixed attachment to gold is both practicable and in its results highly beneficial. The price level of commodities in daily use is recognized as the measure of stability in the value of money and the maintenance of such stability as the proper objective of monetary policy."

A highly condensed version of Mr. McKenna's argument that Great Britain has been inflating for 2 years runs thus:

"The quantity of money available in England is governed by action of the Bank of England in buying or selling gold and securities" (since by purchases it puts new money in circulation and by sales contracts the outstanding amount).

CALLED DELIBERATE INFLATION

For nearly 2 years the bank has purchased securities and gold, with the result that deposits in other banks since February 1932 show an increase of £300,000,000 (currently about $1,488,000,000). This creation of additional purchasing power was really deliberate inflation—not recognized as such merely because it has been well controlled.

* * * * * * *

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 19, after line 10, the Senator from Vermont proposes to insert the following:

(d) All of the powers vested by this act in the President and in the Secretary of the Treasury shall expire 2 years after the date of enactment of this act unless the President shall sooner declare the existing emergency ended, but the President may extend such period for not more than one additional year after such date by proclamation recognizing the continuance of such emergency.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I shall try to explain the purpose of this amendment. The only exception in the proposed act, as it now stands, to a permanent law and the establishment of extraordinary permanent power is the expression appearing on page 16, beginning at line 22, where the text reads:

Except that such powers shall expire 2 years after the date of enactment of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934 unless the President shall sooner declare the existing emergency ended, but the President may extend such period for not more than 1 additional year after such date by proclamation recognizing the continuance of such emergency.

To what powers does that exception apply? Upon examination of the text of the bill it will be seen that the exception applies only to those powers either referred to or specified in section 12 of the bill, namely, paragraph (b) (2) of section 43, title III, of the act approved May 12, 1933 (Public, No. 10, 73d Cong.), is amended by adding two new sentences at the end thereof reading as follows:

Nor shall the weight of the gold dollar be fixed in any event at more than 60 percent of its present weight. The powers of the President specified in this paragraph shall be deemed to be separate, distinct, and continuing powers, and may be exercised by him, from time to time, severally or together, whenever and as the expressed objects of this section in his judgment may require.

Those powers are the ones which have been referred to many times before, to inflate the currency by certain specified methods, namely, by reducing the gold content of the dollar, or by dealing in the open market in the bonds of the Government, or by issuing greenbacks.

The other powers contained in this act which we claim are permanent are such great powers as the following: The power to determine—that is, the power to legislate—whether gold certificates owned by the Federal Reserve banks shall be redeemed or whether they shall not be redeemed.

Of course, this power, as it is set forth in section 6 of the bill, is a power of unlimited scope; it is a power which affects the purchasing power of every kind of currency and of all the currency of the United States, as expressly stated in the clause, for this power is given the President for the stated purpose of maintaining the equal purchasing power of every kind of currency of the United States.

Another power which would be affected by this amendment and attempted to be made temporary instead of permanent is the power vested in the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, to legislate as to whether the currency of the United States shall be redeemed in gold; that is, the power to say whether or not the United States shall be at any time in the future or from time to time on or off the gold standard. That is also vested in the President by section 6 of the bill.

There are also other powers vested in the President so to deal in gold, in the buying and selling of gold at home and abroad, as to be able to enhance or depress the value of our money from time to time. It makes very little difference whether we apply the money, the currency, and other issues to gold or whether we apply the gold to the currency. In the one case, in section 8, the power to buy is given. In the other case, in section 9, the power to sell is given; and by means of the exercise of that power to the unlimited extent granted by the act, and without any of the powers granted by section 10, the President of the United States alone may determine from day to day the value and the purchasing power of the American dollar.

It is for the purpose of limiting those powers, to the same extent and time that the powers contained in section 10 are limited, that this amendment is offered.

I wish to state that I have not seen and have never before heard of the memorandum which has been placed in the RECORD, coming from the Attorney General of the United States. Of course, I feel very much complimented that he should have taken notice of my claims respecting the unconstitutionality of the bill to the extent of causing a brief by him to be inserted in the RECORD. I regard it as unfortunate that I have had no opportunity whatever of knowing what it contains; but during the brief moment which I have under the rule I wish to call attention to a portion of the holding in the rent cases, in which the Supreme Court undertook to make plain that it always kept a safety valve on its interpretations of extraordinary powers granted by Congress to other bodies and to other departments of the Government in times of emergency, namely, always having in mind that such powers are temporary, and that they shall not be regarded as precedents for permanent grants of power. The Court said:

> The same principle was applied in the Rent cases (Block v. Hirsh, 256 U.S. 135, and Marcus Brown Holding Co. v. Feldman, 256 U.S. 170), where this court sustained the legislative power to fix rents as between landlord and tenant upon the ground that the operation of the statutes was temporary to tide over an emergency and that the circumstances were such as to clothe "the letting of buildings * * * with a public interest so great as to justify regulation by law."
>
> The regulation is put and justified only as a temporary measure (citing Wilson v. New, supra). A limit in time to tide over a passing trouble well may justify a law that could not be upheld as a permanent change.

In the case of Home Building and Loan Association against Blaisdell & Blaisdell, relating to the Minnesota mortgage moratorium law, the decision being handed down by a divided court on January 8, 1934, and which decision has been placed in the RECORD at page 367, and following there is this pertinent expression:

> Emergency does not create power. Emergency does not increase granted power or remove or diminish the restrictions imposed upon power granted or reserved. The Constitution was adopted in a period of grave emergency. Its grants of power to the Federal Government and its limitations of the power of the States were determined in the light of emergency and they are not altered by emergency. What power was thus granted and what limitations were thus imposed are questions which have always been, and always will be, the subject of close examination under our constitutional system.
>
> While emergency does not create power, emergency may furnish the occasion for the exercise of power. "Although an emergency may not call into life a power which has never lived, nevertheless emergency may afford a reason for the exertion of a living power already enjoyed." (Wilson v. New, 243 U.S. 332, 348.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time on the amendment has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will continue upon the bill—

> The constitutional question presented in the light of an emergency is whether the power possessed embraces the particular exercise of it in response to particular conditions. Thus the war power of the Federal Government is not created by the emergency of war but it is a power given to meet that emergency. It is a power to wage war successfully, and thus it permits the harnessing of the entire energies of the people in a supreme cooperative effort to preserve the Nation.

I invite particular attention to the significant language which follows:

> But even the war power does not remove constitutional limitations safeguarding essential liberties. When the provisions of the Constitution, in grant or restriction, are specific, so particularized as not to admit of construction, no question is presented. Thus emergency would not permit a State to have more than two Senators in the Congress, or permit the election of President by a general popular vote without regard to the number of electors to which the States are respectively entitled, or permit the States to "coin money."

That sounds particularly pertinent here, does it not?

> Or to "make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts." But where constitutional grants and limitations of power are set forth in general clauses, which afford a broad outline, the process of construction is essential to fill in the details.

I am offering to the majority a reasonable amendment so that they may, if they see fit, place upon the bill an interpretation which has been the sole and only basis of the action of the Supreme Court in ever sustaining an act that does what this bill does, namely, transfer from the legislative department of government over to the executive department the power of legislation. I want to make it plain, however, that I do not believe that even with the amendment in the bill it would be constitutional or that this body will have successfully transmitted this power to the President, for I believe this is one of those great powers that cannot be transmitted even temporarily.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if the amendment does not do any good, I do not see any use of considering it at all. In other words, the Senator's argument is that the measure would remain unconstitutional even though his amendment should be adopted. We have considered the question of limiting the time. We have provided a limitation as to all of section 10. As to all of section 12 we limited the time of the expiration of the powers to 2 years. I believe we have gone as far as we can go in that regard.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, earlier in the day, in discussing the proposal made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], I urged that, although the pending gold bill lacks assurance of immediate or early price enhancement in our own domestic market, it does contain an assurance which I characterize as almost a guaranty that some day in the future there will be an enormous credit expansion under the new situation created by this legislation. I do not want that statement to stand upon my uncorroborated testimony. For its support I could call attention to the many utterances of economists and students and a very great deal that has been said by bankers in respect to the idea of creating new banking reserves that have not heretofore existed. I shall not detain the Senate in order to do that, but I will refer briefly to the hearings adduced before the Committee on Banking and Currency to show what was thought by some of the leading experts who appeared before that committee.

I first call attention to the testimony of Dr. Kemmerer in volume 2, at page 152, where we find this statement:

> If we now desire to call a 50-cent piece of February a dollar, and if there should be no change in the value of gold for some time to come, I should say ultimately—it will take time, months or perhaps years—ultimately our price level would be twice as high as it would have been if we had called 100 cents a dollar; and if my expectation is realized, that the 1926 price level would come back, anyway, ultimately as soon as we stop hoarding gold, then our price level would not only go up to 200 as compared with February, but it would go up a great deal further.
>
> That would mean, then, that we would settle back on a price level at 200 to 300, as compared with February, a price level very much higher than 1926. I think the figures work out, on a 50-cent basis, to 111 percent higher, but I will have to check that.

Now, mark these words:

> If we devalued the dollar and got a 50-cent gold dollar, and then we depreciated the value of gold decidedly, and that became a less valuable dollar than 50-cent gold is now, the serious thing to me is that we are going to cut down, probably by 50 or 60 percent—possibly more. That is assuming we make our stabilization effective and it does not run away. I think there is a good probability that it will run away from us, but if we make it effective and it does not run aways it wipes out a very large percentage of the 100 billions of life insurance outstanding in the United States today.

There follow other comments along the same line.

Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that this distinguished economist sounds a warning that the new expansion possibilities in our monetary system, to be created by this bill, may go out of control, and, to use his expression, "may run away."

Let us see just why it is that such a result might be attained. One of the important witnesses before the committee was Dr. Anderson, whom we all know as an economist very highly regarded in his special field. In volume 1 of the testimony, at pages 59 and 60, I find this statement:

> Now, then, I find in this bill before you gentlemen a provision which will increase member-bank reserves by two billions; and I want to show you how to avoid that and still let the President do what he wants to do. It is the most important defect in the bill. There are many others, but this is absolutely vital. If this bill goes through this way with this provision in it, not even a President can control the ensuing inflation. Nobody can pull it down. Once the credit gets working, once confidence gets back, once speculation gets active, and things get moving, it cannot be controlled.

From the same volume, at page 55, I quote further:

> Mr. ANDERSON. The thing that I am going to call your attention to, gentlemen, is technical, but a failure to grasp this technical point can make all the difference between blowing this country sky-high in the ensuing few years and leaving it within the power of the administration somewhat to hold down the coming inflation.

This morning, Mr. President, I asserted with such earnestness as I could command that there is no immediate guaranty of an enhanced price level in this measure. Yet these and other experts agree that when the banking reserves of our country are increased by an enormous figure that runs up into the billions of dollars a situation is created which has in it a real menace to American institutions and to the very life of our country.

We are told by these gentlemen that the bank reserves in terms of ultimate credit are multiplied from 7 to 10 or even 20 multiples.

The very lowest estimate was that of Dr. Warren, and it was $7,000,000,000 of ultimate credit expansion. His highest estimate, I think, was $17,000,000,000, and in his testimony he stated that he did not know within a range of $10,000,000 how to estimate the expanded credit possibility created under the bill. Other witnesses used a higher factor in multiplying the banking reserves in order to arrive at the final result of expanded credit. Some used the figures 10, 15, or 20; indeed, there are estimates before the committee that 30 or 40 billion dollars would be created in ultimate credit expansion under the provisions of this bill; and one economist, with whom I talked outside the committee, made an estimate of $50,000,000,000. So we have here, partly in the record and in common knowledge about us, the fact that the economists of this country are saying that this bill creates a credit-expansion possibility that may produce inflation of from 7 to 50 billion dollars.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BYRNES in the chair). The time of the Senator from Oregon on the amendment has expired.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I will proceed for a few moments on the bill.

We know, moreover, that we already have in America too great a possibility for credit expansion. We know that in 1928 and 1929 the conditions in this country stimulated the use of credit; that we used the possibilities then existing—and which still exist—that we employed those possibilities not only in legitimate business and industry but that the gambling spirit laid hold of our people and great speculative enterprises upon the stock exchange raised the values of Wall Street securities up to $90,000,000,000; that it resulted in an orgy of wild spending, the ultimate result of which was a crash that cost our people, almost overnight, some 30 billion or 40 billion dollars, and contributed in a very substantial way to the breaking down of the economic structure and to the bringing on of poverty, want, and hardship in this country.

We already have had an overexpansion of credit. What we want now is not further enhanced credit possibility, but a more moderate and more certain elevation in the price level for the relief of debtors and for the relief of producers, in order that we may do something for agriculture and in order that we may turn again the wheels of industry in America.

I want Senators to know, I want the RECORD to show, that one voice is raised here to say that in this bill there is a threat; and that many bankers and many economists are telling us solemnly that we may not be able, with all the powers of the Government, to hold in restraint this threat of ultimate credit expansion.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. STEIWER. I am sorry, but I should prefer not to yield, on account of the limit upon my time; otherwise I should be happy to do so.

Mr. President, without elaborating further upon that theme, I want to call attention to the testimony of one more witness. Dr. Rogers is one of those who is said to be cooperating with Professor Warren and to be one of the advisers of the administration in monetary matters. It is worth while briefly to call attention to something he said to the committee. In volume 3, at page 252, we find in the testimony of Dr. Rogers this very significant utterance. I quote:

> Literally out of thin air does such a profit appear. Suddenly the Government finds itself in the possession of entirely new funds, which have come from no one and have to be returned to no one. Hence their expenditures, just as that of newly created greenbacks, is in the first instance purely inflationary. In other words, entirely new purchasing power is added to that already in existence and is pitted against existing supplies of commodities and securities.
>
> However, the secondary inflationary effect of the use of such funds, because potentially much larger, is correspondingly more far-reaching. Once paid out, these new funds, whatever their form—whether new notes, gold certificates, or simply a Government deposit in the Federal Reserve banks—flow to the reserves of the commercial banks. Here they provide the base for a loan and deposit expansion of 4 to 10 times their own magnitude. In a word, they swell the lending capacity of our banking system just as would a like expansion of Federal Reserve credit.

Mr. President, there is hardly any exception in the economic and banking thought of this country to the general proposition that the creating of new reserves means the creation of new credit; and that the creation of such new credit, on account of the lack of confidence among the business people of America, will lie dormant for a time, but that finally, when the day of returning confidence comes, the new credit then will be used, and a great many of the strongest minds in this country believe that we will not be able to deal with the situation which will then confront us; that is, that we will not be able to control that credit. We do not know with whom the credit will finally be lodged. It may be in the hands of the President if he seeks to assert his authority in the premises. It may be in the control of the Secretary of the Treasury. It may be influenced by the unknown and unidentified board set up in the Treasury to deal in the matter of foreign exchanges. But wherever it is, it may be as ineffectual as in the past.

I warn my colleagues as earnestly as I am able that in this bill there lurks this menace of almost boundless credit expansion. This bill is to be passed with that menace, and Congress is forever going to share the responsibility for whatever may happen under the misdirected efforts which the bill permits.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] urged as against House bill 6976 that its enactment would rob the child of its savings and annul the sacred contracts of business.

Further, he contended that there is no extraordinary condition now existing calling for such legislation. In answer to each of these contentions I submit the following remarks and quotations:

In Knox v. Lee (12 Wall. 457) it was held:

The acts of Congress known as the "legal tender" are constitutional when applied to contracts made before their passage. Hepburn v. Griswold (8 Wall. 603) on this point overruled.
They are also valid as applicable to contracts made since.

In the trial of the case, the court instructed the jury:

The proof as to the value of the sheep at the time of conversion has been of their specie value. You will assess that value and add to it the known premium which it requires to buy that much gold with paper.

The attorney, in stating the case, said:

Thus, in fact, while he recognized the principle that greenbacks might discharge the claim, he—left the jury to infer that they can only be forced upon the creditor at the rate which they would bring in gold. This instruction was wrong, because, practically, it made a distinction between coin and paper tenders in regard to a debt accruing after the passage of all the Legal Tender Acts.

The court—

The court, in the course of its opinion, said (p. 531):

A decent respect for a coordinate branch of the Government demands that the judiciary should presume, until the contrary is clearly shown, that there has been no transgression of power by Congress—all the Members of which act under the obligation of an oath of fidelity to the Constitution. Such has always been the rule. In Commonwealth v. Smith the language of the court was: "It must be remembered that for weighty reasons it has been assumed as a principle, in construing constitutions, by the Supreme Court of the United States, by this court, and by every court of reputation in the United States that an act of the legislature is not to be declared void unless the violation of the Constitution is so manifest as to leave no room for reasonable doubt"; and in Fletcher v. Peck Chief Justice Marshall said, "It is not on slight implication and vague conjecture that the Legislature is to be pronounced to have transcended its powers and its acts to be considered void. The opposition between the Constitution and the law should be such that the judge feels a clear and strong conviction of their incompatibility with each other." It is incumbent, therefore, upon those who affirm the unconstitutionality of an act of Congress to show clearly that it is in violation of the provisions of the Constitution.

It is further stated (p. 541):

But if it be conceded that some other means might have been chosen for the accomplishment of these legitimate and necessary ends, the concession does not weaken the argument. It is urged now, after the lapse of 9 years, and when the emergency has passed, that Treasury notes without the legal-tender clause might have been issued, and that the necessities of the Government might thus have been supplied. Hence it is inferred there was no necessity for giving to the notes issued the capability of paying private debts. At best, this is mere conjecture. But admitting it to be true, what does it prove? Nothing more than that Congress had the choice of means for a legitimate end, each appropriate, and adapted to that end, though, perhaps, in different degrees. What then? Can this court say that it ought to have adopted one rather than the other? Is it our province to decide that the means selected were beyond the constitutional power of Congress, because we may think that other means to the same ends would have been more appropriate and equally efficient? That would be to assume legislative power, and to disregard the accepted rules for construing the Constitution. The degree of the necessity for any congressional enactment, or the relative degree of its appropriateness, if it have any appropriateness, is for consideration in Congress, not here.

Page 545:

The Constitution was intended to frame a government as distinguished from a league or compact, a government supreme in some particulars over States and people. It was designed to provide the same currency, having a uniform legal value in all the States. It was for this reason the power to coin money and regulate its value was conferred upon the Federal Government, while the same power, as well as the power to emit bills of credit, was withdrawn from the States.

Page 546:

Even the advocates of a strict literal construction of the phrase, "to coin money and regulate the value thereof", while insisting that it defines the material to be coined as metal, are compelled to concede to Congress large discretion in all other particulars. The Constitution does not ordain what metals may be coined, or prescribe that the legal value of the metals, when coined, shall correspond at all with their intrinsic value in the market. Nor does it even affirm that Congress may declare anything to be a legal tender for the payment of debts. Confessedly the power to regulate the value of money coined, and of foreign coins, is not exhausted by the first regulation. More than once in our history has the regulation been changed without any denial of the power of Congress to change it, and it seems to have been left to Congress to determine alike what metal shall be coined, its purity, and how far its statutory value, as money, shall correspond, from time to time, with the market value of the same metal as bullion. How then can the grant of a power to coin money and regulate its value, made in terms so liberal and unrestrained, coupled also with a denial to the States of all power over the currency, be regarded as an implied prohibition to Congress against declaring Treasury notes a legal tender, if such declaration is appropriate, and adapted to carrying into execution the admitted powers of the Government?

Again, on page 549, it is said:

Every contract for the payment of money, simply, is necessarily subject to the constitutional power of the Government over the currency, whatever that power may be, and the obligation of the parties is, therefore, assumed with reference to that power. Nor is this singular. A covenant for quiet enjoyment is not broken, nor is its obligation impaired by the Government's taking the land granted in virtue of its right of eminent domain. The expectation of the covenantee may be disappointed. He may not enjoy all he anticipated, but the grant was made and the covenant undertaken in subordination to the paramount right of the Government. We have been asked whether Congress can declare that a contract to deliver a quantity of grain may be satisfied by the tender of a less quantity. Undoubtedly not. But this is a false analogy. There is a wide distinction between a tender of quantities, or of specific articles, and a tender of legal values. Contracts for the delivery of specific articles belong exclusively to the domain of State legislation, while contracts for the payment of money are subject to the authority of Congress, at least so far as relates to the means of payment. They are engagements to pay with lawful money of the United States, and Congress is empowered to regulate that money. It cannot, therefore, be maintained that the Legal Tender Acts impaired the obligation of contracts.

Further, on page 551, it is stated:

As in a state of civil society property of a citizen or subject is ownership, subject to the lawful demands of the sovereign, so contracts must be understood as made in reference to the possible exercise of the rightful authority of the Government, and no obligation of a contract can extend to the defeat of legitimate Government authority.

On the same page it is stated:

A new tariff, an embargo, a draft, or a war may inevitably bring upon individuals great losses; may, indeed, render valuable property almost valueless. They may destroy the worth of contracts. But whoever supposed that, because of this, a tariff could not be changed, or a nonintercourse act, or an embargo be enacted, or a war be declared?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. FLETCHER and Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is detained by illness. If he were present, he would vote "yea." He is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], who, I am instructed to say, if present, would vote "nay."

I am instructed also to inform the Senate that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW] is necessarily absent. If he were here and voting, he would vote "yea."

I also announce, as instructed, that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK].

I desire to announce also that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] is necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. KEAN. I am paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HASTINGS] and vote "nay."

Mr. HEBERT. I announce the necessary absence of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], who, if present, would vote "yea" on this question.

I also announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], who, if present, would vote "nay."

I also desire to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 66, nays 23, as follows:

YEAS—66

Adams	Coolidge	La Follette	Robinson, Ark.
Ashurst	Copeland	Lewis	Russell
Bachman	Costigan	Logan	Sheppard
Bailey	Couzens	Lonergan	Shipstead
Bankhead	Cutting	McAdoo	Smith
Barkley	Dieterich	McCarran	Stephens
Black	Dill	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Bone	Duffy	McKellar	Thompson
Borah	Erickson	Murphy	Trammell
Brown	Fletcher	Neely	Tydings
Bulkley	Frazier	Norris	Vandenberg
Byrd	George	Nye	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Harrison	O'Mahoney	Wagner
Capper	Hatch	Overton	Walsh
Caraway	Hayden	Pittman	Wheeler
Clark	Johnson	Pope
Connally	King	Reynolds

NAYS—23

Austin	Gibson	Kean	Schall
Barbour	Glass	Keyes	Steiwer
Carey	Goldsborough	McNary	Townsend
Davis	Hale	Patterson	Walcott
Dickinson	Hatfield	Reed	White
Fess	Hebert	Robinson, Ind.

NOT VOTING—7

Bulow	Hastings	Metcalf	Thomas, Okla.
Gore	Long	Norbeck

So the bill was passed.

UNITED STATES ROANOKE COLONY COMMISSION

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, to which he calls the attention of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY].

The concurrent resolution (H.Con.Res. 27) continuing in full force and effect during the Seventy-third Congress the concurrent resolution of the House establishing the United States Roanoke Colony Commission was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the House concurrent resolution of the Seventy-second Congress establishing the United States Roanoke Colony Commission is continued in full force and effect during the Seventy-third Congress, and, as continued, section 2 of such resolution is amended by striking out "1934" and inserting in lieu thereof "1937."

Mr. BAILEY. I ask for the adoption of the concurrent resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] has requested me to inform the Senate that he will return to the city on Monday and desires to be heard on Monday morning on a matter of privilege.

DUTY OF REPUBLICAN PARTY—ADDRESS BY SENATOR ROBINSON OF INDIANA

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a speech delivered over the radio on January 25, 1934, by the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] on th esubject of "The Budget and the Deficit."

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Republican Party has a very important duty to perform in these troubled times. As the party of opposition it must be ever alert to the dangers confronting the country and see that they are promptly reported to the American people. If it does any less than this, it is unfaithful to its responsibilities. The truth should never be concealed; and even though it may sound harsh, it must be told.

Everybody is anxious to get out of the depression, and insofar as the President's policies may contribute to that end they should be supported by all the people. But if there be pitfalls and honest doubts should arise as to measures, then there should be sufficient courage on the part of Members of Congress to express their opposition, regardless of political consequences.

Very calmly the Chief Executive informs the country that the National Treasury is confronted with a deficit of more than $7,000,000,000 this year, and that within the next year or so the bonded indebtedness of the United States will be approximately $32,000,000,000. This notwithstanding the impression given the country by the President and his spokesmen during the past 9 months that the Budget was balanced.

Indeed, when the Chief Executive last March demanded that $400,000,000 be taken from the disabled veterans of the Nation and their dependents the chief reason advanced was that such action would enable the Treasury to balance the National Budget.

Under the Presidential lash the Congress hastened to obey, and to its everlasting shame passed the so-called "Economy Act", which drove veterans from the hospitals that a grateful people had erected for them, deprived them of needed buying power at a time when we were seeking to arrest the deflation, and added untold thousands to the bread lines all over the land. Aside from the misery and tragedy caused, it was a serious mistake from the economic standpoint. The net result was simply to transfer the burden of taxation from the large-income earners of the Nation to the local taxing units—to the farmers and small-property owners already taxed to death.

What followed? Increased misery and tragedy among the Nation's defenders. And then began the most reckless spending of the people's money the country has ever known.

Untold billions have been spent without the slightest check or balance. There has been no coordinated audit of any kind. Each emergency department has been spending without let or hindrance. Indeed, it is stated widely that no one knows today how many people are actually on the Government pay roll.

The President recognized this situation in his Budget message, wherein he said: "Up to now there has been no coordinated control over emergency expenditures. Today, by Executive order, I have imposed that necessary control in the Bureau of the Budget."

In other words, for more than 8 months each department spent as much money as it desired, and there was not the slightest check. Then, on January 7, the President issued his order to have the spending supervised by the Director of the Budget. How long was this order in force? Just 3 days. At the end of the third day, for some reason, the Chief Executive rescinded the order, and the spending without restraint was resumed. No wonder the deficit has reached such astounding figures. Nobody will complain about any reasonable expenditure of public funds for national recovery, but that there should be the most careful supervision and coordinated audit there can be no question.

It is well to bear in mind, too, that the money being expended comes to the Treasury as a result of borrowing, and sooner or later, ways and means must be devised for repaying the loans contracted.

At its peak our war indebtedness amounted to slightly more than 26 billions. Within the next few months the national obligations will aggregate more than 32 billions, with an annual interest charge of upward of a billion dollars. How can this enormous sum be repaid? That is the big question, and to date the administration has suggested no method. Enormously increased taxes is the inevitable answer.

Some of us have insisted that it was grossly unfair and unjust to take benefits from the disabled defenders of the Nation that aggregate less than half a billion dollars and immediately thereafter embark on a spending program involving untold billions, without restraint or adequate supervision. Some of us believed, too, that billions of frozen deposits belonging to the American people could have been released at much less cost in the spending program. This would have made tremendous purchasing power available, would have restored the American market; business, especially smaller business, would have been resumed; reemployment, on a permanent basis, of those now walking the streets looking for jobs, with none to be found, would have been made possible, and prosperity would have been brought much nearer. It was not undertaken, however, and now we can only hope that the program being unfolded may bring us out of the depression.

Just the same, we shall not close our eyes to the dangers involved and shall do our best from time to time to present the actual facts to the country.

To do this it is essential that there be no abridgment of free speech. Constitutional guaranties must be preserved. The Congress must not be gagged. Gag rule of the people's representatives is inimical to the welfare of the American people.

I suppose everybody is familiar with the fact that dictatorships flourish all over the world today. The origin of a dictatorship is always interesting. History is replete with such matters. Invariably in the past the first step in that direction taken by one who proposed to have himself constituted a dictator was to suppress the parliamentary bodies of the particular country in which he hoped to reign. The right of free speech by the people's representatives was, therefore, violated, and the representatives of the people in the parliamentary body were unable, because of the gag that had been placed upon them, properly to represent their constituents. In other words, the legislative assembly was practically suppressed, sometimes at the point of the sword, but in any event suppressed. That has invariably been the first step.

The next step has always been to muzzle the press and all means of communication among the people. That is the story history tells, and that is a statement of modern conditions throughout the world where dictators flourish. The press is never free in any place where a dictator rules. Parliamentary bodies are not free to express themselves in any country where there is despotism. I think it well, therefore, to observe some of the signs of the times in this country with reference to developments coming on apace.

I repeat, the first thing he who desires to rule by himself alone invariably does is to gag the legislative body or bodies in the nation over which he would rule; and when he does that, it amounts to a violation of the constitutional right of freedom of speech through preventing objections to pending measures in that body when objections may be apparent and awaiting opportunity for expression.

By forcing a gag rule on a legislative assembly he who desires to rule alone deprives a minority in that body of the right of freedom of discussion, although they are sent there by the people to represent them and to discuss problems which intimately concern them. There may be war veterans involved; and if the representatives who are there in that body are interested in the problems of the war veterans, a gag prevents them from expressing themselves on that problem, and without expression they are shunted off to the tender mercies of a bureaucracy, to people who have not been elected to represent them or to administer their affairs. It also is apt to be a betrayal of government employees in the nation where one desires to rule alone because they are deprived of representation and their problems cannot be discussed.

If it happens to be a country in which there is a tradition of checks and balances for a threefold form of government, it submerges one of the three departments—the legislative—places it under the domination of the executive, and the checks and balances are gone. Not only that, but it would deprive the people themselves of information they are entitled to have; it would force the surrender of the legislative power to the executive, to be then in turn delegated to a bureaucrat, and again representative government will have failed.

If such attempted dictation to a legislative body should transpire in a country such as ours, where we have a bicameral system, and it should apply to only one of the two bodies, the other body would then become the guardian of the people's liberty and the right of free speech. In this case it would be the Senate as the last fortress in which free speech and free discussion of public questions might survive. Because of these facts some of us are gravely concerned over the administration's insistence on a gag rule in one of the bodies of the Congress, such as was forced upon the House of Representatives a few days ago. This gag rule over the people's representatives, forced by an Executive who desires to rule by himself alone, together with reckless extravagance and the enormous deficit of billions confronting the Treasury of the United States, will cause the American people to lose confidence in their Government as it is now conducted as nothing else could cause them to lose confidence.

Free speech in the United States must be preserved at any price. Otherwise our liberties are gone.

For the past several weeks a controversy has been raging between the newspapers of the country and Gen. Hugh S. Johnson in which this question is seriously involved. The loquacious general has insisted that the Constitution is sufficient guaranty against executive usurpation, but the press has been equally insistent that a specific free-press reservation be incorporated in the proposed code.

In the controversy that has arisen the American people are vitally concerned. If there is one right on which they have insisted throughout the years, and on which they will continue to insist, it is that of free speech, as guaranteed by the Constitution. Free speech is absolutely impossible without a free and untrammeled press. Because of this fact the people refuse to become excited so long as the press remains unmuzzled and content.

But when the newspapers evidence concern, the people become justly alarmed, for they are aware that one of their most precious rights is seriously imperiled. That the Constitution itself is in danger there can be no doubt in unbiased minds. Evidence accumulates on all sides to substantiate this view. Executive dictatorship is well on the way, and State lines have wellnigh been obliterated. That the President now exercises too much power for the country's welfare is all too evident. That he is constantly reaching out for new and enlarged authority is also within the knowledge of everybody. Give him now the power to throttle the press, and his dictatorship is complete.

One may attribute to him the best of motives and still be seriously alarmed. It has been well said that the law of nature is not that tyrants make tyranny, but that tyranny makes tyrants.

Benevolent and kindly men have in the history of the past become the worst of despots.

General Johnson says he has no intention of attempting to muzzle the press, but incidents connected with his own administration tend to controvert that statement; and whether he be well-intentioned or not, the fact remains that he should not be given any semblance of such power.

We want no governmental control of the news sources of the country. Otherwise free speech will have gone, the day of political prisoners will have returned, and liberty will have vanished. The Constitution will then have become a memory.

Because of the seriousness of the situation, a section guaranteeing inviolability of the press in the proposed newspaper code becomes vastly important. Even such a section would not necessarily avail against pretended necessities for martial law, suspension of constitutional guaranties, and the possible development in the minds of our rulers of the idea that they are Heaven-sent. But for whatever it is worth, such a reservation should be insisted on, and the people, whose liberties are at stake, should be most outspoken of all in saving their rights, which can only be preserved by a free press.

National emergencies are fraught with dangers, not the least of which is the possibility that some of those temporarily intrusted with power may feel called upon to "rule or ruin."

If obsessed with such an idea, they are apt to stop at nothing to attain their ends. That such possibilities exist today there can be no doubt, and the American people should be on their guard. "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

SELF-RELIANCE—EDITORIAL FROM KOSSUTH COUNTY ADVANCE

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Kossuth County Advance entitled "Educating Self-Reliance Out of the People."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EDUCATING SELF-RELIANCE OUT OF THE PEOPLE

The Winnebago supervisors decided to paint the courthouse as a P.W.A. project. They called in painters and accepted a bid at 75 cents an hour. Work was begun. Then the C.W.A. butted in with its $1.20 skilled-labor wage on other projects, and the painters struck. Now Winnebago, hat in hand, wants to tap Uncle Sam's purse again.

The painters, out of work, had been eager to take the job at 75 cents. In fact, considering the times, it was good pay, $6 for an 8-hour day; pretty good pay for any kind of times, one might say; more than many employers of labor are realizing now. But painters are human. When they saw a chance to get $10.60 a day from a rich uncle they made no bones about breaking a contract to get it.

The aftermath of the war has revealed many startling effects, and among the worst is the let-down in private and public morale. The number of debtors who deliberately seek to avoid paying has become legion. Men whose fathers would have thought breaking a contract a disgrace do it now almost as if it were praiseworthy. And the Government and the courts lead the way by dishonoring gold clauses and holding that States may impair contracts.

There may be colorable excuses in the Government cases, where there is no excuse for individuals, but average men are not educationally equipped to make the distinction. All they know is that the Government issued bonds containing a gold clause and then repudiated it, and that the Federal Constitution says no State shall pass any law impairing a contract, but that the Supreme Court found a way to get around the Constitution.

What the Government can do, citizens can do. That's the natural conclusion of the average man, and he has no scruples about acting on it.

Hand in hand with that sort of thing we are also educating the people in the art of beggary. The people are being taught to look to the Government for a living instead of relying on their own resources. This is not to say that where real need exists it should not be met; but no one can look at what is going on without feeling that there is great waste. And what will happen if, after we have accustomed the people to Government help, we cease giving it?

For sometime it must cease. Either the Government will run out of money or the emergency will be considered ended. But if in the meantime we have destroyed the self-reliance and the initiative of the people, and have accustomed them to generous Government help, will the emergency for them ever end? And if they elect subservient Congressmen, what will be the final outcome?

There is food for sober thought here. It might help to consider the pioneers. It would be worth while, in fact, to review American history all the way back to Jamestown and Plymouth Rock. For the Pilgrim Fathers and the pioneers of the West were one in the same indomitable spirit. To them a contract was a contract, debt a sacred obligation, and the necessity of alms acceptance a crushing disgrace.

The people of Kossuth County have only to consult their own comparatively brief history to know what stuff the pioneers were made of. The only Government help they knew anything about was a homestead in a wilderness. Once on the land, they had to carve their own way against every hardship, and without benefit, without thought even, of Government coddling. Where today is the unconquerable spirit of our sires?

REGULATION OF BANKING IN THE DISTRICT

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 2465, to amend the act of March 4, 1933, relating to the regulation of banking in the District of Columbia.

This bill was reported favorably several days ago by the Senate District Committee. It is important that the measure be passed at the earliest possible moment.

The purpose of the bill is explained in a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury dated January 23, 1934, in which he states:

This bill amends the present law to provide that stock of any savings bank, savings company, or banking institution doing business in the District of Columbia, issued after the date of the enactment of this bill into law, shall not be subject to double liability.

Since Congress, in the Banking Act of 1933, removed from future issues of national-bank stock the double liability, the bill under consideration would be in accordance with that policy, and unquestionably it would be helpful in the reorganization of the banks mentioned by you. Under the circumstances the Treasury Department has no objection to the bill.

Mr. C. F. Burton, who is the executive vice president of the Washington Mechanics' Savings Bank, in a letter to me as Chairman of the Senate District Committee under date of January 24, states:

On March 4, 1933, a law was enacted in which double liability on State bank stocks was created. In the Banking Act of 1933, passed in June, double liability on new issues of national-bank stocks was removed so as not to impede reorganizations or recapitalization; but the State banks of Washington were left out, although they are directly under the Comptroller of the Currency and many of the provisions of the national-bank acts apply to them.

This bank, which is open and unrestricted, is now in the process of absorbing the business of two closed banks with about 50,000 depositors and nearly $3,000,000 to distribute, but it is necessary that we raise our capital accounts in order to preserve a ratio of at least $1 of capital and surplus to $10 of deposits, due to the addition of the new deposits. The necessary stock has been subscribed for, provided that this double disability is removed on the new issue. Everything is in readiness to make this money available to these depositors within a very short time after S. 2465 is made a law, which only removes the liability from the new issue of stock.

I might add that this addition to our capital will bring it up to the minimum requirement of law so as to enable us to convert into a national-bank charter or apply for admission to the Federal Reserve System, one of which we intend to do immediately. It will also enable other small banks in Washington to increase their capital accounts for the same purpose which they must do in order to remain with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation; something that they could not do with such a barrier facing them in view of the many assessments that have been and will be levied on closed banks' stocks, which is known to all.

This short act will be of immense service toward finally clearing up the banking situation in Washington; moving all banks here toward national charters or membership in the Federal Reserve and at the same time serve to release this $3,000,000 to nearly 50,000 people who have been patiently waiting for nearly a year, and who cannot get their money until it is enacted.

Mr. President, it seems to me no further explanation is required, and I ask for the consideration and passage of the bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, when the consideration of this bill was proposed yesterday by the able Senator from Utah I objected. I think, however, it meets an emergent situation. It affects two banks and their desire to consolidate. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (a) of section 4 of the act entitled "An act to further regulate banking, banks, trust companies, and building and loan associations in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", approved March 4, 1933, is hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. The additional liability imposed by subsection (b) of section 4 of such act upon the shareholders of the savings banks, savings companies, and banking institutions specified in such subsection (b), shall not apply with respect to shares in any such savings bank, savings company, or banking institution issued after the date of enactment of this act.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States, submitting nominations and an international convention, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nomination of Charles W. Abbott to be postmaster at Albion, Maine, in place of C. W. Abbott, and also the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to state at this time that if these nomination slips are not passed into the hands of all Senators, I hope they will notify me, so that we may have that done.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported favorably the nomination of William I. Myers, of New York, to be Governor of the Farm Credit Administration.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably nominations for reappointment as members of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for terms of 2 years from January 22, 1934, as follows: Harvey C. Couch, of Arkansas; Jesse H. Jones, of Texas; Frederic H. Taber, of Massachusetts; C. B. Merriam, of Kansas; and John J. Blaine, of Wisconsin.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the calendar.

The calendar is in order.

THE CALENDAR—INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Walter M. W. Splawn, of Texas, to be Interstate Commerce Commissioner for the term expiring December 31, 1940.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I have had a great many communications from members of the Railroad Brotherhoods opposing the confirmation of Mr. Splawn. I should like to ask someone on the committee if there was any opposition from that source before the committee?

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. DILL. I have asked that this nomination be continued from day to day until Senators could have an opportunity to be here and understand the situation.

When Mr. Splawn's name was presented certain members of the legislative organization of the Railway Brotherhoods sent out a letter to all of the railroad unions of the United States protesting the appointment of Mr. Splawn and suggesting that they write and telegraph their Senators against the confirmation of Mr. Splawn's nomination. A few days later the executives of 21 railroad labor organizations held a meeting here in Washington and considered the matter further, and decided to withdraw their objection.

A hearing had been set before the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I insisted that a representative of the organizations come before the committee and explain why they had changed their attitude. Their objection had been based upon a vote by Mr. Splawn in 1927 when he was acting as an arbiter as to wages on a proposal to raise wages in the western division of the United States. The demand was for an increase of 7½ percent. It was granted in the northeastern division and the southeastern division. Mr. Splawn and the man associated with him as the two arbiters representing the public voted with the two representatives of the railroads against an increase in the western division.

The representative of the labor organizations, in the light of Mr. Splawn's record in other matters and his broad knowledge of the subjects that would come before the Interstate Commerce Commission, decided that they did not care to press their objective, since they recognized that that was only one thing that he had done to which they were opposed, and therefore they withdrew their objection.

I think Senators have been receiving messages since action by the committee, but that was due largely to the fact that the letter did not reach many of the unions in time for action, and they have not yet been notified of the change of attitude on the part of the executives.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Then we are to understand that the objections have been withdrawn?

Mr. DILL. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate advice and consent to the nomination? Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of George C. Mathews, of Wisconsin, to the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, certain members of the Committee on Interstate Commerce have asked that this nomination be set down for consideration at a certain time—not so much because they want to oppose the nomination as because they want to make a statement of their position regarding it. I ask the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS], who is particularly interested, if next Wednesday will be satisfactory to him?

Mr. FESS. That will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. DILL. Does the Senator want an hour fixed? If not, I ask that at the close of legislative business on Wednesday the Senate take up the case of Mr. Mathews.

Mr. FESS. That is entirely agreeable to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent that on next Wednesday, at the close of legislative business, there be an executive session, at which the nomination of Mr. George C. Mathews, to be Federal Trade Commissioner, shall be considered. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I have no desire to object to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement; but I do desire to give notice that if Senators on the other side desire to speak at any length on this matter, the session probably should start a little bit early, because I shall desire to speak at some length on the qualifications of the gentleman whom Mr. Mathews is succeeding.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Nathanael H. Engle, of Washington, to be Assistant Director, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Henry Russell Amory, of California, to be Assistant Director, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

CALIFORNIA DEBRIS COMMISSION

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Maj. Elroy S. J. Irvine, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, to be a member of the California Debris Commission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Mrs. Antoinette Funk to be Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Miss Ruth Lockett, of California, to be recorder of the General Land Office.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

INTERNAL REVENUE BUREAU

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Wright Matthews, of Texas, to be Assistant to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

MINT OF THE UNITED STATES

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of A. Raymond Raff, of Philadelphia, Pa., to be Superintendent of the Mint, Philadelphia, Pa.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Edward W. Griffin, of Alaska, to be secretary of the Territory of Alaska.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Ellis Purlee to be register, land office, Sacramento, Calif.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Chris Bertsch to be register, land office, Bismarck, N.Dak.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of William F. Jackson to be register, land office, The Dalles, Oreg.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters may be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE DEEP WATERWAY TREATY

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the waterway treaty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the treaty between the United States and the Dominion of Canada for the completion of the Great Lakes-St.Lawrence deep waterway, signed July 18, 1932.

RECESS

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] if I am authorized to say to Senators who wish to address themselves to the treaty that it will be taken up on Monday; or is there some other legislation to be considered at that time?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the treaty is now before the Senate, and it is expected that it will be discussed on next Tuesday. I was about to say that at the request of a large number of Senators who state that they are overwhelmed with work in their offices, to which they have not been able to give attention, it is my purpose to move that the Senate take a recess until next Tuesday at 12 o'clock.

I make that motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p.m.) the Senate, in executive session, took a recess until Tuesday, January 30, 1934, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 27 (legislative day of Jan. 23), 1934

POSTMASTERS

ALABAMA

James L. Day to be postmaster at Hartselle, Ala., in place of S. L. Sherrill, removed.

ARIZONA

George H. Todd to be postmaster at Phoenix, Ariz., in place of J. H. McClintock. Incumbent's commission expired December 7, 1932.

ARKANSAS

Charles F. Elza to be postmaster at Benton, Ark., in place of G. D. Downing. Incumbent's commission expired September 30, 1933.

James T. Alderson to be postmaster at Malvern, Ark., in place of A. I. Roland. Incumbent's commission expired December 16, 1933.

CALIFORNIA

Marguerite J. Decious to be postmaster at Fort Bidwell, Calif., in place of M. J. Decious. Incumbent's commission expired January 11, 1934.

Rowena A. Osborn to be postmaster at Orcutt, Calif., in place of G. P. Ide, deceased.

George W. Megrew to be postmaster at Rancho Santa Fe, Calif., in place of G. W. Megrew. Incumbent's commission expired December 11, 1932.

John R. Hutchison to be postmaster at Santa Maria, Calif., in place of E. T. Ketcham. Incumbent's commission expired March 11, 1930.

COLORADO

Nicholas C. Huffaker to be postmaster at Hot Sulphur Springs, Colo., in place of L. W. Kennedy, deceased.

Oren E. Stallings to be postmaster at Yuma, Colo., in place of R. N. Weekly. Incumbent's commission expired December 8, 1932.

CONNECTICUT

William A. Hayes to be postmaster at Bristol, Conn., in place of F. S. Merrill. Incumbent's commission expired December 8, 1932.

Ernest R. Knopf to be postmaster at Clinton, Conn., in place of F. D. Parker, resigned.

Thomas P. Horan to be postmaster at South Norwalk, Conn., in place of E. E. Crowe, deceased.

Matthew F. Geary to be postmaster at Uncasville, Conn., in place of M. H. Newton, removed.

Bernard V. Keevers to be postmaster at Windsor Locks, Conn., in place of F. T. Koehler, removed.

FLORIDA

Betsy R. Rives to be postmaster at Dunedin, Fla., in place of R. F. Blatchley. Incumbent's commission expired November 20, 1933.

Frank W. Dole to be postmaster at Fellsmere, Fla., in place of E. W. Morris. Incumbent's commission expired September 30, 1933.

Jean A. Hopkins to be postmaster at Reddick, Fla., in place of E. M. Cromartie. Incumbent's commission expired January 8, 1933.

GEORGIA

Alexander S. Chamlee to be postmaster at Bartow, Ga., in place of G. P. Whigham, removed.

John W. McCallum to be postmaster at Broxton, Ga., in place of Mae Gibbs. Incumbent's commission expired June 19, 1933.

Pierce E. Cody to be postmaster at Collins, Ga., in place of P. E. Cody. Incumbent's commission expired January 22, 1934.

Leighton W. McPherson to be postmaster at Columbus, Ga., in place of C. E. Walton, deceased.

Pearle H. Girardeau to be postmaster at McRae, Ga., in place of Edison Harbin, removed.

George W. Cornwell to be postmaster at Monticello, Ga., in place of J. D. Lane. Incumbent's commission expired May 23, 1933.

Dewey G. Burnette to be postmaster at Rockmart, Ga., in place of H. B. Wiley. Incumbent's commission expired June 19, 1933.

Victor L. Howe to be postmaster at Tallapoosa, Ga., in place of M. A. Greene, Jr., resigned.

John N. Sheram to be postmaster at Tennille, Ga., in place of W. B. Smith, resigned.

B. Clayton Blanton to be postmaster at Thomasville, Ga., in place of J. B. Roddenbery. Incumbent's commission expired December 20, 1932.

Cameron U. Young to be postmaster at Valdosta, Ga., in place of C. W. Barnes. Incumbent's commission expired April 11, 1932.

HAWAII

Marie Blankership to be postmaster at Koloa, Hawaii, in place of J. K. Cockett. Incumbent's commission expired January 8, 1934.

ILLINOIS

Ira W. Cawood to be postmaster at Flat Rock, Ill., in place of J. A. Duncan, removed.

Ethel D. Henry to be postmaster at Lewistown, Ill., in place of L. J. Boyd. Incumbent's commission expired December 15, 1931.

Homer J. Swope to be postmaster at Quincy, Ill., in place of C. H. Cottrell, deceased.

Lyle M. Cross to be postmaster at San Jose, Ill., in place of M. A. Barkmeier, deceased.

INDIANA

Jennette R. Winkelmann to be postmaster at Austin, Ind., in place of I. C. Morgan, resigned.

Asa C. Clark to be postmaster at Bedford, Ind., in place of B. F. Pitman, removed.

Charles H. Apple to be postmaster at French Lick, Ind., in place of J. H. Wells. Incumbent's commission expired September 18, 1933.

Irven V. Tyler to be postmaster at Georgetown, Ind., in place of W. L. Oster. Incumbent's commission expired January 11, 1934.

Charles A. Webster to be postmaster at North Vernon, Ind., in place of W. S. Matthews, removed.

IOWA

Daisy Oldham to be postmaster at Avoca, Iowa, in place of S. A. Garlow. Incumbent's commission expired January 9, 1933.

Jessie Branagan to be postmaster at Emmetsburg, Iowa, in place of L. H. Mayne, resigned.

Cotton Etter to be postmaster at Sigourney, Iowa, in place of W. H. Needham, removed.

KENTUCKY

Zaidee G. Neville to be postmaster at Arlington, Ky., in place of J. F. Graves, deceased.

George W. Tye to be postmaster at Barbourville, Ky., in place of Rebecca Green. Incumbent's commision expired February 28, 1933.

Herman A. House to be postmaster at London, Ky., in place of John Eversole, removed.

Henry T. Waldrop to be postmaster at Murray, Ky., in place of M. L. Whitnell. Incumbent's commission expired May 6, 1930.

John A. McCord to be postmaster at Pineville, Ky., in place of Robert Vanbever. Incumbent's commission expired May 17, 1932.

Lula Sharp to be postmaster at Sharpsburg, Ky., in place of M. S. Crockett. Incumbent's commission expired January 31, 1933.

Emma K. Riley to be postmaster at Sparta, Ky., in place of E. T. Wilson. Incumbent's commission expired February 17, 1931.

LOUISIANA

Amy B. Griffin to be postmaster at Gilbert, La., in place of A. B. Griffin. Incumbent's commission expired January 19, 1933.

Mary S. Hunter to be postmaster at Pineville, La., in place of M. S. Hunter. Incumbent's commission expires February 1, 1934.

Ida N. Boatner to be postmaster at Rochelle, La., in place of I. N. Boatner. Incumbent's commission expired December 18, 1933.

MAINE

Marjory D. Woolley to be postmaste at Bridgton, Maine, in place of G. O. M. Oberg. Incumbent's commission expired February 28, 1933.

Floyd A. Smith to be postmaster at Caribou, Maine, in place of R. C. Gary, resigned.

F. Raymond Brewster to be postmaster at Ogunquit, Maine, in place of C. H. Clark, removed.

Eddie J. Roderick to be postmaster at Rumford, Maine, in place of V. A. Linnell. Incumbent's commission expired January 15, 1933.

MARYLAND

Helena R. Guyther to be postmaster at Mechanicsville, Md., in place of L. H. Wise. Incumbent's commission expired January 31, 1933.

MASSACHUSETTS

Harriet A. Goggin to be postmaster at Seekonk, Mass., in place of C. J. Conyers. Incumbent's commission expired February 25, 1933.

Charles E. Cook to be postmaster at Uxbridge, Mass., in place of C. E. Cook. Incumbent's commission expired January 11, 1934.

Felix Pasqualino to be postmaster at Wakefield, Mass., in place of F. H. Hackett. Incumbent's commission expired January 29, 1933.

MISSISSIPPI

Lewis F. Henry to be postmaster at Carthage, Miss., in place of A. S. Johnston, Jr. Incumbent's commission expired February 11, 1933.

Fletcher H. Womack to be postmaster at Crenshaw, Miss., in place of F. H. Womack. Incumbent's commission expired January 16, 1934.

Joseph W. George to be postmaster at Greenwood, Miss., in place of Herbert Feaster, resigned.

Levi G. Bassett to be postmaster at Louin, Miss., in place of D. F. Hitt, resigned.

John B. Vinson to be postmaster at Magee, Miss., in place of A. S. Russell, removed.

Cecil D. Chadwick to be postmaster at Walnut Grove, Miss., in place of C. D. Chadwick. Incumbent's commission expired December 18, 1933.

MISSOURI

Ernest A. Hisle to be postmaster at Miami, Mo., in place of A. E. Jennings. Incumbent's commission expired December 17, 1932.

NEBRASKA

Frank A. Moon to be postmaster at Fairbury, Nebr., in place of J. L. Thornton. Incumbent's commission expired December 20, 1932.

Francis W. Purdy to be postmaster at Hildreth, Nebr., in place of F. W. Purdy. Incumbent's commission expired December 16, 1933.

James T. Haffey to be postmaster at Oxford, Nebr., in place of G. A. Ayer. Incumbent's commission expired January 9, 1933.

Homer S. King to be postmaster at York, Nebr., in place of G. H. Holdeman. Incumbent's commission expired December 20, 1932.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

Albert J. Picard to be postmaster at Derry, N.H., in place of E. L. Abbott. Incumbent's commission expired December 16, 1933.

James J. Cavanaugh to be postmaster at Dover, N.H., in place of T. N. Dearborn, deceased.

Edward K. Sweeney to be postmaster at Exeter, N.H., in place of R. C. Stevenson. Incumbent's commission expired December 16, 1933.

Edward E. Cossette to be postmaster at Gonic, N.H., in place of E. E. Cossette. Incumbent's commission expired December 16, 1933.

NEW JERSEY

John W. Penrod, Sr., to be postmaster at Beach Haven, N.J., in place of J. E. Spencer, removed.

Raphael C. Devlin to be postmaster at Matawan, N.J., in place of F. R. Thompson, removed.

NEW MEXICO

James W. Patterson to be postmaster at Fort Sumner, N.Mex., in place of B. C. Wright. Incumbent's commission expired December 15, 1931.

NEW YORK

Frank V. Wiatrowski to be postmaster at Angola, N.Y., in place of C. F. Wood. Incumbent's commission expired March 2, 1933.

Lillian O'Connor to be postmaster at Briarcliff Manor, N.Y., in place of Vincent Phelps. Incumbent's commission expired March 2, 1933.

Charles F. Boughton to be postmaster at Cobleskill, N.Y., in place of E. J. Eckerson, removed.

John Harvill, Sr., to be postmaster at Groton, N.Y., in place of E. W. Kostenbader, removed.

NORTH CAROLINA

Clinton E. Bolick to be postmaster at Conover, N.C., in place of P. P. Herman. Incumbent's commission expired January 29, 1933.

Vivian T. Davis to be postmaster at Forest City, N.C., in place of T. T. Long. Incumbent's commission expired May 27, 1933.

Clarence W. Boshamer to be postmaster at Gastonia, N.C., in place of R. P. Washam, resigned.

John W. Coleman to be postmaster at Greensboro, N.C., in place of R. C. Chandley. Incumbent's commission expired January 20, 1934.

Frederick R. Jones to be postmaster at Hayesville, N.C., in place of J. A. Chambers. Incumbent's commission expired January 29, 1933.

May Calvert to be postmaster at Jackson, N.C., in place of A. L. Lassiter. Incumbent's commission expired March 2, 1933.

James C. Reins to be postmaster at North Wilkesboro, N.C., in place of R. E. Walters. Incumbent's commission expired February 11, 1933.

Columbus L. Biggerstaff to be postmaster at Rutherfordton, N.C., in place of J. H. Williams, removed.

Thomas D. Boswell to be postmaster at Yanceyville, N.C., in place of T. J. Henderson. Incumbent's commission expired January 29, 1933.

OHIO

Herman A. Schafer to be postmaster at Bridgeport, Ohio, in place of G. H. Scheetz. Incumbent's commission expired December 20, 1932.

Sam F. Dickerson to be postmaster at Cadiz, Ohio, in place of W. C. Parks. Incumbent's commission expired December 18, 1932.

Harry D. Arnold to be postmaster at Leetonia, Ohio, in place of W. L. Peet. Incumbent's commission expired December 18, 1932.

James A. Anderson to be postmaster at Millersburg, Ohio, in place of C. I. Barnes. Incumbent's commission expired December 16, 1933.

Ruth H. Brinkman to be postmaster at Minster, Ohio, in place of Benjamin Hegemann. Incumbent's commission expired May 16, 1932.

Clarence J. Bartel to be postmaster at Piqua, Ohio, in place of C. C. Fisher. Incumbent's commission expired June 19, 1933.

Albert E. Beardmore to be postmaster at Salem, Ohio, in place of F. J. Eckstein. Incumbent's commission expired December 18, 1932.

Algy R. Murphy to be postmaster at Troy, Ohio, in place of H. B. Carver, deceased.

Mrs. Dale Kessel to be postmaster at Wellsville, Ohio, in place of E. T. Ewing. Incumbent's commission expired February 25, 1933.

Charles R. Treon to be postmaster at West Carrollton, Ohio, in place of W. D. Schuder. Incumbent's commission expired December 16, 1933.

PENNSYLVANIA

Stanley J. Van Vliet to be postmaster at Buck Hill Falls, Pa., in place of W. C. Minster, resigned.

Rebecca Campbell to be postmaster at Midway, Pa., in place of Rebecca Campbell. Incumbent's commission expired December 18, 1933.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Lorna M. Hutson to be postmaster at Hardeeville, S.C., in place of M. B. Welch. Incumbent's commission expired February 28, 1933.

Clarence A. Power to be postmaster at Laurens, S.C., in place of J. E. Minter. Incumbent's commission expired December 20, 1933.

Henry D. Stensell to be postmaster at Pelzer, S.C., in place of R. E. Ragsdale, transferred.

TENNESSEE

Marvin McKnight to be postmaster at Bemis, Tenn., in place of G. M. Steele. Incumbent's commission expired January 11, 1933.

Hollis Caldwell to be postmasted at Lookout Mountain, Tenn., in place of J. D. M. Marshall. Incumbent's commission expired December 16, 1933.

Lois McReynolds to be postmaster at South Pittsburg, Tenn., in place of Clara B. Tate, removed.

Raymond B. Gibson to be postmaster at Spring City, Tenn., in place of R. B. Ketchersid. Incumbent's commission expired December 12, 1932.

Phil W. Campbell to be postmaster at Tiptonville, Tenn., in place of Wilbur Walker, removed.

TEXAS

Edgar L. Watson to be postmaster at Athens, Tex., in place of E. E. Cornelius, removed.

John R. Griffin to be postmaster at Blooming Grove, Tex., in place of W. T. Reid. Incumbent's commission expired December 7, 1932.

Walter B. Luna to be postmaster at Dallas, Tex., in place of G. C. Young, transferred.

Charles D. Berry to be postmaster at Dawson, Texas, in place of W. A. Conner. Incumbent's commission expired April 24, 1933.

Burwell W. McKenzie to be postmaster at Denton, Texas, in place of C. A. Scott. Incumbent's commission expired April 24, 1933.

Edwin D. Holchak to be postmaster at Kenedy, Texas, in place of E. N. Stewart. Incumbent's commission expired September 18, 1933.

Grace McKay to be postmaster at Madisonville, Texas, in place of G. O. Buckhaults. Incumbent's commission expired June 19, 1933.

Clyde T. McWilliams to be postmaster at Malakoff, Texas, in place of Gladys Curtis, resigned.

Evlyn N. Berry to be postmaster at Mesquite, Texas, in place of Edgar Lewis. Incumbent's commission expired December 7, 1932.

Edgar F. Bonorden to be postmaster at Sinton, Texas, in place of Susan Sipes. Incumbent's commission expired January 8, 1933.

Mrs. Charles S. Fowler to be postmaster at South San Antonio, Texas, in place of L. A. Carhart, removed.

VIRGINIA

John S. White to be postmaster at Charlottesville, Va., in place of J. L. Humbert. Incumbent's commission expired December 20, 1932.

Curtis E. Smith to be postmaster at Grundy, Va., in place of I. L. Mullins, resigned.

Edward L. Graham to be postmaster at Lexington, Va., in place of McClung Patton, resigned.

John P. Mugler to be postmaster at Phoebus, Va., in place of A. M. Welch. Incumbent's commission expired January 5, 1932.

Jesse F. West, Jr., to be postmaster at Waverly, Va., in place of W. M. Chamberlain, removed.

WASHINGTON

I. Wells LittleJohn to be postmaster at Pateros, Wash., in place of I. W. LittleJohn. Incumbent's commission expired January 11, 1934.

WEST VIRGINIA

Raymond E. Snodgrass to be postmaster at Branchland, W.Va., in place of A. L. Davidson. Incumbent's commission expired May 29, 1933.

Eulalie B. Wheeler to be postmaster at Elkhorn, W.Va., in place of E. B. Wheeler. Incumbent's commission expired December 18, 1933.

Jeremiah W. Dingess to be postmaster at Huntington, W.Va., in place of W. C. Price, resigned.

John Kenna Kerwood to be postmaster at Ripley, W.Va., in place of M. C. Archer, removed.

Joseph V. Emig to be postmaster at Wellsburg, W.Va., in place of G. E. Patterson, removed.

WISCONSIN

Charles N. Cody to be postmaster at Antigo, Wis., in place of E. S. Tradewell. Incumbent's commission expired January 31, 1933.

John Heindl to be postmaster at Barton, Wis., in place of A. H. Ottan. Incumbent's commission expired January 29, 1933.

Ray Sornberger to be postmaster at Belmont, Wis., in place of O. T. Huggins. Incumbent's commission expired January 29, 1933.

Irene Knapmiller to be postmaster at Birchwood, Wis., in place of L. H. Thayer, resigned.

Perlee W. Dickey to be postmaster at Black River Falls, Wis., in place of R. A. Jones. Incumbent's commission expired February 28, 1933.

Homer J. Samson to be postmaster at Cameron, Wis., in place of H. J. Samson. Incumbent's commission expired May 23, 1933.

Ted Cole to be postmaster at Cashton, Wis., in place of H. P. Barth. Incumbent's commission expired January 21, 1933.

George J. Armbruster to be postmaster at Cedarburg, Wis., in place of A. L. Jochem. Incumbent's commission expired February 28, 1933.

Earl F. Moldenhauer to be postmaster at Clintonville, Wis., in place of S. J. Tilleson. Incumbent's commission expired January 21, 1933.

August H. LaRenzie to be postmaster at Eagle River, Wis., in place of M. E. Adams. Incumbent's commission expired January 29, 1933.

Frank J. Shortner to be postmaster at Edgar, Wis., in place of A. J. Cherney. Incumbent's commission expired October 31, 1933.

Esther Cody to be postmaster at Lone Rock, Wis., in place of A. H. Fries. Incumbent's commission expired February 28, 1933.

John K. Buhr to be postmaster at Marion, Wis., in place of E. S. Byers. Incumbent's commission expired October 31, 1933.

Frank Hanley to be postmaster at North Freedom, Wis., in place of F. G. DuBois. Incumbent's commission expired March 2, 1933.

Thomas J. Burns to be postmaster at Oakfield, Wis., in place of W. F. Sommerfield. Incumbent's commission expired January 21, 1933.

W. Joseph Hand to be postmaster at Random Lake, Wis., in place of W. E. Hoelz. Incumbent's commission expired January 29, 1933.

Joseph P. Kelly to be postmaster at Richland Center, Wis., in place of E. D. Recob. Incumbent's commission expired January 29, 1933.

Mable A. DeWitt to be postmaster at Sayner, Wis., in place of A. V. DeWitt. Incumbent's commission expired February 28, 1933.

Frank P. O'Meara to be postmaster at West Bend, Wis., in place of M. F. Walter. Incumbent's commission expired January 29, 1933.

Martin J. Williams to be postmaster at Winneconne, Wis., in place of G. E. King, deceased.

WYOMING

Ernest A. Littleton to be postmaster at Gillette, Wyo., in place of R. R. Long, deceased.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 27 (legislative day of Jan. 23), 1934

MEMBER OF THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

Walter M. W. Splawn to be Interstate Commerce Commissioner.

ASSISTANT DIRECTORS, BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE

Nathanial H. Engle to be Assistant Director, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

Henry Russell Amory to be Assistant Director, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

MEMBER OF THE CALIFORNIA DEBRIS COMMISSION

Maj. Elroy S. J. Irvine to be a member, California Debris Commission.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE

Mrs. Antoinette Funk to be Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office.

RECORDER OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE

Miss Ruth Lockett to be Recorder of the General Land Office.

ASSISTANT TO THE COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE

Wright Matthews to be assistant to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE MINT

A. Raymond Raff to be Superintendent of the Mint at Philadelphia, Pa.

SECRETARY OF THE TERRITORY OF ALASKA

Edwin W. Griffin to be Secretary of the Territory of Alaska.

REGISTERS OF LAND OFFICES

Ellis Purlee to be register, land office, Sacramento, Calif.

Chris Bertsch to be register, land office, Bismarck, N.Dak.

William F. Jackson to be register, land office, The Dalles, Oreg.

POSTMASTERS

ARKANSAS

Thomas B. Gatling, Bearden.
Herbert A. Whitley, Bradford.
Benjamin F. Love, Mountain Home.
James H. Nobles, Parkdale.
George O. Yingling, Searcy.
Clyde F. Flatt, Siloam Springs.
Isaac H. Steed, Star City.
Mabel Edith Whaley, Sulphur Springs.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JANUARY 29, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Give ear, O Shepherd of Israel, and may all hearts be full of response and generous impulse. Create in us a noble passion and a fine ideal of life. Thou art our Heavenly Father. Be Thou our full assurance, our quiet hope, and our brave endurance. While there are any sorrows left, while there are any yearnings unrealized, there is evidence of divine love that has not forsaken us. We praise Thee for Thy all-restoring power. So long as there is a beseeching hand reaching upward, so long as it is striving to touch the book of the Recording Angel with supplicating tips of outstretched fingers, there Thou art with redeeming benediction for all who dwell beneath the skies. Be with us today, merciful God. If trials overtake us, let us not despair; if temptations meet us, let them not stain our souls. O let Thy hand be upon us and lead us to the heights of rich blessing and enlargement. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, January 26, 1934, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 6976. An act to protect the currency system of the United States, to provide for the better use of the monetary gold stock of the United States, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H.Con.Res. 27. Concurrent resolution continuing in full force and effect during the Seventy-third Congress the concurrent resolution of the House establishing the United States Roanoke Colony Commission.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2465. An act to amend the act of March 4, 1933, relating to the regulation of banking in the District of Columbia.

UNITED STATES MONETARY SYSTEM

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H.R. 6976) to protect the currency system of the United States, to provide for the better use of the monetary gold stock of the United States, and for other purposes, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, are the Senate amendments in print?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. I have a copy in my hand and there is another copy here, but they are rather scarce.

Mr. SNELL. Are there copies for the use of Members?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. They are being printed.

Mr. SNELL. Does not the gentleman think—whether there is any opposition or not—that we ought to have printed copies before the House of Senate amendments to House bills? I say that without special reference to this bill. I think that on every important bill there should be copies of Senate amendments, so that we may know what we are doing.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Ordinarily I would say that the gentleman is absolutely right. These amendments are printed in the Saturday RECORD.

Mr. BYRNS. May I say that I agree with the gentleman from New York; but in bringing matters of this kind promptly before the House, it is of the utmost importance that action be taken on this bill. In addition to that, these amendments are very simple—the question being whether there should be a limitation put on the powers given to the Secretary of the Treasury, and that was contended for by those who opposed the bill.

Mr. SNELL. As I said, I do not intend to object. But several times this has come up, and I think that every important House bill with Senate amendments should be before us in order that we may know what we are doing.

Mr. BYRNS. I agree with the gentleman, but this amendment is very simple.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, strike out all after line 14 down to and including line 17, page 3, and insert:

"(b) Section 16 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is further amended in the following respects:

"(1) The third sentence of the first paragraph is amended to read as follows: 'They shall be redeemed in lawful money on demand at the Treasury Department of the United States, in the city of Washington, D.C., or at any Federal Reserve bank.'

"(2) So much of the third sentence of the second paragraph as precedes the proviso is amended to read as follows: 'The collateral security thus offered shall be notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or acceptances acquired under the provisions of section 13 of this act, or bills of exchange endorsed by a member bank of any Federal Reserve district and purchased under the provisions of section 14 of this act, or bankers' acceptances purchased under the provisions of said section 14, or gold certificates.'

"(3) The first sentence of the third paragraph is amended to read as follows: 'Every Federal Reserve bank shall maintain reserves in gold certificates or lawful money of not less than 35 percent against its deposits and reserves in gold certificates of not less than 40 percent against its Federal Reserve notes in actual circulation: Provided, however, That when the Federal Reserve agent holds gold certificates as collateral for Federal Reserve notes issued to the bank such gold certificates shall be counted as part of the reserve which such bank is required to maintain against its Federal Reserve notes in actual circulation.'

"(4) The fifth and sixth sentences of the third paragraph are amended to read as follows: 'Notes presented for redemption at the Treasury of the United States shall be paid out of the redemption fund and returned to the Federal Reserve banks through which they were originally issued, and thereupon such Federal Reserve bank shall, upon demand of the Secretary of the Treasury, reimburse such redemption fund in lawful money, or if such Federal Reserve notes have been redeemed by the Treasurer in gold certificates, then such funds shall be reimbursed to the extent deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Treasury in gold certificates, and such Federal Reserve bank shall, so long as any of its Federal Reserve notes remain outstanding, maintain with the Treasurer in gold certificates an amount sufficient in the judgment of the Secretary to provide for all redemptions to be made by the Treasurer. Federal Reserve notes received by the Treasurer otherwise than for redemption may be exchanged for gold certificates out of the redemption fund hereinafter provided and returned to the Reserve bank through which they were originally issued, or they may be returned to such bank for the credit of the United States.'

"(5) The fourth, fifth, and sixth paragraphs are amended to read as follows:

"'The Federal Reserve Board shall require each Federal Reserve bank to maintain on deposit in the Treasury of the United States a sum in gold certificates sufficient in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury for the redemption of the Federal Reserve notes issued to such bank, but in no event less than 5 percent of the total amount of notes issued less the amount of gold certificates held by the Federal Reserve agent as collateral security; but such deposit of gold certificates shall be counted and included as part of the 40 percent reserve hereinbefore required. The Board shall have the right, acting through the Federal Reserve agent, to grant in whole or in part, or to reject entirely the application of any Federal Reserve bank for Federal Reserve notes; but to the extent that such application may be granted the Federal Reserve Board shall, through its local Federal Reserve agent, supply Federal Reserve notes to the banks so applying, and such bank shall be charged with the amount of notes issued to it and shall pay such rate of interest as may be established by the Federal Reserve Board on only that amount of such notes which equals the total amount of its outstanding Federal Reserve notes less the amount of gold certificates held by the Federal Reserve agent as collateral security. Federal Reserve notes issued to any such bank shall, upon delivery, together with such notes of such Federal Reserve bank as may be issued under section 18 of this act upon security of United States 2-percent Government bonds, become a first and paramount lien on all the assets of such bank.

"'Any Federal Reserve bank may at any time reduce its liability for outstanding Federal Reserve notes by depositing with the Federal Reserve agent its Federal Reserve notes, gold certificates, or lawful money of the United States. Federal Reserve notes so deposited shall not be reissued, except upon compliance with the conditions of an original issue.

"'The Federal Reserve agent shall hold such gold certificates or lawful money available exclusively for exchange for the outstanding Federal Reserve notes when offered by the Reserve bank of which he is a director. Upon the request of the Secretary of the Treasury the Federal Reserve Board shall require the Federal Reserve agent to transmit to the Treasurer of the United States so much of the gold certificates held by him as collateral security for Federal Reserve notes as may be required for the exclusive purpose of the redemption of such Federal Reserve notes, but such gold certificates when deposited with the Treasurer shall be counted and considered as if collateral security on deposit with the Federal Reserve agent.'

"(6) The eighth paragraph is amended to read as follows:

"'All Federal Reserve notes and all gold certificates and lawful money issued to or deposited with any Federal Reserve agent under the provisions of the Federal Reserve Act shall hereafter be held for such agent, under such rules and regulations as the Federal Reserve Board may prescribe, in the joint custody of himself and the Federal Reserve bank to which he is accredited. Such agent and such Federal Reserve bank shall be jointly liable for the safekeeping of such Federal Reserve notes, gold certificates, and lawful money. Nothing herein contained, however, shall be construed to prohibit a Federal Reserve agent from depositing gold certificates with the Federal Reserve Board, to be held by such Board subject to his order, or with the Treasurer of the United States for the purposes authorized by law.'

"(7) The sixteenth paragraph is amended to read as follows:

"'The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to receive deposits of gold or of gold certificates with the Treasurer or any Assistant Treasurer of the United States when tendered by any Federal Reserve bank or Federal Reserve agent for credit to its or his account with the Federal Reserve Board. The Secretary shall prescribe by regulation the form of receipt to be issued by the Treasurer or Assistant Treasurer to the Federal Reserve bank or Federal Reserve agent making the deposit, and a duplicate of such receipt shall be delivered to the Federal Reserve Board by the Treasurer at Washington upon proper advices from any Assistant Treasurer that such deposit has been made. Deposits so made shall be held subject to the orders of the Federal Reserve Board and shall be payable in gold certificates on the order of the Federal Reserve Board to any Federal Reserve bank or Federal Reserve agent at the Treasury or at the Subtreasury of the United States nearest the place of business of such Federal Reserve bank or such Federal Reserve agent. The order used by the Federal Reserve Board in making such payments shall be signed by the Governor or Vice Governor, or such other officers or members as the Board may by regulation prescribe. The form of such order shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury.'

"(8) The eighteenth paragraph is amended to read as follows:

"'Deposits made under this section standing to the credit of any Federal Reserve bank with the Federal Reserve Board shall, at the option of said bank, be counted as part of the lawful reserve which it is required to maintain against outstanding Federal Reserve notes, or as a part of the reserve it is required to maintain against deposits.'"

Page 8, line 4, after "Treasury", insert "with the approval of the President"

Page 8, line 11, strike out all after "President" down to and including "act" in line 15.

Page 8, line 23, after "Treasury", insert "with the approval of the President"

Page 9, after line 13, insert:

"(c) All the powers conferred by this section shall expire 2 years after the date of enactment of this act, unless the President shall sooner declare the existing emergency ended and the operation of the stabilization fund terminated; but the President may extend such period for not more than one additional year after such date by proclamation recognizing the continuance of such emergency."

Page 10, line 4, after "require", insert "; except that such powers shall expire 2 years after the date of enactment of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934 unless the President shall sooner declare the existing emergency ended, but the President may extend such period for not more than one additional year after such date by proclamation recognizing the continuance of such emergency."

Page 10, after line 4, insert:

"Paragraph (2) of subsection (b) of section 43, title III, of an act entitled 'An act to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, to raise revenue for extraordinary expenses incurred by reason of such emergency, to provide emergency relief with respect to agricultural indebtedness, to provide for the orderly liquidation of joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes', approved May 12, 1933, is amended by adding at the end of said paragraph (2) the following:

"'The President, in addition to the authority to provide for the unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio so fixed, under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, is further authorized to cause to be issued and delivered to the tenderer of silver for coinage, silver certificates in lieu of the standard silver dollars to which the tenderer would be entitled and in an amount in dollars equal to the number of coined standard silver dollars that the tenderer of such silver for coinage would receive in standard silver dollars.

"'The President is further authorized to issue silver certificates in such denominations as he may prescribe against any silver bullion, silver, or standard silver dollars in the Treasury not then held for redemption of any outstanding silver certificates, and to coin standard silver dollars or subsidiary currency for the redemption of such silver certificates.

"'The President is authorized, in his discretion, to prescribe different terms and conditions and to make different charges, or to collect different seigniorage, for the coinage of silver of foreign production than for the coinage of silver produced in the United States or its dependencies. The silver certificates herein referred to shall be issued, delivered, and circulated substantially in conformity with the law now governing existing silver certificates except as may herein be expressly provided to the contrary, and shall have and possess all of the privileges and the legal-tender characteristics of existing silver certificates now in the Treasury of the United States or in circulation.

"'The President is authorized, in addition to other powers, to reduce the weight of the standard silver dollar in the same percentage that he reduces the weight of the gold dollar.

"'The President is further authorized to reduce and fix the weight of subsidiary coins so as to maintain the parity of such coins with the standard silver dollar and with the gold dollar.'"

Page 12, strike out line 11.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. LUCE. Reserving the right to object, not to criticize or oppose, but in order to acquaint certain citizens of the country with the result of the expression of views on the part of the minority when the bill was under consideration. These citizens believe that there should be no criticism of anything the President may propose. Here is a striking instance of the value of the minority, whose function and whose duty it is to criticize. We did not secure all we wished, but in one important particular evidently the President was persuaded to recommend or permit a change. So many of our citizens these days believe that there should be no opposition on the part of the minority. It ought to be called to their attention that the minority here is usefully functioning and that in every 2-party system of government there ought to be a critical minority bent on improving where it can the measures that the majority presents.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. These amendments are of the gravest importance. I am interested to know whether or not the majority is going to give the minority any explanation or attempted explanation of the important provisions of these amendments, or are we going to pass them without any record being made or any explanation to the minority or the country by the majority?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire whether the former Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, a banker in a great banking institution in Philadelphia, is going to ask what is legal tender or whether Hawaii is included in the bill? If the gentleman wants a straightforward answer to any question, I will be glad to give it to him at any time, and I shall now endeavor to do so. Eight amendments were tacked onto this bill by the Senate. The first amendment, and the longest amendment, is the least important. It is simply a change of method. Where the House employed the method of striking out single words and inserting in lieu thereof other words, the Senate has used a broader method of explaining in more detail the amended act.

Amendment 2 simply reads "with the approval of the President", following the word "Treasury", on page 8, line 4. I think that is very simple. On page 8, line 11, they strike out all after the word "President" down to and including the word "act", in line 15. That is the House amendment, which is no longer necessary under the new Senate amendments. Amendment numbered 4, page 8, line 23, after "Treasury", insert "with the approval of the President."

The next two amendments, amendments 5 and 6, are the important amendments. They limit the duration of this fund, and the authority to devalue, to a period of 2 years, except that the President has the right by proclamation to extend it 1 year more. The other important amendment is amendment numbered 7, which appears on page 10, line 4. That provides for the issuance of silver certificates against any silver reserve we have in the Treasury. It also provides for maintaining equilibrium of the prices through a difference in seniorage for home-produced silver and foreign-produced silver. It further provides that the weight of silver in our currency and coinage shall not be reduced out of proportion to the reduction in the weight of gold in the dollar. Does that satisfy the gentleman?

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the explanation is about as clear as mud. I do not accept it as an explanation in detail of these important amendments, though I presume it is all the explanation that we are going to get. In connection with the amendments that are offered, will the gentleman state whether these gold certificates which are supposed to be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury and given to the Federal Reserve are actually redeemable in gold?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. The gentleman knows very well that this is a system of managed currency. Let us be fair and reasonable. Does the gentleman know of any managed currency that redeems in gold? I do not.

Mr. McFADDEN. I am asking the gentleman whether these particular gold certificates are redeemable in gold.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Of course not, except in the discretion of the Secretary.

Mr. McFADDEN. Then, what is the use of issuing gold certificates to the Federal Reserve in payment for their gold, when these certificates are not redeemable in gold?

Mr. SOMERS of New York. To limit their currency issue.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were agreed to was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 25 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. GUYER. I shall probably not use more than 15 minutes.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, there are two rules which it is stated will not take very much time of the House to be disposed of this afternoon. It is imperative that one of those rules pass today. Would the gentleman mind deferring his request until these rules can be disposed of?

Mr. GUYER. Certainly not.

Mr. BYRNS. I do not know what the situation is with reference to the Louisiana contest, but those are the only matters to come before the House today. I am sure the gentleman will have full opportunity to make his address later. I am very anxious to hear it myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withholds his request.

A TRIBUTE TO GEORGIA

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, on January 28, yesterday, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARKER] delivered a very excellent and eloquent address at the Washington Memorial Chapel, Valley Forge, Pa. I am sure every Member will be interested in reading it. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to insert that address in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address by Hon. Homer C. Parker, of Georgia, in the Washington Memorial Chapel, Valley Forge, Pa., January 28, 1934; also article entitled "A Tribute to Georgia", by the Cedartown High School:

ADDRESS OF HON. HOMER C. PARKER, OF GEORGIA

My friends, it is with pardonable pride that I am here today to represent the great State of Georgia and to pinch hit for her courageous Governor on this occasion. Governor Talmadge, who delegated to me this delightful duty, paid me a high compliment in so doing. It is an honor to speak for Georgia anywhere and at any time. To me it is a pleasure and a privilege to represent Georgia's Governor. In our State we often use the slogan, "It is great to be a Georgian."

Perhaps you would be interested in knowing just who I am and whence I came. My name is PARKER, and I originated in Georgia. I have the honor of representing the First Congressional District of Georgia in the Congress of the United States. More than a third of a million people live in the district that I represent. The city of Savannah lies in the First District, which is not only first in name but in fact also. It was at Savannah that James Edward Oglethorpe founded the Georgia Colony on February 12, 1733. Georgia has recently celebrated the two hundredth anniversary of her birth. The Georgia Bicentennial Commission, of which our great President, who oftentimes refers to Georgia as his other State, was the honorary head, completed its program and brought to an end the bicentennial celebrations on November 18 last, at which time the President of the United States visited Savannah and made an address to tens of thousands of our people.

My home is in Bulloch County, one of the 18 counties of the First Congressional District. This county was named for Archibald Bulloch, Georgia's first Republican President. The office that he held corresponds to that of Governor at this time. Archibald Bulloch would have signed the Declaration of Independence on behalf of the State of Georgia had it not been for the fact that his official duties required his presence elsewhere at the time the document was actually signed. He was the great-grandfather of Theodore Roosevelt, and, if I am correctly informed, he was the great-great-grandfather of Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, America's first lady.

Georgia, as you know, was the fourth State to enter the Union of States. It is for this reason that the fourth Sunday in this year has been set apart by you as "Georgia Day." This, I believe, is the eleventh year that you have honored yourselves and your community by paying a tribute of love and respect to our honored dead who suffered so gallantly at Valley Forge.

In attempting to deliver an address at this shrine of patriotism, I am acutely aware of the difficulties which beset me, for I realize that the tremendous significance of Valley Forge has been spoken of by eloquent orators and written about by gifted writers for so many years that there is little original thought that anyone may hope to contribute to the volumes that have already been expressed.

The service today is dedicated to Georgia, the infant Colony at the time of the Revolution but which, despite its youth, took a part in the Revolution of which its citizens may well be proud. Georgia's part in the War for Independence was none the less distinctive, although it was far removed from the thick of the conflict.

It is pleasing for me to note that Georgia, despite its remoteness from this historic valley and the fact that it was beset with hostile Indians and Spaniards, in addition to the British, made one definite, and I am constrained to say important, contribution to the hard-won success of the encampment here. I refer to Gen. Lachlin McIntosh, of Georgia, who was in command of the southern troops, notably the Carolinians, at Valley Forge. This distinguished Georgian was one of General Washington's brigadiers, and his worth is attested by the high esteem in which he was held by the great general himself.

General McIntosh came to Georgia from Scotland when he was a boy, and his departure from his native land was largely caused by the confiscation of his father's property by the English following the unsuccessful rebellion of 1715. His father lived in poverty and obscurity from that time until 1736, when he accepted General Oglethorpe's invitation to settle in the new Colony of Georgia.

Lachlin McIntosh's father, John More McIntosh, settled on the Altamaha River in 1736 with 130 other Highlanders. Their place of settlement was named "New Iverness", and it lives today under the name of "Darien."

Naturally the blood of freemen ran high in the elder and the younger McIntosh, for both had suffered at the hands of an oppressor. General McIntosh's father took part in the campaign of 1740 against the Spaniards in Florida as the commander of the Highlanders who invaded Florida by land, while General Oglethorpe went by the water route. In this campaign the elder McIntosh was wounded and imprisoned by the Spaniards, who sent him to Spain, where he remained in captivity for many years.

Lachlin McIntosh and his elder brother, when Lachlin was 13 years old, heard of a second attempt to be made by the Stuart pretender against the ruling house in England. Young McIntosh, eager to aid in restoring the Stuarts to the throne, attempted to return to Scotland by hiding himself and his brother on the ship that was taking General Oglethorpe back to England. They were discovered and Oglethorpe himself dissuaded the eager boys and exacted a promise that they would never attempt such an effort for the Stuarts.

I cite these occurrences in the life and background of General McIntosh in order to show the warrior strain that was in him and and his inbred love for freedom. Indeed, this gallant soldier, who had a command at Valley Forge in the dark days of 1778, was, by nature and training, well qualified for the arduous tasks that fell to him, and I can say, without exaggeration, that Lachlin McIntosh represented the finest qualities of manhood that had at that time been produced by the young Colony of Georgia.

In this splendid character and brave soldier I feel that we Georgians can rightfully claim a part in the sacred achievements of that encampment on this historic spot. In emphasizing the presence at Valley Forge of General McIntosh, I take particular pride because his old home is in the First Congressional District of Georgia and the section in which he was reared has been, with great justice, named McIntosh County. Darien, Ga., formerly called Iverness, is the county seat.

It so happened that when quarters were assigned to the various commanders here McIntosh was given the poorest quarters in the lot. All quarters were comparatively poor and not in any sense to be compared with the luxurious lodgings of the British in Philadelphia, but McIntosh's were even poorer than those of his fellow officers, since he was quartered in a house that had been occupied by Negroes. Although his fellow officers were given more livable quarters than was McIntosh, there is no record of any effort by him to secure quarters more suitable for an officer of his rank. Indeed, so far as the records show, he shouldered his added share of the burden and discomfort with the fortitude of a gallant soldier.

General Washington's opinion of Georgia's gallant general is attested by the various difficult commissions that he gave McIntosh to perform. The most notable of these perhaps was the command given him to defend the western portions of Pennsylvania and Virginia. The Indians had been inflamed by the British and were fighting the Americans on this frontier, and the hazardous task of defending these outposts was given to McIntosh. I hope the somewhat lengthy exposition I have given in referring to General McIntosh has not imposed upon you too much. The fact is, I am proud of this officer, who was one of the commanders at Valley Forge, and I am most anxious that credit be given to him for his contribution to the cause of liberty as it was evidenced by the heroic fortitude displayed by him in this sacred community.

My friends, I think it is fairly well agreed that American independence was determined at Valley Forge. Deciding battles were fought elsewhere. Heroic victories were won in other colonies, and hardships and suffering were rife throughout the Colonies generally, but a careful analysis of the facts surrounding Valley Forge leads me to believe that the unflinching courage with which Washington's war-worn, ragged army withstood the onslaught of a fierce winter in this historic community and emerged from the ordeal with its loyalty and patriotism undiminished marked the real turning point in our war for independence.

It was within this valley that the courage and patriotism of that little army was tried and found to be sufficient, and it was this self-same courage and determination that enabled that tattered army to withstand the attacks of highly trained, well-equipped British regulars, and finally at Yorktown to see the surrender of Cornwallis and the resultant establishment of the liberty of the American people.

It may be truly said, I think, that the real valor and courage of America was determined in this historic valley, and after Washington's threadbare and hungry soldiers emerged from this ordeal they knew full well that no other force could defeat them.

As was written during the dark winter of 1778, "These are the times that try men's souls", so indeed and in truth those were the times that tried the souls of the American people. But as the inferno of the blast furnace changes raw ore into tempered steel, so did the ordeal of Valley Forge change a discouraged, sick, and hungry army of soldiers into an army with a triumphant spirit that went forth from here to achieve a victory that started the world on a new era of self-government.

This was the sacred spot which represented our valley of the shadow of death. Our hopes and fears and ambitions were all centered here during that bitter winter of hardship, and Washington's army marched out of this valley of the shadow to establish a new civilization that has realized hopes and ambitions far beyond the dreams of the most ardent patriot of those stormy times.

As I talk to you of that soul-trying ordeal of 1778, I cannot but think of another valley of the shadow through which the American people are passing and which, I am thankful to say, they will withstand with the same fortitude that characterized Washington's army in this hallowed territory.

Just as Washington's army was threadbare, hungry, and cold during the winter of 1778, so for three long winters have a vast proportion of our entire people been denied the comforts of adequate food, clothing, and shelter. Just as this sacred valley witnessed the suffering of Washington's soldiers, so has every city, town, and settlement witnessed the tragic suffering of millions of our fellow countrymen. In this instance, though, it is not merely the men who are denied the necessities of life, but the women and children also share the destitution. Through the bleak winters of the past 4 years we have seen the rank and file of our people go through an ordeal of suffering that usually characterizes a land that has been devastated by a cruel, heartless, invading army.

In these desolate years we have seen our whole people bear up under their hardships with the same spirit of self-sacrifice and fortitude with which Washington's army braved the cold and hunger 156 years ago. Just as Washington's followers patiently waited for the dawn of victory, so are the poor and oppressed of this day enduring hunger, cold, and suffering, awaiting the coming of a new and better day.

My friends, I think the fortitude of Washington's Army at Valley Forge can only be likened to the bravery with which our whole people endured the terrible years from 1930 to 1933. They did not desert their ideals and institutions, just as Washington's soldiers did not desert their ideal of liberty in 1778. With their wives and their children hungry, our brave men accepted what was given them, and with faith in their great country they waited day after day, month after month, and year after year for the return of plenty, or the return of at least a meager living.

In tenements and on farms, in mines, and in villages the men, women, and children of America adhered to their ideals in a time of national distress and patiently waited for a leadership that would guide them from the wilderness.

I think the comparison may be carried even further, for when the Army of Washington evacuated Valley Forge in June of 1778 victory had not then been achieved but the worst part of the war was over. Similarly the victory over want and hunger has not yet been completed, but we know that today millions of people are able to earn their daily bread who 12 months ago were suffering untold hardships. Victory has not been won over the forces of oppression and despair, but the darkest hour has been passed, and it is my belief that just as the fortitude and bravery of Washington's army at Valley Forge paved the way for the triumph at Yorktown in 1781, so will the fortitude of the American people make possible a victory over oppression and poverty that will be just as significant to the future of our country as was the victory over Cornwallis at Yorktown.

In neither instance was victory assured until the valley of the shadow had been entered into and safely and courageously left behind. I believe the trials which our people have undergone in the past 4 years will result in a new regime of economic liberty that will mean as much to this Nation as the political liberty that was won by the Revolution.

Tatters and rags were the uniforms of the soldiers at Valley Forge, but this sad raiment did not drive them to despair as they fought the magnificently uniformed troops of George the Third. And as rags and tatters were the clothing of our Revolutionary troops in their war against political tyranny, so have our people been clothed in ragged and tattered garments in their grim and silent stand against the forces of economic despotism that in the recent past has seen millions of them deprived of food, clothing, and shelter.

When Washington marched his army out of this valley in 1778 the only tangible sign of encouragement was the treaty with France that had been signed the month before in Paris, but this little army, with only one ray of hope 3,000 miles away to cheer it onward, went forth from Valley Forge to achieve a triumph that has rung on down through the centuries.

So it is with our people at this time. They have signs of encouragement as they now strive to provide themselves and their loved ones with the necessities of life. Their spirit and their efforts indicate a deeper confidence in themselves and in their leaders. They know that they have been tried in their firey furnace of abject poverty and that they have withstood for 4 years the assaults of hunger and cold. They have survived this ordeal and now they know that their souls have been proven and that they, with the leadership that has been given them, can march forward to a victory as decisive as that of Yorktown. Their souls have been tried and proven true, as were the souls of Washington's Army at Valley Forge, and with the courage, the faith, and the patience of the American people they will emerge into the bright sunshine of plenty.

Before delivering the above address the Congressman was requested by Dr. Prevost, the rector of the chapel, to read A Tribute to Georgia, by the Cedartown High School. Mr. PARKER read the following:

A TRIBUTE TO GEORGIA

By the Cedartown High School

My friends, we people of Georgia have just brought to a close a year of celebration which marked the bicentennial of the founding of our State. Of our progress and growth during these 200 years we are justly proud; in fact, we feel that if the spirit of our founder, Gen. James Edward Oglethorpe, could return to earth today and miraculously view, in one great panoramic sweep, the glorious history of his Georgia, now grown into the charming and hospitable Empire State of the South, his heart would swell with pride to see all his fondest dreams realized, and more, much more, of which he never dared to dream.

Could it have been his privilege to stand before us here today to pay this tribute to her, the embodiment of his dream, I fancy that such words as these could well have been his:

"Georgia, my daughter fair, I labored faithfully many years ago to lay for you a firm foundation. Then I entrusted to you the task of going forward along all the paths that were right and good. My heart rejoices, therefore, to find that you have ever been true to that sacred trust.

"I returned to my native England, you know, before I had opportunity to realize quite how beautiful a land was yours. I little dreamed, for instance, that many miles to the northward from Yamacraw Bluff and the blue waters of the Savannah there stretched the magnificent foothills of the Blue Ridge Mountains and the Appalachian Range. Small wonder now I find that all who know you praise your beauty, with your purple mountains, your broad green fields, your red old hills, your ample forests, and your gently flowing streams.

"Nor are these all, for along whatever highway or trail one chances to wander, one finds fields rich unto the harvest—broad acres of snowy cotton, groves of the finest nuts, amber waves of grain, orchards laden with luscious fruits, and fields gaily red with peppers, or soberly green with melons and cane, or somber and brown with the ripening leaves of the tobacco plant. All of these you have in abundance, O Georgia, more because the seasons smile indulgently upon you, and God has been generous in lavishing upon you a diversity of climate and soil unequaled anywhere else in the South."

Thus would Oglethorpe praise the natural resources of our State, but I believe that he would not be content with this—he would go a step further and we would hear him say:

"Moreover, as I look far and wide across your 58,000 square miles, I see scattered here and there fair cities, centers of industry and trade, whose 4,800 manufacturing plants fairly hum a tune of progress and industrial development. I catch glimpses, too, of valuable minerals and ores being brought forth from the rock-ribbed hills and fertile valleys, and I see your network of railways, highways, air routes, and ports that link you up with every section of this great United States.

"Nor am I proud of these alone. I am happier still over your unsullied records upon the pages of history. At every strategic point in the Nation's struggles you have contributed freely and bravely of your valor and your manhood, as such illustrious names as these bear eloquent witness: There are your celebrated signers of the Declaration of Independence, George Walton, Lyman Hall, and Button Gwinnett; such loyal and stanch champions of your cause as John B. Gordon, Alexander H. Stephens, Benjamin H. Hill, Robert Toombs, William H. Crawford, and Henry W. Grady; and names so universally honored and loved as Crawford W. Long, Joel Chandler Harris, Sidney Lanier, Martha Berry, and many others, chief among whom is that much beloved and highly honored adopted son of yours, Franklin Delano Roosevelt."

Thus, I believe, would Oglethorpe speak, and then it seems to me that I can hear him add: "But greater far than all of these is that indescribable something which emanates from your people themselves—that human element that plays so large a part in every phase of life and gives to you, fair Georgia, a peculiar charm which all who come to know you quickly recognize and admire, and which not only draws strangers into your midst, but constrains them to linger with you and bask in the sunshine of your warm hospitality.

"This charm of personality is the outgrowth of a rich heritage of fine traditions to which your people have been able to cling with exceptional tenacity. This has been possible, I believe, because the pioneer strain has survived with remarkable purity within your boundaries, 99½ percent of your present-day citizens being American born, while the mountain people of your northern sections are known to have in their veins the purest Anglo-Saxon blood in all this country of yours.

"I find your people, O Georgia, to be sturdy, hospitable, home-loving, and God-fearing, possessing the same substantial characteristics as those which marked their worthy ancestors. They are eager, too, moving ever onward, 'their eyes alight' with the vision of a greater day. Each succeeding generation has found its problems, to be sure, but each has met them with a courage that has always brought victory, and so shall it ever be, because your ideals will never perish. Your old men shall continue to see visions and your young men shall ever dream dreams of a greater and more glorious State."

Thus would the spirit of Oglethorpe greet you today, my friends, and thus would he pay tribute to Georgia's past traditions, her present enviable record, and her future of untold possibilities. And, as he gives final expression to his fond and sincere wish for her continued prosperity, I can hear 3,000,000 loyal Georgians blend their voices with his in one mighty chorus as they say:

"Dear Georgia, thou imperial State,
Fair, God-blest ever be thy fate;
In commerce, labor, mine, or field,
May nature boundless treasures yield;
May the best plans thou hath in view
And all thy happiest dreams come true,
Till starlike shall thy splendid name
Shine on the pinnacle of fame."

THE ELLENBOGEN PLAN EMBODIED IN H.R. 6564 WILL PROVIDE TRUE RELIEF FOR HOME OWNERS AND WILL REVIVE THE CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including a speech that I delivered yesterday on relief of home owners.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I insert the following radio address I delivered at Pittsburgh, Pa., January 28, 1934:

When we consider the plight of the home owner, we must keep in mind that his problem is not merely a financial one. The family home is closer to one's heart than anything else. Often it is the place where one was born, or the place one was able to buy after long years of hard labor—a place where there are invested not only the savings of a lifetime but the loving attention of many years.

Now, the economic disaster which has overtaken us all threatens the home. It threatens to dispossess the owner from the place where he lived for years and to put him and his family, literally speaking, on the street.

The home owners and the farm owners have a stake in the land. That little piece of land is theirs. They are rooted in it; they are wedded to it. If the home and farm owner are threatened with ruin, the entire economic structure is likewise threatened.

We have in the United States over 10,000,000 individual homes occupied by their owners. Against these homes there are mortgages outstanding of $21,000,000,000. If delinquent taxes, municipal liens, and judgments are added, the total indebtedness against the homes of the American people exceeds $25,000,000,000.

In Pennsylvania, according to the census of 1930, we have 1,056,000 urban homes. Assuming that at least one half of these homes are mortgaged, which is a conservative estimate, we find that in Pennsylvania 528,000 urban homes are mortgaged.

It has been the custom in Pennsylvania to make mortgage loans for a period of 3 years. In 1931 it became difficult to obtain mortgage money, and since 1933 practically no mortgage money has been available in most parts of Pennsylvania. That means that a home owner whose mortgage has become due and who does not have sufficient money to pay off the mortgage (and very few home owners have that money) cannot repay it by obtaining a loan elsewhere. Most of the mortgages in Pennsylvania now in force were given in 1929, in 1930, and in prior years. They are overdue today. It is therefore, a conservative estimate to say that 75 percent of the mortgages—396,000 mortgages—are in default today.

Almost 400,000 home owners in Pennsylvania are in danger of losing their homes by sheriff's sale and of being dispossessed.

It is clear to every thinking person that such a situation is intolerable. The constant threat, the ever-pressing danger of instant foreclosure are a menace to the peace and good order of society. It is necessary to provide a status where a home owner will have reasonable assurance that he will be permitted to retain the ownership of his home and remain in possession thereof.

What I have said about home owners applies with equal force to the owners of farms.

Congress, at the special session in the spring of 1933, passed the Home Owners' Loan Act. I have discussed the provisions of that law many times over the radio and have written about it in the public press; therefore, it is unnecessary to review it now. But I do want to say that the relief afforded by the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is inadequate. There are weaknesses and defects in the law. The administration of the act was disappointingly slow in the beginning. But the home-loan offices have now speeded up and are rendering more efficient service.

On last Thursday the Pittsburgh office of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation had actually closed 1,222 loans, amounting to $3,750,000. In Pennsylvania 3,299 loans have been closed up to that date, amounting to $9,555,810.24. In the United States, 65,349 loans, amounting to $157,001,108, were closed as of January 19, 1934.

I have given the plight of the home owners my constant attention for more than a year. Only last month I urged measures on the Pennsylvania State Legislature at Harrisburg for the relief of home owners—measures which were defeated by short-sighted and reactionary politicians.

On the opening day of the session I introduced in Congress two bills for relief of home owners which make fundamental changes in the law as it now exists. Later on I introduced a third bill, which consolidated these two bills and improved upon them and which is known as "House bill 6564."

I should like to discuss with you the main provisions and the underlying principles of that bill.

One of the main defects in the present law is that the bonds which the Home Owners' Loan Corporation issues in exchange for distressed home mortgages are unattractive. They are guaranteed by the Government of the United States only as to interest. Many building and loan associations, banks, and other financial institutions have refused to accept them.

The bill I have introduced provides that the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation shall be guaranteed both as to principal and as to interest by the United States Government, thus making them Government bonds. It will make the bonds the most desirable security listed on any of the financial markets in the United States or elsewhere.

The bill further provides that these bonds shall have the circulation privilege, a privilege enjoyed by all other Government bonds. That means that Federal Reserve banks or national banks may deposit these bonds with the Treasurer of the United States as security and then receive bank notes in an amount equal to the face value of the bonds. This will assure a ready market for the home-loan bonds at or about par.

My bill provides that instead of $2,000,000,000 the Home Owners' Loan Corporation shall have power to issue $5,000,000,000 of bonds. This increase is necessary to care for applications for loans which will be filed by home owners and for additional types of loans for which my bill provides.

The bill further permits the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to make loans for the construction of new homes.

In normal years about 4½ billion dollars were expended yearly in the construction industry. In the years from 1924 to 1926 in 257 cities of the United States over $2,000,000,000 were expended yearly in the construction of homes; in 1932 and in 1933, however, only a little more than $100,000,000 were expended in these 257 cities. Thus the yearly expenditure for the construction of new homes in these cities has fallen from $2,000,000,000 to a mere $100,000,000.

In normal years the building industry throughout the United States employs directly and indirectly about 4½ million people. Most of these 4½ million men are now unemployed. It is vital, it is imperative, that some measure be taken to revive the construction industry and give employment to its unemployed.

Therefore my bill provides that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation make loans of between a billion and a billion and a half dollars for the construction of new homes. This will revive the construction industry, provide homes that are needed, give employment to more than a million people, and will go a long way to bring about recovery.

All this will be done without the expenditure of a single dollar of Government money. The loans will be made in the new type of home-loan bonds. They will in no way affect the Budget or call for any expenditure by the Government of the United States. My plan provides the only method which has been suggested for the revival of the construction industry without the direct expenditure of millions of dollars by the Government.

The bill also provides that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation shall make loans on homes that are free of mortgages, up to 60 percent of the value of the home. Today the home owner who desires to borrow on his home is unable to do so. Under the bill the home owner obtains his loan in the new type of bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. Then he may sell the bonds or borrow money on their security at his bank. Since these are Government bonds, every bank will be willing to loan money on them. The home owner can then use the money for repairs of his home, for investment in his business, or for any other useful purpose.

There are many other features of the bill. By a careful study of the operation of the Home Owners' Loan Act I have found many defects, and I have removed these defects in the bill which I am sponsoring.

My bill has received national attention. It has been endorsed by the National Lumber Dealers Association, the National Lumber Manufacturers Association, by the Pennsylvania Real Estate Association, by the Pittsburgh Real Estate Board, and by many other organizations.

I discussed the bill with President Roosevelt at the White House. The President showed keen interest in the bill and was in sympathy with the principles underlying it.

I believe that this plan, in the form in which I have presented it, or in a modified form, will be enacted into law at this session of Congress.

At last true relief will be provided for the home owner. At last 400,000 home owners in Pennsylvania, whose mortgages are in default, will know that a way has been provided to save their homes and thereby to save them, and to rehabilitate our economic structure.

INSTALLATION OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE NATIONAL PRESS CLUB

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including an address delivered Saturday night by Gov. Paul V. McNutt, of Indiana, who was the guest of honor and principal speaker at the National Press Club, the occasion being the inauguration of the officers of the club for 1934. Mr. William C. Murphy, an Indiana man, chief of the Washington bureau of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, was installed as president of the club. Governor McNutt's address contains extensive journalistic history of the Hoosier State, and I feel it will be of interest to hundreds of people. I ask unanimous consent to insert it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LUCE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, in previous Congresses, a colleague of mine from Massachusetts took occasion, whenever requests of this sort were made, to carry out his belief that the RECORD should not be used to carry remarks made by others than Members of Congress or those in high official position in Washington. I have observed in this session that no Member of either minority or majority has undertaken to continue that very useful work. May I ask the majority leader if it is not his belief that somebody on his side would consent to make a martyr of himself by serving the country in this fashion?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

It devolves on me to give Mr. Murphy, as he is inducted into his high office, the blessings of his native State, to give him official notification of his enrollment in our hall of fame, to felicitate Post 20 of the American Legion on the selection of its first past commander as president of the club, and to congratulate the National Press Club upon its good fortune in again having an Indiana man at its head. In representing the State of Indiana on such occasions I have always been careful to conceal a natural feeling of State pride. I liked the patriotism of Lowell. He did not brag. To boast is an unfailing sign of provincialism and Indiana is neither provincial nor boastful. Therefore I will make only an objective statement of the truth, even though it may seem to be an understatement of the fact. The fact, gentlemen, is that Indiana is the fountainhead of the American newspaper world. It is therefore fitting and appropriate, I might say it is almost unavoidable, that this club in choosing its president should turn to a son of Indiana.

Many are those who, drawing the first breath of life in Indiana and receiving their early training there, have gone to positions of responsibility and prominence in the newspaper world, in the National Capital, and in the great metropolitan centers of the country. For 30 years and more that supreme product of a Century of Progress, which every morning begins the day by reminding itself that it is the world's greatest newspaper, has depended upon a Tippecanoe County boy, John T. McCutcheon, for the cartoons which come nearer than anything else to justifying its claim. Public-spirited citizens of New York have turned to the ganglia of the brain trust on Morningside Heights and are trying to train a group of journalists who will redeem their city from the humiliation of having the world's greatest newspaper printed in Chicago. There is promise of success in their action in getting as dean of Columbia School of Journalism, some 3 years ago, Carl William Ackerman, of Richmond, Ind., a graduate of Earlham College. They are banking, also, on another Hoosier who maintained himself as a student at Butler College by working as a cub reporter on the Indianapolis News, Edwin C. Hill, star reporter, not only for the printed page but for the air.

Metropolitan and country newspapers alike, in large measure, depend for the gathering of the news on the press associations. At the head of one of these great organizations is another Indiana man, Kent Cooper, born at Columbus, student at Indiana University, married at Indianapolis, reporter on the Indianapolis papers, and called from that city to positions of constantly increasing responsibility with the Associated Press.

Another leader in this field, Roy Howard, who started as a newsboy in Indianapolis, became a reporter on Indianapolis papers, advanced rapidly in the newspaper field, became the head of the United Press, and is now the Howard of Scripps-Howard. The story of his life has replaced the Alger series in the libraries of youngsters who look to journalism as a profession.

Newspaper men often attain distinction in other pursuits. Many of Mr. Murphy's colleagues from Indiana belong to this list. A young reporter and staff correspondent of Indianapolis papers came to Washington about 30 years ago, and after 5 years of apprenticeship as private secretary to an Indiana Senator decided that what Congressmen needed most was an expert advertising consultant. Thomas R. Shipp became one. I am told that in 20 years he has made more reputations than the crash of 1929 destroyed, and that he has launched almost as many movements as has our present recovery program.

Ernest P. Bicknell graduated from newspaper work, chiefly in Indianapolis, into charity organizations and the vice-presidency of the American Red Cross. The world of books and magazines has turned Elmer Davis, a Rhodes scholar from Franklin College, Franklin, Ind., from the staff of the New York Times to the pursuit of pure and applied literature. He may well serve as an illustration of the high literary quality which our State gives to its newspaper writers.

Another son of Indiana, a predecessor of Mr. Murphy as president of the National Press Club, enjoys the unique distinction of being the first newspaper correspondent to go from the press gallery to a seat in Congress. Having gone "From Cornfield to Press Gallery", he stepped down, may I say it without disrespect, into the arena of the House itself; and, if rumor is correct, he is still asking himself, "What next?" If it were not inappropriate to suggest the technique of a political convention to a group of men to whom political conventions are a stale story, I would point with pride to our genial friend LOUIS LUDLOW.

May I also remind the president and members of the Press Club that at the capital of Spain, that country which discovered America and took possession of the larger part of it, the United States is now represented by an Indiana newspaper man, author, and orator—Claude G. Bowers. I am sure that if ever our relations with Spain become critical, one of Claude's keynote speeches will win the unanimous support of the Spanish Republic for friendly relations with the United States.

Meredith Nicholson, author of "The House of a Thousand Candles", and a score of other best sellers, produced his books after a newspaper apprenticeship. He has been called to the field of diplomacy, serving today as the American Minister to Paraguay.

Though many of those whom I have mentioned no longer reside in the Hoosier State, they come back to us often, and they still regard themselves as Hoosiers. Lest any of you should think that all of our great men in Indiana have moved away, I may say, not as a boast but as a simple statement of fact, that our Indiana newspapers continue to reap a plentiful crop of Pulitzer prizes and of the other honors of the newspaper world.

At the risk of embarrassing some who are present, I may also say that the present correspondents at Washington of our newspapers set a standard for their colleagues of which we are not ashamed. Though their papers may not all belong to the right political party nor appreciate to the full the blessings they enjoy under a Democratic regime, their Washington correspondents transmit to their constituents the earliest information and the clearest insight of the developments in this busy and complex center of government.

I want to say to you that those of us who are back at home are proud of our representatives in your number—Everett C. Watkins; Mark Thistlethewaite, James P. Hornaday—and of the others who keep us enlightened about the doings in Washington—Lowell Mellett, George Holmes, Frank Weller, Bob Anderson, Jepp Cadou, Ernest Lindley, Nelson Poynter, and Paul Leach.

Other Indianians in Washington newspaper work are Francis M. Stephenson, president of the White House Correspondents Association; Felix Bruner, Arthur Weil, Frederick William Wile, William S. Neal, W. Edward Jamieson, Perry Te Walt, Frank Hall, and Byron Price, chief of the Associated Press in Washington. In New York a Hoosier, Kenneth Hogate, is editor in chief of the Wall Street Journal.

Newspapermen, perhaps more than those in other professions, are influenced by the traditions and the background of their craft. Mr. Murphy and the others of whom I have spoken are the heirs of more than a century of first-class journalism and of generations of distinctive literature. Their careers really began when Elihu Stout (that was the way he pronounced his name), a Kentucky printer, brought a font of type and a press from Frankfort to Vincennes, Ind., and on the Fourth of July 1804 published the first issue of the Indiana Gazette. Undaunted by a fire which burned him out, he went back to Frankfort and brought a new outfit down the Kentucky and Ohio Rivers and up the Wabash to begin in 1807 the Western Sun, which still continues as our oldest paper.

William Hendricks was the owner of the second printing press set up in Indiana and established the Western Eagle, published at Madison, Ind., when Indiana was still a territory. When Indiana attained statehood in 1816, it elected Editor William Hendricks as its first Representative to Congress. He was later to serve as a United States Senator and as Governor. William Hendricks was an uncle of Thomas A. Hendricks who was to become one of the several vice presidents that Indiana has supplied to the Nation.

Fearless editors, and radical for those times, followed soon after. Frances Wright, in that center of enlightenment founded by Robert Owen, in 1828 began the publication of the resounding New Harmony and Nashoba Gazette, or Free Enquirer, to advocate the rights which few women then wanted for themselves and which no men were willing to concede, but which all women enjoy today. Henry Ward Beecher, while preaching at Indianapolis, published the Indiana Farmer and Gardener, which was sold to more than 1,200 subscribers for 50 cents per year. Solon Robinson, king of squatters and founder of Crown Point, Ind., became the country's leading agricultural writer and editor of that department of Horace Greeley's New York Tribune.

Schuyler Colfax rose from editor of a South Bend paper to become Vice President of the United States. John H. Holliday in 1869 became the pioneer of both politically independent and afternoon papers in the Middle West when he founded the Indianapolis News in 1869. He showed the mettle of Indiana journalism by getting out an extra the day before the first paper was published, an extra containing Grant's message on pensions, an extra which he himself printed and then sold in person on the streets. In his later life he made in vain a standing offer of $500 for a copy of this prenatal extra.

But a mere mention of energetic, fearless, and able Indiana newspapermen would rival Homer's catalog of ships or the genealogies of the Book of Numbers. In these days of restrained editorials, one would be startled by the vigorous editorial of the Indianapolis Sentinel written by one of the staff in 1887 when the Democratic supreme court of the State refused to intervene in the interest of the election of a Democratic lieutenant governor. The editor, who is said to have been worked up to a fighting pitch by this failure of members of his own party, and by liquid stimulants as well, published the editorial with an introductory sentence of his own which read, "Damn their cowardly souls." I might mention, also, as an example of one peculiar talent, a brilliant reporter who, after writing fiery editorials for his Democratic paper, wrote equally fiery answers, which he took down the alley and sold to its Republican rival.

No people anywhere have had a more genial critic of their virtues, vices, and their eccentricities than Kin Hubbard in his Abe Martin sketches, which have held up a mirror not only before Indiana but before the whole country.

Chic Jackson, with his comic strip, "The Roger Bean Family", in the Indianapolis Star, supplies an appetite at the Indiana breakfast table and takes high rank as a humorist.

Automobile advertising is a feature of every newspaper today. Be it remembered it was an Indianian, Elwood Haynes, who, at Kokomo, invented the first automobile, the "first horseless buggy."

I need not dwell upon the literary background from which our journalism springs. Perhaps more than in most States our literary men have been closely identified with the newspapers. John Finley gave currency to our patronym in the Carrier's Message, which he wrote under the title of "The Hoosier Neat." Sarah T. Bolton, author of such poems as Paddle Your Own Canoe, which have lived for nearly a hundred years, was a newspaperwoman. Mr. Murphy's native town of Crawfordsville was the home of Gen. Lew Wallace, still one of the most widely read American novelists, and of Maurice Thompson, whose first two books, one of which was Alice of Old Vincennes, inaugurated the institution of "best seller." I cannot take time to even enumerate the writers who have made this State the center of literature, as it is of population, of the United States; Edward Eggleston, Charles Major, James Whitcomb Riley, Gene Stratton Porter, Albert J. Beveridge, George Ade, Meredith Nicholson, and Booth Tarkington are only a few who are known to fame.

Margaret Weymouth Jackson, who wrote "Jenny Fowler", and John C. Mellett, who under the pen name, "Jonathan Brooks", wrote "High Ground" are among present day Indiana authors with a newspaper background. One of Indiana's distinguished playwrights is Maurine Watkins, who, after newspaper experience, wrote "Chicago", a Broadway hit for more than a year.

Albert J. Beveridge is remembered as an Indiana statesman, but his pen produced enduring monuments when he wrote "The Life of John Marshall", and his "Lincoln."

George B. Lockwood was a talented Indiana newspaper editor, but, as an author, he made an important literary contribution when he wrote "The New Harmony Movement" dealing with that early day communistic experiment at New Harmony, Ind.

A Washington newspaper—the Daily News—has Indiana men as heads of its several departments. Lowell Mellett is editor; Ernest Pyle is city editor; Nelson Poynter is business manager and Mark Ferree is advertising manager. Another Washington newspaper—the Evening Star—has an Indianian, Oliver Owen Kuhn for its managing editor.

It has been more difficult than I had at first realized to refrain from bragging about Indiana; it has, indeed, been hard to keep from talking about our family. The fact is that we Hoosiers are proud of our State. Loyalty weaves of spirit a stronger cord than common sense can furnish fiber for. We are for those who see Indiana with all its wrinkles and its scars and who, therefore, also know it at its best—its resolute integrity, its unworded oath of allegiance to the whole truth, its century of pathmaking for the children of the wilderness toward the fullness of civilized life, its passion for a clean and just democracy. We are for those who see through the surface of our Indiana to its heart of gold and who then stand for it as one stands for his mother. Her garments are plain, her face is beaten with the storms of the ages, but she has sons and daughters who exult in such a mother. And far across the world I hear them singing—

"If I forget thee, let my right hand forget her cunning; let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth if I remember thee not."

We Hoosiers are also proud of the human product we have sent to other States and to the District of Columbia. We are pleased with this fine recognition which has now come to one of our number. We look upon the press of the country as one of our greatest institutions and upon newspapermen as our best friends, and we admire the National Press Club for the fine fellowship and esprit de corps it has created, for its achievements and for its hospitality. It is a pleasure to be your guest on such an occasion as this, and it is a pleasure to bring you the thanks and the appreciation of Indiana for the recognition you have given—not only of Mr. Murphy personally but of the place of Indiana in our national journalism.

Mr. BYRNS. If I may be pardoned for a moment, I should like to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] that I think it would undoubtedly be to the interest of the Congress and of the country if this RECORD could be held to a strict history of what occurs in the two branches of Congress. Unfortunately, there is another branch of this body in which leave to print is given for anything that a Member of that body may ask. I think, therefore, there should be some liberality shown here if Members of the House ask to print matters which are of general interest to the Congress and to the country, because, if that is not done, the gentleman knows that those who want it inserted will simply appeal to a Member of another body and have it put in there.

I have wished that some agreement could be reached by the Senate and the House with reference to just what should be put into the RECORD and what should be denied, but until that is done, frankly, as a Member of the House, I have not been very much disposed to enter objections, except as to printed articles which can be read in the newspapers and in the periodicals of the country; but a speech, such as by the Governor of a State, as made in this instance, by our friend from Indiana [Mr. CROWE], which has no element of partisanship, and which the gentleman from Indiana tells us is a matter of exceeding interest, I personally have no objection to being inserted, and I think the gentleman should have that opportunity.

Mr. LUCE. May I submit to the gentleman, however, that there is no question of partisanship involved at all. It is a question of saving the public money. The colleague to whom I referred saved many, many dollars to the United States Treasury by his self-sacrifice. I would further call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that he is unintentionally imposing a hardship upon all of us because, while this fellow Member was functioning, we were able to tell our imploring constituents that we could not get into the RECORD some speech or editorial or magazine article because this man would object. Now, we have had that shield and buckler taken away from us.

Mr. BYRNS. I think it should be stated that the gentleman to whom my friend from Massachusetts refers, a former Member of this Congress, is Mr. Underhill, of Massachusetts. I say that because I know, and I think every Member of this House knows, that he rendered a splendid service to the country and saved hundreds of thousands of dollars by objections which he made from time to time, preventing extraneous matter going into the RECORD. I say that in deference to the splendid service rendered by Mr. Underhill. I have heard that the Public Printer has said, in his opinion, the objections made by Mr. Underhill saved the Treasury many thousands of dollars.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The minority has been wanting something to do. Why not turn this censorship over to the minority?

Mr. BYRNS. Oh, it is a privilege that any Member can exercise, of course.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I think this discussion is well worth while, because my constituents say to me that they have seen certain things in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as if it were a matter of great regard for the country or matters of great importance, while it may be very trivial in reference to history. It seems to me that since the majority leader has spoken of the House and Senate getting together, I know of no better time than to start right now, and I believe if the gentleman would try to get a committee of the majority to confer with the Senate, probably we could stop a lot of this matter that is getting into the RECORD from being printed that is not vital to the welfare of the country.

Mr. BYRNS. We have a Joint Committee on Printing. I believe the gentleman is a member of that committee.

Mr. RICH. I am a member of that committee.

Mr. BYRNS. That is a duty which the gentleman, as a member of the Joint Committee on Printing, can perform.

Mr. RICH. The Joint Committee on Printing has not that authority when unanimous consent is given by this House. Would the gentleman advise me to stand up here every time some Member makes a request and object to it and refuse to put it in the RECORD? If the gentleman does, I will see that it is done.

Mr. BYRNS. Oh, the gentleman misconstrued what I said, but I believe if there is a committee of this House upon whom the responsibility primarily rests to protect the RECORD, it is the Joint Committee on Printing, of which the gentleman is a member, and I was simply pointing out to the gentleman, as a member of that committee, that there is a great service that he and his colleagues can perform if they will take it up and come to some agreement with his colleagues at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. RICH. I will assure the majority leader of the House that I will call this to the attention of the Joint Committee on Printing, and if for any reason it is not inculcated in the law, I want the gentleman to know that it is the fault of the majority and not of the minority of this House committee, because I am going to insist that we eliminate a lot of this material that goes into the RECORD by Members of the House. If the majority of this committee does not see fit to cooperate with me, then I assure the gentleman it is the fault of the majority.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman cannot evade responsibility in that respect, because he has the same right to object to the introduction of extraneous matter in this RECORD that any other Member of the House has, whether he belongs to the majority or the minority. The gentleman cannot undertake to evade his personal responsibility by simply saying that he belongs to the minority and that the majority ought to protect the Treasury.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I am interested to the extent that I want to see that a great deal of this matter is not put upon the taxpayers of the country, because I believe it is an injustice to them. While I do not want to object to anything a Member may want to do, I feel the Membership of this House should refrain from asking that the speeches of everybody all over this country be placed in the RECORD. It is not the right thing to do, and I object to it.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

The Chair laid before the House the following communication:

JANUARY 29, 1934.

To the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.
(Through the honorable the Speaker),
Washington, D.C.

GENTLEMEN: We have been informed by cable that yesterday a huge demonstration and mass meeting was held in Manila attended by people from the city and the neighboring Provinces in connection with the announcement of the action of the Senate Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs on January 23, 1934.

At the mass meeting those present approved a "resolution affirming the people's right to decide for themselves their destiny" and that "it is the sense of this meeting to favor and support the extension by 9 months of the acceptance period in the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law, as proposed by the Senate Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, and petition Congress for the approval of such extension."

Complying with the request made by Messrs. Sergio Osmeña and Manuel Roxas on behalf of the people participating in the demonstration to submit the resolution to the President, to the Congress, and to the Committee, we are hereby doing it by this means.

Very truly yours,

PEDRO GUEVARA,
VAMILO OSIAS,
Resident Commissioners from the Philippines.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes on the subject of the revaluation of gold, and that I may have this time after consideration of the rule which is about to come up for consideration.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it seems to me the majority leader had some other business to come before the House, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER] has already asked permission to address the House at the conclusion of certain business mentioned by the majority leader.

Mr. BYRNS. I may say to the gentleman from Ohio that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER] made a request for 25 minutes in order to address the House upon the character and the history of a former distinguished Member of the Senate, Hon. John J. Ingalls. I suggest, therefore, that the gentleman from Ohio withhold his request until we dispose of a couple of rules and possibly an election contest, which I do not think will take much time. The gentleman, of course, understands I shall have to make the same request of him that I made of the gentleman from Kansas, that he postpone his request to address the House until we dispose of certain business.

Mr. GRAY. I hope the gentleman will assure me of some consideration.

Mr. BYRNS. Yes. I do not think there will be any question but what both Members will have an opportunity to address the House later this afternoon.

CONSERVATION OF WILD ANIMAL LIFE

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 237 and ask its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 237

Resolved, That a special committee of 15 Representatives, to be composed of the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, Chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries, the 2 House of Representatives members of the Migratory Bird Conservation Commission, 7 Members of the House of Representatives from the majority political party, and 4 Members of the House of Representatives from the minority political party, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House, is authorized and directed (1) to investigate all matters pertaining to the replacement and conservation of wild animal life (including aquatic and bird life) with a view to determining the most appropriate method of carrying out such purposes; and (2) to report to the House as soon as practicable, but not later than January 3, 1935, the results of its investigations, together with its recommendations, for necessary legislation.

For the purpose of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold hearings; to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the House in the Seventy-third Congress until the final report is submitted; to require by subpena, or otherwise, the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents; to administer such oaths; and to take such testimony as it deems advisable.

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], and I yield myself such time as I may need.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this resolution is to provide for a special committee of 15 Members of the House to make a thorough investigation and report to the next Congress on the conservation and propagation of wild life with a view to recommending such legislation as may be suitable in order to effectuate such purpose.

The necessity for legislation of this type at this time is due largely to the unusual activities of several departments of our Government, like activities by many of the State governments. For instance, the United States Department of Agriculture is today carrying on a program for the reduction of the principal crops of the country one of the most important features of which is the taking out of production the marginal lands of the country. These marginal lands today are in the hands of people who are attempting to make them productive and profitable in ordinary agricultural operations, and it is the use of these marginal lands that is largely responsible for the difficulties we encounter in connection with our major crops. The people who are operating these properties are making no economic headway; they are tilling these marginal lands under difficulties, but the result of their activities amounts to enough to so swell the volume of the major crops as to bring about in large measure the unusual conditions that exist.

Another department of our Government is engaged in teaching the value of timber production. This is a very live topic, one that is challenging the attention of the country today, for the depletion of our timber supply has become more and more a matter of grave importance to the industry of our Nation.

I can see no reason why the result of the operations on the part of these two governmental agencies should not offer to us in addition the values that will flow from the conservation and propagation of our timber supplies; in the removal from the marginal lands of the people who are today contending against unequal conditions, by adding to these large areas proper conservation of the wild life of our Nation.

I happen to come from a district through which passes one of the lanes used in the flights of our wild fowl from their breeding to their feeding grounds. We have in my State refuges established by the Government several years ago. One is near my home. It is a matter of no expense to the Government. I think only one game warden is employed in policing the game refuge, but he has a strong, active sentiment on the part of the local people to enable him to protect the game in the refuge.

During the fall season on the southern flight and during the spring season when the fowls are wending their way back toward their breeding grounds, thousands use this refuge and are fully protected. They rest, they feed, and again resume their flight. This lane along the Mississippi Valley is, I expect, one of the most frequented of all the bird-flight lanes in our Nation. All along the line there are areas which, without costing the Government one dollar, can be turned into refuges where the wild fowl will be protected. In addition, the States have created reserves. So with a minimum of expense we can secure complete and adequate protection for the conservation and propagation of wild life.

During the past year 13,000,000 hunting and fishing licenses were issued by the various States of the Union. This has brought an enormous revenue to the States; and the recreational values are beyond estimate. Therefore I think this is a matter of pressing importance; and impartial consideration of the whole question at the hands of Congress is justified.

The bill provides that a committee consisting of the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, the Chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries, the 2 House Members now on the voluntary Commission known as the "Migratory Bird Commission", 4 Members from the minority party, and 7 Members from the majority party of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DRIVER. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I am wondering about the wisdom of having so many as 15 Members on the committee. Is not this a rather large committee?

Mr. DRIVER. This being a committee which serves without expense, the question being one affecting such widespread interest in this Nation, I think this large committee is entirely justified in the working out of the problem.

I think so further because the two committee members we draw from the voluntary commission are men who have some information on the subject.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Do I understand, then, that a committee of this sort is proposed so that different sections of the country may be represented?

Mr. DRIVER. As nearly as possible. I think possibly I will anticipate another question if I proceed a little further.

It is provided in this resolution that the committee may make a thorough investigation. Of course, we cannot provide the necessary money with which to pay its expenses. There has been some question raised as to the possibility of an unusual expenditure in this respect. However, we are offering an amendment to the resolution providing that the hearings must be held in the District of Columbia, thereby avoiding any possibility of expense in connection with what is denominated as a "junketing trip" or an unusual expense by going here and there in the making of an investigation.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DRIVER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. I am glad to hear the gentleman make his statement, assuring the proposed amendment, because the resolution provides that the committee or any subcommittee may sit at such times "and places" it wanted to, which would not only embrace the United States but any foreign country as well. Without the amendment limiting its hearings to Washington, D.C., I would oppose the resolution.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DRIVER. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I am in hearty sympathy with the wild life, marginal land, and timber propagation program, but I wonder how the work of the committee as proposed by the resolution dovetails with the work that has been done by the Senate Committee on Wild Life and the President's committee on this subject? We have been reading in the newspapers about the work of the Senate committee and that of the special committee named by the President.

Mr. DRIVER. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama that it does not conflict with either of the committees the gentleman has mentioned.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I was wondering whether or not the committee proposed in the resolution was going over ground that has already been covered. On last Friday or Saturday morning a joint committee, as I understand it, composed of representatives of the Senate Wild Life Committee and the President's committee on that subject had a conference with the President on the matter, and, as I understand it, the President's special committee has submitted a tentative report on the subject to the Secretary of Agriculture, and within a very short while will submit a final report. Is the committee which the House will now set up going to do a different piece of work, supplementing the work of the other two committees, or how is the work of this proposed committee to dovetail with the work of these two committees?

Mr. DRIVER. I will say to the gentleman that I believe the work of this committee will be so complete and extensive and will be in such intimate detail as to all phases of the question that there will be no reason to criticize the report of this committee at all. I do not say that the other report is not a complete report from the standpoint of the interest they have covered in the matter, but I will say that in my opinion the report is not sufficiently extensive and intimate with this question to justify legislation at the hands of this Congress.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The gentleman would like to have a more comprehensive report, covering a wider field and with more detailed information? It that the purpose?

Mr. DRIVER. I would like to see the investigation cover not only the activities of our own departments of government but also the activities of the different States in their efforts to protect the wild life of the Nation.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DRIVER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. Is it the intention of the gentleman to have this committee report a bill to the House or just submit a general report, as usual?

Mr. DRIVER. A general report with a recommendation as to the character of legislation which in their opinion will meet the demands provided for in this resolution.

Mr. SNELL. There will be nothing definite then as far as legislation is concerned?

Mr. DRIVER. No. I should not expect the committee to prepare a bill but to recommend appropriate legislation.

Mr. SNELL. I noticed the gentleman in his opening remarks said something about the timber supply of the country, and so forth. Is it expected that this committee will go into such a vast subject?

Mr. DRIVER. No; but I will say to the gentleman from New York, they will go into the matter to the extent of determining just how the conservation of the wild life and the areas devoted to timber culture may be coordinated, which will enable us to utilize these large areas which we are segregating for that purpose and use them for a dual purpose, giving values in both respects. I will say further to the gentleman from New York that I think an investigation into the possibilities of our national forests is a most useful one, and that there we can find an opportunity of great value through the devotion of such areas to the propagation and conservation of the wild life of the Nation.

Mr. SNELL. I did not understand exactly the reply the gentleman made to the gentleman from Alabama as to how this work would join in with the work of the Committee on Wild Life of the Senate. The Senate has a standing committee, have they not?

Mr. DRIVER. No. I understand it is a special committee. I will say to the gentleman from New York that they have made some investigation, but they have not made an investigation into the phases of the problems I think are most important to us today.

Mr. SNELL. Several of the Members over there have spoken to me about creating a committee of the House to cooperate with their committee. Would this proposed committee cooperate along this same line?

Mr. DRIVER. Of course they could do so, but the bill does not provide that they shall.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me, if we are going to have two investigations, that they might be brought together in some way, so that both will have the same ultimate object.

Mr. DRIVER. I have no doubt that they will cooperate, but the bill does not provide for a joint committee.

Mr. SNELL. It is not expected that this will cost any money?

Mr. DRIVER. Not any more than the local investigation here. It would certainly be a minimum amount. We make no provision for any more than this.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DRIVER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLCOTT. There has been a growing need along the border between the United States and Canada for an investigation along this line for some years. Those of us along the Great Lakes have seen the American fishing industry of the Great Lakes seriously crippled in a great many instances, due to the fact that there has been no standardization of laws having to do with the conservation of fish in the Great Lakes by the United States and the Dominion of Canada. I merely wanted to clear up this point, whether or not in the gentleman's opinion the committee will have authority to go into that particular phase of the matter?

Mr. DRIVER. Beyond question.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And with respect to the report which is to be made to the House, may I ask whether or not it will be necessary to incorporate in this resolution some provision for a report to the Department of Commerce and the Department of State, as a condition precedent to some action by the State Departments of Canada and the United States, to correct this situation?

Mr. DRIVER. I do not think that is necessary, because this is a fact-finding committee we attempt to create and one that will report the results of its investigations in order that we may provide appropriate legislation to carry out its recommendations.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DRIVER. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. I could see nothing in the resolution that should give any concern to any Member here until a moment ago when the gentleman made the statement that he hoped this investigation would go back into the various States, and this worried me somewhat. Most of our States have their own commissions on conservation, and so on. Just what did the gentleman mean by investigating what are the laws of the various States from a Federal viewpoint? Perhaps I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. DRIVER. I did not intend to convey such impression to the gentleman from Connecticut or to the House. What I meant to say was that this committee should take into consideration, in its investigation, the activities of the different States in their efforts to conserve wild life and suggest any manner in which we may cooperate with such local entities.

Mr. GOSS. And there is no disposition on the part of the gentleman to interfere with any of the laws of the various States.

Mr. DRIVER. Oh, no. I want them supported, and this work will be in direct cooperation with the various States.

Mr. DOXEY. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DRIVER. I am very pleased to yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. DOXEY. Briefly, I am heartily in accord with the resolution. I have not had an opportunity to discuss it with the gentleman from Arkansas as I would like; but in view of the statement that the gentlemen from New York and from Arkansas have both made with reference to our national forests, I may say there are 42 national forests in the United States. The National Forest Reservation Commission has established 14 additional national forests. It looks to me as if this work as outlined here is closely related with the work of the National Forest Commission, just as the gentleman has stated.

As a member of the National Forest Reservation Committee, I may say to my distinguished friend that I am not looking for a place on this committee, as I am busy now almost beyond my capacities; but I feel that with the national forests in the picture to the extent they necessarily will be, the two Members on that commission from the House of Representatives should be members of this commission, for the work that is proposed to be done is work in which the members of the Forest Commission are vitally interested. The reason I say this is because the scope of this committee is broad, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] and myself are on this National Forest Commission as representatives of the Congress. We have been functioning and we have obtained information which is of value, and we are willing to cooperate with the proposed committee to the fullest extent. I do not make this statement as anything but a suggestion; but in the interest of the work I do say it is necessary that the national forests be considered, and the membership on that commission from the House, it seems to me, should have a place on this committee.

Mr. DRIVER. I have no doubt, I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi, that the information which the gentleman and his colleague have will be considered very seriously by the Speaker when he undertakes to select the membership of this committee.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. Will the gentleman from Arkansas yield?

Mr. DRIVER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas for a question.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. I understood the gentleman to say that the last paragraph of the resolution, with respect to authorizing the committee to hold hearings, will be stricken out.

Mr. DRIVER. Yes; an amendment will be offered to that part of the bill.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. If that provision is to be stricken out and the committee is to sit in the District of Columbia, cannot the Biological Survey, which has agents all over the United States, dealing with these problems, get this information, and cannot the committee secure the information from that Bureau and any further information that may be necessary by corresponding with the game commissioners of the various States, as well as the members of the Survey in the various States?

Mr. DRIVER. I am sure it will be very informative to do that.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this resolution and its purpose because there is certainly a need in this country today for further consideration of the question of conservation. At this time in particular the matter of saving our migratory waterfowl is of great importance, and unless some steps are taken soon in this connection it may be too late. Any step looking to a consideration of the question which is followed by constructive and prompt action will be helpful.

However, I did not rise to urge the passage of this resolution, to which I anticipate there is little or no opposition, so much as to point out to the House that there is little use in passing resolutions of this kind if we are going to permit the Bureau of the Budget to cut the very heart out of the appropriations for the Biological Survey, the one Bureau of the Government which has the most to do with the matter of conserving wild life.

The recommendations of the Bureau of the Budget for the coming fiscal year approve appropriations of approximately 43 percent of those for 1934.

The disastrous effect which this cut in appropriations will have is even more apparent when the figures for the 2 years are broken down and it is seen what activities are affected.

Without doubt the most serious situation in the entire wild-life field today is that affecting migratory birds. During the past few years a combination of conditions, including drought, over hunting, and laid settlement, has resulted in an alarming decrease in the number of these birds. After a most careful survey of the situation in 1921 it was found that the waterfowl population in this country had reached the lowest point on record despite the effect of a shorter shooting season and in some respects better conditions. Since that time there has been no noticeable increase in numbers, and, in the opinion of all who have given the matter study, the waterfowl situation at this time is extremely critical.

In recognition of this fact $12,000,000 of the $25,000,000 which the Public Works Administration has allocated to the Surplus Relief Corporation for the purchase of submarginal agricultural land has been set aside to buy tracts which are suitable for migratory bird nesting and breeding grounds.

Now the question as to whether this expenditure will result in helping the situation depends upon the suitability of the tracts purchased for this purpose. This is entirely a scientific question, and involves many factors, including knowledge as to the breeding grounds of the various species, the protection afforded against enemies, availability of food supplies, and freedom from disease.

For years the Biological Survey has been studying just these things, and has not only developed a mass of information but a corps of experts who know how to interpret and apply the information acquired, as well as to secure such further knowledge as might be needed in purchasing land most suitable for the purpose intended. Yet, by reason of the cuts which have been made in the various appropriations, it is going to be necessary to discontinue practically all of its scientific work, and dismiss from the service the men who have spent years in building it up.

In other words, just as we are starting to spend $12,000,000 to buy these breeding and nesting grounds, we drive out of the Government service the only men who can furnish the scientific information as to how and where this money should be spent. Suppose that when the Government began its public-building program in 1926 it had dismissed all the architects and engineers in the Treasury Department. Yet that would not have been any more ridiculous than the step which the administration seems about to take in this matter.

If the committee about to be created is to accomplish anything on behalf of conservation, it will have to depend for its information upon the work of the naturalists and scientists of the Biological Survey. How foolish is it, then, to cripple and almost destroy this work. Surely no better example of a penny-wise and pound-foolish system of economy could be found than this.

Let me call attention at this time to what has been done to that part of the appropriation for the Biological Survey which deals directly with the gathering of scientific information concerning migratory birds and their protection. For the current fiscal year there was appropriated $75,000 for the study of food habits of birds and animals. Of this amount cash withdrawals of $71,640 were permitted. This year the Department estimated that in order to carry on this work it should have an appropriation of $82,056. The Bureau of the Budget has recommended that this activity be discontinued and that no funds be appropriated whatever for that purpose. This means that all of the scientific work which the Bureau has been doing relative to the investigation of the food habits and economic value of migratory and other birds, including methods for their conservation, must be discontinued. It is essential, of course, that work be done along this line in order to determine the fitness for the purpose of proposed migratory breeding and nesting grounds.

For biological investigation there was appropriated for the current year $85,000. This year the Bureau of the Budget has cut the amount to $69,711, and I am advised that this will not leave any funds for the employment of naturalists and investigators to investigate and consider the merits of proposed nesting grounds and bird refuges. All the work which has been done in connection with the status of migratory birds under the treaty with Canada, as well as the taking of the bird census in recent years, has been done under this fund.

For the protection of migratory birds there was appropriated for the current fiscal year $198,190. This year the Bureau of the Budget recommends $118,210, at a time when protection is more urgently needed than ever.

Another very important part of the work of the Biological Survey is that carried on cooperatively with the States and other governmental units for the control of predatory animals and injurious rodents. This work depends for its effectiveness on its continuity. Stopping it for a year or two might undo all that has been accomplished. Yet for this year the Bureau of the Budget has cut the appropriation for predatory animal work to $91,343, as compared with $530,000 appropriated and $382,981 permitted to be withdrawn for the current fiscal year. In connection with this appropriation, it should be said that State, county, and private funds expended for this work in cooperation with the Government total approximately twice as much as the Federal appropriation. If the recommendations of the Bureau of the Budget are allowed to stand, it means that practically all of the program which has heretofore been carried out must be discontinued.

In recent years the Biological Survey has carried on work in connection with the production of fur-bearing animals. This is a most important activity, because in recent years the decline in the number of fur pelts of all kinds has been such as to create a great deal of uneasiness as to the future of the industry. The work which the Bureau has been doing includes a study of fur-market conditions and investigation of the methods of fur storage, research in fur-animal production, and development of fur farming. Most of this work to be effective depends upon its continuity and to discontinue it now means a serious loss.

I assume this resolution will pass and that a committee will be speedily appointed. I sincerely hope that it will go thoroughly into this entire question and suggest that one of its first duties should be to see that the Government bureaus dealing directly with conservation be given adequate appropriations so that they can make available to this committee the scientific information which will be needed if the committee is to secure a complete picture of the situation and the remedies which are needed.

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman's remarks are very interesting. I should like to know if the gentleman has in mind how much should be recommended for the Biological Survey? The gentleman said it was 43 percent of the current amount. Does the gentleman have in mind what the current amount is?

Mr. HOPE. The amount for the current year is $582,741, and last year it was $1,356,280.

Mr. HASTINGS. Is the gentleman on the subcommittee?

Mr. HOPE. I am not a member of the Appropriations Committee.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I have listened with much interest to what has been said on this subject. Of course, this is largely a matter concerning the western and southern sections of the country, but I wish to make a few remarks about the situation on the eastern seaboard.

I hope that I may be called a conservationist. I represent the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, in part—its right arm extended into the sea and the islands of Marthas Vineyard and Nantucket—where migratory birds are rather plentiful and much is made of the shooting season. I have lived to learn that many of the so-called "conservationists" in our section of the country own slaughter pens all the way up and down the eastern seaboard. After shooting in the northern zone they simply move their trappings to the central and then to the lower zones, making for themselves an almost continual shooting season. Those are the conservationists who largely contribute to the so-called "societies for the preservation of wild fowl" and who help to furnish the propaganda which goes all over the country to induce those who are true conservationists to insist on the restriction of seasons and on the restrictions of the rights of the natives in the localities which were settled by their forefathers in part because game and fowl abounded there.

Some of you may be familiar with these slaughter pens where trained geese are sent up to betray the wild ones by encouraging them to come down to their destruction. Such sportsmen are disappointed if one live wild goose escapes.

Mr. BERLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. BERLIN. Has the gentleman ever shot ducks or geese from a blind?

Mr. GIFFORD. No. But I have done some shooting of wild fowl in my earlier years.

Mr. BERLIN. Is the gentleman familiar with the slaughter pens he speaks of on the eastern coast?

Mr. GIFFORD. I am very familiar with them.

Mr. BERLIN. Would the gentleman state to the House where he has discovered slaughter pens on the eastern shore?

Mr. GIFFORD. Why, Mr. Speaker, I am just buying a tract of land to get rid of one of those slaughter pens, where sportsmen own shooting boxes and have caretakers and are notified by telephone and telegraph when the birds are flying. These men use the most modern paraphernalia and are usually successful in annihilating large flocks of birds. They are the conservationists who are urging the sort of legislation now in effect. I come from Cape Cod, where people settled many years ago, in part because of natural advantages such as the wild fowl which could be secured for food. Our people, who were accustomed to secure birds for food, are now—with much sarcasm—classified as "pothunters."

Our laws are now so framed that they can shoot for less than 3 months in the year and these conservationists spend their holidays with us and then in effect say to us, "Do not kill one of those birds until we get back next season." Many of these men follow the shooting from zone to zone and thus shoot nearly all the time. In much of the section which I represent wealthy men have bought up the lands around ponds is good shooting localities and by virtue of that ownership they control the shooting of wild fowl therein. These are some of the conservationists anxious for restrictive laws to be passed and who spread propaganda in favor of them. I have lived to see my own people hindered, fined, and actually imprisoned for going out and bucking wind and tide to get one brace of birds, which—many a time—was badly needed for sustenance. If they wish to go into the fields to shoot partridge and quail they have but 1 month in which to do it, and when that month arrives there come strangers in automobiles with pump guns and trained dogs who quickly shoot up the locality and then say, "See that you natives do not kill one of these birds until we get back next year."

We have a department in my State which boasts that it does not have to have an appropriation from the Commonwealth. Instead, fish and game clubs are formed in the different localities, often primarily for social reasons, and the members are inveigled into paying from $2 to $3.25 for a hunter's license, and from the money so secured the department is enabled to raise quail and partridge for this 1 month's shooting holiday. It has had the effect of virtually destroying the rights and liberties of my own people.

I do not want to see this wholesale shooting. I have done but a small amount of hunting myself. In former years I have fought the wind and tide in the pursuit of wild fowl, but in those days we felt exceedingly happy if we could get three or four birds. We earned them and, furthermore, we used them for food. Nowadays many of these so-called "sportsmen" are unhapply unless they can shoot the entire flock. Are they then to be classed as "conservationists"?

Now, we are to have a committee appointed to consider the taking of lands in my district—investigators have already been there—and it was proposed to condemn one particular large tract as a bird refuge. I was called to the town in which this tract was located and found every citizen thereof protesting against it. We have a large fish and game association in my section watchful of their rights and they do not wish to have these large areas set aside as refuges. They know that their shooting rights have been taken away and are very suspicious of these so-called "conservation measures."

Several years ago I was sent to Washington to interview the officials of the Department of Agriculture. That Department had drawn a line across the northern section establishing what area was to be used for shooting during a fixed open season. Such mandatory zoning is open to grave objection because certain kinds of migratory fowl do not make their appearance therein until after the fixed season is ended or almost closed. We have found that it is exceedingly difficult to secure proper changes in both zones and open seasons.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to be thought unsympathetic with the purposes of this bill. By all means let us permit the committee to inquire into existing conditions, especially in the West and South, where large breeding grounds have been destroyed by reclamation and in similar ways. If it is desired that the Government repurchase these sections under the plea of conserving wild life, the measure should be favorably considered. But if this bill is promoted by the kind of conservationists whom I have tried to portray to you let us look well into it.

I close by saying that I used to be fond of shooting on occasion. But I do not get the enjoyment out of killing wild life that once I did. Last year I paid for my license, but never used it. I sympathize with those bird lovers who are endeavoring to preserve wild life, but I have little sympathy for those who use slaughter pens; and if this measure is something to help them, by providing more game for wholesale destruction, I am not enthusiastic for it. I agree on the bag limit being made small. I will gladly join you in that sort of conservation, but I am opposed to giving the wealthy man the entire control of the wild fowl that fly because of his wealth and his ownership of the land. I am glad to raise my voice for the people who live permanently in my section of the country rather than for the benefit of the outside sportsman.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KURTZ].

Mr. KURTZ. Mr. Speaker, I think there is no person here who does not believe firmly in the preservation of wild life, and none within the sound of my voice who does not deplore the fact that there are hunters who act as game hogs in every section of the United States, as asserted by the gentleman from Massachusetts, but that is no reason why we should not study the proper methods for the preservation of the game and wild life of this country, so as not only to preserve it from extinction but bring it back as it existed in the days of our primeval forests.

In Pennsylvania we have studied methods of preservation of game for more than 25 years. Thirty years ago it was almost impossible to see a deer on the mountains of that Commonwealth, yet today any man who desires to hunt deer can go out and see at least 20 or 30 or possibly 100 in a single day. I was hunting on the crest of the Allegheny Mountains last year with a hunting party and more than 100 deer were seen in 1 day. This has all been brought about because of the conservation policy of the State of Pennsylvania. The wild life of Pennsylvania has been brought back in a quarter of a century after it had been practically destroyed, and within the confines of one little county of Pennsylvania 31 bears were killed the first day of the open season last year, and within that State there were more bears and deer killed in the last season than within the boundaries of any other State in the entire Nation. That is all because of the fact that the people of Pennsylvania have studied methods of preserving wild life and put those methods into effect. If the native game and wild life have been destroyed in certain sections of this Nation, it is high time that this Congress appoint a committee to investigate the matter in every section of the country and suggest such measures as will bring it back and protect it for the sportsman and posterity.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KURTZ. I gladly yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Is it not also true that the State of Pennsylvania has established some 30 game refuges and sanctuaries, and has financed it entirely from the fees paid by hunters and the license fees?

Mr. KURTZ. Not only is that true, but let me say the Pennsylvania Game Commission has stocked every suitable section of Pennsylvania with every kind of game that can be stocked. They have stocked it with wild turkeys. They have stocked it with rabbits. They have stocked it with squirrels. They have stocked it with deer. They have stocked it with bears. They have set aside these preserves and refuges where wild game is perfectly safe from the hunter and the poacher and free to live and propagate in safety. This has all been done by hunters' license fees and without any tax laid upon the general public. They have made a special study of it, and the time has come when even the farmers of Pennsylvania, in many sections, are willing to set aside 10 acres of their farm as a preserve or as a game refuge, and the birds fly into that region in very short order after the game season opens and are perfectly safe.

We find in Pennsylvania that there is no danger of the extinction of game, but it is growing more plentiful in many regions than it has ever been before. All this in spite of the fact that Pennsylvania is one of the most thickly populated States in the Union, and has hunters running into hundreds of thousands. Three years ago the deer became so plentiful that it was absolutely necessary to permit an open season for antlerless deer to limit the females of the herd. More than 90,000 deer were killed in that 2 weeks' season in Pennsylvania. Last year there were killed within the confines of Pennsylvania more than 20,000 deer with antlers, and the returns are not all in. So I say it is high time for the United States of America, where game has been depleted, to study this question in the light of what the Commonweath of Pennsylvania has done and see whether they cannot bring the game back that was so plentiful in the years that have gone. I hope this resolution passes. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KURTZ] has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, a year or two ago some wag remarked that the Secretary of the Interior had charge of the polar bears; that the Secretary of Commerce had charge of the cinnamon bears; that the Secretary of Agriculture had charge of the black bears; and held that incident forth to indicate the lack of coordination in governmental departments. I believe that same apparent lack of coordination is manifested so far as conservation and restoration of wild life is concerned. The Secretary of Commerce looks after the fisheries; the Secretary of Agriculture, because he is the boss of the Biological Survey, looks after the Federal wardens and the enforcement of the game laws; the Secretary of the Interior, by virtue of the fact that he is in charge of the national parks and reserves, is in charge of that particular section of wild life and the outdoors. If we are going to proceed on three parallel tracks in three different departments, the ultimate result will be just exactly nothing, so far as wild life restoration and conservation is concerned. I am in full sympathy with the provisions of this bill which seek to make a coordinated study and bring about a coordinated program in conservation and restoration.

I was very much interested in the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KURTZ] about conservation. It seems we must go a little further in this program. I am not satisfied by simply stopping stream pollution and maintaining the status quo of our outdoors. I think we should go further and say to those who pollute our streams and who have somehow destroyed our wild life that they should give it back, every bit of it, and restore it to some kind of pristine condition.

The reason for that is this: I venture to say that everybody in this Chamber has had a chance somehow to contact the frontier in his State, where he could go out and fish and bring back some fish, or where he could go out and hunt and bring back some ducks. It is rather a speculative matter right now. So when my family grows up I want it to be possible for my children to say that they, too, can be identified with the frontier and get all that life holds; but more important as a basis of this program that is to be detailed ultimately by the committee is the fact that we have to save the outdoors because of the increasing industrial breakdown of human life and human spirit and the necessity, when we once go to a short working day and working week, to be able to send out people somewhere to wash out the impurities of the spirit and somehow find a new kind of life.

Are we in this country, as a matter of fact, ready for a permanent 6-hour day and a 5-day week unless there is some kind of constructive leisure that goes with it? What are you going to do with the men who shall have that leisure time? Are you going to say that they should all become golf players? Are you going to say they should all become baseball or football players, or players in some one of a dozen other sports? There is no playground to accommodate them all, but there is a place for all to exercise the instinct of pursuit, to take a fishing rod or shotgun and go out in the wilderness—if there is a wilderness—and there find a certain communion with nature. When we come to the day—and it is not so far distant—when the days and the weeks will have to be shortened, we must be able to offer to these people a place to go, a place to spend this leisure in a constructive fashion. There is only one place to offer them, and that is the great out-of-doors. If we cannot conserve it now, if we cannot protect it and restore it now and have a coordinated program that will ultimately lead to the establishment of refuges and sanctuaries, the balancing of the relationships between all sections of the country so that each one can share proportionately in the outdoors, then I say we shall not be ready for the readjusted economic life.

My people out in Illinois feel that the duck-shooting season starts too late and ends too early. They think it starts too early perhaps down in Arkansas and that the people of Arkansas get better shooting. I shall not quarrel about it, but this indicates that there is especial need for a commission such as this to study the situation and coordinate the whole program that justice and equity may be rendered to every section of the Nation. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to support this resolution because I know that the wild life of this country is being exterminated rapidly.

Two or three years ago it was my privilege to take a trip to Alaska and the Bering Sea, and I want to relate to you what I think is one of the finest examples of the conservation of wild life that has ever been attempted anywhere in the United States or, for that matter, perhaps, in the world. You have all heard of the fur seal of Bering Sea. The fur seal is an animal of very peculiar habits. There are two small islands in Bering Sea—St. Paul and St. George—the only place these seals ever go on land. Perhaps you will remember also that a few years ago we had an argument with the Japanese sealers and the Canadian sealers. These men would stand off outside the 3-mile limit and catch these seals as they were approaching or departing from these islands.

The seals return to these islands each year in the month of May or June, leaving the islands sometime in August. After the mother seal gives birth to her young seal, she leaves the island at times to feed. Japanese and Canadian sealers would stand outside the 3-mile limit and catch the mother seal as she was feeding.

When these islands were discovered, there were some eight or nine million seals there, according to the best estimates; but as a result of the sealing activities of Americans and sealers of other nationalities, this herd was reduced to about 100,000 seals and would have been exterminated had not an agreement been entered into with these other foreign countries whereby this country does all the sealing there and pays to the Government of Japan and to the Government of Canada 15 percent of the net proceeds received from the sealing industry. The killing of the seals is under the direction of the Commissioner of Fisheries. By applying the principles of conservation this herd has been built up to about 2,000,000 and is increasing rapidly. The adoption of this resolution is a splendid conservation movement.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, there certainly is need for coordination between the several departments in the matter of protecting the wild life and game of the country.

I come from the State of Idaho, a State which contains the greatest area of game country left in the United States, where there is the heaviest percentage of wild life, big game, deer, beaver, and small game which needs protection from predatory animals. Only yesterday we went before the Director of the Budget pleading for an appropriation for protection of the game from destruction by predatory animals.

I desire to place in the RECORD a few statements from men living in and familiar with the big-game country of Idaho. We have in central Idaho one of the greatest big-game areas left in the United States. A hearing was called which had for its purpose support of a movement to open a road into this country. The facts as to the present status of the game in that country was brought out.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks by inserting at this point these statements to which I have referred.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, at a meeting held at Salmon City, Idaho, last fall Mr. Merritt, of Salmon City, introduced Mr. Harry Golicke, who has run the Salmon River since 1895, transporting supplies and machinery, and on one of his trips down the river he counted 364 deer in 1 day. Mr. Merritt then introduced Willard Rudd who lives on Big Creek in the heart of the game country. Mr. Rudd stated if a road were built it would protect the game, for at present, owing to the lowering of the bounty on cats and predatory animals, the game is gradually being killed off. Mr. Merritt then introduced Mr. William Wallace, owner of a ranch on Big Creek, 50 miles below Salmon, who has lived there for several years and who is a close observer of game. To the question propounded by Mr. Merritt, "Is there adequate protection for the game?" Mr. Wallace stated, "I think not; they have fallen off 75 percent in 3 years."

Let me say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that the wild life of this country is a real asset to the whole Nation.

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members speaking on the resolution today may have the privilege of revising and extending their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, the scope of this debate indicates not only the importance of this subject but also the importance of having a committee of the House to correlate the conservation activities of the Nation.

I am very familiar with the splendid work that has been done in Pennsylvania, and I agree with my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, when he says it is time for the Nation to follow the example of his State in taking steps to conserve our great natural resources before it is too late.

On Thursday I was invited to sit with the Senate Wild Life Committee at one of the largest-attended hearings I have seen in recent years. Over 400 representatives of game departments and conservation agencies of the various States were there. On the following day a delegation presented certain recommendations to the President.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL] wanted to know how this committee would fit in with the Senate Wild Life Committee and the President's special committee. It would be pertinent, therefore, for me to read to you the resolution that was adopted on Thursday at the hearing before the Senate Wild Life Committee. It is addressed to the Speaker of the House:

There is assembled in Washington today the largest conference of hunters and fishermen of a representative character that has ever assembled before a committee of Congress, so large, in fact, that it required three moves to secure a room sufficiently commodious to provide for their attendance.

They are representatives of the 5 great national organizations, representatives of the 7 outdoor magazines, representatives of farming organizations, representatives of the State game and fish commissions, representatives selected to speak for the Pacific coast, for the Atlantic coast, for the Gulf coast, for the Canadian border, and for the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys.

We have just received the announcement that the Rules Committee of your honorable body has made a favorable report on H.R. 173, to create a wild life conservation committee similar to that which has been so successfully functioning on the Senate side.

This is one of the most cheering messages we have had.

We want to congratulate the committee and recommend that the report of the Rules Committee be adopted.

May we in conclusion say that there are 13,000,000 men and women who pay to the States annually for hunting and fishing licenses over $12,000,000; that our outdoor bill connected with hunting and fishing amounts to $650,000,000; that hunting and fishing have more enthusiastic followers than baseball, golf, tennis, and other outdoor sports combined.

We wish to thank you for your consideration of this resolution, because we know this new special committee, cooperating with the committee on the Senate side, will permanently place conservation where it belongs in the hearts of our people, promoting their pleasure, their happiness, and their health.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DRIVER: Page 2, line 8, after the word "times", strike out the words "and places" and insert in lieu thereof the words "in the District of Columbia."

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the amendment and the resolution to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

HOUSE RESOLUTION 228

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Rules Committee I desire to call up House Resolution 228.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, authorized to inquire into and investigate the matter of appointments, conduct, proceedings, and acts of receivers, trustees, referees in bankruptcy, and receivers in equity causes for the conservation of assets within the jurisdiction of the United States district courts pursuant to House Resolution 145, shall report to the House of Representatives not later than June 30, 1934, in lieu of January 31, 1934, the date specified in such resolution.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I understand there is no opposition to this resolution and that the gentlemen on the other side do not desire any time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. We should like to have some time.

Mr. SABATH. I was under the impression that the gentleman on the other side did not want any time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I have a request from one gentleman who is in favor of the resolution but would like to talk about it.

Mr. KURTZ. If there is no opposition and if there is nothing to be said on the side of the majority, there is nothing to be said over here.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. This is just for the purpose of making a report. Your investigation is completed?

Mr. SABATH. No; it is not completed. There is something to be done in the way of additional investigation. This is for the purpose of giving the committee a little more time to prepare and finish their report, as well as to take some additional evidence.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. You will come in later and ask for additional money to continue the investigation?

Mr. SABATH. I think the committee will; yes.

Mr. SNELL. How much money has been spent already?

Mr. SABATH. I do not know.

Mr. McKEOWN. In connection with this investigation in Chicago we spent $1,500. We were allowed $2,000, and we have about exhausted the $2,000, but we have an enormous record.

Mr. SNELL. It will not take much more?

Mr. McKEOWN. It will take some more money. There is quite a bit of examination, but it can be done with a very small amount of money. We have investigators now making the investigation; then we will go to Chicago and take the testimony. There are three big insurance companies we have to look into. This involves insurance receiverships, as well as some other receiverships that have taken place there and which the people of Chicago and the bar are interested in.

Mr. WARREN. I think the gentleman should tell the House that he is going to ask for another $7,500 to complete his investigation.

Mr. SNELL. That is more than the original amount?

Mr. WARREN. That is correct.

Mr. McKEOWN. I can give you a full report of that when the proper time comes.

Mr. SNELL. What was the amount originally granted for the investigation?

Mr. McKEOWN. There was $5,000 granted to the committee. I was allowed $2,000 to make the investigation in Chicago. Out of that $2,000 we expended $1,500 which investigated 27 large receiverships in Chicago, besides the information that I have gathered from other sources in Chicago. This included an investigation of the acts of one judge. We did not think it was right to go beyond the amount allowed, although we think it is necessary to continue this investigation.

Mr. SNELL. There is more to it than the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] stated. He said this was to complete the report. The gentleman is going to ask for more money to complete your investigations?

Mr. McKEOWN. This is to complete the investigation.

Mr. SNELL. I think it is important to know that.

Mr. SABATH. I stated to the gentleman from New York when he asked whether this was merely for the purpose of making a final report, that such was not the case; that there was more work to be done by the committee.

Mr. SNELL. There is more work to be done than has already been performed and you are going to ask for more money?

Mr. SABATH. I do not know. I am not a member of the committee.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I say to the gentleman from New York that this is the situation, as I understand it: The last Congress directed the Committee on the Judiciary to make an investigation of equity and bankruptcy receiverships, and the House, out of the contingent fund, allocated $5,000 for the purpose of making that investigation. An investigation was made in New York with regard to this matter, and I assume the gentleman from New York is familiar with it.

About $2,000 was allocated to the subcommittee making the New York investigation and $2,000 allocated to the subcommittee making the Chicago investigation. There were some other rather small incidental expenses. This entire amount of money has not been expended. I believe that these two committees perhaps made as much disclosure and covered as much territory as any subcommittee of this House with the amount of money expended.

There are a number of other places making suggestions to the Committee on the Judiciary that the situation in their respective communities ought to be examined. The committee is of the opinion that Chicago is a more or less typical community, and that a completion of the investigation in Chicago would probably give to the House a rather clear picture of the whole procedure with regard to equity and bankruptcy receiverships, and that out of that investigation the House might be able to determine whether any additional legislation would be helpful in protecting the estates in equity and bankruptcy receiverships.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand it, you have your whole investigation well started? The statement was made to me that this did not amount to anything; that it is just simply to give the committee an opportunity to complete its report. But, on the other hand, we find out it is going to cost more money to complete it and to go along for the next 3 months than has been spent already. I think the House should have a complete picture of the whole matter at this time.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; and I am trying to give that.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], coming from Chicago, probably got the information he has with respect to the Chicago situation. The committee very much hopes that when the next resolution comes in, if the House should agree to give to the Committee on the Judiciary $7,500, even this amount of money will not be spent in the investigation; but in view of the importance to the country of the work that has been done and in view of the complaints that have come from all over the country with regard to what is happening in regard to receiverships, it does seem proper that while the matter is now being proceeded with the committee ought to be equipped with sufficient funds, economically, to complete the investigation deemed necessary.

Mr. SNELL. I am willing to take the statement of the gentleman from Texas along those lines, but it is entirely different from what has been brought out in the discussion here and what was originally reported to me. I think we ought to have the whole story and should know that we are starting and continuing a further investigation because the gentleman thinks it is necessary.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We are not going to spend one cent more than we are absolutely compelled to spend; but, as the gentleman from New York knows, there has been a good deal of complaint in the last few years about what is happening with reference to these estates and with reference to equity and bankruptcy receiverships.

Mr. SNELL. I know there has been a good deal of trouble along that line.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We are trying to do our best, as a result of this investigation, to see if some beneficial legislation cannot be enacted.

Mr. SNELL. And I hope the gentleman can continue the investigation with as careful expenditures as have been made so far.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We are going to do our best.

Mr. SABATH. They have been very careful, I can assure the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. If the gentleman is going to consume any time, we want a little time on this side.

Mr. SABATH. No; I am not going to use any further time.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SABATH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 25 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

APPRECIATION OF JOHN JAMES INGALLS

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Speaker, it is with some trepidation that I ask to consume this time, but on the seventy-third anniversary of the admission of Kansas into the Union of States, I deem it not inappropriate to call attention briefly to the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of the most commanding and dominant figure in Kansas history. John James Ingalls was born December 29, 1833, so on this Kansas day I want to speak of his brilliant and colorful career, to summons once more from the past the shadow of his colossal figure.

In his twenty-fifth year, just from Williams College and admitted to the bar, this aristocratic patrician from New England flung himself into the wilderness of Kansas, where destiny was so soon to embrace him. Kansas was yet a Territory in 1858 when he came to the bluffs overlooking the Missouri. At that time Kansas was a raging battleground where history was being written in a scarlet flood of violence. Kansas City, in the disguise of Westport Landing, was a sentinel on the border of a vast prairie sea. Bluegrass, that signal and symbol of civilization, which Ingalls immortalized in imperishable prose, had not yet invaded the valleys of the Kaw and the Marais des Cygnes. Kansas was a virgin parallelogram of unfettered civilization, knocking at the gates of the Union for admission to the sisterhood of States.

He came with that vanguard of State builders who preceded the later migration after the Civil War. He did not drift over those dusty, shadowy paths known as the Santa Fe and Oregon Trails, over which Anglo-Saxon civilization staggered out upon the great American desert to found an empire, the two most romantic and historic trails that ever mapped the frontiers of the earth. He did not come with those pioneers in that endless, white-crowned caravan that swept west after the Civil War. They came to break the virgin sod; he came to build a civilization and to adorn it with the ornaments of culture and refinement. They came with brawny arms to push the frontier back toward the setting sun; he came to hold high the torch of a statelier empire than that of commerce. They came to sow and reap; he came to coin a loftier mintage than that of money.

He had not been in the Territory a year when he was helping to write the Wyandotte Constitution, which is still the organic law of Kansas. Its lucid English and excellence of form attest his effort. He came to Kansas when the hatreds born of what was termed the "border ruffian warfare" were still white hot. It only smouldered when the Wyandotte Constitutional Convention convened in 1859. Ingalls belonged to that era of passion, and its bitterness colored many of his fiery utterances long thereafter. As a member of the other Chamber his withering sarcasm and cutting satire made him enemies as well as friends. Here in Washington for 2 decades he was the most colorful and interesting figure in the public life of the Capital.

In repartee, Ingalls was quick as an electric flash. In exchange of wit he never came out second. In satire he was without competition. In the rough-and-tumble fisticuff of debate and parliamentary combat he had no match in his time. The exchanges of wit in which he played a part are an imperishable portion of our parliamentary literature.

Ingalls became involved in a controversy with a Member from Delaware, who probably had invested in some early municipal bonds of Kansas which were of doubtful value. The Member delivered a scathing denunciation of Kansas. Ingalls then painted an earthly paradise of that "grassy quadrangle" known as Kansas, and, turning to the Member from Delaware, exclaimed: "And this from the gentleman whose State has three counties when the tide is out and two when it is in." [Laughter.]

In some argument with a Member from Pennsylvania the Member from the Keystone State made a rather vicious attack on Kansas and Kansas people, to which Ingalls retorted, "Pennsylvania has produced but two great men—Benjamin Franklin, of Massachusetts, and Albert Gallatin, of Switzerland." [Laughter.]

In 1890 Ingalls' political sun set amid the clouds of Populism, and in that celebrated campaign against Ingalls, Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Lease, the Amazon of American politics, was his bitterest assailant. Her tongue was quite as sharp as that of Ingalls' though it lacked the refinement and subtlety. She asked no quarter and gave none. So far as I know, Ingalls never referred to her personally. He was above all things a gentleman. Kansas never heard such bitter philippics as she hurled at Ingalls. Even after his defeat for the Senate in 1891, she did not cease to attack him. A newspaper correspondent mentioned it to Ingalls, and his reply was, "No one but a woman and an Indian ever scalp the dead." [Laughter.]

He engaged in a wordy battle with a Member from Indiana known as "the tall sycamore of the Wabash." In the war of words it was said that the Indianian, who was usually quite able to take care of himself, took the second prize. At any rate, Ingalls' old friend, Col. E. F. Ware, who wrote under the nom de plume of "Ironquill", sent Ingalls a telegram of congratulations which served also as a lucid and expressive description of the combat:

Lurid air,
Cyclone dense,
Wabash hair,
Hide on fence.

Senator Ingalls was not, as some judged him, a cynic. However, it might be said that he was not an unheeding optimist. He entertained grave doubts about the reformation and purification of our political system. In the latter part of his senatorial career he uttered that debate-provoking epigram:

The purification of politics is an iridescent dream. • • • The Decalogue and the Golden Rule have no place in a political campaign.

It was the sincere and deliberate judgment of a practical man in whose political career there was no breath of scandal and who was never afraid to state what he deemed a demonstrated truth.

Ingalls was poet, orator, essayist, and statesman. It has often been said that if Ingalls had devoted himself solely to literature he would have attracted the attention and received the homage of the whole world. As it is he has received the admiration of the English-speaking world for at least three of his superlative compositions: The inimitable prose poem, "Blue Grass"; his unsurpassed eulogies; and his incomparable sonnet, "Opportunity." Upon the rugged granite boulder which marks his last resting place is a bronze plaque bearing this epitaph, a part of a sentence from his masterpiece of prose:

When the fitful fever is ended, and the foolish wrangle of the market and forum is closed, grass heals over the scar which our descent into the bosom of the earth has made, and the carpet of the infant becomes the blanket of the dead.

In the limit of this brief and faltering appreciation I have space for only one paragraph of "Blue Grass", the gemlike, polished beauty of which gives a hint of its character:

Grass is the forgiveness of Nature—her constant benediction. Fields trampled with battle, saturated with blood, torn with the ruts of cannon, grow green again with grass, and carnage is forgotten. Streets abandoned by traffic become grass-grown like rural lanes, and are obliterated. Forests decay, harvests perish, flowers vanish, but grass is immortal. Beleaguered by the sullen hosts of winter, it withdraws into the impregnable fortress of its subterranean vitality, and emerges upon the first solicitation of spring. Sown by the winds, by wandering birds, propagated by the subtle horticulture of the elements which are its ministers and servants, it softens the rude outline of the world. Its tenacious fibers hold the earth in its place, and prevent its soluble components from washing into the wasting sea. It invades the solitude of deserts, climbs the inaccessible slopes and forbidding pinnacles of mountains, modifies climates, and determines the history, character, and destiny of nations. Unobtrusive and patient, it has immortal vigor and aggression. Banished from the thoroughfare and the field, it abides its time to return, and when vigilance is relaxed, or the dynasty has perished, it silently resumes the throne from which it has been expelled, but which it never abdicates. It bears no blazonry of bloom to charm the senses with fragrance or splendor, but its homely hue is more enchanting than the lily or the rose. It yields no fruit in earth or air, and yet should its harvest fail for a single year, famine would depopulate the world.

Shakespeare did everything better than anyone else—Shakespeare who opened wide the portals of the human mind and soul and invited all the earth for guest; Shakespeare who whispered into the vocabularies of the world the sweetest words that ever filtered through the hearts of men. Shakespeare did everything else better than anyone else, until Ingalls wrote "Opportunity." "Opportunity" is the master sonnet of the English tongue. We may not entirely agree with its seeming fatalistic philosophy, but the stately march of its majestic music sets all the orchestras of the soul to singing:

OPPORTUNITY

Master of human destinies am I!
Fame, love, and fortune on my footsteps wait.
Cities and fields I walk; I penetrate
Deserts and seas remote, and passing by
Hovel and mart and palace, soon or late
I knock unbidden once at every gate!
If sleeping, wake; if feasting, rise before
I turn away. It is the hour of fate,
And they who follow me reach every state
Mortals desire, and conquer every foe
Save death; but those who doubt or hestitate,
Condemned to failure, penury, and woe,
Seek me in vain and uselessly implore.
I answer not, and I return no more.

[Applause.]

APPOINTMENT OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to be present the rest of the afternoon and appoints the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] as Speaker pro tempore for today.

GOLD REVALUATION

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, this is the day I have long looked to, hoped for, prayed for, spoke for, and striven for, since the 26th day of February, 1923.

On that day the report of the secret bankers' meeting of May 18, 1920, as published in the Manufacturers' Record, of Baltimore, April 22, 1923, was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and by Senator Gooding, of Idaho, made a Senate document.

On that day the curtain was drawn and for the first time the world looked in upon the secret conclave of conspiring financiers and international bankers.

Few men today will realize the significance and grave import of the measure for the revaluation of gold passed here today to relieve the strain upon gold for money, the evil it is to remedy, the wrong it is to undo, the crushing burden it is to lift, the crime it is to expiate, and the want and suffering from which to relieve. It was the organized demand upon gold to increase the value of gold as basic money and thereby the value of money based on gold, and in turn to increase and multiply the value of bonds and war-debt claims, held by international financiers and bankers, which brought the fall of values, the price level, and the wage scale, the failure of earnings and income from industry, the destruction of the buying and consuming power of the people, and, finally and ultimately, the blight of this panic not only here upon our own defenseless people but upon the helpless people of other nations.

This panic or industrial depression is a part of a world-wide crisis brought under an organized plan and deliberately carried out with the object, purpose, and intent to multiply and pile high the burden of war debts upon the people of the world. The first and initial step to carry out this great financial conspiracy was ordered, taken, and directed from our own shores of America by our own manipulating bankers, using our own Federal Reserve System to force the change of money and the fall of values out upon the war-worn, weary nations and the helpless, defenseless people of all the nations of the world.

The international bankers and money lenders from all Europe assembled in America, either in person or by their agents, entered into a secret gentlemen's agreement to corner and monopolize the world's gold supply and by an organized concerted demand to increase and multiply the value of gold and thereby the bonds and claims in which paid. And following and as a part of the plot, a secret bankers' meeting was held on May 18, 1920, in Washington, D.C., in the very shadows of this Capitol, and behind closed doors and curtains a resolution was passed calling upon the Federal Reserve Board to contract and withdraw from circulation the money and credits of the country. Following the passage of this secret resolution the Federal Reserve Board, now a private banking octopus, in servient, groveling obedience entered upon a course of secret currency movements, raising high the discount rate and operating the open market facilities for the retirement of currency and credit.

This secret bankers' meeting held by the international financiers and bankers was the prelude and signal for a concerted criminal onslaught upon the welfare of the peaceful and defenseless, the confiding, unsuspecting people of the world. This secret concerted action was taken under a world-wide conspiracy to force down the commodity price level and to rear upon the ruins and debris of property and commodity values a so-called "international gold standard" for the pillage and plunder of the people of the earth. And following the contraction of money here, the fall of values and the price level, the volume and supply of money was contracted and values and the price level were made to fall in every World War country of the world.

It is with humiliation and bleeding pride to learn, realize, and know that the first and initial steps of this conspiracy were not only taken from the shores of our own land but taken by and through the means and the instrumentalities of our own money and financial system. In every step taken in this movement, organized and starting in our own country, under a secret gentlemen's agreement, can be seen the deft, crafty hand of an international gold conspiracy moving in precision and money-mad method, directing the execution of a deep laid plot, not only for the prostration and subjugation of our own helpless, unsuspecting people but of the peoples of the earth and the economic world. The precise nature and form of this agreement may never have been reduced to writing and may never be known to the outside world under which the unsuspecting nations were left writhing in panic or depression and were led to repeat in hopeless despair—"the cause of this panic is a mystery."

I quote here from a statement issued from the Royal Bank of Canada, commenting upon the world industrial crisis, and showing the time of its beginning:

> The deflation (contraction of money) in 1920–21 brought into sharp relief the problem of world finance, the control of the general price level.

This was the date of the secret bankers' meeting, the date of the rise of the discount rate, the date of the fall of values and the price level, the beginning date of our panic or depression and from which the world panic followed.

The British committee, appointed by the King and Exchequer of Finance and Industry to investigate and report upon the cause of the industrial depression in England, known as the McMillan report, states:

> Unfortunately on these two sets of abnormal difficulties there has supervened, starting in the United States, a business slump of more than normal type, though of quite unusual dimensions.

This great English committee, appointed to investigate and report upon industry and finance in England, investigated, found, and reported to His Majesty the King and Parliament that this panic began in America.

Under pretense of world currency reform, sound money and an honest dollar, the international financiers and bankers have increased, doubled, and multiplied the value of their war-debt holdings by multiplying the value of the money in which these bonds are stipulated to be paid. The devastating panic resulting here from the invasion and violation of our own money system has followed in the trail and wake of a like destruction and contraction of the currency and basic money in every nation of Europe and the world. Its progress can be followed and traced from the shores of our own America, step by step, leading out upon the earth like an advancing plague, scourge, or blight, each nation surrendering its power over money and yielding to the greedy demands of an insatiable money monopoly for the retirement and destruction of basic money and under which to corner gold and monopolize the world's supply of money.

From the piracy and vandalism of our own Federal Reserve money system, we read from the footprint traces of this world conspiring money power leaving the shores of our own land for the subjugation of foreign peoples, lurking in the cloak and guise of world currency reform and the mysteries of money and finance. We find its finger prints impressed by its strangle hold upon the throats of the people of every World War nation in withering panic or depression. Under this world financial conspiracy the destinies of the people of the world have been determined in secret conference abroad, first at Brussels in 1920, and following at Geneva in 1921, by grasping misers and Shylocks in money-mad avarice, gluttony, and greed. By this changed and perverted money system known as the international gold standard, the relentless pound of flesh was provided for and exacted in the bond, to be taken from the gasping, writhing bodies of the helpless, suffering humanity of the earth.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. GRAY. I suggest that the gentleman be patient until he can get the drift of my remarks, when he can probably propound his interrogatory more intelligently, both for his question and my answer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana declines to yield.

Mr. GRAY. The great American financiers, from the millions filched from the American people and from the untold millions made profiteering from the great World War, have bonded the governments of all Europe in private loans in bewildering sums. Under pretense of world currency reform, sound money, and an honest dollar, the international financiers and bankers have increased, doubled, and multiplied the value of their war debts and claims by multiplying the value of the money in which these bonds are paid. With dividends and interest called for and made payment in international exchange, in monopolized gold and money, the gold in payment of which has been flowing to America in great swollen streams and to the coffers of the international bankers, until almost one half of the gold of the world has come to these American money kings, while one fourth of the gold of the world has gone to France in payment of German reparations, until other countries are deprived of basic money and robbed of their gold for redemption and reserve, and until the fair name of America has been made synonymous and used as a byword for "Shylock" and "miser", until Captain Fecht, of the Army Air Service, says that the United States today is the most hated and despised nation upon the face of the earth; and until America has come to be looked upon as a grasping money changer, who would sacrifice peace and friendly relations, honor, and every grace of life for money profit and sordid gain; and until, if we further allow these manipulating financiers to parade under our fair name under the cloak of the Stars and Stripes and to hold themselves out before the world as representing the American people, we will have aroused and engendered the animosity, antagonism, and revenge of the people of the world against us, and all the armies and all the navies and all the aircraft we can build, organize, and recruit will not save us from invasion, from annihilation and destruction before the nations organized for retaliation and to avenge the pillage of their people. [Applause.]

Viscount Rothermere, famous British publisher and chief proprietor of the London Daily Mail and the London Evening News, on September 27, 1931, said:

> We were fools to force the pound up to the gold level 6 years ago. It benefited the bankers by restoring prestige to our currency and all the international money lending and the money dealings that go with it.

And the American people have been fools to allow money pirates and manipulating financiers to hold the dollar tide to monopolized gold for 12 long, trying, cruel years, crushing and holding down values and the price level, withholding earnings and income from industry, destroying the tax-, debt-, and interest-paying power and the buying and consuming power of the people. The American people have been fools to stand idly, by worshiping the brazen image of gold while industry has been prostrated and paralyzed, while home owners have been ejected and dispossessed, while banks and business have been forced into insolvency, and while debts have been multiplied upon the people until they have been forced into bankruptcy or to yield to foreclosure proceedings for relief.

The report of the English committee appointed to investigate finance and industry in reporting June 19, 1931, and heretofore quoted, states:

> This brings up to the question whether adherence to an "international standard" may involve the payment of too heavy a price in the shape of domestic instability. Many countries today and former times have found such continued adherence involves a greater strain than they can bear.

Since that report was made, June 19, 1931, England herself has found the strain of this international gold standard—doubling taxes and debt burdens upon the people, doubling the international war debt upon the world, destroying the tax- and debt-paying power, destroying the buying and consuming power of the peoples of the nations of the world—greater than the English people could bear, and England has been forced herself to go off the Black Friday gold standard to save her people from ruin and bankruptcy, to save her industries from utter annihilation.

One by one the great nations of the world, in all, 34 countries and governments, preceding and following in the lead of England, have found the strain of the international gold standard was greater than their burdened people could bear. And all have thrown off the yoke of this international gold monopoly to safeguard their people from the crushing burdens of taxes, debts, and World War bonds imposed by this perverted money standard. And the United States of America has been left standing out for years like a lone Casabianca clinging to a sinking, burning ship amid the flames of private insolvency and national bankruptcy guarding the brazen idol of gold. And finally the United States today, after suffering in distress for 12 long years, has been compelled to find, with other nations, that the strain of the international gold standard is too heavy for our own people to bear.

And calling a new administration in power, the one first preliminary step has been taken to lift from the staggering, reeling bodies of the people, the galling, crushing burdens of gold piled high and fastened upon them by the vandals of finance for profit and gain.

The horrors of the great World War fade away as trivial, insignificant, as compared with the want, suffering, and distress, and all the anguish and the heartaches brought on by this panic and paralysis of industry brought upon the people of the earth by this criminal money conspiracy of the organized world money power to satisfy the morbid cravings of men for money, gold, and sordid gain; and until the breaking of the sunlight and the glad hosannas and rejoicing of returning peace and civil life have been darkened by the blight of the panic and their gladdened voices hushed and drowned out by the cries, sobs, and moans of the famished, the destitute, and the dying; and until this money conspiracy with its beginning and inception in our own land has become a horror without a parallel, and calling for vengeance and punishment by the Almighty as a crime against civilization and the human race. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. GRAY. Yes.

Mr. FISH. I have been waiting very patiently to get the drift of the gentleman's argument without a great deal of enlightenment. Will the gentleman please answer this question? He refers to the war debt. Is it not a fact that the gold devaluation bill we have just passed has reduced the war debt by 40 percent.

Mr. GRAY. I thank the gentleman for his suggestion, and if I could be granted more time I would be glad to answer his question.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 5 minutes.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, the war debts have been multiplied three and four fold upon the nations of the world by this international gold standard. Germany has paid a great part of her war debt, and yet today she owes, measured in commodities, labor, and labor products, in which, and only in which, it can be paid, more than she owed before she had paid a single mark. You cannot collect the war debts under the international gold standard. The same reason that the farmers cannot pay their mortgages is the reason that the foreign nations cannot pay their war debts. We can foreclose against the farmers by calling out the police and militia to defend the sheriff at the sale and make them pay three and four times what they stipulated to pay, but we cannot foreclose against the nations of the world without war. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Is the gentleman in favor of canceling the war debts?

Mr. GRAY. I am not. [Applause.] I want every man to pay his debts—what he contracted to pay. But I do not want to call upon a man to pay four times what he agreed to pay. The farmer who borrowed $5,000, when he could have paid his mortgage with 3,500 bushels of corn, has since been called upon to give up over 9,000 bushels of corn to pay the mortgage. [Applause.] I do not want war. I want to restore the buying and consuming power of farm products and commodities so the farmers can pay and save them from bankruptcy and insolvency. I want to restore to the peoples of the world the debt-paying power of commodities, labor, and the products of labor, so they can pay every dollar that they agreed to pay, maintain our self-respect and friendly relations. It is the only way war debts can ever be paid. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRAY] has expired.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the body for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I am compelled to object. I intend to present a privileged resolution.

CONTESTED ELECTION—SANDERS AGAINST KEMP

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I call up a privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 231

Resolved, That there was no valid election for Representative in the House of Representatives of the Seventy-third Congress from the Sixth Congressional District of the State of Louisiana on the 5th day of December, or the 27th day of December, 1933, and that neither Mrs. Bolivar E. Kemp nor J. Y. Sanders, Jr., is entitled to a seat therein; and be it further.

Resolved, That the Speaker communicate to the Governor of the State of Louisiana that there is a vacancy in the representation of that State in the Sixth Congressional District thereof.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time to discuss this resolution may be extended to 1½ hours, one half the time to be controlled by myself and one half by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR]?

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOWELL. As I understand it, this contest is one to determine who, if anyone, is entitled to a seat. I note in the resolution there is a provision for notifying the Governor of the State relative to this contest. It occurs to me that this House has no power other than to determine the one question who, if anyone, is entitled to a seat. When that is determined, this House has performed its function and has passed upon that question, and I am raising that question because apparently there is something further in the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair rules that, following the decision of the House on the question of whether or not there is a vacancy, it is proper to notify the Governor of Louisiana of the action of the House.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR]?

There was no objection.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this matter which is presented to you now is a matter of great importance. Your committee has patiently investigated it and has come to a conclusion in respect to it, as evidenced in the report to this House, and has submitted a resolution, which was read by the Clerk.

You are conscious, gentlemen, of the importance of this matter in two aspects. First, it involves the right of a Member of this House who presents a prima facie case, through a certificate of the secretary of state, to take his seat in this Congress; and, second, it involves further the question of determining the legality of the elections, both of which were claimed to be legal by Mrs. Kemp and Mr. Sanders.

We are fortunate, Mr. Speaker, in having the facts about the two elections undisputed. We heard the contestants and heard the relative contentions made by both, and the committee came to the unanimous agreement that neither of the claimants was entitled to a seat in this House.

It might be well for me to state to you the undisputed facts with reference to this controversy. Mr. Bolivar Kemp died on the 19th day of June 1933, after the Congress adjourned last June. It was insisted, both by the representatives of Mr. Sanders and of Mrs. Kemp, that immediately after his death various parties in the State of Louisiana and in this congressional district, sought an opportunity to become a candidate to succeed Mr. Kemp. Many thousand citizens in that district petitioned the chief executive of that State to call immediately an election to fill this vacancy. For a while the chief executive of the State offered no excuse for not calling the special election. Afterward he announced he would call it soon, and at another time he announced that he did not know that an election was really necessary, and that he was waiting for some other eventuality to happen. At all events, no election was called, no election was attempted to be called by the chief executive of that State, until on the 27th day of November, more than 5 months after there became a vacancy in this body, and more than 5 months after the death of Mr. Kemp, and just prior to the time when the citizens of the district had threatened to hold a mass meeting to endeavor, under the laws of the State of Louisiana, to fill the vacancy. Then, Mr. Speaker, on the 27th day of November the chief executive of that State issued a proclamation, entrusted it to the executive committee of the Sixth District, and that committee, outside of the district, in the city of New Orleans, called an election pursuant to this proclamation of the Governor, or at least announced that there would be an election, and undertook to name a candidate to be voted on at that election.

That election was called to be had on the 5th day of December, just 7 days after the proclamation was handed by the Chief Executive of Louisiana to the district committee, which met in New Orleans, outside of the district. That election, pursuant to that proclamation, was held on the 5th of December, and more than 5,000 people participated in the election. Five thousand or more of those votes were cast for Mrs. Kemp. On the 28th of November, 1 day after the meeting of the district executive committee which nominated Mrs. Kemp, the citizens' mass meeting which had been called met in the district and undertook to fix a day for an election, and did fix a day for the election. They fixed it at 30 days thereafter, or on the 27th day of December, and at that election more than 15,000 votes were cast, and about 15,000 votes were cast for Mr. Sanders.

The question which the committee had to decide was whether there was any legal authority for either of these elections.

As you know, the Constitution of the United States vests in Congress the power to designate the number of Representatives each State shall have in the Congress of the United States, but vests in the States themselves the authority to determine the manner, the time, and the place of the election of these Representatives. The Constitution reserves to Congress, however, the right to change the rules and regulations made by the States in respect to the election of its Members. The Constitution of the United States further provides that where there is a vacancy in the office of Representative in Congress it shall be the duty of the chief executive of the State where the vacancy occurs to call an election, and pursuant to the laws of the State to fill the vacancy.

Your committee is of opinion that there are just two statutes in the State of Louisiana involved in the determination of the legality of Mrs. Kemp's nomination and election.

Section 2 of the election law of Louisiana provides for notice to be given by the Governor when a general election is to be held, and this notice must be given at least 30 days before the election is held. The same election law provides that there shall be supervisors of election and that the supervisors themselves shall give at least 15 days' notice of a general election.

Section 6 of the election law of Louisiana provides that where a vacancy in the office of Representative in Congress occurs it shall be the duty of the Governor to call an election according to law to fill the vacancy. So, to repeat, the Constitution of the United States provides that the Governor shall call an election to fill the vacancy in the office of Representative in Congress, and the statute, the mandate, of the State of Louisiana provides that where there is such a vacancy the Governor must issue his proclamation and call an election according to law to fill the vacancy.

Section 43 of the election law provides that all nominations of political parties shall be made as provided in the primary law of the State of Louisiana; and so the Governor, armed with the authority vested in him by the Constitution of the United States and directed by the statutes of his State, was required to fill this vacancy and to fill it according to the laws of his State.

I may say in passing that the Constitution reserved to the States the right to elect Representatives in Congress in the manner provided by the laws of the State, but the Constitution did not take from Congress entirely the right to change rules and regulations which may be made by the States in respect to the election of Representatives in Congress.

The primary election law of the State of Louisiana provides that all nominations for candidate for Representative in Congress shall be made by a direct primary election. The law is explicit; it does not equivocate. It goes further and states that any other method shall be illegal.

I call attention to this feature of the Louisiana law, Mr. Speaker: The rights of the people of Louisiana to think about an election and to determine whom they shall vote for as their candidate were well safeguarded in another section of the primary law of that State which provides that a district committee, a committee which has the function of calling the primary election to nominate candidates for the office of Representative in Congress to be voted for in the general election, shall give at least 9 weeks' notice of that election to the people of the State. I think the framers of this law realized that the primary determined clearly who should represent the State of Louisiana in the Congress of the United States and that the general election was perfunctory in that it merely confirmed what had been done at the primary; so the legislature in passing this primary law made it imperative that when a candidate was to be selected at a primary the district committee having the jurisdiction to call the primary must give at least 9 weeks' notice of the intention to hold a primary for a general election.

The law provided further that when a special election—and I call particular attention to this provision of the primary law of Louisiana—that in the case of a vacancy in the office of Representative in Congress from the State of Louisiana and where a special election is held to fill the vacancy the district committee shall fix the date at which a primary election shall be held to nominate candidates, which date shall not be less than 10 days after the election shall have been ordered. In other words, the law contemplates that a sufficient notice—a reasonable notice, I take it—shall be given both in selecting a candidate at the primary and in electing a candidate at the general election. The statute itself states that 5 weeks is a reasonable notice; but when it comes to the question of selecting a candidate to fill a vacancy under the primary law of the State of Louisiana, it was provided that the primary must be held not less than 10 days after the election was called by the party who had the right to call it; of course, much more time could be given.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question at this point?

Mr. KERR. I yield.

Mr. COX. Is there not a provision in the Louisiana law with regard to receiving a nomination or winning a nomination other than by a primary election; and, if so, then what was there in the nomination which was given by the executive committee that partakes of the nature of legal fraud; and how was it so connected with the general election as to make it a part thereof?

Mr. KERR. That question is raised, and I shall discuss it later. The provision to which the gentleman refers is found in section 31 of the primary law, and I shall discuss it in just a minute.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Your committee was impelled to conclude from undisputed facts that there had to be a primary nomination for a candidate to succeed Mr. Kemp. The statute provided that any other nomination was illegal. The election was called to fill a vacancy. The primary law states that notice had to be given. The people must be given notice and the district executive committee must be given at least 10 days' notice of that election.

In the case before us there was no such notice given. This executive committee met in the city of New Orleans, declared that the election must be held through the proclamation of the Governor, and undertook to hold it in 7 days, and also undertook to name a candidate to be voted for at that election.

Mr. COX. Did the Governor, in his proclamation, fix the date at which the election should be held?

Mr. KERR. No, sir; he did not. The statute itself fixed the date. The statute said that the date shall not be less than 10 days after the notice has been issued by the Governor. The Governor should have given reasonable notice of this special election, and that notice should have allowed the district committee to call a primary to be held in not less than 10 days after this notice in order that the people of the district could pass upon and select a nominee in that district.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KERR. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Was the action of your committee unanimous?

Mr. KERR. Yes; it was.

Mr. COX. Is the language of the statute mandatory that 10 days' notice "shall" be given?

Mr. KERR. If the gentleman asks me personally, I say it was not directory. It says, "shall." It used the expression "shall." When you consider the importance of selecting a candidate in a State of this kind, where there is no contest except in the primary, I think the spirit of the law was that it was mandatory and that the people of the district should pass on whom they wanted for their candidate.

The contention of Mrs. Kemp with respect to this election was that this committee had a right under certain eventualities to name her. The committee did not agree with her. There were certain exceptions in section 31 of primary law which your committee did not think covered the contention of Mrs. Kemp where a nomination had been held and the nominee should die, then the committee might name a candidate. If the nominee had died within a few days of the election, the committee would have the right to name the candidate. There were two other situations which section 31 would take care of. One was where no one filed to be nominated the committee could name somebody and tender the nomination. The other exception was to cover an eventuality of this kind where there was only one man announced as a candidate. Then the committee would have the right to name a candidate; in other words, it was imperative. It was mandatory on the part of the Governor to call this election so that the people could have the opportunity of selecting their candidate.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KERR. I yield myself an additional 3 minutes.

Mr. COX. If an election had been ordered and no primary had been held, or if a primary had been held and no nominee offered and the whole matter had gone by default, then do I understand that the gentleman concedes this district committee would have had the right to have supplied a nominee in the general election?

Mr. KERR. I think that is what section 31 was intended to safeguard.

If it was possible for the chief executive of the State to violate the laws of that State and not comply with them, then it would be possible for him to abort and make null the primary laws which provide for the manner in which candidates should be elected, because all he would have to do would be to simply protract the giving of notice and wait until it was too late to name a byprimary candidate; then the machinery that might be in control of some faction in the State could name whomever they pleased, and this would have the effect of practically aborting and nullifying, if you please, the election laws of the State of Louisiana insofar as giving the people of the State an opportunity to name their candidate.

Mr. COX. Could the committee in this instance have fixed a later date for the holding of the election?

Mr. KERR. I do not know that it makes any difference whether the committee could have fixed a later date or not. The point is that the chief executive—the Governor—by waiting and not giving the voters of the district a chance to elect a candidate, made it impossible for them to hold a primary.

Mr. COX. Does not that meet the case that the gentleman has referred to as an exception; that is, if the election was called at a time that made impossible the holding of a primary election, then it was within the province of the committee to make the nomination itself?

Mr. KERR. No. The committee had no right under the law to participate in any kind of action which deprived the people of the State of Louisiana of nominating a candidate.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KERR. I yield myself an additional minute.

As to the election of Mr. Sanders and as to the legality of Mr. Sanders' election, the committee was unanimous in its opinion that the attempted election was a nullity; that there was no machinery provided for such election that his friends participated in in an endeavor to make him a Member of this Congress. The Members of this House are familiar with the fact that there must be some legal machinery in order to hold an election. In this case there was no machinery at all. The voters and citizens had a right to meet, but unfortunately the legislature had not provided any way for their holding an election. There was no election machinery provided. It was the opinion of the committee that Mr. Sanders was not legally elected.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD a radio address of my colleague, Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there any objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

Dr. POPE. Standing almost within the shadow of the National Capitol, here in Washington, my mind races far to the Southwest—nearly 2,000 miles—out there under the friendly stars where lies the State of Oklahoma, the State we love, the people we love. And to the thousands of Oklahomans listening to my voice at this moment I bring a message of joy—for tonight we present another outstanding character, another Member of the National Congress, a man chosen by the people, another patriot who cannot be influenced by star-chamber sessions, and who cannot be cowed by the dirty and insinuating threats of the well-fed bureaucrat and holders of high-salaried jobs at the expense of the Government while old people are going hungry. Ladies and gentlemen of America, I present to you now that clean and courageous young statesman, our Congressman at large from Oklahoma, the Honorable WILL ROGERS.

ADDRESS OF HON. WILL ROGERS OF OKLAHOMA

Mr. ROGERS. Thank you, Dr. Pope. Good evening, my fellow Americans. Today a vital question of national legislation, involving a great principle of public welfare and social righteousness, has taken hold and is thrusting the healthy roots of its just cause deep into the consciousness of our national life. Every day manifests a growing sentiment in the congressional atmosphere of Capitol Hill favoring this important reform. Congressmen and Senators are freely discussing this vital question. The President and the first lady, Mrs. Roosevelt, have on previous occasions expressed their attitude in terms of approbation. I refer to the question of Federal old-age pension legislation. It is a problem that has engrossed the acute attention of not only those upon whom it would confer immediate and direct benefits but which has engaged the minute inspection of outstanding economists, students of political science, and experts in matters of taxation. Old-age pension reform on a Nation-wide basis, with the Federal Government in the role of the great provider, is actually becoming a topic of universal discussion and meeting with national favor.

Practically every recognized and leading country of the world has consented to its humane social precepts and has adopted this formula for old-age security. As a precursor of contentment to that charming and vital element of aged people, its precepts are founded on principles of the highest order. As a solution to one of the greatest economic problems that ever inspired counsel with the profound minds of this Nation, along the lines of social welfare and economic feasibility, this proposal of old-age pensions, on a national basis, knows no peer. I sorrowfully allude to the present awkward, haphazard, insufficient method of taking care of the old people of America. It is truly tragic. These people who have passed the meridian of life, who have really given their all, poor though it may have been in some instance, by the present system are scuffed about in makeshift fashion, exposed to the heartless circumstance and cruel poverty of the most infamous institution in America, the poorhouse. Some of these aged people are victims of our fallible and indefensible economic system. Many of them once owned considerable accumulation of worldly goods. A great number of them have seen their savings swept away overnight as a result of ill-founded trust and abiding faith in our system of fraudulent banking, in manipulated insurance companies, and by exploited building and loan associations. They are due something more than dependency upon the local community, an overburdened, overtaxed relative, or the squalid disgracefulness of the poorhouse.

Until recent months, the old people of America have truly been the forgotten men. They have surely been a neglected and forgotten people. This fact has been indelibly established by the past 4 years of economic hardship, chaotic depression, personal suffering, and rancorous unemployment. We have come to a point of realization that something must be done to withdraw this burden of old-age dependency from the local community, the already overtaxed responsibilities of relatives, and the nauseating frailty of the poorhouse. We have come to realize the pressing need for a plan to sufficiently provide for the comfort, the physical relief, and the mental surcease of our old people.

Predicated upon that pressing national necessity, one of my colleagues, the Honorable WESLEY E. DISNEY, who represents the First Congressional District of Oklahoma in the National Congress, has drafted and introduced in the House of Representatives House bill 7019, which provides old-age compensation to citizens of the United States. This bill is approved and sponsored by the National Old-Age Pension Association, of which Dr. J. E. Pope, of Tulsa, Okla., is president. The organization maintains offices in Washington, and under the personal direction of Dr. Pope is conducting a campaign in behalf of this legislation. I wish to briefly discuss the major provision of this program. It provides that every person who has reached the age of 65, who has been a citizen of the United States for a period of 20 consecutive years, and who does not have an annual income above $360 shall receive from the Federal Government for the remainder of his life the sum of $30 per month. If the pensioner has other income, then the amount of the pension, plus the annual income, shall not exceed a total of $360 per year. This bill also provides that at the death of the pensioner any accumulated estate shall become the property of the United States Government. It further provides that no person shall be paid a pension who draws compensation, salary, or remuneration for labor or work in any position of competitive earning. Agriculture shall not be deemed competitive earning where the total land cultivated does not exceed 5 acres and where none of the products grown on said acreage are sold, traded, or bartered.

The measure proposes old-age pensions without necessitating additional taxation hardship on the taxpaying American public. It provides that one half of 1 percent of all salaries of people between the ages of 21 and 45, inclusive, shall be deposited with the Postal Savings Division of the Postal Department. This fund will be known as the "old-age pension fund", and will go to pay the $30-per-month pension to those deserving this relief.

The provisions of the old-age pension act shall be administered by a director of pensions, who shall be appointed by the President of the United States. The director of pensions shall be empowered to set up the necessary machinery and to formulate the necessary organization with which to carry out the provisions of this measure.

A special board is provided that makes it possible, in the event the fund becomes too great for the demand, to scale down the amount of the percent of the salary tax on the people between the ages of 21 and 45.

No person shall receive benefits from enactment of this legislation who, within 5 years previous to making application for Federal compensation, deprived himself directly or indirectly of any property for the purpose of qualifying for benefits under this act. No person shall be allowed to draw a pension who is an inmate of an insane asylum, of a charitable institution, or who is under penal sentence in any jail or prison.

Embodied in this far-reaching humane plan of national old-age pensions is a schedule that will provide security for the aged and at the same time will add no hardship to the taxpaying public. It is another way to spread the wealth of this Nation. It is an open road to happiness and contentment in old age, whereas today old age is a nightmare and a dreaded plight to thousands who are unable to care for themselves.

As an example of the extreme anxiety, discomfort, poverty-stricken circumstance suffered by these lonely and forgotten people, I wish to indulge your attention to excerpts from a recent letter received from one for whom the Disney measure proposes relief. I quote from the letter: "Here I sit in a lonesome shack like a million more poor old folk. I can get no job. I wonder where my next food will come from. I am saddened with our plight and I pray to God that Congress will remember. We have no Federal relief, and many times we have actually gone without food. Will you direct your energy toward some method of relief for those of us who are hungry and cold and who are unable to provide for ourselves?" Fellow Americans, this is a dramatic plea. What will be our response?

We revel in the supposition that we are endowed in America with a democratic form of government. We are prone to enjoy in our public addresses, forays back to those inspiring and historic events that gave birth to the Declaration of Independence and to that great manifesto, the Constitution of the United States. We swell with joy when we direct attention to America as a land of opportunity, where the Stars and Stripes proclaim that liberty and democracy shall never die, where resides that noble heritage of middle-class Americans, the greatest human element known to man. Rich with lofty purpose, these represent our most cherished traditions. But, now, the picture is not so promising and yet the future leavens with more encouragement. Looking back 100 years we see that with the rise of Andrew Jackson, that proud, fiery, and illustrious statesman, came the rise of the common man; universal suffrage and democracy; the people taking charge of the Government. Today, with the inception of 1934, led by Franklin D. Roosevelt, we have the rescue of the forgotten man; progress and security; the Government taking charge of the people. Under the esteemed leadership of our beloved President, though he has served only a few short months, many infamous practices have been checkmated. But, fellow Americans, the program has just begun—a great harvest lies in the offing.

America, for several decades, has steadily traveled the ill-fated highway that leads to the station of irreconcilable contradiction, economic autocracy, and political democracy. We have been rapidly resolving our society to one of the extremely rich and the extremely poor, master and servant, owner and serf. We have been approaching an oligarchy where those who owned the productive wealth of the Nation, dominated the Government. America has been money-mad. Sympathy, understanding, and personal interest in our fellow men has been the exception instead of the rule. During these money-glutted years we tried, each to go his own way alone. The past years of depression have served to impress upon our consciousness that these many years of greed and money lust have ended with a terrible lesson: That wealth evaporates and leaves men stark and with naked hearts. It is for us to see that this terrible rebuke has not been in vain. It is for us to see that we rebuild the fallen structure on the rock of brotherhood. The severe economic stress that we have experienced has called upon us for all the fortitude, strength, and sympathy that we could muster. Out of the wreckage now, we see that we can only help ourselves by helping others. Out of this period of social readjustment we can rise triumphant. But we must remember our forgotten people.

Supplementing the program initiated by our beloved Roosevelt, we can and must enact Federal legislation providing pensions for the aged, thus solving with one sweeping stroke myriad social and economic problems. We can and will build a stronger America; more virile citizenry, and a sounder civilization, when, out of the chaotic past comes the realization that it is not only a duty but a privilege to be our brother's keeper.

CONTESTED ELECTION—SANDER AGAINST KEMP

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

As a minority member of this committee I had a great deal of difficulty in joining with the committee in this report. I am not an attorney, for which I am rather glad, because sometimes I think I can render a more impartial judgment. We all know that if you have a case at law and hire a good lawyer the other side has no trouble in hiring a lawyer who is just as active and who is apparently just as sincere in his belief as to the rights involved. There is no trouble in getting a two-party lawsuit started at any time.

Having myself been chairman of this committee and being intensely in earnest on the subject of what we do as a precedent, I listened very carefully for several days to the testimony offered and finally yielded to what was probably the better judgment of the attorneys, especially the very able attorney on the minority side. But this matter has been worrying me a good deal, and I am very glad that the House thinks it wise to discuss it at this time and to demand a little information thereon. I read a good deal about the State of Louisiana and begged the committee to have certain people from that State brought before our committee in order that I might cross-question them and pry into their minds to see if I could find a proper motive.

There was the question of prima facie evidence and the question of having a party set aside, where no fraud on the part of the party involved had been proven.

If that had been the sole question, I would have stuck it out for a long time, but, as the committee looked at it, two questions had to be determined simultaneously; that is, both the ultimate right and the prima facie right. After having gone into the question of the ultimate right, of course, I was a good fellow and went along with the committee, and I am in that peculiar position today. However, I enjoy the idea that you desire to know all the facts and I should like to ask you to explore into them with me.

Could I not be allowed to assume that the Governor of Louisiana is honest, not having proven him otherwise; that he had a decent motive until proven otherwise? I should like to have looked him in the eye and asked him questions so that I might determine in my own mind whether he was honest or otherwise in the matter. Must I depend upon the newspapers to determine the question of motive?

It is the duty of the Governor to call a special election, but often Governors do not do this. Only by accident did my Governor call the special election that sent me here, and I would not have complained if he had thought that the expense was too great or the necessity not sufficient. I would not have complained about that, but even though the Constitution states that it is their duty, Governors often do not hasten to call special elections, and this Governor states that he said:

> We will call a special election when we have the necessity for another election. Our parishes are so poor that many of them should not be forced to pay the expenses of this particular election.

Was he honest? Was he sincere? I do not know.

I looked into the primary law of the State of Louisiana and I imagine it was carefully drawn. The attorney general of the State of Louisiana came here and said that the Governor acted wholly upon his advice. The attorney general appeared like an honest man. He assumed the responsibility, but the members of the committee did not question him very much, to my great surprise. There was an opportunity to find out whether there was any intention to defraud, but they let him go, and I hoped the members of the congressional delegation from the State of Louisiana would come before the committee. I suggested that they be invited. Hot potato! They did not want to get into it. I do not know that I blame them. [Laughter.] It would have been informative for the gentleman from Massachusetts to learn a little more about how they carry on their elections in the State of Louisiana.

Mr. SANDLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. SANDLIN. I may state for myself that I had no hesitancy about appearing before that committee or any other committee to let them know how I stood on any question, but the committee announced that they wanted to decide this question purely on legal grounds and that they did not want any politics injected into the matter. It is difficult at this time for anyone from the State of Louisiana, be he a Representative or a private citizen, to discuss any matter without discussing the political situation in Louisiana. We will discuss that, I will say to my friend, at another time and in another forum.

Mr. GIFFORD. I was reminded, day in and day out at the hearing, that this is a legal question. I must not question whether intention to defraud was there or not, and yet the papers are full of these things and it would not have been a bad idea to find out something about them.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. DIES. Is the gentleman for or against the report?

Mr. GIFFORD. I am with the report, but does not the gentleman want to know how the matter was carried on and would not the gentleman like to have my comments about it?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. With my unwillingness, which I expressed plainly, I finally conformed to the majority report, not thinking it would come upon the floor; but being of that spineless minority over here that you hear about, I offer myself as an exhibit. [Laughter.]

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GIFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. In other words, the gentleman thought the judgment of the committee was better than his own judgment?

Mr. GIFFORD. Absolutely. It was like being on a jury with a lack of evidence, and I kept saying that I did not have enough evidence and that I wished to have more. It looked bad enough, but in the absence of people who were responsible I could not help it.

Now, here is section 31, carefully drawn by the lawyers of the State of Louisiana, distinctly conveying an idea.

I would like to read this because it is very important:

Or in any other event wherein the party shall have no nominee selected, under the provisions of this act, the committee calling the primary—

What this means is the committee having power to call the primary. It does not mean the committee that had called the primary, at all. Some committee had to have the power and if the Governor saw fit to call an election within 5 days, when they could not call a primary, it has to be assumed that somebody in the State of Louisiana could have a party candidate. This is surely the intent of the law of the State of Louisiana.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. COX. In the opinion of the gentleman was that election a legal election?

Mr. GIFFORD. Well, Mr. Speaker, under the reading of this law I should have to say, probably not. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. Then what circumstances surrounding the holding of the election does the gentleman offer as the reason for its illegality?

Mr. GIFFORD. My objection is that when an outside faction threatened that it would call a mass meeting of the citizens and hold an election on a certain date—which they did and it was held within less than 30 days—then the Governor said, "All right; if you threaten me with that, I will do my duty and I will call upon my attorney general and if he says I can beat you to it, I will call one as early as December 7."

Mind you, after January 1 there are no voters in Louisiana. Everyone has to be registered again and therefore they have got to hold the election before January 1.

Mr. COX. Exactly; and was not that offered as the reason for calling the election at the particular time at which it was held?

Mr. GIFFORD. Both parties had made requests to call it before that.

Mr. COX. Was there any evidence offered before your committee to the effect that another elector of the district wanted to become a candidate for election?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes. Mrs. Kemp was a popular candidate. She had a number of signatures asking her to run. It looked as if the committee in filling the vacancy selected the candidate the people wanted, but they would not bring in any evidence to show that there were other candidates that the people wanted or not.

Mr. COX. The committee in giving Mrs. Kemp the advantage did not deny the right to any one else to participate.

Mr. GIFFORD. They claimed the voters in Louisiana had the right to write the name on the ballot. In my State there have been some wonderful victories by writing in names on the ballot. A mayor of Boston, who served a time in this House, was defeated, by stickers placed upon the ballot, by Mr. Tague. But here in Louisiana they say that a man has got to walk up and be able to write. If he is not able to write, he may have someone assist him do so, and his assistant may tell him how to vote as well.

Mr. COX. In the gentleman's opinion, did the action of the committee in nominating Mrs. Kemp as a candidate operate as a nomination from the Democratic Party?

Mr. GIFFORD. I think so. From what evidence we had before our committee, Mrs. Kemp was the one that the people wanted. She was not tainted with fraud. That is what worries me; it is unfair to Mrs. Kemp.

Mr. COX. If the action of the committee was equivalent to a legal nomination, and the result was that Mrs. Kemp's name was put on the ticket at the special election and it was not tainted with fraud, how does the gentleman support a resolution saying that there was no election?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, there was other evidence. There was evidence of the conditions there. There was the investigation by another body; but I do feel badly that this House on the first day did not seat Mrs. Kemp. It should have done so on the prima facie case.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. House Resolution 202 provides that the question of prima facie as well as the final right of Mrs. Kemp and Mr. Sanders shall be referred to the committee. May I ask if any determination of the prima facie right of either individual had been determined by this committee?

Mr. GIFFORD. Read the report and the gentleman will see. We had to decide both questions simultaneously. If we had taken up that question, never would I have given in an inch to her prima facie right to a seat, but I had to go through several days of hearing, and with all the evidence before us it appeared that there was no proper election held. Then I cheerfully acquiesced in the decision. I am glad that some of this is disclosed. It is very interesting. It is interesting to me. I should have liked to have the delegation say what they thought. I should like to have had the members of that committee who filled that vacancy before us, and above all I should like to have had the Governor there to hear what he had to say about it.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DEAR].

Mr. DEAR. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I rise to ask the Members of this House to support the resolution which the Committee on Elections has reported by unanimous vote. The matter that now confronts us for decision involves no personalities nor any of the factional differences which unfortunately exist in the State of Louisiana. It is true that this contest is a result of those political conditions in Louisiana, but it makes little difference with this body whether or not either of the contesting parties is successful, but otherwise the decision which we arrive at today is of the greatest importance. This is a judicial question involving both facts and law, and the decision of this House will be a precedent for its future guidance. Before discussing the law, I shall briefly review the salient facts disclosed by the hearing before the committee.

Hon. Bolivar E. Kemp died on June 19, 1933. Shortly thereafter five candidates appeared seeking the nomination to fill the unexpired term for the Sixth Congressional District of Louisiana, which Mr. Kemp had represented. It had always been the custom in Louisiana, as well as elsewhere, to immediately take steps to fill such a vacancy because of its importance not only to the citizens of the district but to the State at large. Early action by the Governor to call an election was confidently expected. However, in this instance the Governor would not call an election, though he was requested to do so by the citizens, by the press, and by the candidates, including the present contestants. All wanted an election, except the Governor, who remained as silent as the tomb, and no information could be had as to what his intentions were. Finally, one of the candidates, Mr. Whitman, sought by legal process to force the Governor to call an election, but without avail, as the court had no authority or jurisdiction in such matters. The agitation for an election was great, and by September 1 it had developed into a popular clamor. On September 15 the Associated Press carried the information that it was the intention of the Governor to call such an election. Yet it was never called. As nothing was being done and, the continued inactivity of the Governor clearly indicated it was not his intention to give the people of the district a Congressman, the people themselves selected a committee to interview the Governor, at which time the committee, headed by former United States Senator Edward J. Gay, presented a petition signed by more than 10,000 voters of the district urging that an election be called. This petition was respectfully presented on November 14 and requested an answer from the Governor by November 18 as to what his intentions were. This was necessary because of the fact that the time was getting short in which to hold an election in order to give the district representation in the Congress which would meet on January 3, 1934.

November 18 passed and the Governor made no reply of any kind. On November 20 the committee met and, acting under the law, called a mass meeting of citizens to assemble in the city of Baton Rouge on November 28 to take some action in the matter. On November 24 the Governor gave out a long interview, in which he stated unequivocably that he would not call an election, and, in giving reasons for such action, he said, in part:

> I intend to call an election in the Sixth District and to fill vacancies in other offices in the State when it will be of any benefit to the people or when it may be convenient. Just now the newspapers are busy telling us that the President and his special boards are running the country, and we have less than no use for a Congress. Why are they clamoring for another Congressman so hard if that is true?
>
> There can be nothing so very urgent for another Member of Congress from Louisiana to serve just a few months, when the present Congress is a majority over 100 Democratic. The regular congressional election for them all will occur in the coming summer.

The citizens of the district concluded that after 5 months' deliberation the Governor had come to the solemn and definite conclusion to which he had given utterance, and they prepared to assemble on the 28th and to proceed to call an election. However, a surprise came on the 27th. On that day certain members of the Democratic Congressional Executive Committee who were political friends of the Governor met outside of the congressional district in the city of New Orleans, obviously by a preconceived plan. To the members not friendly to the scheme of things a telegram was sent at 11 o'clock on the morning of the 27th, stating that the committee would meet that afternoon at 4 o'clock in New Orleans. Of course, it was not possible for those members to attend, because of the fact that they lived a long distance from the city. At that meeting a proclamation of the Governor calling a general election for December 5, 7 days hence, was read for the first time. When, where, and how this proclamation was prepared has not yet become known.

At the committee meeting it was decided that it was impossible to call a primary election within the 7 days, and contrary to and in violation of the election laws of the State, the committee took upon itself a right to place the name of the Democratic nominee upon the ticket to be used in the general election which the Governor had called. It developed that even the tickets had already been printed, and during the following night and day they were distributed, and the public press on the 28th carried the Governor's proclamation.

Mr. MONTET. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEAR. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. MONTET. The gentleman stated that on the night of the 27th the tickets were distributed in the district. Will the gentleman tell us if the name of Mrs. Kemp was printed on those tickets as the Democratic nominee?

Mr. DEAR. Oh, yes. That was the whole purpose of the meeting. This committee, for the first time in the history of Louisiana, placed on the ticket a Democratic nominee to be voted upon in the general election without first having called a Democratic primary. This was contrary to the law, in violation of the law, and contrary to a custom the people of Louisiana have followed throughout its history. That ticket with that name upon it was distributed.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEAR. I yield.

Mr. TARVER. Was any evidence ever developed as to when those tickets were printed; whether before action had by the Democratic committee, or afterwards?

Mr. DEAR. There was some evidence, I understand, in a civil suit in Louisiana, stating that the tickets had been previously printed with the name left blank, and the printer filled in the form and rushed them out. They knew there would be an injunction to stop this, and in order to circumvent the court and the law they had the tickets already printed and when the injunction was issued they said, "We are sorry, but you have enjoined us from doing something we have already done."

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEAR. I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I take it the gentleman will discuss section 31 and the language which reads as follows: "or in any other event wherein the party shall have no nominee selected under the provisions of this act."

Mr. DEAR. With pleasure.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEAR. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. What was the statutory provision as to the time the Governor was required to give for this election? Is there any time requirement for the holding of an election in Louisiana, and if so, what is it?

Mr. DEAR. I will answer the gentleman from Mississippi first and then I will answer the gentleman from Wisconsin. The general election law provides two things——

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am talking about special elections, now.

Mr. DEAR. It provides for two kinds of general elections; one, the fixed general election and the special general election. The statute provides that in calling a general election the Governor must give at least 30 days' notice. That was given to you as the law by the learned chairman of the committee.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I do not so understand, and that is not in the report, that there must be 30 days' notice given of a special election.

Mr. DEAR. It says he shall give notice "according to law", and the only law is the general election law which says not less than 30 days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DEAR] has expired.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. DEAR. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. The gentleman, of course, concedes that there is a provision in the law for the executive committee making a nomination, is there not, where there has been no primary?

Mr. DEAR. No.

Mr. COX. Either where there has been no primary, or where there has been a primary without anyone offering?

Mr. DEAR. Yes; but first there must be called a primary. The time must be fixed for filing notice of intention of becoming a candidate—everybody must be given a chance. If after calling the primary and no one qualifies, the committee may then place upon the ballot the Democratic nominee, but not otherwise.

Mr. CROSSER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEAR. I yield.

Mr. CROSSER. Does it not provide that in any event if there fails to be a nominee, the committee may name a nominee?

Mr. DEAR. No. The committee must first call the primary, and until it does so it is powerless.

Mr. CROSSER. Does it provide that as a condition precedent?

Mr. DEAR. Yes, sir. It says it specifically, and a high-school student could grasp the meaning of that language, it seems to me. It says "the committee calling the election." There first must be a call, and there must be a time fixed for them to qualify. Then, if no one qualifies, the committee can do that, and in no other instance.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DEAR. I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Does not the language read:

In any other event wherein the party shall have no nominee selected under the provisions of this act, the committee calling the primary shall select the nominee for any position named in the call of the committee, and shall have full authority to certify said name.

Mr. DEAR. Yes; that confirms what I said. Now, if I have time I want to say a few words in regard to this citizens' meeting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DEAR] has again expired.

Mr. KERR. I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DEAR. Now, mark you, on November 24, no election would be called, said the Governor, but during the following 3 days the proclamation was drafted, the friendly members of the executive committee were notified to meet, and the tickets were printed, seemingly in secret, for no one had any information as to what was taking place until 11 o'clock on the 27th. On the 24th the Governor had decided not to act, and on the 27th he was acting with lightning speed. Why it was necessary that it all be kept a secret is a matter known only to them. Perhaps they knew that an effort would be made in the courts to prevent the diabolical attempt to carry out the illegal acts, and it was undoubtedly for that reason that so much mystery was attached to the meeting, and precautions taken to print and distribute the tickets before the courts could take action.

The tickets carried thereon the name of Mrs. Kemp as the Democratic nominee. By this time the citizenship was thoroughly aroused and injunctions issued. Nevertheless in all but 3 of the 12 parishes comprising the district the election was held after a fashion by commissioners who were hurriedly and illegally obtained for that purpose. No commissioners were selected and names published as required by law. In that election Mrs. Kemp received 4,801 votes.

The citizens assembled on the 28th as intended. They selected a committee and set up the machinery for holding an election, and fixed December 27 as the date on which it was to be held. Commissioners were selected and the matter carried on pursuant to provisions of law covering the holding of elections in Louisiana. That election was open to anyone who wished to enter. Only one candidate, Mr. Sanders, qualified for that election. The election was held and Mr. Sanders received approximately 15,000 votes.

Those are the facts in the main. The two candidates presented their credentials to this House. Under the circumstances both were requested to stand aside and not take the oath. The entire matter was submitted to the Committee on Elections, which has reported that neither was legally elected and consequently was not entitled to a seat in the House of Representatives.

There are two principal statutes in the State of Louisiana covering elections. One is Act 130 of 1916, as amended, which provides for the calling of all general elections. The other is Act 97 of 1922, as amended, which provides for the holding of primaries to name candidates who participate in the general elections. Article 1, section 4, of the Constitution of the United States provides that the legislatures of the different States shall provide the times, places, and manner of electing Senators and Representatives. These statutes fix the time, place, and manner of such elections in compliance with the constitutional provision. Section 3 of Act 130 of 1916 provides that the Governor shall issue his proclamation giving notice of the general election at least 30 days prior to holding the same, and that the board of supervisors of election shall give 15 days' notice " of every general election " by proper advertisement. This section shall be read, of course, in connection with section 6 of the same act which provides in the case of a vacancy in the office of Representative in Congress between the general elections that it shall be the duty of the Governor to call a general election to fill the vacancy. The statute deals with general elections only. In other words, the statute provides for two general elections, one being a regular general election and the other a special general election to fill a vacancy caused by death or otherwise between the regular general elections.

For a candidate to participate in either of the two general elections provided by Act 130 of 1916, the candidate must be nominated in accordance with Act 97 of 1922, known as the " primary law of the State of Louisiana." Section 1 of that act provides that nominations for Members of the House of Representatives in Congress of the United States and other officials therein named shall be made by direct primary election and that a nomination of any person for said office or offices in any other manner shall be illegal, and the secretary of state is prohibited from placing on the official ballot the name of any person as a candidate for any political party not nominated in accordance with the provisions of the primary law. Section 9 of the same act provides specifically for the holding of primary elections to nominate candidates to participate in special general elections and that the primary must be held not less than 10 days after the calling of the special general election.

The action of the Governor of the State of Louisiana in calling a special general election and giving only 7 days' notice thereof was in direct violation of Act 130 of 1916, which provides that no less than 30 days must elapse between the calling and the holding of every general election. The Democratic congressional executive committee in placing the name of Mrs. Kemp upon the official ballot as the Democratic nominee was in absolute violation of the primary law, which provides that no nomination shall be made of any party to take part in a general election except by direct primary election and that it cannot be held as a " snap " election, but that 10 days must elapse between the ordering of a general election and the holding of the primary.

I understand that the Governor and other authorities who proceeded as they did in this hurried election with only 7 days' notice attempt to justify their acts under section 31 of the primary law, which reads as follows:

That all vacancies caused by death or resignation or otherwise among the nominees selected by any political party, under the provisions of this act, shall be filled by the committee, which has jurisdiction over the calling and ordering of the said primary election; and in the event that no person shall have applied to become a candidate for a political office within the time fixed by law, or the call of the committee ordering the primary, or in any other event wherein the party shall have no nominee selected under the provisions of this act, the committee calling the primary shall select the nominee for any position named in the call of the committee and shall have full authority to certify said name as the nominee of the said party: Provided, however, That wherever, for any reason, any contest filed in court shall not be finally decided in time to print the name of the nominee of the party upon the ticket at election, then the political party committee shall certify the name of the person who is the contestee in the suit filed, and the name of the said contestee shall be printed upon the ticket as the nominee of said political party, and no court shall have jurisdiction to enjoin such action.

The above section of the law has been interpreted and followed religiously for many years, and at no time has it ever received the interpretation placed upon it by the Governor in this instance. At no time was it ever imagined under any circumstances or conditions that any committee could place upon a ballot a nominee to be voted upon in any general election until the primary had first been called and a time fixed for candidates to file their notices of intention. This section is a saving clause in the law and has been always so interpreted. In the event of death or resignation among the nominees after the primary or in the event that no one qualifies to run in the primary, then in that event, and that only, is the committee authorized or permitted to place upon the ballot the name of the nominee.

This is clearly the meaning of the section and is the construction placed upon it by the people of Louisiana since the day it was written. Under this section the committee calling and ordering the primary has authority to select the nominee for any position named in the call of the committee; clearly indicating that there must be first a call before it is authorized to name such a nominee. This interpretation is so clear that it is difficult to understand why anyone would even argue to the contrary. Surely under this section no justification could be found for the action of the committee in placing the name of Mrs. Kemp upon the ticket without ever calling the primary. In this instance the primary law was completely ignored; and if permitted once, it may be expected that in the future this right of the people to select their nominee will again be flaunted, a condition which must never be sanctioned or permitted.

In this case the committee sought to justify its illegal action on the ground that there was not time within the 7 days before the general election in which to call a primary. That would not clothe the act with legality; but this situation, of course, was brought about by the inaction of the Governor, who had more than 5 months to call the election, and if the time was too short, it was because of the negligence and laches of the Governor. The Governor could not legally bring about this condition and then take advantage of his own laches to try to make valid his subsequent illegal acts.

It is, therefore, very clear that both the nomination and election of Mrs. Kemp was in violation of every provision of law in the State of Louisiana which apply to an election to fill a vacancy in Congress. It is very clear that the calling of a surprise election in 7 days, the complete ignoring of the primary election law, the violation of the provisions of the general election law providing for 30 days' notice and for 15 days' notice by the supervisors of elections, and the further violation of the Louisiana statute providing for absentee voting renders the election a farce, a fraud on the rights of the people of the Sixth District, and ruthlessly deprived them of the right to select their Representative in Congress as the law provides. Therefore the credentials of Mrs. Kemp, based upon the same, are absolutely illegal, null, and void, and she has no right to a seat in the House of Representatives.

In the discussion of this case before the Elections Committee and also by some Members of the House, it has been assumed that in the surprise election of December 5 that the voters could have voted for their choice by writing in the name of an independent candidate in the space provided for on the ticket. This is clearly in error, for under the laws of Louisiana it is practically impossible, as a practical matter, to be elected as an independent candidate. Act 130 of 1916 was amended by Act 160 of 1932. Under this amendment if a person desired to vote for a person other than the nominee, he must in his own handwriting write the name of such person with a pencil having a black lead and stamped with the official stamp in the white square in the voting place at the right of the name so written. However, before that can be done the candidate must file a statement with the clerk of the district court of the parish in which he lives at least 3 days before the general election, in which statement he shall give his consent to be voted for, particularly naming the office, and shall write his name just as the voter must write it on the ticket. That statement is published and a copy sent to the board of supervisors of elections, and shall be sent with the election supplies to the voting places where such candidate may be voted for. The law further provides that no ballot shall be counted which is cast for any person whose name does not appear upon the printed ballot or who does not become a candidate as indicated. Under this law, if the name is not written with a pencil having a black lead, it would be a spoiled ballot. Further, if the name was not spelled just as written in the statement made to the clerk of court it would again be a spoiled ballot. This and other requirements make it an impossibility as a practical matter to elect anyone as an independent candidate.

In this case there were several considerations which operated against anyone attempting to run as an independent candidate. In the first place, such independent candidates, though denouncing this election farce, nevertheless would make themselves a party to it by participating in it as independents. Even though it were possible under the law to successfully offer as independent candidates, yet this consideration was sufficient to prevent anyone among the independents to offer as a candidate in that election.

The next question involves the legal right of Mr. J. Y. Sanders, Jr., who was elected by the citizens' election to a seat in the House of Representatives. In considering this matter, a great many assume that the citizens' mass meeting in the city of Baton Rouge on November 28, 1933, was without legal sanction. That is untrue. Section 3 of the Act 130 of 1916, being the general election law, after providing for the proclamation of the Governor and the notice by the board of supervisors of elections, and the time in which each shall be given, further provides as follows:

> But no default by the Governor or parish board of supervisors of election to issue said proclamation shall deprive the people of their right to hold an election as fixed by law or vitiate such election when held.

This provision was a saving clause in the law to give the people a right to select and send to Congress a Representative where the Governor refused to issue such writs of election as provided for in the Constitution of the United States and the laws of the State. The citizens availed themselves of this provision of the law and met in mass meeting to carry out the authority granted therein and set up the election machinery and held the election. From the report of the Committee on Elections of this House it is clearly indicated that the committee is of the opinion that the people of the Sixth District had the legal right to assemble for the purpose of calling an election under the conditions and circumstances of this case. However, the difficulty experienced by the committee was that no machinery was provided by the laws of Louisiana to carry out this authority. Had the law provided such machinery and it had been followed by the citizens in holding the election, the committee would have found, no doubt, that Mr. Sanders was legally elected and would have recommended that he be seated.

I am fully aware of the importance of establishing precedents in such matters before the House of Representatives and we all agree that no precedent should be established where an unauthorized and illegal mass meeting of citizens might have a legal excuse to attack before this House a valid and legal election. Nevertheless, I am of the opinion that the action of the mass meeting and the resulting election finds sanction within the laws of Louisiana.

They were authorized by the law referred to to hold an election as fixed by law. What election is fixed by law? In speaking of elections under the Louisiana law a general election is understood and the very statute in which we find this authority deals only with general elections. There are only two elections, therefore, embraced in that phrase, "fixed by law", one being the general election which is held regularly upon a fixed date, and the other a special general election fixed by the same statute in section 9 thereof. Naturally, because the special election by its very nature cannot be fixed as to date, nevertheless is provided for in the statute as a general election and fixed by the statute. The people, therefore, had the right under this provision to hold only the special election which was fixed by this particular statute, to wit, the special general election. In other words they were not authorized to hold a primary or any other election, except this one, and that election they proceeded to hold. It was not contemplated that party nominees would be voted for in this election. This provision of the law is an exception and in this election anyone could run in his own right and not as the nominee of any party. If that were not true it was a vain and useless grant of authority, for should the Governor, who controls the election machinery, refuse to call an election, the machinery would not be put into operation to call a primary.

This was the difficulty, however, confronting the committee, which is composed of very learned lawyers who have concluded that although authority was granted for the holding of the election, there was no adequate machinery carrying it into effect. However, on this question many lawyers differ in opinion, and with all due deference to the findings of the committee, and with full knowledge of the importance in establishing precedents before the House, I am of the opinion that the election of Mr. Sanders was in compliance with the laws of the State of Louisiana, and that the citizens having been authorized by statute to hold an election, that necessarily the right was granted to do all things necessary to carry out and exercise the authority so granted.

They could, therefore, set up the necessary election machinery, as was done.

The action of the Governor and the executive congressional committee in this case was unlike anything that has heretofore happened in the history of the State since the hectic days of the carpetbag rule. It is to be hoped that the Legislature of Louisiana will by proper legislation remove the difficulties found by the Committee on Elections of the House so that this situation may not again arise from that State.

The Constitution of the United States guarantees to our people a republican form of government and this guaranty was referred to by a great Senator from the State of Massachusetts as a sleeping giant. The right of the people to have a voice in the selection of their public officials is an inherent right won by them upon a thousand battlefields by untold sacrifices willingly made in order that we might enjoy that privilege. When that right is trampled upon and ruthlessly taken from the people as was attempted in this case, a natural resentment arises in the soul of every patriotic citizen. When this travesty was attempted on the citizens of the Sixth Congressional District of Louisiana there was immediately a storm of protest, and it met with sympathy throughout the State. Mass meetings were held over the State protesting and denouncing the action of the Governor and the congressional executive committee which sought to destroy the people's rights. The citizens of the Sixth Congressional District meant to preserve and to exercise this inherent right, and to preserve it they were ready to bear arms. Before the courts they were helpless because the courts themselves were powerless in the matter. These citizens, patriotic and devoted to the cause of good government, did not take up arms for they had confidence in the justice of the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States. They have rested their case here with a sense of security that here justice will be done and their rights as American citizens will be respected and fully protected. The citizens of the Sixth Congressional District and sympathetic neighbors of the State look to this body today to disapprove and rebuke the travesty committed upon them on December 5, 1933, by those whose very duty it was under their oaths to carry out faithfully and honestly the laws of Louisiana. That faith and confidence in this body has not been misplaced. This is a Government where the people rule and their rights will be respected and preserved.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, some criticism has been leveled at the committee because it did not make two decisions, one deciding the prima facie right, and the second deciding the ultimate right; and I fancy before this discussion is over further criticism will be leveled against the committee.

The committee did decide the prima facie right and it did decide the ultimate right. It may be said that there was produced before the committee the certificate signed by the Governor and the secretary of state and that certificate, therefore, was prima facie evidence of the right. No, I do not think we can come to that conclusion. The House of Representatives, which referred this question to its committee for determination, had this certificate before it, and it must have meant there was something further to be gone into by the committee.

Now, there could be no prima facie right unless there were a legal election. A mere certificate would not establish prima facie right; there would have to be underlying that certificate a legal election. So when the committee examined into this question it did so on this proposition: Was there or was there not a legal election held in Louisiana? We determined, and I think the membership of the House will reach the same conclusion if it examines carefully into the law of Louisiana, that there was no legal election whatever, either of Mrs. Kemp or of Mr. Sanders.

One of the Members from my side of the House made amusing criticism of the failure of the committee to call witnesses. First, this was a legal problem; we could determine the whole matter upon the law of Louisiana. Now, that law is a very well considered piece of work. Let me call your attention to the very first paragraph of the primary law and see if you have any serious doubt in your mind after reading it:

Be it enacted by the Legislature of Louisiana, That all political parties shall make all nominations for candidates for the United States Senate, Members of the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States * * * by direct primary elections. That any nomination, of any person for any of the aforesaid mentioned offices by any other method shall be illegal * * *

That would seem to establish a pretty strong position that the only possible way you can nominate for the office of Representative in Congress in Louisiana is by a direct primary.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERKINS. I shall be pleased to yield after I finish my statement, but I hope the gentleman will let me proceed, because, perhaps, I may anticipate the question he is about to ask.

The only argument I have heard that attempts to set aside or interpret the act as meaning something other than its plain words imply is that in section 31, which contains the provision:

That all vacancies caused by death or resignation or otherwise among the nominees selected by any political party under the provisions of this act shall be filled by the committee which has jurisdiction over the calling and ordering of said primary election, and in the event that no person shall become a candidate for office within the time fixed by law by the call of the committee ordering the primary.

Here is what they say——

Mr. COX. And does not that answer the gentleman——

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I cannot yield. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will permit me to finish because both of us have had sufficient experience in court to know that the first word does not contain a complete answer. Here is what they say makes a difference:

Or in any other event wherein the party shall have no nominee selected under the provisions of this act the committee calling the primary shall select the nominee for any position named in the call of the committee and shall have full authority to certify said name as the nominee of the party.

They say the language—"the committee calling the primary" should be construed as merely words of designation referring to each particular committee, whether it be the State committee or the congressional committee.

Mark you, Mr. Speaker, it reads:

The committee calling the primary shall select the nominee for any position named in the call of the committee.

So, if there be no call of the committee there never could be any position named in the call of the committee. It is, therefore, perfectly clear under the law of Louisiana that there is only one way by which you can nominate for the office of Representative in Congress; that is, by direct primary.

Now, I shall not go into the local political factional fights down there. As far as I am concerned they are both right; but I may say that when there is no legal primary called there cannot be a legal election. The general election law sets up a method of holding an election after a legal primary is called and held. The Governor, of course, has the power to call an election. You might say: "Suppose the Governor called an election and the primary committee, or the committee having authority to call a primary, did not act; would this nullify the election?"

The law on this subject, section 6 of the general election law of Louisiana, reads as follows:

Be it further enacted—

And so forth—

In case of a vacancy in said office of Representative in Congress between the general elections it shall be the duty of the Governor by proclamation to cause an election to be held according to law to fill such vacancy.

Now the words "according to law" mean in accordance with what? In accordance not only with the general election law but in accordance with the primary law.

What was the fact? The fact was that the Governor had months in which to call this election but delayed until his hand was forced by his adversaries. This is what we then find taking place so far as the time element is concerned: On the 27th of November, having waited five or more months, the Governor called for an election to take place—when? In 7 or 8 days. Then this committee ordinarily having the power to call the primary election found itself short of time, so it assumed to nominate. It did not attempt to follow the primary law; it assumed unto itself the power to nominate. If they had the right to nominate, do you not see what could happen? The whole general election law and primary election law could be set aside by a little arrangement between the Governor and the committee; the Governor could call an election to take place in 2 days and the committee could meet the same day and say they had not sufficient time to call a primary election, and therefore they could nominate a candidate. The actual time element was this: On the 27th of November the Governor called for an election on the 5th of the following month, and on the same day the committee met outside of the district, although I do not suppose that made it illegal, but it was outside of the district so the people in the district could not have knowledge of it, and the committee might as well have been sitting up in New York as far as that is concerned. I suppose they might have had power to go outside their territory. They did not call a primary election; but they made the nomination and on the same day 78,000 ballots were printed.

Once I was unfortunate enough to be in the printing business. I have printed millions of ballots, and I have never been able to get them out the same day that the call was made.

So far as my participation in the determination and judgment of this committee is concerned, I am determining it entirely on the law of Louisiana and not upon other questions of fact in the case. There was a very hot contest down there in Louisiana and the Governor's hand was probably forced, but it is not for me to determine the right or the wrong of the various contentions. I can determine what the law of Louisiana says. We know that for 5 months the Governor did not call an election and refused to call one, although he had been petitioned by thirty or forty thousand persons to do so. He did not do so. Then he finds if he does not act the other fellow will, and, of course, when we find we are forced to do something we try to get there first. This is what the Governor did, and I do not blame him. I suppose that was good politics from his standpoint. He knew the primary law; at least his attorney general knew the primary law. The Governor knew that the primary law could not be observed within the 7 days and we have a right to use our own judgment and say that probably it was his intention not to have a primary. I do not know that it makes any particular difference so far as the action of the Governor was concerned, or what was in the Governor's mind. The only question is, What is written on the statute books of Louisiana? We know he did not intend to let these other chaps get into the primary, so he called an election quick, and, as I said a moment ago, the Governor could call for an election and this district congressional committee had a right to make the nomination, but there was not time enough for them to make a nomination and for an election.

The question might be asked, Why did not these outsiders make a contest in connection with that primary? If there is going to be in Louisiana anything like an honest election, it is within the province of this House to see that the Members or the persons sent here have been elected according to the laws of Louisiana and not in accordance with some snap judgment arranged contrary to those laws.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. FERNANDEZ].

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I wish to extend my thanks and profound appreciation to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR] for delaying the report of Election Committee No. 3 to the House until such time as I had an opportunity to be present. First, I want to convey a very definite statement to this Congress that I am not interested one iota in the factional fight between any parties within the Sixth Congressional District of Louisiana. My sole interest in this particular case was simply for the preservation, as I see it, of the House rules and precedents. I will not attempt to enter into a discussion or amplify on the law covering this particular case, not being a lawyer. The legal aspects of this case were fully discussed on the floor of this House a few days ago by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS].

The resolution provided for two distinct propositions: One was that the committee should determine the prima facie right of Mrs. Boliver E. Kemp and Hon. J. Y. Sanders, Jr., to be sworn and seated as a Member of this Congress; and, second, to determine the final right of these two aspirants and contestants to a seat in this body. The committee ignored the question of prima facie right of either to be seated as a sitting Member and reported on the final right only. This committee, consisting of the Honorable JOHN H. KERR, of North Carolina, the Honorable JOHN H. MCDUFFIE, of Alabama, the Honorable BEN CRAVENS, of Arkansas, the Honorable ALFRED F. BEITER, of New York, and the Honorable E. M. OWEN, of Georgia, all Democrats and men whom I have the honor to call my friends, and the Honorable CHARLES L. GIFFORD, of Massachusetts, the Honorable RANDOLPH PERKINS, of New Jersey, and the Honorable JAMES W. WADSWORTH, of New York, the last three named being Republican members of the committee, all of whom I have explicit confidence in, has unanimously reported to this House that it is their decision that there was no valid election for Representative in the House of Representatives of the Seventy-third Congress from the Sixth Congressional District of Louisiana, and that neither Mrs. Kemp nor Mr. Sanders, Jr., is entitled to a seat therein. Knowing the temper of the House in connection with this matter, I shall vote to uphold the action of the committee [applause], realizing full well that the Sixth Congressional District will be without representation in this Congress for at least the balance of this session, because under any circumstances an election before the middle of April is impossible. Further, since the Sixth Congressional District borders on the First Congressional District of Louisiana, which I have the honor to represent, I would not be amiss in saying that some of the burdens of that district have been borne by me and my staff, and I will cheerfully continue to serve those who call upon me, just as I have done in the past. [Applause.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I have no particular interest in the pending case. There is, however, something in me that makes me sympathize with the under dog and I find myself at this moment extending a helping hand to the widow who is not being dealt with generously at least. The committee report in this case has penalized her for alleged derelictions on the part of the Governor of Louisiana. There is nothing disclosed in the discussion thus far that convinces me that the holding of a primary election is a condition precedent to the holding of a general election in the State of Louisiana. You may figure it as you please, but there is the concession made on the part of those who are recommending that the widow be turned out that there is provision in the law for action on the part of district executive committees similar to what was done in this case.

You know and I know that primaries are party procedures and that the holding of a legal election is not dependent upon party action, through primaries or otherwise. Here we find that the Governor of the State, for reason satisfactory to himself and by which Mrs. Kemp should not be bound, delayed for months the calling of an election, and when the proclamation was issued, conditions in the State were such that the election could not be postponed a day longer than the day on which it was held, and those here who are conducting this drive against the widow are insisting that because there had not been a primary election she should not be given a seat in this House on the basis of the certificate which she holds from the Governor. At the same time they concede, as they are obliged to concede, because any other contention would be in contradiction of reason and common sense, that if there is no provision in the law for the committee, as was done in this instance, of its own volition giving a nomination, and if the nomination were not legal, then it was not binding upon a soul, and any other elector within the district might, with complete freedom, have participated in the election as a candidate for the favor of the people of the district.

When the confession is made that nothing was done to shut out other ambitious citizens of the district or to prevent them from becoming candidates in the election, and when the further concession is made that there was nothing illegal in the action of the committee, that there was no fraud practiced on the part of Mrs. Kemp, and is not claiming the fruits of any fraud, when she became a candidate in the election and received a majority of the votes that were cast, then if it were a legal election, as is conceded, she is entitled to a seat in this House, and the challenge now is to the understanding and to the sense of fair play of the Members of this House in this contest as between the widow and one who comes here as the nominee of a rump election as to which shall be seated.

Mr. MONTET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. MONTET. The gentleman makes the statement, as I gather it, it is conceded that the district committee had authority to make this nomination. I wish to state that if the gentleman is under that impression, he did not correctly gather the statements made by the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DEAR], and others, all of whom very forcefully state that the committee under those circumstances had no such authority.

Mr. COX. I have read the law, but let us treat this case as if no action was taken on the part of any executive committee giving a nomination, then the field was open for all that wanted to enter, and if Mrs. Kemp being the only one that entered, then this House should uphold the result of the election.

Mr. KERR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. KERR. Then the gentleman thinks there is no use having any machinery or that it is necessary to comply with the law at all, if you simply give an opportunity to get to the ballot box?

Mr. COX. Not at all, sir. Here is what I am contending: The holding of a primary is not a condition precedent to the holding of a special election, and, particularly so, as this was a special election called to fill an existing vacancy.

Mr. KERR. The gentleman is arguing that in the face of the fact that the statute law of the State of Louisiana states that there is no nominee unless there is a nomination in the primary.

Mr. COX. That contention is not sound, and every Member of this House must recognize this when it is contended that the holding of a primary is a condition precedent to the holding of a general election. Primaries are party activities, and in this case there was the giving of a nomination by the committee, but disregard that altogether and say there was no nomination, still Mrs. Kemp was a candidate in the election and was elected, and this House ought to uphold her in this hour of her trial. [Applause.]

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. SANDLIN].

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I could not help from being reminded, when I heard my friend from Georgia talk, of a negro baptizing down in our country. As the preacher was just about to lead the Negro boy out to be baptized, he pulled back and the preacher said, "What is the matter?" He said, "Don't you see that alligator there", and the preacher said, "You need not be afraid of an alligator or anything when you are going to be baptized; come right on." The Negro boy said, "Mr. Preacher, you may know all about the Bible, but you don't know a damn thing about an alligator." [Laughter.]

My friend from Georgia may understand the laws of the great State of Georgia, but from his talk here we are convinced that he is completely ignorant of the laws of the State of Louisiana. [Laughter and applause.]

I have been a Member of this House 13 years. My colleague, Mr. WILSON, has been here a longer time. Mr. MONTET and Mr. DEAR have been here a number of years and they are all lawyers and are supporting this resolution. If there is any law that a Member of Congress ought to have some knowledge of, if he does not know any other, it is the election law, because they have to study it every 2 years when they run for reelection. We have to be familiar with the provisions of that law and therefore I say it is reasonable to assume that if there is any law that a Member of Congress is familiar with, it is the election law of his State.

We appreciate the big heart of the gentleman from Georgia in sympathizing with the lady who is the contestee, but there are no personalities involved in this question. The Members of the House are not concerned with the political issues in the great State of Louisiana, but when acts are committed by any faction in the State of Louisiana that touch or involve the integrity of this House, then you do have the right to investigate conditions in that State.

I tell you on my own responsibility, as a Member of this House and as one who practiced law for years in the State of Louisiana and was a district judge for 10 years, that the report of the members of the distinguished committee that investigated this case, all of whom are lawyers except one, and that one supporting the report of this committee, is proper.

The report, in my opinion, is absolutely correct. We should send the case back to the State of Louisiana and let them have a legal election, and if they send someone else here who is not elected according to law send that one back again. [Applause.]

Mr. MONTET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDLIN. I yield.

Mr. MONTET. The gentleman stated that there were four lawyers Members of the House in the Louisiana delegation. Is it not a fact that those four Members are unanimous in the opinion that the election of Mrs. Kemp was absolutely illegal?

Mr. SANDLIN. That is true. I do not believe any one of the four would advocate the position taken on the floor by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDLIN. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Was the election legally called?

Mr. SANDLIN. It was not; you can wipe out the primary for sake of the argument and rest this contest on the illegality of the general election. The gentleman from Georgia says they did not have to have a primary. Our law provides that one shall be held.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman claims that the primary and the election were both illegal?

Mr. SANDLIN. Absolutely. The election that was called for December 5 should have no standing in this House.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The object of my question is this: If the election was legal, I assume the voters would have the right to go to the polls and write in the candidate's name.

Mr. SANDLIN. That is true, but under the circumstances Mrs. Kemp had the advantage. There was only 7 days, and a candidate would have to go to each parish and serve notice that he was going to run and ask that his name be written in on the ballot. Then the voters would have to go and write his name in on the ballot, while Mrs. Kemp's name was already printed on the ballot. But as far as any primary was concerned, the election law says that there must be so many days, not less than 10, intervene between the calling of the election and the election. The election was in 7 days. The primary law was violated and the general election law was violated.

That election should have no more force and effect than as if the Governor had written out the certificate without going through the form of an election. It is as worthless as if the certificate had been forged. [Applause.]

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH). The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. KERR, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND THE STATES IN HIGHWAY DEVELOPMENT

Mr. AYERS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks, and in that extension include an address made last week by the Honorable O. S. Warden, president of the American Association of Highway Commissioners, at Chicago, Ill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. AYERS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, last week the Honorable O. S. Warden, president of the American Association of State Highway Officials and also chairman of the Montana State Highway Commission, delivered an address before the American Roadbuilders' Association at Chicago.

Mr. Warden is one of the most capable and able highway officials of America and is one who has made the highway dollar go as far or farther than any other highway official. The commission of which he is chairman has the building of public highways in the third largest State of the Union. By reason of his experience and record, his views on the subject are indeed illuminating, and I am sure will be interesting to all of the Members of Congress. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including the address of Mr. Warden.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President and members of the American Road Builders Association, there was a World's Fair at the city of Chicago in the year 1893, and there was talk about a horseless wagon—a vehicle moving under its own power. Forty years later some of these same visitors were instructed and entertained at a second great Chicago Fair. There was a unique review of transport, from the Indian and his pony to the powerful present-day locomotive and the graceful motor vehicle. Over the entrance was the wording, "The Wings of a Century"—this was in 1933. Forty years have come and gone. Through the time that has been reckoned along the calendar between these two great exhibitions at the city of Chicago there has been developed the highway transport of 1934.

Visitors went home from the Chicago Fair in 1893 and told their neighbors about the horseless vehicle. The most of them thought it wouldn't work—and said so. That wasn't so strange. Ten years earlier I listened to a school professor in a New England classroom who said that the telephone and the electric light were attractive novelties, "but", continued the teacher, "there is little chance that there will ever be commercial value attached to these inventions."

The telephone and the electric light are 10 years older than the motor vehicle—the airplane is 10 years younger. We have been moving rapidly. We have 74 percent of the motor vehicles in the world and 57 percent of the telephones. Even in this so-called "depression period" we are manufacturing 20,000 motor vehicles a week. Finally, the radio was born. After all that has happened we are about ready to take on anything that Mother Invention brings along. The prophets are silent while science works in its laboratory. We try to build highways that will fit and satisfy the motor vehicle.

The building of useful highways in America begins at the moment when the automobile became less balky and more serviceable than the horse. Our ancestors put their money into churches, schoolhouses, taverns, and a few monuments. There were no comfortable highways. There were a few somewhat improved coach lines. This was all before the advent of the motor vehicle.

There are a few mile posts at the beginning of the highway story. I would not presume to decide whether the honor of organizing the first State roads department belongs to New Jersey or to Massachusetts. The year was 1891. The bureau of public roads was organized in 1893 and that is where the Government came into the picture. Federal highway acts were passed by the Congress in 1916 and 1921. The older States then began to select mileage for improvement under legislative enactment. The American Association of State Highway Officials registered in at Washington in 1914. There was now incentive and direction in all of the States. Under this supporting supervision the Government and the States have carried forward a Nation-wide cooperative effort that has become the largest constructive enterprise of our generation.

The National Government has invested nearly $2,000,000,000 in road construction—the States a much larger sum. The total expenditures for highways, just before the depression came on, reached a billion dollars in a 12-month period. The Federal Government has turned quite completely into highway building what it has collected from the motor vehicle industry—not a much larger sum, as is sometimes stated.

Previous to 1932 it had become almost a national slogan that all gasoline taxes and all automobile license taxes were essentially State revenues, and as such should be expended upon some system of highways—preferably under the supervision of the State—or the Government and the State. During the last 2 years, sad to relate, these revenues have been diverted—in alarming figures—to other purposes. The automobile owner is not in favor of this diversion—and he, perhaps, is the only fellow who can stop it. This is a vital consideration. Indeed, experience teaches that highway planning and accomplishment have been consistent and progressive in every State where there has been continuously dependable revenue. Too often competent highway departments have been hindered, and sometimes destroyed, by careless or misdirected legislative enactment. Politics is poison to the business of road building.

There were four registered automobiles in the year 1895—but the highways were soon full of them—and they were all honking for better roads. Every moment until this convention day, the demand has been a challenge to the Government and to the States. The pressing question has been, and is, Can we keep up with the game through initial construction and constantly higher standards of maintenance. We are now completely rebuilding mileage that was constructed when I became a highway official in 1924. A few weeks ago I was observing construction in my home State upon a mountain highway. Close together, and in parallel location, were the first mountain-side abandoned trail—the surfaced grade that was built 6 years ago—and finally a stretch of new modern construction, a centralized striking exhibit of progress in road building.

The automobile and the highways are moving along together. The early established requirement that each State must have an organized highway department—if it would enjoy cooperative Federal money—was a major, sound governmental policy—out of which has come continuous planning, research, and present-day acceptable transport. A review of this planning and organization will convince anyone that no other construction enterprise in America has been as continuously progressive. No other public improvement has come so close to the welfare of all of the people. Unified Government direction, plus trained engineering, has been the constant assurance of accomplishment. The acquired knowledge of each State has helped neighboring States. The Bureau of Public Roads has been a guide for all of the States. Annual conventions have been a clearing house of what we are learning and what we know, and the sum total of this cooperative planning is revealed in a constantly uniform national competency. The Government and the States, assisted by special engineering research, have gathered a fund of knowledge that has a value equal to the amount of money that has been required to build the entire Federal system. May I add—we are not yet through with experimentation, but America is the world authority in road building. This State and National building has been constantly progressive. It has been, and is, a big business. Examine the record and you will reach at least one conclusion: If all of the business in the United States in recent years had been conducted as honestly and had been as well done as this Nation-wide highway construction, there would be no present-day depression.

I have heard an opinion expressed that the Federal system of highways is nearly built up to public requirements. Such an impression is far from correct. The job is about half done. It will require as much money to finish and rebuild the Federal system up to present standards as was invested upon this mileage before the year 1934. If then, the Government proposes to take part in building improved farm-to-market highways, and to supplement transport in and through municipalities, as was indicated in the recent $400,000,000 Federal grant we are now using, then our grandchildren will be the first contingent who can consistently discuss completion. The States and the Government will be building better highways when television is an old-time invention.

In 1917 the Government appropriated $5,000,000 of Federal aid for highways. The amount was increased to $10,000,000 in 1918, and to $65,000,000 in 1919. The total Federal-aid appropriations from 1917 to 1933 was a billion and a quarter of dollars. In 1930 there was an $80,000,000 advance to the States, and in 1932 a further advance of $120,000,000. In 1933 there was a highway grant of $400,000,000, including $50,000,000 for roads in the national forests and parks, and for building over Government land. It may easily be remembered that the Government has supplied about $2,000,000,000 toward a Federal system of roads.

The grant now available will be nearly translated into construction by July 1, 1934. The peak of labor employed will be in April and May of 1934. If the Recovery Act highway legislation of the last Congress is indicative of intention, it is then entirely logical to conclude that there will be further authorizations for the so-called "farm to market" or "feeder" roads—highways that will help the farmer get his produce to initial shipping points. This highway bracket of the National Recovery Act was a response to repeated requests that have been coming from farm organizations for some time. This is a natural expansion plan—especially in States where the Federal system of roads has reached or is nearing completion. In the Recovery Act funds that we are now using, 25 percent was provided for building transport supplementary to the Federal system in and through municipalities. It has been suggested that further authorizations of this sort might properly be made upon a permissible basis—with the decision for each State left to the State departments and the Bureau of Public Roads—because in some of the Western States there is a general desire to complete important mileage on the trunk highways, and in that section of the country city congestion has not become an important consideration except in or near the larger western municipalities. Local option might well direct this sort of expenditure for a while. If and when the convenience of Government finance will permit, and as soon as the States can respond, it would seem sensible and wise if we return to the long time-used plan of Federal aid to be matched by the States, with the exception of construction done in the national forests, the national parks, and over the public domain. Cooperative responsibility and participation is a sure and dependable foundation to insure a uniform continuation of public interest.

We have now reached a point in highway construction when we can speak of coordinating accomplishment. A traveler can go the length or breadth of almost any State, using comfortable transport. Intercity and interstate travel enjoys continuous accommodation. We are reaching a national milestone—a unified national system of highways. We have laid a firm business foundation that is worth more than it has cost. Still the picture is not complete. We will soon have highway transport to Alaska and to Mexico City. All of America—the two Americas, if you please—will accommodate the automobile for a journey anywhere.

Highways are primarily justified and built to assist and to accommodate and to satisfy business and commerce. The road that will not return interest on the investment is a doubtful enterprise. Highway officials have written this axiom into their operating code. There is, however, a secondary value—accommodation to recreational travel. And the automobile owner is entirely ready to add this asset in the reckoning. A few years ago Colonel Westgard, of the National Automobile Association, proposed a master highway circling to and through the principal national parks of the West. He conducted a tour around the 6,000-mile journey from park to park. The enthusiasm of Colonel Westgard's vision could not be realized in a single enterprise. He was a prophet ahead of the engineers. Now, this master highway is nearly a complete realization of what many people considered a visionary dream 10 years ago. The recreational highways we are now completing in the Rocky Mountain wonderland of the West will contribute to the enjoyment of all future generations. Some of them are international roads. From Banff National Park in the Canadian Rockies to the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, the whole Rocky Mountain forest and park area now invite the traveler.

As we build comfortable transport through the forest-covered mountains and into the national parks, I would like to turn your grateful recollection away from purely commercial highways for the moment, because we ought to honor the vision and the leadership that held back the hand of commerce and kept for recreational use lakes and streams and woodland just as the pioneer found them. President Theodore Roosevelt established the forest reservations—200,000,000 acres—in the Department of Agriculture. It was a great national service. Because of his vision, we have preserved for this and for all generations tremendous mountains that reach up to clear blue skies, peaks wearing glacier caps that borrow jewels from the sunshine, sky lines as nature fashioned them, horizons that the eye can hardly reach, colorful foliage that challenges the brush and the canvas, flowers that bloom where there is no garden, dashing streams that cool the canyons when the summer sun is hot, lakes with new shadows and pictures each morning and evening, green foothills leading to far-reaching plains—this is an eternal heritage given to us by the man who had the vision to keep these places as nature fashioned them in the centuries before civilization.

May I add another name in the measure of unselfish service—Stephen T. Mather, founder of the national park service and the foremost builder of our national playgrounds, merits grateful appreciation for an impressive leadership. I knew Mr. Mather well in the earlier days as he traveled the western country, over then unimproved mountain roads, with an enthusiasm that filled his whole life. He helped to protect and save the great redwood trees of California, and then was called to the larger service of developing our national playgrounds. Mr. Mather began the building of better roads in the parks. The wonderful Logan Pass highway in Glacier Park, opened to travel a few months ago, was a dream of his constructive mind.

I have been speaking of the development of highways, the planning and accomplishment. Now I would like to ask a question, and then answer it. Why are we willing to supply the revenue to build additional highway mileage, even in the years of a business depression? The answer can be confident and clear. The built-to-standard highway is a dividend paying investment. It begins to pay at once. It never stops saving and paying. That is more than can be said of the farm, the mine, the gold mine, the cheese factory, or the newspaper, with which I am quite familiar. America will stick to anything that pays dividends. We shall continue to build roads.

In merchandising, commercial, or economic development there are continually new problems along any progressive horizon. Just as we get the road fixed for the automobile, the bus and the truck loom up. We are going to use them. We need to regulate them. We have fully decided how to tax them. The railroads are willing to make suggestions, but we can hardly leave these questions to them. They might be a bit prejudiced. The legislatures will have to act, and they need informative help.

The American Association of State Highway Officials has adopted, and recommended to the States, uniform standards to govern gross weights, dimensions, and speeds for the motor vehicles operating on the highways. The United States Chamber of Commerce, through a recent referendum, found that its members were not willing to fully accept these recommendations of the national highway organization. The Federal administrator of railways is studying bus and truck problems along coordinating lines. There are differences of opinion. Conclusions—good or bad—are imperative. What we do has large importance. We cannot allow the truck to unduly hinder transport, on account of size or otherwise. I think there will have to be considerable additional construction accommodation, separate roadways in congested areas, even the five-lane highway will not fully satisfy this traffic. On the open highways there must be devices so that the truck driver will know right away what is coming up behind him. These transport problems cannot be evaded. We may as well get at them.

There must be a better supervision of highways. We are constructing roadbeds with more efficiency than is yet evidenced in directing the traffic. In some States highway patrols are guarding well the safety of their people. In others a false economy amounts to terrible neglect. Speed limits on the open highway will never be fashionable again. Reckless driving is all that we can stop. Construction today is more nearly satisfying public requirements than at any previous time, but the average speed of the motor vehicle is increasing. The men and women who drive automobiles are each year asking for a machine that will go faster and faster; the manufacturer is responding to what the average purchaser says he would like to have. The case now before the court of public opinion is speed against supervising safety. There must be a popular verdict, and legislative enactment in many States, enabling a reasonable control of the reckless and the incompetent driver. This much we can do.

A study of what may be just ahead is generally interesting, sometimes profitable. The highways of yesterday are not the highways of today. The highways of today will not be the highways of tomorrow. We cannot be too sure about what will satisfy the next generation. We know that there must be more rapid transport radiating in and out of cities, probably one-way transit for morning and evening use, a place to easily and quickly park the car, surface parking, high-up parking, undersurface parking, perhaps municipally owned at low cost, a city park for parking; why not? Through motor-vehicle traffic will not use congested city streets after a while. It will go another way. There will be beautification of roadways along the rivers, around the lakes, up the scenic inclines; the cities, the States, and the National Government are beginning to do this work. The radius of connected highways is widening to national boundaries; indeed, even to an international conception of what we ought to do. The ways that we travel out from the cities will be pleasant, like the improved streets and the grounds around the home. The traveler will be safe because there will be care and supervision. There will be no ugly fences or commercial signing. I am sure there will be better planning plus accurate research. In the building of highways, I think, we may look ahead, having a justified confidence in what we can do.

CANADA READY TO RATIFY ST. LAWRENCE TREATY, BUT FEARS JOKER AND BELIEVES THERE'S REASON TO LOOK INTO "UNEXPECTED GENEROSITY" OF UNITED STATES

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing an article from the Buffalo Times relative to the St. Lawrence project.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an article from the Buffalo Times on the St. Lawrence project. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following article appearing in the Buffalo Times, entitled "Canada Ready to Ratify St. Lawrence Treaty, but Fears Joker and Believes There's Reason to Look Into 'Unexpected Generosity' of United States."

Canada is ready to ratify the St. Lawrence Treaty in spite of the fact that many men in high governmental offices think there is reason to look into "unexpected generosity" on the part of the United States in carrying the burden of cost.

Talks in Ottawa with spokesmen for both the Conservatives and Liberal Parties, the two units in the Canadian political system, indicate this is now practically certain.

For many months Buffalo business leaders opposing the St. Lawrence seaway scheme have held the hope that even if the American Senate ratifies the treaty it will be defeated in the Dominion Parliament.

ADMIT LACK OF POWER

This hope may now be dismissed. Even if the opponents of the present Bennett government in Canada will, if pinned down to facts, admit they have little hope of blocking treaty approval if a vote is taken here this year.

It will not be smooth sailing for the treaty, however. Recently a Canadian Senator of high standing warned his comrades in commenting on the seaway scheme "to beware of Greeks bearing gifts." He promptly requested that his comment be withheld, but it stands in the record.

To understand the course the treaty must follow in Canada a background of Dominion legislative procedure is necessary. Patterned closely after the system of England, Canada has a Parliament in which the King, the Commons, and the Senate compose the Government trio.

HOUSE REAL GOVERNMENT

Representing the King is the Earl of Bessborough, Governor General, who enters in state when Parliament is opened, reads a message from "the Government", at the present time Premier Bennett, and then retires to his mansion in Ottawa to attend to his social and other duties.

The House of Commons is the real government. In the beautiful new parliament building, replacing one destroyed by fire some years ago, the lawmakers will gather late this month to resume their sessions.

At the right of the speaker's desk sits the government party, ranged in double desks like those of school children. Directly opposite is the opposition, all those units not affiliated with the reigning party.

Midway in the room on the government side sits Premier Bennett. Directly opposite is his arch foeman, MacKenzie King, leader of the opposition. The latter is a master of debate, many regard him as certain to be the next Prime Minister. But Mr. Bennett still has the power and the votes.

NATIONALISM PLATFORM

For nearly 4 years the Bennett government has remained in power on a platform of intense nationalism. Canada first, then the British Empire, and finally, when there is no possibility of trade within the Empire, American goods may be purchased.

Mr. Bennett is whole-heartedly for the St. Lawrence. He comes from the Prairie Provinces, where wheat is the big crop. He has promised his constituents he will give them a seaway if it is humanly possible. And Mr. Bennett is a man of his word, deeply religious, a believer in Canada's future, which he sees as profiting tremendously by the opening of the seaway.

Mr. Bennett sees jobs for many thousands of men as American millions are spent for improvement of the seaway. For, bear in mind, that the treaty says all work done within the Dominion shall be performed by Canadians, using Canadian material.

FEAR A JOKER

This is the part of the treaty the Canadians cannot understand. They wonder why the United States permitted such a clause to go into the document, whether there isn't a joker somewhere in the treaty that will be revealed after all hands have signed.

Today the Bennett government has a clear majority of 25 to 30 votes over all the opposition parties in Parliament. There seems absolutely no doubt the Premier can deliver these votes on the treaty even if the opposition should unite against him, and this is by no means certain.

The Canadian Senate is pretty much a rubber stamp. Members are appointed for life. Few resign. Appointment is a coveted honor, usually available only in later life.

Vacancies are caused almost entirely by death. In the 4 years it has been in power the Bennett government has appointed enough senators to obtain a clear majority of 6 to 8 votes in the upper house. Once the treaty goes through the lower house with a majority it will probably be debated in the Senate, but students of Canadian Government cannot conceive of its defeat there.

ONLY ONE REJECTION

In the entire last session of Parliament, according to senior clerks in the legislature, the Senate rejected but one bill adopted by the lower house, that being due to a technicality.

The Governor General will sign the treaty as a matter of course once the Parliament approves, so there is no hope of a blockade from that standpoint.

Canada sees in the seaway, at least the Bennett government sees in it, an opportunity to build foreign trade. The Honorable H. H. Stevens, minister of trade and commerce in the Bennett cabinet, points out that with no artificial stimulants, such as those which have been applied in the United States, Canada is coming back along recovery road at a rapid rate.

He shows that for the first 8 months of 1933 exports of Canadian products totaled $386,007,000, an increase of 14.6 percent over those of the same period of 1932. November 1933 exports totaled $60,384,590, being the largest of any month since December 1930.

INCREASE CONSISTENT

In commenting on this fact Mr. Stevens said:

"Especially remarkable is the consistent increase in the proportion of our exports of Canadian products that go to the mother country and other Empire countries. Whereas in the fiscal year ended 1930 only 25.2 percent of Canadian products exported were consigned to the United Kingdom, and the Empire percentages in succeeding fiscal years have been as follows: 1931, 27.4 and 36.6; 1932, 30.2 and 38; 1933 (8 months), 38.9 and 46.9."

"Indeed", continued Mr. Stevens, "in November 1933 the percentages rose to 47.8 and 55.8, respectively. In other words, out of every $9 worth of products exported from Canada in November, $5 worth went to Empire countries, where the markets are always open to our goods and where we enjoy preferences not accorded us elsewhere."

If Mr. Stevens had written a whole volume, he could not have made it more clear why Canada, as represented by the Bennett government, wants the seaway. It wants it so that Canadian raw materials may be exchanged for British coal and British manufactured goods not produced in the Dominion as yet.

NO ELECTION UNTIL 1935

Every dollar of trade thus created reduces the exchange of goods across the Canadian-American border. British ships will carry the goods, British capital will finance the deals, British and Canadian workmen and farmers will get the wages. But the United States will supply the bulk of funds for providing the means for this exchange of goods. Why Americans, noted for their shrewdness, should be willing to do this, is the thing the Canadians cannot understand.

Unless there is a Nation-wide demand for a general election in Canada, none will be held until late in 1935. The Prime Minister may call for an election earlier if he chooses, but this seems improbable now.

The demand for a new deal is reported to be growing in Canada. The Bennett government may be ousted at the next general election. The new control may be anti-St. Lawrence.

But so long as Mr. Bennett is Prime Minister, there seems no doubt that the treaty will be ratified just as soon as America acts. It is equally certain Canada will not take the initiative.

"We have been fooled too often", said one spokesman of the Government in Ottawa in commenting on this possibility.

"Should we approve the treaty and then have it rejected in the United States, we would look exceedingly foolish both to our own people and in the eyes of the world."

And no true Briton, whether he lives on this or the other side of the Atlantic, will look foolish in statesmanship if he can avoid it.

THE FEDERAL SECURITIES ACT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an article published in the London Economist, which I think might interest the House because it is a comparison to some extent of a law on securities in Great Britain with the one passed here last spring.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to publish in the RECORD an article from the London Economist. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article published in the London Economist relative to the Federal Securities Act:

(On December 23 we published an article on the Responsibilities of Directors under English Law. The following article, contributed by a legal expert, discusses the content and the effects of the much-debated Federal Securities Act in the United States. These articles will enable the reader to compare the situation in the two countries in a matter of very great public importance.)

A tightly drawn statute for the regulation of modern finance is inevitably a complicated organism and a brief summary is hardly calculated to achieve accuracy. Elucidation is rendered still more difficult when the meaning and effect of such legislation are enmeshed in passionate political controversy. Such are the difficulties confronting any consideration of one of the legislative fruits of the new deal—the Securities Act of 1933. Yet with an ocean separating us from the alarms and excursions attending this act, its essentials ought not to elude objective analysis.

The American measure was avowedly based on the British Companies Acts. But effective utilization of foreign legislative models means adaptation, not transplantation. The American draftsmen had to apply the investors' safeguards under English law in the light of American methods of distribution of securities, which, as is well known, are very different from those prevailing in this country. The English marketing of securities is not (pace Hatry), as it is in the United States, a high-pressure machinery, operating through a vast network of intermediaries to force securities upon cooks, waiters, and housewives. Also, regard must be had to the important practical differences in legal administration between a federated continent and a relatively simple legal unit like England. Finally, the Securities Act can be read understandingly only in the context of the appalling disclosures before the Senate Banking Committee of the practices of American investment houses and bank affiliates during the years of prosperity—practices indulged in not by mere "fly-by-nights" but by certain leaders of American finance.

The first effort of the Federal Government to regulate the capital market has modest objectives. It is accurately described as "An act to provide full and fair disclosure of the character of securities sold in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, and to prevent frauds in the sale thereof * * *." The registration statement, to be filed with the Federal Trade Commission (sec. 6) is the counterpart of the British requirement for a truthful prospectus as the prerequisite to the solicitation of public subscriptions (sec. 5). The categories of information (subject to appropriate administrative dispensation) to be furnished by the registration statement are enumerated in schedules A and B respectively. But the act would be merely exhortation without the sanctions of adequate recovery by the victims of disobedience to its provisions.

The nature of this civil liability has been made the battle cry against the statute. Close attention to the text of the act, in its American setting, becomes essential to appreciate the merits of the controversy. As originally introduced into the House of Representatives and as it first passed the Senate, the Securities Act imposed absolute liability without opportunity for exculpation for representations made by those under duty to disclose. Congress thereby merely reflected widespread public opinion, arising from the financial revelations, that those responsible for financial statements ought to be obliged to act at their peril, since they were in a position to verify their statements and the innocent investor was not. But this drastic proposal eventually yielded to the much more moderate measure that finally emerged from the House and received the President's signature.

In a word, absolute liability was eliminated, and "the standard of reasonableness" required of a "person occupying a fiduciary relationship" was imposed. Barring only the issuer, who obtained the fruits of an unfair bargain, all those who shared in the process of misleading the investor by "an untrue statement of a material fact" or the omission "to state a material fact" (sec. II (a)) are relieved of liability upon proof that they made reasonable investigation into the facts which they helped to disseminate, and that they had "reasonable ground to believe and did believe at the time" in the truth and adequacy of the disclosure (sec. II (b) (3)). In basing liability on "an untrue statement of a material fact" the American legislation takes over the English law, which wisely shuts the door to evasion by laying down the broad standard of duty to disclose, in the language of Lord Davey's committee, "everything which could reasonably influence the mind of an investor of average prudence." And in covering material omissions, the American draftsmen translated the lesson of the Kylsant case into explicit language.

But there are divergences between the American act and its English pattern. They concern the burden of proof thrown on the investor, once a material misrepresentation is established, and the range of persons suable for such misrepresentation. The American act, unlike the British, holds liable all who shared in the process of misleading the investor—including accountants and any other expert "whose profession gives authority to a statement made by him", and "underwriters", the term including a series of intermediate sellers. And to succeed in his suit, either for recission, i.e., return of the security, or for damages, limited to the original offering price (sec. II (g)), the American buyer need not prove his own reliance upon the misrepresentation nor trace the amount of his damage directly resulting from such misrepresentation. The variants in the two acts are due to differences, alluded to above, between the English and the American security markets.

Contrasted with a sale of securities concentrated largely within a small area and among professionally informed buyers appears American frenzied finance, operating through many intermediaries—a Nation-wide enterprise of high-pressure salesmanship. As a practical matter, the big uninformed mass of small buyers throughout the country relies not upon any company statements but upon the market opinion created by the big buyers in New York. To require the ordinary investor to prove direct reliance upon some material misrepresentation would practically deny him a remedy. On the other hand, the act provides for contribution, inter, etc., among all who are potentially liable. Furthermore, all who are participants in a flotation can arrange for an equitable distribution of the risk of loss, just as they provide for their respective shares in the profits.

But it is urged that, however reasonable the act may be and unreasonable the fears it engenders, these fears are, in fact, preventing new issues and necessary refunding, thereby gravely retarding recovery. To which it is answered that the substantial lack of financing since the act came into force is due to a combination of economic factors wholly unrelated to the Securities Act, and which, indeed, that act was in part designed to help correct in time. Among these factors are excessive plant equipment rendering impossible the vast, predepression industrial flotations; depreciation in the credit of many companies, and unwillingness of others to incur, for the present, new heavy fixed charges; monetary uncertainties; the lack of institutional and private savings for investment; and the general banker shyness of the public. Doubtless honest fears and, even more, the so-called "bankers' strike"—the conscious withholding of some financing in the hope of forcing relaxation of the Securities Act—may have restrained some flotations. But there is certainly lacking proof that the Securities Act is responsible for the doldrums of the capital market. One of the counsel for J. P. Morgan & Co. recently wrote that "it is still too early to prove conclusively with figures either that it is or is not the fault of the act that no American companies of any size are doing any capital financing." And when Mr. Winthrop Aldrich, the head of the Chase National Bank, after suggesting to the Senate Banking Committee the other day that the Securities Act may "impede a revival of a normal capital market", was asked by Senator COUZENS for concrete examples of issues prevented by act, he took refuge in the reply, "I am not in the securities business at all."

Defenders of the act properly point out that, while neither rails nor municipals are within the contested provisions of the act, there has been likewise a drought in rails and municipal financing. What financing there has been the Government (through R.F.C. and P.W.A.), not private capital, has done. This is all the more significant, for here—deferred maintenance and equipment and municipal public works—is the most promising field for capital expenditure. Yet the Pennsylvania Railroad, a first-class risk, has had to borrow $80,000,000 from the Government for its electrification. San Francisco recently attempted to sell $13,000,000 bonds for public improvement. The only private bid it could obtain, at 6-percent interest, was denounced by Secretary Ickes as "unconscionable." The Port of New York Authority has had a similar experience. After vain efforts to enlist private money, the authority was loaned $40,000,000 to build a new Hudson River tunnel. And of many impending maturities one is bound to say that they affect companies that are candidates not for refunding but for reorganization.

Nor is there any reason to believe that there will be a wholesale resignation of directors, fearful of undue responsibility. Some American directors—probably a considerable percentage—should resign. Too many are either "fronts" or lawyers who should be advisers and not on the board, or men who are not single minded because of conflicting interests. Directors of responsibility will not shrink from their responsibility.

A fierce drive is now being made against the act. Big financial law firms and newspapers that enjoyed a large volume of financial advertising have led a vigorous campaign purporting to urge "minor" or "clarifying amendments." Of course, even the most carefully drawn statute can, after 8 months, be made more letter perfect. But the Securities Act is on the way to becoming a symbol of the new deal. Congress is not likely to open up a statute only recently passed without a dissenting vote in either House in response to what is universally regarded as a Wall Street campaign. Nor is the President more likely to yield on one of his chief measures, particularly since he is well aware that, if the act is now opened to amendment, it is as apt to be stiffened as to be weakened. A different move by the President seems more probable. If the capital market is unwilling or unable to do needed financing on decent terms, the Government will itself establish a financing agency. If this should happen, it is hardly to be expected that private banking will retire from the field.

FINLAND DEBT SETTLEMENT

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of the Finland Debt Settlement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his own remarks in the RECORD upon the question of the Finland debt settlement. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a bill today to reduce the annual interest charge of the Republic of Finland on its war debt to 1.5 percent. This is in recognition of the outstanding and conspicuous example this young nation has given to the other 18 debtor countries who have defaulted on what we are pleased to call the "war debts."

This description of these obligations is not correct. Much of the money loaned to them they used for internal rehabilitation. A large part of these funds were used by these various countries in the construction of highways, railroads, and port development. This fact makes the existing repudiation all the more shameful. The present interest charge, as fixed for Finland by H.R. 5557, Sixty-eighth Congress, is 3 percent. Let me say that Finland funded her debt early and agreed to pay the sum of $8,282,000 in 62 years. She did not wait to drive the hard bargain, such as la belle France and certain other debtor countries subsequently put over.

REPUDIATORS ACTING IN CONCERT

For the information of the House, permit me to state that the amount of the entire war indebtedness, principal and interest, as funded over a period of 62 years is $22,188,486,000. As you well know, France, Austria, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Estonia, Germany, Great Britain, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Rumania, Yugoslavia, Armenia, and Russia are in default. Finland alone has steadfastly maintained her national integrity by paying on this indebtedness. It is stated on excellent authority that Finland is more or less outlawed by the other debtor countries for the reason that she has refused to join in this concert of repudiation.

It is pertinent at this time to state that the approximate annual disbursements for armament of the countries in default is $2,000,000,000 per year. One quarter of this disbursement would be sufficient to carry on the engagements made by the defaulting nations on the various debt settlements. In the debt settlements we wiped out the sum of approximately $10,000,000,000, for which we gave them a receipt in full.

The House is fully aware that certain internationalists of the banking group tried to bring about the cancellation of this indebtedness. It is a fact that certain quasi-publicists, speaking both in America and Europe, have encouraged these debtors to repudiate. But in the last analysis this repudiation on the part of these nations is the definite result of a conspiracy entered into by the defaulting nations under the leadership of the Republic of France. It cannot be repeated too often that under the Treaty of Versailles we took none of the spoils of war. We received not a dollar in reparations and not a square foot of land. Our defaulting debtors, on the other hand, were tremendously benefited by the acquisition of the German colonies or in other material ways.

GOODS SOLD AND DELIVERED

We must not let the world forget that much of the money that was loaned to France and the other defaulting nations was received by them after the armistice. Some of it was involved in the sale to France for $400,000,000 of property, food, building material, railroad equipment, and other types of property valued at $2,000,000,000. This sum of $400,000,000 was subsequently merged into the war-debt settlement, and of course has never been paid. The collection of this indebtedness except at the point of the bayonet is probably impossible; but we of the present generation should not permit our children and, so far as we can keep the story alive, future generations to forget this repudiation. The fact is that our people for many generations will be paying the obligations which these debtors have repudiated.

NATIONAL INTEGRITY

It is my belief that integrity is just as vital in a nation as in an individual. The wholesome example given these defaulting nations by Finland is my reason for offering this amendment to the existing law.

THE REPUBLIC OF FINLAND

Finland is in the far North. It has an area of about 133,000 square miles and a population estimated at 3,611,791. It already has one of the best common-school systems of any nation in the world. Ninety-three percent of its population over 15 years of age are literate. Its people are remarkable athletes. This race has written a bright chapter in the history of the nations' struggle for racial freedom and integrity. They have had a long fight to maintain their nationalism. For centuries they were a subject people under the domination of Sweden and Russia. This gallant young republic was born on December 9, 1917, and a constitutional form of government established. Since then this people have battled bravely and successfully against the introduction of bolshevism and communistic influence.

This young and struggling sister republic deserves our encouragement. Her refusal to join in the concert of nations who have repudiated their just debts to America indicates the high integrity of this government. This is a reflection of the national character. The passage of this bill will place Finland on the same plane in the matter of interest payments as the favorite defaulting nations. I hope the House will act favorably on this legislation.

THE GENISIS OF RADICALISM

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to incorporate therein a remarkable writing by one of the world's greatest editorial writers here in America upon the subject of Financial Fairy Tales.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his own remarks in the RECORD and insert therein an article from one of the greatest editorial writers in the country entitled "Financial Fairy Tales." Is there objection?

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I might add that the name of this writer is Harvey Newbranch, of the Omaha World Herald.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, under the gracious privilege accorded me a few days ago to do so by the consent of the whole House, I shall be privileged now to talk a little about fairy tales. Not for a moment shall I here repeat the fairy tales of Alice in Wonderland nor the fairy tales of Munchausen, but it will be my desire to draw to the attention of the American people two financial fairy tales more extravagant and more wonderful than any fairy tale ever related by fond mother to listening child, and yet both these financial fairy tales are absolutely true, their truth established firmly upon the rock of a positive fact.

Mr. Speaker, sometimes I am at utter loss to dig down into my own vocabulary and bring up words and sentences to properly portray a given subject, and so I find myself this morning when I attempt to properly paint a true word picture of two financial fairy tales greater in volume than John Law ever dreamed of engineering. But in the absence of words and sentences of my own, and by a gracious permission of the House to do so, I am privileged to incorporate in my remarks this morning an editorial article recently written by one of the three premier editorial writers in the world today—Harvey Newbranch, editor of the Omaha World Herald. The full text of the article to which I refer runs as follows:

Newspaper readers who still are not quite hard-boiled gasped the other day at the fairy tale of Charles W. Deeds. As a boy of 23, back in 1926, he made a modest $40 investment in an aircraft stock. And 3 years later those two $20 bills—perhaps they had not even been gold certificates—had grown to a value of $5,624,640!

Was it such miracles President Roosevelt had in mind when he distinguished between "fair profits" for business and industry and unconscionable profits?

A few days later another chapter of the story was told, even more miraculous.

F. B. Rentschler invested in that same aircraft stock. His brother later became president of a great New York bank. The president of the bank at that time was Charles E. Mitchell, with whose name Senate investigations have since made the reading public very familiar.

What happened to F. B. Rentschler and his investment?

He purchased 1,375 shares for $275. He sold 110 shares for $22. Then there was a 79-to-1 stock dividend. Then these shares, that had been multiplied 80 times, were exchanged for 219,604 shares of United Aircraft stock, then quoted at 97. The $275 investment had grown to $21,301,588! At the peak of the market, in 1929, the shares could have been sold for more than 35 millions.

Rentschler, however, did not do quite that well. He sold 159,604 shares at a profit of $9,414,868.36. He has left 60,000 shares, worth, at present prices, more than $2,000,000.

But that was by no means the whole of Rentschler's good fortune. He was an officer of the company. In 1929 he received $429,999 in salary and bonuses; in 1930, $343,000; in 1931, $244,247; in 1932, $199,100; in 1933, before he went off the salary list in September, $98,646, and $2,130 in director's fees.

Where did these enormous salary and bonus checks, these transcendent stock profits, come from? Out of whose pockets? Certainly out of someone's, or a lot of someones'.

We know where a part of them came from. They came out of the Treasury of the United States—the repository of taxpayers' funds—for the Government paid the company $40,000,000 in subsidies during that time for the aid and encouragement of the infant aviation industry. How much of that went into the Rentschler pocket, how much into other pockets, including young Deeds', is simply one of the mysteries of bookkeeping.

If any of us have shuddered, mildly or severely, because the President of the United States has shown some interest in the possibility of limiting profits and limiting salaries, perhaps the Deeds fairy tale and the Rentschler fairy tale, with the subsidy appendix, may bring a measure of reassurance.

Furthermore, these fairy tales may throw some light upon the moot problem of what really caused the depression.

Here is an investment of $40 mounting to more than $5,000,000 in 3 years' time; another of $275 reaching a peak of $35,000,000. And the Federal Government itself donating $40,000,000 to help make such fantastic profits possible and to help make possible annual salary and bonus checks reaching as high as $400,000. That money wasn't picked off of bushes. It was not snatched out of thin air. It came out of the work and sweat, the savings and the self-denial, of the people of this country. There is nowhere else it could come from.

And, of course, this fairy tale has to deal with the affairs of but two corporations which became one. That one is by no means among the largest of the many giants of industry and finance that were doing so exceedingly well by themselves, their officers, their stockholders, and their relatives and friends.

Together they succeeded in milking the country of wealth and incomes, concentrating them into a relatively few hands. What they gained, others lost. Those who lost had their buying power sharply reduced, if not cut off entirely. Those who gained got more than they would spend or could possibly spend. Consequently the effective demand for goods and commodities fell off. With failing demand prices tobogganed, and surpluses began to pile up. The rest of the sad story tells itself.

Sometimes it may seem that the Government at Washington is getting pretty radical. It is interfering with business, putting a curb on sturdy individualism, converting private rights and liberties into public power. But before criticism grows too unsparing it is well to stop and think of the conditions that came into being which must now be corrected, and of what those conditions did to the daily lives, the security and happiness of the whole American people.

The evils that all but wrecked a great Nation cannot be put down with a wooden lath or by a timid, compromising leadership.

If the foregoing two financial fairy tales are true (and there is evidence at hand to establish the exact truth of both of them), then the average American citizen may now well imagine how near this Republic of ours was to the jumping-off place prior to that day in March 1933 when a master hand laid hold upon the chariot of the Republic and quickly swerved it away from the brink of a precipice of revolution yawningly awaiting a governmental victim.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that I am rendering a real service to my country by being privileged to carry the Newbranch story of two financial fairy tales to the eyes of the American people generally; and if my supply of money would enable me to do so, I would not rest until I should have placed a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD containing this remarkable Newbranch article in the hands of the civics class in every public and parochial high school in America, there to be studied as a textbook superior to any other which today deals with the criminal conduct of predatory corporate wealth. The rule is that fairy tales are told to children to soothe them. I wish the Newbranch story of two financial tales could be told to the ear of every worthy American citizen to the end that he or she might be aroused to new determination to do his or her part in effort to loosen the grasp of those mighty moneyed interests which for so long have chokingly held the throat of the Republic, dictating financial policies for the welfare of organized wealth, and to the hurt of unorganized humanity.

DAIRY INDUSTRY PROGRAM OF WISCONSIN

Mr. HENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a letter from a friend of mine, Mr. Sanderson, an attorney of Wisconsin, together with a resolution adopted and approved by the Wisconsin State Chamber of Commerce and the Wisconsin Council of Agriculture at a joint meeting held on the subject of the Dairy Industry Program of Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENNEY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following:

PORTAGE, WIS., January 26, 1934.

Dr. C. W. HENNEY,
Member of Congress, Washington, D.C.

DEAR DR. HENNEY: I received your letter and I thank you for the prompt attention you have given my inquiries. I note that the Wisconsin Chamber of Commerce and the Wisconsin Council of Agriculture at a recent joint meeting adopted a plan for the control of dairy products which they wish to recommend to the Federal Government.

The Wisconsin Council of Agriculture has on it very experienced men in the agriculture industry in the State, including agricultural leaders in the University of Wisconsin. I presume that this plan was unanimously endorsed at a joint meeting of the Wisconsin Chamber of Commerce and the Council of Agriculture, and I presume you already have notice of what happened.

As you know butter is now selling at less than 20 cents a pound when, as a matter of fact, before the war along about 1908 to 1912 it sold in the wintertime at a price of 30 to 35 cents a pound. The present price, of course, is confiscatory to American agriculture.

The cotton farmer of the South has obtained very large benefits from the agriculture relief program and a fairly good program has been enacted for wheat and corn. Very little comparatively has been done for the dairy farmer with the resultant low prices.

I have looked over this plan and enclose a copy of it.

I think in the main the plan is very good and should be brought forcefully to the attention of the Secretary of Agriculture. There may be some details of it that need modification, but in looking it over I do not see at the outset any inherent weaknesses in it.

Yours sincerely,

T. H. SANDERSON.

A DAIRY INDUSTRY PROGRAM ADOPTED AND APPROVED BY THE WISCONSIN STATE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE AND THE WISCONSIN COUNCIL OF AGRICULTURE AT A JOINT MEETING HELD AT WAUSAU, WIS., ON JANUARY 20, 1934

(A) A VOLUNTARY CONTROL PLAN FOR DAIRY PRODUCTS ON A BUTTER-FAT BASIS

I. Features of a central plan that are essential to meet present situation:

(a) Program must make dairying relatively more profitable to established dairymen who cooperate in the program.

(b) Must bring about a positive check, if not an actual decrease, in the sales from farms.

(c) Must discourage, rather than encourage, farmers engaged in other types of farming from becoming dairymen.

(d) Must be voluntary on the part of participating farmers, and if possible, permit farmer to use his discretion as to methods of accomplishing the required reduction.

II. Taxes to provide money for benefit payments:

(a) Levy a processing tax collected on a butter-fat basis on all milk and milk products sold from the farm.

(b) Levy a compensating tax on dairy substitutes.

(c) The above processing and compensating taxes to be sufficient to finance adequate benefit payment.

III. Benefit payments to be paid to cooperating farmers:

(a) Benefit payments must be limited to contracting producers who actually effect reduction in sales.

(b) The method shall be by placing limitations on sales rather than on production, numbers of cows, or number of acres, because it permits dairymen to curb sales by culling low producers, disposing of diseased cows, less intensive feeding, or any other method that they may choose peculiar to their own individual farming business.

IV. Allocation and control of sales:

(a) A base allotment would be established from marketing records of creameries, cheese factories, condensaries, and milk plants covering a period of 5 years. Adjustments of base allotments to compensate for abnormal production conditions.

(b) Producer-distributors must furnish satisfactory evidence of past production to obtain base allotment.

(c) All sales of milk or milk products will be measured in terms of pounds of butter fat.

(d) Control agencies would concern themselves with only those who applied for benefits and submit evidence of proper adjustment of sales.

(B) SUPPLEMENTARY MEASURES FOR BENEFIT OF DAIRY INDUSTRY

I. American dairy farmers must be given preference in the domestic market if they are to reduce sales.

(a) Prevent importations of dairy products, fats, and oils.

(b) Provide adequate internal taxes on dairy substitutes.

II. Emphasize bovine-disease eradication.

(a) Offer an incentive to farmers to eradicate bovine tuberculosis and Bang's disease through sufficient indemnity to be paid upon proof of slaughter.

(b) Sufficient funds for carrying out such eradication programs should be drawn from appropriation to Department of Agriculture, similar to procedure now followed in paying indemnities for tuberculosis eradication.

III. Special emergency relief.

(a) It is desirable that Congress appropriate a special fund of at least $250,000,000 for an emergency-relief program that will fit into the general plan of production control so as to permit the dairy farmer to dispose of dairy animals as a means of reducing sales, such fund to be raised from other sources than a processing tax.

IV. Purchase and distribution of dairy products for relief.

(a) Purchase of dairy products to be distributed to persons on relief should be continued and, if possible, used as a market-stabilization feature through the making of purchases on the open market rather than on bids.

(b) All dairy products should be included in the purchasing program whenever advisable.

V. Develop a merchandising plan for dairy products.

(a) Give consideration to a program of increasing consumption of dairy products through an educational advertising program designed to create a lasting health and appetite appeal with the consuming public for dairy products.

(b) Develop uniform and adequate Federal standards of butter-fat content of dairy products with a view to improving quality and increasing consumption.

(c) Conduct research for finding new and more extensive uses of dairy products.

(The Wisconsin State Chamber of Commerce has affiliated with it about 60 of the largest and most influential chambers of commerce and trade associations. The Wisconsin Council of Agriculture is composed of the oldest, broadly recognized, and most experienced of the important farm organizations of Wisconsin. Other important farm organizations were independently represented. By agreement the Wisconsin State Chamber of Commerce appointed a committee consisting of Messrs. K. S. Reynolds, H. S. Wells, and W. H. Gharrity. The Wisconsin Council of Agriculture appointed a committee consisting of Messrs. Herman Ihde, Charles Dineen, and C. G. Huppert. These two committees met jointly as a committee on planning in connection with the fifth annual meeting of the Wisconsin State Chamber of Commerce, held at Wausau on Jan. 20, 1934. After hearing a great number of representatives of both business and agriculture and perusing a great many written plans for the relief of the dairy industry, the committee made the above report, which was unanimously adopted by the joint gathering of business men and farmers.)

COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS—LEAVE TO SIT DURING SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD], Chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, has requested me to ask unanimous consent that that committee may sit during the sessions of the House for the purpose of holding hearings.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors asks unanimous consent that that committee be allowed to sit during the sessions of the House for the purpose of holding hearings. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman mean for the entire session of the House?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I hope not. I hope it will not take any longer than probably 2 or 3 weeks.

Mr. SNELL. The majority leader sometimes objects to having committees sit during the entire sessions of the House.

Mr. BYRNS. I know that this is a very important and busy committee, and personally I shall not object.

Mr. SNELL. Then I shall not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLER. Four years ago on the evening of this day in the county courthouse at Marion in Williamson County, Ill., I delivered an address on Unemployment, its Cause and Cure that resulted in sending me to Congress, November 1930, and again to reelect me in 1932. It is my object here today to ask unanimous consent of this body of my colleagues to insert that speech in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD just as it was printed at that time and to add to that some comments on the same subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER]?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

MY PLATFORM AS A CANDIDATE FOR CONGRESS

I stand for:

Jobs for every man and woman who want work.

For the use of this labor in a great program of permanent national improvements, including the following:

First. Of all rivers for all purposes to the fullest extent practicable.

Second. For digging all those canals which our commercial uses require.

Third. For harbor improvements to keep abreast of the needs of our expanding commerce.

Fourth. For a series of national buildings adequate to all our needs—including hospitals for the best care possible for our suffering soldiery.

Fifth. For the building of a great system of purely national interstate trunkline motor roads connecting up all parts of our Union with our State highways.

Sixth. For restoring the income tax rates sufficiently to pay for all the above permanent national improvements.

I stand for carrying out in letter and in spirit the agreements we made with our soldiers—to put and keep those injured in as good condition economically as they would be in if they had not been injured.

I stand for the support of the entire Constitution.

I stand for laws compelling the granting of service pensions by all companies engaged in interstate commerce which have not already adopted this plan.

I would prevent by law the discharge of any man, or the denial of labor to any man or woman on account of age, by any companies engaged in interstate commerce.

I would support with all my power the best farm aid laws, including debentures if that should be necessary.

The laws and ideals I championed as State senator are the best possible guarantee of the kind of laws I will stand for as Congressman.

SENATOR KELLER'S RECORD OF SERVICE IN THE STATE SENATE OF ILLINOIS, 1913 TO 1917

Chairman of committee on roads, bridges, and highways, which wrote the hard roads law for Illinois.

Originated and wrote the semimonthly pay law.

Worked incessantly for the 8-hour law.

Fought hard for old-age pensions.

Championed the farmers' cooperative law.

Helped put over the power headlight law.

Stood for "1 day's rest in 7" bill.

Stood for the miners' bills and safety laws.

Directed the voting on and cast the deciding vote for the woman's suffrage law of Illinois.

Voted to ratify the income-tax amendment (the sixteenth) to the Federal Constitution.

Voted for the ratification of the seventeenth amendment to the Federal Constitution, providing for the election of United States Senators.

Was chairman of the elections committee in the forty-ninth general assembly. (The only Democrat chosen chairman of any committee at that session.)

Held two senate election contests. Established the precedent of counting votes according to the rules laid down by the Supreme Court, preventing further thefts of Senate seats.

Secured the appropriation for the beautiful auditorium building for the Southern Illinois Normal University at Carbondale, Ill.

Stood, and stands, for the establishment of the University of Southern Illinois, in connection with the Southern Illinois Normal University at Carbondale.

UNEMPLOYMENT

Unemployment is the most important question that has ever faced the industrial world. No other question approaches it. The happiness and prosperity of our whole Nation is at stake. It means as much to the farmer, the business man, and the professional man as it does to the laboring man. The success and happiness of all these depend on the solution of this one question. If we solve it rationally and permanently, as we can do, it means 50 years of unbroken prosperity for the whole American people.

On January 1, 1930, there were 3,000,000 men in enforced idleness in the United States. That many more were working part time. If we accept 2,000,000 of this number be chargeable to the debacle in the stock market in November and to the seasonal unemployment, this leaves 1,000,000 normally idle at this time of year. It is the case of this million who would have been idle any way, which constitutes the great problem of American economics and which must be settled by political action.

The American people are by far the richest people in the world. We are no longer a debtor nation, borrowing capital to work on. We have paid our debts to the rest of the world and have ourselves loaned the world many billions besides. We by far excel the rest of the world in industrial development. Mass production is an American achievement. The wealth of all our people taken together exceeds the inconceivable sum of $400,000,000,000. Our people have a normal yearly income of nearly a hundred billion dollars.

This is the age of machinery—the use of power to do the work of men. Today one American using labor-saving machinery produces on an average 30 times as much as his Revolutionary ancestor. Wealth has increased just as ability to produce has increased. No people have ever made things as we make them. Science and invention have touched the storehouses of nature and an age of miracles is here. Wish for whatever we will today and it becomes a reality tomorrow. Yet with all our wealth, with all our achievement, with all our confidence in our ability to do great things, we sit by with folded hands and accept periods of depression as though they were necessary evils, and wait supinely for them to pass. We never seem to ask what is the use of going through several years of poverty, misfortune, bankruptcy, and crime, when we ought to know that the exercise of intelligence can cure the condition. And more important still, we ought also to know that the exercise of unselfish forethought can entirely forestall these periods of depression. We can do both these very things—cure this depression and prevent the return of depressions. That is the great task we have set for ourselves.

We must understand that when a condition so general as the present hard times exists that there is one general cause for it which overshadows all others, and which alone ought to be considered and removed first. The direct cause of the present widespread business depression is unemployment. There is one simple remedy—jobs for all our idle workers.

When labor-saving machinery first came into use, the basic cause of our present unemployment was born. America for the past hundred years has been growing by leaps and bounds into this wonderful age of machinery. The physical power of man was no longer sufficient to do what he wanted done. Small waterfalls answered his requirements first. Then the steam boiler and steam engine came and named this "The Age of Steam." A quarter of a million men were put to work producing coal to feed the mouths of these giants. Electricity came to distribute this power. The internal-combustion engine came to supplement steam. Great rivers are picked up and dropped over dams, turning their floods into electric current. And all these tremendous sources of power are devoted to saving the physical labor of men for transportation, manufacture, agriculture, lighting, and every conceivable service. Taken altogether, it is therefore well named, "Labor-saving machinery." It has set a new measure of productivity.

The most important single result has been to so cheapen everything manufactured by quantity production that all those things, the cost of which originally prevented their purchase, have now come into very general use. This makes such conditions of living possible to the average man as were undreamed of a hundred years ago. Men with steady labor in any American industry live better than the kings of a hundred and fifty years ago. It is only natural and right that men shall seek to continue that constantly increasing betterment of living conditions, and we are going to do that very thing.

But we ought at the same time to see clearly that if the increased use of constantly improving labor-saving machinery were to result only in throwing men out of employment, with no other labor to be had, that starvation would stare these men in the face.

Now America is not going to let anybody starve who is willing to work. Since it is so clearly to the benefit of all that men shall continue to be thrown out of work by labor-saving machinery, it naturally follows that all who are benefited shall share in the responsibility of guaranteeing employment for the men which labor-saving machinery displaces.

We ought not to falter a moment in extending constantly the use of machinery for saving labor and for infinitely improving the present living conditions of men. And this must and can certainly be done in such a way that all men shall participate in the benefits and advantages which result from labor-saving machinery, the men who labor and the men who are thrown out of work as well as all others. We can do all that if we use the opportunity at hand.

As long as we had a West to go to the throwing of men out of employment by labor-saving machinery was not such a hardship. Often indeed it put a man into a much better position in a new country than he had lost at home. But little by little, this new West was settled up. All the land of any value was taken and all the opportunities embraced, until for the past few years there is no longer any West to go to. And during these last few years where the machine went in, the man went out to part or total enforced idleness. This cannot continue. It is an entirely new condition, and we must face it intelligently.

Another result of the use of labor-saving machinery has been the building up of fortunes of such magnitude, and incomes of such extent as men could not have believed possible a hundred years ago.

It is true that labor-saving machinery has created countless new jobs, several new industries, a whole new era indeed. Nevertheless, as machinery is improved all the time it constantly reduces the number of men required in all lines of industry, including these new industries which it has itself created. It is beyond doubt the ultimate result that every time a labor-saving machine goes in men go out. And this constantly operating principle accounts entirely for the normal and constantly increasing army of the unemployed. It is not a temporary condition which can be met and cleared away by any temporary measure however well intended. It is a permanent condition that can only be met by permanent provisions and on a scale to guarantee against failure.

Nineteen industrial countries of the world have already accepted responsibility for unemployment. Forty-six million workers have unemployment insurance under Government control. It amounts in fact mostly to a guarantee against starvation while a man is out of work. It has been of service only for this purpose. In Great Britain and Northern Ireland 11,000,000 workers are under one of these systems of unemployment insurance called the dole. It is a pay to those who are idle by those who are at work by the employers of those who are working and by the general government jointly. There are more than a million idle men and women constantly drawing these doles. More than a quarter of a billion dollars a year is paid out for this idleness.

Those who receive doles do absolutely no work for the money received. It is a direct tax on industry to support idleness. It is justifiable and necessary to prevent starvation only if no method of providing work for these idle men and women can be found.

TAXES

Prior to 1913 the Federal Government depended principally upon tariff and internal-revenue taxes for its income. This system had been found both insufficient and inequitable. In that year the sixteenth amendment became a part of the Constitution. It grants Congress the power to tax incomes, whether of individuals or corporations, and inheritances. It is founded on the very just ground that men should pay taxes according to their ability to pay.

This income-tax amendment came in answer to a long-continued and well-justified agitation for equalization of taxation. The spirit of it cannot be overridden or ignored without again awakening those sentiments of injustice and convictions of inequality which originally brought this amendment into our Constitution. Social peace always comes with social justice. It will not remain without it. If we would make wealth permanent and safe against wrong-headed radicalism, as it ought to be, wealth itself must honestly and willingly bear its full share of the burdens of government under the spirit of our basic laws.

There is a proportional relation between income taxes and property taxes. When that comparable equality has been established, income taxes ought not to be lowered unless the tax on property values can be lowered proportionately. Unless this balance is approximated we destroy the idea of equalization in taxation, which lies at the foundation of the whole plan of the tax on net profits.

There are, therefore, two principal kinds of taxes with which we have to deal—property tax and income tax.

Property tax is the tax levied on real estate and personal property for the use of the State, counties, townships, municipalities, and schools. Property taxes must be paid whether the property is earning money or not. If it is not paid, the property is sold to pay the taxes. Everybody pays property taxes whether he owns property or not. That is all added into the rents of all kinds.

Income tax is the tax laid by the United States Government and by some States on the net income of corporations and individuals. The corporations all pay at the same rate on whatever amount they make clean and clear of all expenses. Individuals who make an amount clean and clear of all expenses of $4,000 a year or more pay an income tax to the Government.

Everybody pays income taxes, too, whether directly to the Government or not, because the corporations and individuals who do pay directly to the Government simply put that much extra onto every item of purchase or service. In short, all the people pay their part of all kinds of taxes, and all the people have a direct interest in all taxes and have a right to say how all taxes shall be paid and expended.

You would think from propaganda for tax reduction that these income taxes are burdensome in the extreme. Let us take a look at this, and let us hold in mind that if they make nothing they pay nothing; that if an individual makes less than $4,000 a year he pays nothing. There are 2,440,000 individuals who pay taxes on net incomes. The number of these who pay on net incomes from the minimum of $4,000 a year to $25,000 a year is 2,347,000 individuals. Now all these together pay $150,000,000 a year, or an average of $63.91 apiece. The remaining 93,000 individuals, the very rich, pay $940,000,000, so all the 2,440,000 individuals together pay a total of $1,090,000,000. The corporations pay $1,400,000,000. The married man who has a wife but no children, who has a net income of $4,000 a year, pays the Government the awful sum of $5.63. Yes; $5.63 and no more. If he has children, he is allowed $300 additional exemption for each one.

In England, if a man earns less than $650, he pays no income tax. But on everything in excess of this, up to $3,000 a year, he pays 10 percent, and above that he pays 20 percent. So the comparison is easy enough to make—on $4,000—an American pays $5.63; an Englishman pays $800. You might hear an Englishman grumble but you'd never hear him "holler." Americans are as good sportsmen as the English. If we show the American income-tax payers that a much heavier income tax is needed for the benefit of all, they will be found very generally coming across willingly and patriotically.

The question of where national income taxes are paid in nowise affects the right and duty to expend the money where and as the National Government sees fit. Most of the taxes are paid in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, and the other great centers of population, because those places have become the most convenient centers for carrying on business. But suppose the individuals who pay national income taxes should prefer to live in Nevada, and the great corporations should consider it more advantageous to have their places of business in Reno, then 90 percent of the income taxes would be paid in Nevada, and Congressmen from all the great cities would be the first to vociferously declare the truth, that the national income tax is gathered alike from all sections of the country, as much from the people of Arizona, Oregon, or Arkansas in proportion to the population and service received as from the people of New York and Maine. And this is true wherever national income taxes are paid or by whomsoever paid. It is equally true that every part of America will be benefited by every dollar put into permanent national improvements, wherever made.

WAGES

Up to a few years ago men who employed labor thought honestly the cheaper they could get labor done the better off they were. But in the last decade some of the wiser ones have learned that the rights of humanity are actually involved in plain economics—that steady employment and high wages are the best boon the business world ever found.

As soon as we began paying wages high enough so men could buy, they did buy everything they wanted, and every line of business began to thrive. As long as men were employed business of all kinds flourished greatly. As soon as employment began to wane business of all kinds naturally began going down, and as unemployment increased we began to have hard times. There are always good times when everybody is at work. There are always hard times when large numbers are idle. Good times or hard times is a matter of employment or unemployment—nothing more, nothing less.

To increase the ability of the people to buy is the only way we can improve business. The only way we can do that is to provide employment. We cannot do that by property tax, because property tax is already so high, and property values so low, that we have reached, if we have not indeed passed, the taxable limit.

Incomes depend entirely on prosperity, and, in the long run, will vary as the tide of prosperity rises and falls. When prosperity is general, taxable incomes will be numerous and the rates of income high. When prosperity wanes, the taxable incomes will decrease and the rate of income will be low. Employment is the basis of all prosperity. Unemployment destroys it.

Every hour wasted in enforced idleness is irretrievably lost to the service of mankind. Enforced idleness causes a greater loss than all the destruction of war.

Every dollar not assisting in useful industry is a dead dollar—and the waste of unused money is as great a loss as the enforced idleness of men.

The streets are full of idle men. The hoards of hidden places, and the banks, are full of idle money. Bring the two together and industry springs instantly into life. All that is required to bring permanent happiness and prosperity to the one and permanent profit to the other is the use of a little vision and the application of common sense by giving men employment. We have learned in the last 10 years that low wages, part-time employment, and bad working conditions is bad business—that high wages, steady employment, and good working conditions is good business.

Now we must learn and apply the same rule to our governmental affairs—that a tightwad national policy is a bad national policy; that expenditures in keeping with the national wealth and proper national income is good national policy.

REAL ESTATE

Real estate, from the beginning has been considered the safest, solidest investment possible. Long ago it was established as the standard for all other investments. So when real estate everywhere becomes a questionable investment—most questionable, as it now is—it ought to convince anyone that something is radically wrong. Income is the ultimate measure of all values. Incomes from farms, and only to a lesser extent, from city property as well, has become so much smaller than it was 10 years ago, that nobody wants real estate any more. The result is that real-estate values all over America have gone tumbling, in the big cities even, though not yet to the same extent that it has on the farms and in smaller cities. Very few farms comparatively are paying any net return on labor and investment. Many do not pay labor and taxes. The consequence is, very few farms are salable at one fourth their former value—while everybody was at work.

Beginning neary 20 years ago, as employment became more general, wages increased. Buying power extended and all products rose to higher price levels. When employment became universal the price of farm products reached a new high level with ready sale. All farm products were produced at a profit. The price of farm land went up. As long as employment was general these conditions continued. But, beginning the latter part of 1921 and early part of 1922, unemployment began here and there and yonder. It slowly but steadily increased. Farms felt it first. The price of farm products gradually fell off as unemployment increased. Land prices began to sag. These conditions gradually extended to all sections of the country. At the end of 7 years permanent enforced idleness had reached an average of half a million men and part-time unemployment reached a million more. Land prices had collapsed. January 1, 1930, found grain prices at the lowest level in many years in the very face of Government aid. Unemployment had strangled farming and partially paralyzed all other industry.

Nearly every honest bank failure in this series of years was actually due to the result of constantly increasing unemployment. It so reduced the sale value of property that the banks held as security as to compel them to accept such losses as to destroy completely their capital and make failure of many good banks inevitable. This was known as frozen assets.

The same condition prevails in town and city property to a much greater extent than any of us have yet thought. A certain building in one of our fine cities in Egypt pays a gross income in rentals of $14,400. The general taxes on the building are $7,000, special tax, $400; insurance and upkeep is $4,000—the net income is $3,000 a year. Now this same building when everybody was employed brought twice the rental it brings now. It paid the same general and special tax, the same insurance, and the same upkeep. So it paid a net return of $17,400 a year instead of $3,000. Under present depression, that building is worth a little less than one fifth of what it was when everybody was at work. This same rule applies in varying degrees to every piece of real estate in America. In short, if we make employment general and permanent all over the country, all real estate—farms, city property, and all—will return to a reasonable basis and remain there as long as employment continues.

We have put off and put off our national improvements a full hundred years, till all the unsupplied needs of that great lapse of time stand staring us in the face, calling to be builded, now when we are no longer a debtor Nation. It will take 50 years to catch up with our national building program if we keep every man at work.

I am not asking to put men to work just to give idle men something to do. But I am pointing out to you a long-neglected series of improvements that everyone must see ought to be done—tremendous works that need to be done more than any other work in America—work we are abundantly able to do. And here stand the men ready, nay, anxious, to do the work—men who need work to do—men who must have work to enable them and their families to live. We have stood back as a nation and let the State and cities and counties and townships and villages do the work and pay the bills from direct tax on property. We must now accept our national obligation and set about building these long-deferred permanent national improvements.

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS

Under normal conditions, every time a street is paved, it raises the value of the property affected very much more than the paving costs. Every time a street is paved, it is profitable to the whole city.

The hard roads of Illinois are worth vastly more than they have cost the State. The improved roads in all the States are enormously more valuable than the expense of building them. The value to the United States of all the improved roads in all the States is 10 times greater than the money they cost the National Government.

The Panama Canal is a splendid investment. Every adequate post office is worth more than it costs, and every other Government building, every harbor improvement, and every other Government work which is permanently and well done is a good investment for the whole people.

OUR NEEDS

Let us understand fully that America is the most backward of all civilized nations in river improvements, canals, harbor developments, public building, and in national roads. There lie our tremendous needs.

Every civilized nation in the world owns and controls all the navigable waters within its boundaries, whether rivers, lakes, or arms of the sea, and has every right for canals, harbors, and public buildings and every road right necessary for the broadest national service.

Our first necessity is to declare our national responsibility for all these and accept it as our duty to improve them all for the benefit of our people. When the Nation does this all those local antagonisms which have so often prevented desirable national improvement will naturally disappear. That plan would entail the inauguration of a far-reaching national system of permanent internal improvements providing:

First. For control of all our national rivers for the purpose of improving all of them to prevent destruction from overflow, and to develop their channels for all commercial uses insofar as practicable.

Second. For building those canals and improvements in waterways which for a long time we have recognized as necessary to our best interests nationally as well as the desirable new ones.

Third. For deepening, equipping, and protecting our harbors sufficiently to care adequately for the ever-increasing commerce in which we must of necessity more and more engage to assure our own financial prosperity.

Fourth. A great series of national public buildings, useful, beautiful, adequate to our needs for every locality where national use requires them—including the hospitals for the kindly humane care of our suffering soldiery.

Fifth. For the building of a great system of purely national interstate trunk-line highways connecting up all parts of the Union with the State highways.

No piecemeal policy along any of these lines has given or can give rational results. A national program for all these improvements extending over a sufficient period of years and with sufficient annual expenditures to bring them all to full-grown permanent development is the absolute requirement. Our ideas will grow with the doing of this work. There is 50 years of labor for all our idle men in this program, and prosperity for the whole country.

Let us make no mistake. A billion dollars would provide an income of $1,000 a year for a million men now idle. And everybody knows that if you put a million men to work along new lines of endeavor that two more million will be required to fill the places not now busy.

If as much consideration had been given to making secure the jobs of those who had them; for providing jobs for those who did not have them; and for looking out ahead for jobs for those who were in danger of needing them—if as much consideration had been given these questions as was given to reducing the income taxes of rich individuals and prosperous corporations, there need not be an idle man in America today.

Following the World War, the chief interest and the constantly repeated slogan of our politicians seemed to be "reduce taxes", "reduce taxes", a second time; "reduce taxes" a third time, and "reduce taxes" a fourth time. Every one of these tax reductions was an income-tax reduction, taking the burden off of those who are most prosperous and best able to pay. While property taxes, taxes mostly on homes, more than doubled, the tax on net incomes were cut in two. It was a short-sighted blunder. Senators and Representatives did not ask whose taxes were being reduced—what would be the result—whether a better use could be found for the money—whether the tax on net incomes should be reduced while property taxes increased—whether there was a relation between tax on property and tax on net incomes.

And each time a reduction of the taxes on these net incomes was made, Congress was not satisfied simply to reduce the income taxes from that time on but gave back a full year's taxes already due and owing to the Government to the prosperous corporations and individuals. Four times this was done, and then last December, when they did not dare reduce the tax on incomes again because there would not be enough money to run the Government even under the present national tightwad policy, our congressional charity association, commonly known as "Congress", made a Christmas present of $160,000,000 of your money and my money to those same prosperous corporations and individuals. Congress refused to use that money to give employment to the countless thousands of men looking for work, unbelievable as that may seem. There was absolutely no pretense that this great sum would benefit the people one penny. It was very frankly admitted on the floor of the Senate that it would not. There were two supposed reasons assigned for giving away this $160,000,000. First, that the Government did not need the money; and that therefore, presumably, it should be given to the corporations and rich individuals who didn't need it either. Second, this hundred and sixty millions was given back for psychological effect on business, it apparently being presumed that if you do not need money, you have a psychology and get money—and if you do need money, you have no psychology and get no money. (Think this over.)

The Senate completely overlooked the fact that the Government needs billions of dollars of permanent national improvements; that the doing of work is the greatest and most important business in the world; and that the men and women who do this work should be the first consideration of our lawmakers.

If you want to get the whole effect of this remarkable attempt to justify this fifth act of the congressional charity association's fawning folly, turn to the Senate's action as reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for December 13 and 14, 1929, and don't fail to appreciate the very few Senators on both sides of the Chamber who opposed this gift, but who were "steam-rolled" by the overwhelming vote of both parties in that body.

I want to say to you, however, that I have not found so much dishonesty among officials. Their failure consists mostly in accepting the customs of the past as binding on the present, failure to distinguish between essentials and nonessentials, failure to look out ahead and plan to meet conditions as they arise, failure to recognize new conditions and the passing of the old ones; lack of vision, lack of aggressive courage, but, most of all, failure to think for America as a national unit.

There is not a solitary measure or proposal before Congress at the present time that anybody claims or believes will lead us out of our present unfortunate condition. They are disputing mightily over nonessentials. They have reached a stalemate. They are headed nowhere and have already arrived there politically. It ought to be plain that those policies which have led us into this condition can in no possible way lead us out. A new plan is the necessity. Even our politicians should see that much.

BUSINESS SOUND

Our rich men rush constantly into print to assure us that American business is sound at bottom. Certainly it is. Anybody ought to know that. Of course, we have as much and as good real estate as we ever had. We have as much coal and iron and copper and lead and zinc and all other natural resources that have enabled us to wax rich. We have the man power, the men and women, the desire, and the ability to work mightily; we have better housing and better health; better ability to do great things than ever before; the average of life is longer; we are better educated; we are the creditor Nation of the whole earth; for the first time in our history we have attained financial independence; we no longer need to ask what we can do; it is now purely a question of what we want to do; we have a far greater amount of money than any other country has ever had; a greater amount than we ourselves have ever had before. All of which ought to make it plain to anybody that there is no justifiable reason why we have such wide-spread and stringent hard times; why enforced idleness, poverty, and distress should be abroad in the land; why all classes engaged in useful industry should face the future with misgiving; why thousands of farm homes and homes in cities have been sold for taxes in the past few years; why within this 8- or 9-year period we have slumped from the highest state of prosperity in our history to comparaticely the lowest. They do not seem to know that this condition is the result of a cause and that there is a very simple remedy for it.

There is no necessity to search for some new or untried way to get the money to do away with unemployment. The income tax furnished abundant and a well-justified source for the necessary money. The law has been held valid by the courts; the method of accounting is well understood and accepted by business men and corporations everywhere; the department of collecting is already established; the cost of collecting would be little if any more for a higher rate than for a lower rate; the whole work of Congress necessary to secure the larger amount would consist only in raising the rate. The rate can be raised as quickly as it was lowered; 30 days would abundantly suffice. The income tax is the solution of the source of the money to put our idle men to work. A minimum of a billion dollars a year should be added to the present income tax, and that amount used exclusively for paying for these permanent national improvements.

Industry has permitted the growth of unemployment because it has not understood the effect of it nor seen the necessity of preventing it. Industry is too intimately connected with the result of unemployment to see or apply the remedy. Industry cannot solve it. Localities cannot solve it. It is Nation-wide in its origin and extent. It can only be solved by the Nation upon which the prosperity and permanency of all localities and all industries everywhere depends.

MEN AND FORTUNES

No man has such towering ability as to be able through his own talents and own energy alone to amass these great fortunes. No man has such exalted genius as to alone earn the tremendous incomes which many rich men of the present day receive. Every one of them owes the vastly greater part of these great fortunes and these stupendous incomes to the opportunity which the American Government offered them. And these fortunes and these incomes would melt away in 30 days without the protection with which the American Government surrounds them.

It therefore follows as a matter of justice and common sense that they should pay to the Government a sufficient part of these incomes to maintain it in continuing opportunity equal to their own for the rest of its citizens and for the protection of all.

Government is a partnership. Every citizen is a partner with his Government, whether rich or poor. He owes his support to it to the extent of his fortune, and his life if need be. It in turn owes him a fair opportunity in the pursuit of happiness and protection of his life, liberty, and property.

If we now had the money in the Treasury which our generous statesmen have contributed as charity to those who did not need it, a total in the five gifts of approximately $2,000,000,000, we could put every idle man in America to work and keep him at work 2 years without taking another penny.

What rate of income tax must be restored to provide the money necessary to build these great permanent national improvements can be readily calculated. But it would likely be about the same rate which existed after the second income-tax reduction following the World War. But so long as the income-tax payer has no less money at the end of the year than he would have had with this existing lower tax rate and the accompanying hard times, he surely would have no room to complain. In fact, the increased prosperity which universal employment will bring about will require but a small part of the increased profits which it will assure to every man engaged in useful industry.

American workingmen don't want doles. They want work, opportunity to serve. But America is not going to let children be stunted, nor starved. And I say to you now that America, acting nationally, is either going to pay out money for work or for idleness. We must take our choice between the two whether we want to or not.

If America should pay doles, it would be vastly more than England pays. It will cost as much to keep men idle as it will to keep them at work.

AGE LIMIT

In closing this address, I must call your attention to a condition which our unwise captains of industry have imposed upon us.

It has become a custom in most industries in recent years to throw men out of work at some arbitrary age—sometimes at 45, very generally at 50. And once a man past 50 is out of a job it is the rule that he can never again find employment. This is at a time when men generally need incomes most for educating their families, and for laying by the money necessary to protect them and their wives against want in old age. This custom has grown up with the idea that by getting very young men, you can, by rushing them, get a little more work out of them than you can out of older men. Henry Ford has shown conclusively the economic folly of this idea. I denounce the inhumanity of it. A man is not going to starve because he is 45 or 50, or 60, or any other age. Congress, that ought to be the heart of America, should at once by proper law prevent this custom in all corporations coming under the rules of interstate commerce. That would set the pace. That would shock the drivers of youth into some understanding of what shame this insanity leads them to. It would teach them that this is a Government for human beings. That laws and customs must be in the interest of humanity. I would crush the thought that great splendid America is going to permit anybody to be starved who is willing to work, no matter what his age.

Mr. KELLER. We are in the midst of the greatest revolution in the history of civilization. It is a revolution of peace. It seeks a rational solution of our difficulties. It demands justice. It will accept nothing less. It of necessity goes to the very foundation of human rights. It takes as its basis the first sentence in the great Declaration of Independence:

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, and that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men.

The whole political system which we had inherited from the thousands of years of drudgery and suppression of human rights was based entirely upon man's inability to produce by hand more than a meager part of the things he desired. It was the age-old era of poverty handed down by inexorable custom. The coming of power-driven machinery has in the meantime brought the era of abundance. The laws for government of poverty are totally unfitted for use in the presence of abundance. The one is the law for the few, the other must be the law for the many.

The old system, founded on the doctrine of "laissez faire", was continued and the benefit of mechanical invention—the application of power to the doing of work—fell into the hands of the few. They grabbed the reward for themselves and excluded the workers from most of the benefits. The drudgery, poverty, and suppression of human rights was continued through this period of 150 years of tremendous change.

If at the beginning of this industrial revolution governments had seen the necessity of taking this gigantic step forward for the benefit of the great mass instead of letting it fall into the hands of the few, poverty could have been banished from the homes of civilized men. A hundred and fifty years of struggle, failure, sorrow, poverty, and inexcusable starvation could have been prevented.

As it is, we must grope through the mist of uncertainty of 150 years of unplanned government and seek out the haven of security for all the future days of humanity.

At present we are engaged in the Herculean task of curing the most far-reaching panic and depression in our history. It will require still more heroic measures than we have already taken and the application of them for a much longer period of time than we now appear to contemplate. Let us not deceive ourselves in this matter.

A study of the recovery from all other panics since the abolition of slavery shows clearly that prosperity returned only as reemployment came and was made permanent. The same rule is bound to apply here with much greater force and certainty. In all those panics of 1873, 1893, 1907, and 1921 it was a matter of starving through with heartbreaking poverty, misery, and crime. This is the first time we have been sane enough, human enough to boldly announce that as a last resort the national Government will permit no suffering because of unemployment. Whether avowedly so or not, it is an acceptance of national responsibility for unemployment, as it always has been in fact. For the first time in our history we have set out avowedly to bring back prosperity by furnishing employment to provide for purchasing power, to raise prices, provide for the payment of debts, restore the credit stream for the normal carrying on of business, and the basis of it all is jobs. If we fail in that, we will fail in all. After many months of planning a Public Works program will be ready for spring. But this has not been accepted by the municipalities to anything like the extent we had hoped for, simply because people are afraid to pile up more debts until prosperity has returned. There will, of course, be a large amount of work on these so-called "self-liquidating projects" when this Public Works program gets under way. But even at the best the number of men it will put to work will be uncertain, and uncertainty is the one thing we cannot at present tolerate.

The Government has already put forward a plan of work that promises to make a new country out of many sections and is bringing back hope to 4,000,000 of our unwillingly idle. I refer to the only work of importance we have so far given, the C.W.A. The appreciation of what this work means is well indicated by what happened when employment was curtailed. A shout of protest went up all over the country. It was a well-justified protest. There is no possible excuse for curtailing that activity. It ought to be continued and extended until every man in America has a job. It should and must be continued for many months. In my estimation the very minimum at which we can rationally consider the beginning of slackening this work is a year from next May, not May 1934. There are such terrible gaps to be filled, debts for living to be paid, a little laid up on which to exist while seeking reemployment in industry. To in anywise limit this activity will jeopardize the recovery upon which we have entered. We should continue to organize the C.W.A. constantly along more efficient lines for achievement, and add to the organization until universal employment ensues. That is the only thing that will restore the national income.

Let us see: The national income approximated 90 billions per year in 1928 and 1929. It fell to below 40 billions in 1932, a net loss of annual income of a minimum of $50,000,000,000—more than twice enough to pay our national debt, lost in 1 year. To restore the national income is our great economic necessity. If it should require that we spend five billions for work to restore the national income, it would be exercising the best possible economy. No picayune policy can take us out of this terrible condition. We must spend every dollar necessary to accomplish our purpose beyond question—beyond doubt. Any other policy will endanger our success.

If the newspapers are right and the administration asks for only $450,000,000 to carry the C.W.A. over to May 1, I shall certainly offer an amendment to that bill to provide a billion and a half, enough to put it over a year at least, and that will not be too much.

We may as well open our eyes to the fact that most of these things we are doing as emergency measures will of necessity become permanent. The obligation of the Government to present an opportunity for a job for every man and woman who wants to work is fundamental. It is of necessity a permanent policy and the people will demand that it be recognized as such.

The Senate investigation of the stock-market conditions is sufficient proof of the fact that if we collect the taxes due us there will be sufficient money to carry on this work largely without additional taxes.

Of course, it will cost money. Of course, we cannot continue indefinitely to sell bonds to pay for this. But the very minute the Government stands ready to guarantee jobs, that very minute the people are going willingly to vote to provide the money necessary to enter upon a pay-as-we-go policy, if the tax is primarily for the purpose of assuring jobs. Last year I offered a bill to this full purpose. It is worth the study of any man interested in providing security to men and women in every walk of life. The study of panics since the liberation of slaves ought to indicate clearly that following every one of these panics some years were required to starve through the inexcusable depressions which followed them. We have learned not to permit starvation; we should also have learned to prevent the conditions which cause starvation. If we permit another panic and depression in this country, it will be only because of our stupidity, ignorance, and cowardice. We ought to see that the days of swollen fortunes are over. The stock gamblers shall no longer rob industry and starve the producers of wealth.

The days of the gambler's fortune are definitely passed. We must not only take charge of our currency and foreign exchange as we are doing but also we must take complete control of the credits of our country for the benefit of our people. We have taken several long steps in this direction. We must not falter in the final march to this end. A study of the facts makes it clear that enough work is already in sight to absorb the time of every idle man on permanent national improvements for 50 years to come, and when we shall have civilized ourselves over that period by equalized opportunity and equal rewards for equal service there will be another 50 years of work ready to hand. We must see with perfect clarity that it is our business to create and maintain prosperity. The overabundance of a small group of profiteers and the resulting undersupply of the great mass of our people is the national disgrace of our time. In this era of the new deal we must see to it that every producer of wealth, the farmers, the miners, the transporters of our commerce, the man who produces wealth along every line must be put on a basis of equality of opportunity with every other producer of wealth and at the same time we must deny the reward of service to him who does not in fact serve.

It is simply and solely a question of using the political power already solidly in the hands of all the people of America. It is a matter of intelligence applied to fair division of the wealth that is already being produced. Because everyone, even a child, knows that there is great abundance in America for all. Every intelligent man also knows that present wealth—the result of effort—is so unfairly divided as to be out of all proportion to the service rendered. Every thinker—and America is full of them in every walk of life—knows that (once) in proportion as we arrive at a method of more equitable division of the wealth produced, that production can be multiplied to meet every requirement and desire; that we can meet all requirements in half the working hours we now use; that even as our desires extend into new requirements we can meet them also, and still further reduce the hours of work to the point where drudgery is entirely eliminated.

The doing of all this requires no new fine-spun theories. It requires no change in our form of government. It requires no new system. We can do all this and retain capitalism as the vehicle of our efforts, if capitalism is willing to make the necessary adjustments to harmonize present conditions with already attainable ideals.

From the beginning men have delighted in contest. The hard-headed ancestors of America, coming from many lands, brought the scars of conflict with them. The recollection of long battles against injustice, persecution, tyranny, and poverty have given us reason to rejoice at partial victory so far achieved over these things in America. It has given us also the hardihood and persistence necessary to enable us to struggle through every discouraging experience, to success in achievement along every line we attempt. Let us, however, understand fully that the power to do all we may desire to do lies already and unquestionable fully within the hands of the American people. They may, if they feel it necessary, change our present Constitution as radically as they see fit. They may, if they desire, destroy and completely replace capitalism. But we should also know that the people will do no such thing unless they are driven to it. Those who are the recipients of special favor and of uncompromising attitude against necessary change are the dangerous element in our present situation—they are the real anarchists of America. They wave the red flag of privilege in the faces of the people and dare them to take what they, the people, have themselves created.

It is not necessary, therefore, that we provide some easy new method of achieving economic equality. We are quite able to do everything we need to do with the Government and system already in hand. There will be this certain advantage, that the cry of "wolf", the fear of new theories, of untried remedies cannot be raised against us, and the same courage and intelligence which would be required to adopt and use a new system, will get us further, more safely and more surely on the way with the system we now have.

God gave us the natural resources upon which to exert our energy and ingenuity. Outside these all wealth is due to industry—to work, to service.

Wealth is stored up work; wealth considered as a whole represents the combined storehouse of the energy of all the people of a given nation.

Wealth permits the great benefits of leisure, the joy of living—the indulgence in study, mental aspiration, spiritual uplift, the recognition of universal brotherhood, with the resulting beliefs in and struggle to attain equality among men as brothers.

Cooperation—the deeply implanted will of God—has grown out of necessity to be expressed in the ultimate equality of those who serve. To this day and generation has come the ability to see and understand the motives which have underlain and moved men in government throughout all history, and the opportunity to reinterpret those principles in the interest of humanity.

America was born with the ending of necessary poverty. It came into existence as a government at the very time labor-saving machinery was ushered upon the stage of mankind. It has grown up as the hum of the wheels of industry has grown. It has no tradition to bind it to the outworn theories back of the age of iron—the age of steam. The American Revolution and the industrial revolution were born together, twins of the eighteenth century. One came to give and finally has given political equality. The other came to give and must give economic equality. The one has made the world safe for democracy. The other must guarantee security to humanity. Political democracy, born of political revolution; industrial democracy, born of industrial revolution—one was the answer to tyranny; the other the answer to poverty. Neither can exist permanently without the other. Political equality puts full power into the hands of its possessors, to assert, compel, and maintain economic equality.

The destruction of tyranny came with the intelligence to see, the courage to declare, and the will to fight for political equality. The banishment of poverty only awaits the assertion of our intelligence to see that it can be banished; the courage to set about it; the necessary will to struggle for it; and poverty stands ready to depart, condemned and thwarted.

We must unite under the leadership of our great President who possesses the high intelligence and courage to carry out the dynamic ideas necessary to put into effect this peaceful revolution—this new deal.

H.R. 2855

Mr. FOULKES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD to include a copy of the bill H.R. 2855.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FOULKES. Mr. Speaker, on January 16 last I addressed my remarks largely to the manner of administering farm loans by the Federal Land Bank of St. Paul in connection with the Farm Credit Administration, and at that time I offered some mild criticism regarding its operation in the States of North Dakota and Minnesota and my own State of Michigan.

Being a large landowner myself, with many acres under the plow, and one whose associations and friendships are almost entirely among the agricultural people, the question of refinancing these loans is very close to me, and with which I am most sympathetic, and have maintained offices in the Congressional district, at my own expense, for the express purpose of furnishing information and advice to my farmer friends who now find their lands under foreclosure and their homes in danger.

Mr. Speaker, there is much deserved dissatisfaction regarding the modus operandi of making these loans. Our farmers are shunted around from pillar to post, causing much confusion and unnecessary expense to them, in attempting to comply with the requirements of the act. As a result, hundreds of complaints have been received by me and I am intensely interested in bringing about a reformation of the conditions complained of, with a view of having these loans made in the most expeditious manner possible, and made now, in order that the benevolent intentions for which the legislation was enacted may be put into operation without further delay.

Mr. Speaker, I stated in my previous address that the law as now administered was not beneficial to the distressed farmers; that it had been thrown to its enemies to administer in an unsympathetic way, which has resulted in building up an arrogant bureauracy, especially among the field force. Many of these appraisers were selected without proper consideration. Their actions have been offensive and their inexperience and unfamiliarity with farm-land values has tended to defeat the benefits intended rather than to enforce the act in a fair and impartial manner.

It has likewise been stated that instances exist where the Federal land-bank officials and their subordinate officers have entered into a conspiracy with the mortgagees to prevent reasonable loans being made in order that foreclosures may be consummated and titles passed on valuable property to the mortgagee. Numerous complaints tending to substantiate these statements have come to me, and, on request, I shall be glad to furnish the details for investigation. Again, complaints are made that applications for loans filed with the Federal land bank for many months have never been heard from. I have made a personal investigation of these complaints and have been reliably informed that a large number of these applications have been lost in the St. Paul office, many of which were afterward discovered scattered around the floors and among the waste paper from that office, all of which I respectfully submit is an indication of serious mismanagement and inefficiency.

In my judgment, there are two principal reasons why this Farm Loan Act has not been successful in my State: First, it is not in the hands of its friends. The present officials are not in sympathy with the present administration nor with the act itself. It is being used as a political football by the old reactionary Federal land-bank crowd still occupying the office. Second, only 50 percent of the normal value of the land and 20 percent of the buildings can be loaned. Our farms are usually small in acreage with intense cultivation, our soil light in quality but highly productive, a matter that is not understood by many of the land appraisers, who have been indiscriminately selected by reason of their personal friendships, rather than their qualifications for this service.

Many hundreds of applications have been filed for reasonable amounts, which have been turned down and loans refused after appraisement, due largely to the inexperience and lack of knowledge on the part of the appraiser.

I have noticed that loans held by certain banks have been secured without much opposition, while applications made by the farmer himself have been unfairly treated. To me this has but one meaning; namely, that the money lenders are still the power behind the throne.

I believe that a large majority of the Members of Congress, if allowed a free expression, free from party politics and party leadership and seniority rights, favor an honest and intelligent expansion of the currency and are in favor of the Frazier-Lemke bill, the refinancing of the farmers by issuing Federal Reserve notes, thereby expanding the money in the people's hands by something over $2,000,000,000. I am confident that in addition they would favor the Patman bill, paying the soldiers' bonus by issuing Treasury notes, and thereby expanding the currency another $2,000,000,000. If this were done the buying power of the people would be increased by $4,000,000,000, and it would be in accordance with the President's first step in his monetary policy. What we must have is more purchasing power, not less; more money, not less.

If Congress had the foresight and the courage to use this gold that the Government is about to seize, use the revalued gold dollar as a basis for increasing the money in actual circulation by $4,000,000,000 by passing the Frazier-Lemke bill and the Patman bill, then there will be no further need of issuing further tax-exempt interest-bearing bonds, and this Nation will rejoice because there will then again be plenty of money in actual circulation with which to do the Nation's business. It will be an intelligent expansion of the currency and not inflation.

I now ask for unanimous consent further to extend and revise my remarks and to include therein at this point H.R. 2855, known as the "Frazier-Lemke bill".

The bill is as follows:

H.R. 2855

A bill to liquidate and refinance agricultural indebtedness at a reduced rate of interest by establishing an efficient credit system, through the use of the Federal farm loan system, the Federal Reserve Banking System, and creating a Board of Agriculture to supervise the same

Be it enacted, etc., That this act shall be known by the title "The Farmers' Farm Relief Act."

SEC. 2. That the Government now perform its solemn promise and duty and place American agriculture on a basis of equality with other industries by providing an adequate system of credit, through which farm indebtedness and farm mortgages now existing may be liquidated and refinanced, through real-estate mortgages on the amortization plan, at 1½-percent interest and 1½-percent principal per annum, and through mortgages on livestock used for breeding or agricultural purposes at 3-percent interest per annum through the use of the machinery of the Federal farm loan system and the Federal Reserve Banking System.

SEC. 3. The Federal Farm Loan Board is hereby authorized and directed to liquidate, refinance, and take up farm mortgages and other farm indebtedness, existing at the date of enactment of this act, by making real-estate loans, secured by first mortgages on farms, to an amount equal to the fair value of such farms and 50 percent of the value of insurable buildings and improvements thereon, through the use of the machinery of the Federal land banks and national farm-loan associations, and to make all necessary rules and regulations for the carrying out of the purposes of this act with expedition. In case such farm mortgages and other farm indebtedness to be liquidated and refinanced exceeds the fair value of any farm and 50 percent of the value of insurable buildings and improvements thereon, then such farm mortgages and indebtedness shall be scaled down in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto. Such loans shall be made at a rate of 1½-percent interest and 1½-percent principal per annum, payable in any lawful money of the United States.

SEC. 4. The Federal Farm Loan Board is further authorized and directed to liquidate, refinance, and take up chattel mortgages and other farm indebtedness, existing at the date of enactment of this act, by making loans at the rate of 3-percent interest per annum, secured by first mortgages on livestock used for breeding or agricultural purposes, to an amount equal to 65 percent of the fair market value thereof, such loans to run for a period of 1 year, with right of renewal from year to year for a term of 10 years: Provided, That any depreciation in the value of such livestock is replaced by additional livestock used for breeding or agricultural purposes, and the amount of the loan is reduced 10 percent each year.

SEC. 5. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, $100,000 for the use of the Federal Farm Loan Board to carry out the provisions of this act. The necessary and actual expenses incurred in carrying out the provisions in this act shall be apportioned and prorated and added to each individual mortgage, and such sums so added shall be paid to the Federal Farm Loan Board for administrative purposes.

SEC. 6. The funds with which to liquidate and refinance existing farm mortgages and other farm indebtedness shall be provided by the issuing of farm-loan bonds by the Federal Farm Loan System, through the Federal Farm Loan Board and Federal land banks, as now provided by law, which bonds shall bear interest at the rate of 1½ percent per annum, if secured by mortgages on farms, and 3 percent per annum if secured by chattel mortgages on livestock used for breeding or agricultural purposes. These bonds, after delivery to the Federal Farm Loan Board, may, by it, be sold at par to any individual or corporation, or to any State, National, or Federal Reserve bank, or to the Treasurer of the United States. And it shall be the duty of the Federal Reserve banks to invest their available surplus and net profits, after the dividends are paid to their stockholders, in such farm-loan bonds, such profits to include the franchise tax now paid to the United States.

SEC. 7. In case all of said farm-loan bonds are not readily purchased, then the Federal Farm Loan Board shall present the remainder to the Federal Reserve Board, and the Board shall forthwith cause to be issued and delivered to the Federal Farm Loan Board Federal Reserve notes to an amount equal to the par value of such bonds as are presented to it, such farm-loan bonds to be held by the Federal Reserve Board as security in lieu of any other security or reserve.

SEC. 8. The Federal Farm Loan Board and the Federal land banks shall turn over all payments of interest and principal on such farm loan bonds, for which the Federal Reserve Board issues Federal Reserve notes, to the Treasurer of the United States, and shall be by him kept for the purpose of redeeming said Federal Reserve notes and reinvested by him as a sinking fund in municipal or State bonds and bearing interest at the rate of at least 2 percent per annum, both principal and interest to be paid in any lawful money of the United States.

SEC. 9. Whenever the amount of money actually in circulation in the United States shall exceed $75 per capita, then the Treasurer of the United States, by and with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board and the President of the United States, may retire Federal Reserve notes in an amount equal to the principal paid on farm loan bonds, for which Federal Reserve notes were issued, not to exceed 2 percent in any one year, of the amount of Federal Reserve notes so issued.

SEC. 10. There is hereby created a Board of Agriculture consisting of one member from each State, elected by the farmers of such State, who shall be elected by delegates selected by a mass convention of farmers in each county or parish within the United States, who are indebted and declare it to be their intention to take advantage of this act, such county or parish convention to be its own judge as to who are bona fide farmers and otherwise eligible to participate in its proceedings.

SEC. 11. The Federal Farm Loan Board is hereby authorized and directed to give public notice, through the Federal land banks, to the farmers of each county or parish of the time and place of holding the first county or parish convention, which shall be held at the seat of government of each county or parish; and it shall at the same time give notice of the first convention of the State delegates, to be held at the State capital of each State, notice of such convention to be given within 60 days after the enactment of this act.

SEC. 12. The farmers attending such county or parish convention and the State delegates attending such State convention shall organize and make such rules and regulations for their procedure as they deem necessary or convenient, and shall elect a president and a secretary and make arrangements for such other and future conventions as they may deem necessary to carry out the purposes of this act, and they shall at all times cooperate and assist the Board of Agriculture, the Federal Farm Loan Board, the Federal land banks, and national farm-loan associations to liquidate and refinance farm mortgages and farm indebtedness.

SEC. 13. The State delegates so elected shall meet at the State capitals of their respective States and elect a member of the Board of Agriculture, who shall hold his office from the date of such election and for a period of 2 years from January 20 following, and who shall receive $15 per diem and necessary traveling expenses while on official business, to be paid by the Federal Farm Loan Board out of any funds set apart by section 5 of this act.

SEC. 14. Immediately after their election the members of the Board of Agriculture, upon call of the Federal Farm Loan Board, shall meet at Washington, in the District of Columbia, and organize by electing a chairman and a secretary, and they shall make such rules and regulations as they deem necessary and expedient to carry out the purposes of this act. They shall elect an executive committee of three, none of whom shall be members of the Board of Agriculture, who shall hold their office at the will of said board, and who shall receive a salary of $7,500 per annum and 5 cents per mile for necessary traveling expenses while on official business, to be paid by the Federal Farm Loan Board out of any funds set apart by section 5 of this act.

SEC. 15. The members of the Board of Agriculture shall keep in touch with and report to the executive committee the progress of liquidating and refinancing farm mortgages and farm indebtedness in their respective States. They shall cooperate with county or parish and State governments and with all farm and cooperative organizations within their respective States to speedily bring about the liquidation and refinancing of farm mortgages and farm indebtedness.

SEC. 16. The executive committee of the Board of Agriculture shall advise with and supervise the work of liquidating and refinancing farm mortgages and farm indebtedness by the Federal Farm Loan Board and the Federal Reserve Board, and they shall cooperate with said boards and with county or parish and State governments and with the various farm organizations and with the agricultural colleges of the Nation in order to bring about a just and speedy liquidation and refinancing of farm mortgages and farm indebtedness. They shall report any member of the farm loan system or the Federal Reserve Board who neglects, hinders, or delays the carrying out of the provisions of this act to the President of the United States, and it shall be the duty of the President, upon cause shown, to remove any such officer and to appoint some other suitable person in his place with the advice and consent of the Senate.

SEC. 17. The benefits of this act shall also extend to any farmer, or member of his family, who lost his farm through indebtedness or mortgage foreclosure since 1919, and who desires to purchase the farm lost or another farm. It shall also extend to any tenant, or member of his family, who desires to purchase a farm, provided he has lived on and operated a farm as a tenant for at least 3 years prior to the enactment of this act.

SEC. 18. The executive committee of the Board of Agriculture shall have power in case of crop failures, and in other meritorious cases, to extend the time payments due on loans made under this act from time to time for a period not exceeding 3 years, provided the mortgagor keeps up the payment of all taxes on the mortgaged property.

SEC. 19. This act shall be liberally construed, and no technicalities or limitations shall be imposed or permitted to interfere with the speedy carrying out of its purposes; and the provisions of the Federal Farm Loan System and the Federal Reserve Banking System shall apply as far as applicable in the carrying out of the provisions of this act; and all laws or parts of laws in conflict herewith are for the purpose of this act repealed. The persons charged with the duty of carrying out the provisions of this act are authorized and directed to do all things necessary or convenient to accomplish its purposes with expedition.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday, February 15, I may address the House for 10 minutes to commemorate the anniversary of the birth of Susan B. Anthony, who fought so valiantly for woman suffrage. I need not remind the Members of this illustrous body how anxious they are to have women avail themselves of that privilege now that they have the right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the lady from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE DEEP WATERWAY

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEITER. Only a few days ago we heard the sincere and eloquent appeals of Mr. SNELL and Mr. CULKIN, who represent the Thirty-first and Thirty-second New York Districts, and from their comments on the St. Lawrence Treaty we might be lead to believe that they represented the City of Duluth, the home of Mr. Craig and the seaway's chief booster. For Mr. SNELL, who predicts ratification of the treaty by the Senate, is quoted:

> Opposition to the treaty, resulting from a coalition of public utility, railroad, and seaboard port interests, is more vocal than real. This is the substance of a survey I have just completed of sentiment to ascertain the truth behind the current whispering of defeatism.

Perhaps the leadership of Mr. SNELL over a minority rather than a majority in the House is all the evidence required to show the inadequacy of Mr. SNELL's survey. At any rate, the gentleman from Potsdam is even less impressive than usual when he comes before the people of the State of New York with such findings on their attitude toward the seaway treaty. If Mr. SNELL's constituents in his own district want power development, very well. Let him say so. But it should not be a part of the duties of the minority leader of the House to try to uphold the myth that the interests behind the seaway movement are shipping rather than power interests.

Senators NORRIS and LA FOLLETTE are valiant opponents of the power interests, and citizens of New York are doubtless grateful for the interest they have manifested in the welfare of consumers in this State.

They should not be misled, however, into the belief that the St. Lawrence Treaty provides for another Muscle Shoals or Boulder Dam development in New York.

It is still a seaway treaty and the power project is a mere incident. It provides for a public power development which would be highly useful to the State in checking the private utilities, and for a seaway which the State does not want and cannot use, both done up in the same package. It is as illogical to approve the seaway just to strike a blow at the Power Trust as it would be to burn down the barn just to get the stable cleaned up.

The St. Lawrence seaway should be considered on its own merits or demerits. The power development should be judged strictly on its own merit. The Senate will serve the interests of the whole country, as well as the interests of this State, if it will not confuse the two.

According to the report of the Department of Commerce entitled "Butiminous Coal Tables, 1932", there is about a half million men employed in the bituminous-coal industry in Pennsylvania, Illinois, Virginia, and many other States throughout the Union. A large proportion of this half million men work part time, and it would be a very fine thing for all of these bituminous-coal localities if their labor, both skilled and unskilled, could be put on a more uniform time basis. Such uniformity or continuity, let me say, if achieved, would reduce the unit price of mining coal, increase the annual earnings of the laborers and operators alike, and benefit everyone who is directly or indirectly affected by the bituminous-coal industry.

If the idea of the St. Lawrence project is to produce cheap electric energy in the Philadelphia or New York metropolitan districts, or in Pittsburgh or in other cities, which may be reached by bituminous-coal plants, then the time has arrived when serious consideration should be given to this project of producing electric energy at the mines.

Certainly any production of electric energy at the mines could do no more harm to energy-producing plants than any other method of producing energy, be it water or otherwise, which would put the present plants out of business. Therefore if the basic reason for Senators NORRIS' and LA FOLLETTE's desire to canalize the St. Lawrence River is to produce cheap electric power for the people of the United States, then it is believed that more people will be given employment over a longer period of time if Government money should be spent to erect and operate such plants in mining districts of the various States producing high-grade bituminous coal than by spending a like amount of money in the St. Lawrence River.

I have followed the discussions, reviewed the testimony, and have read the terms of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Treaty. As a result of such consideration and discussions, the study shows that St. Lawrence power cannot be delivered to any of the following-named cities—Albany, Binghamton, Buffalo, New York City, Rochester, and Syracuse—as cheaply as steam electric power could be produced in these cities, excepting the cities of Syracuse, Binghamton, and Albany. In these three cities St. Lawrence power could be secured more cheaply, provided the load factor was 90 or 100 percent. The study further shows that the excess cost of a hundredth of a cent at Binghamton and two hundredths of a cent at Albany per kilowatt-hour is in favor of St. Lawrence power due to the estimated cost of fuel at those places.

The study further shows that at a 100-percent load factor the costs are identical at New York City. In the case of hydroelectric power from the St. Lawrence the volume, viz, 480,000 kilowatts, reduces the overhead cost on this power, and, on the other hand, the larger cost for land and for fuel assumed for New York City brings the costs together at the 100-percent load factor.

As a 100-percent load factor is impossible to obtain and drops out of the picture entirely for domestic or ordinary commercial use, it can be neglected unless a 24-hour maximum demand is secured.

The reports which were studied propose the following amounts of power to be supplied to the various cities, as follows:

	Kilowatts
Albany	160,000
Binghamton	160,000
Buffalo	240,000
New York City	480,000
Rochester	240,000
Syracuse	240,000

The above amounts of power are to be generated at the various cities by modern turbo-generators of large capacity under high steam pressure. This is the most economical method of steam-electric generation.

The hydroelectric power from St. Lawrence is to be transmitted at 220,000 volts and stepped down for use at various terminals. This is also modern practice.

I have just been furnished with some amazing figures. Major Theron M. Ripley, who for 13 years was in charge of construction and maintenance of canals and highways, State of New York, and has had 60 years' experience in the building of hydroelectric power plants and dams, has at my request courteously furnished me these figures, which are so illuminating that I send them to the desk and ask to have inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Costs in cents per kilowatt-hour—Load or capacity factor

ALBANY

	20	30	40	50	60	70	80	90	100
COST
St. Lawrence	1.72	1.14	0.86	0.69	0.57	0.49	0.43	0.38	0.34
Steam	.93	.70	.58	.50	.44	.40	.38	.37	.36
Difference in—
Favor steam	.79	.44	.28	.19	.13	.09	.05	.01
Favor St. Lawrence									.02

The above shows that St. Lawrence River hydroelectric power cannot be delivered in Albany, N.Y., as cheaply as steam-electric can be produced in that city, except when the former is being used (delivered) at a 90- to 100-percent load factor. As a 100-percent load factor is a consummation forever wished but never secured, a lower factor must be considered.

Comparing the costs at a 50- or 60-percent factor, it is seen that St. Lawrence power costs 38 percent more than steam-generated power and at a 60-percent factor this difference is 29½ percent. These are fair commercial service factors.

Assuming a domestic-use load factor of 30 or 40, it is seen that St. Lawrence power costs 63 percent and 48 percent more, respectively.

BINGHAMTON

	20	30	40	50	60	70	80	90	100
COST
St. Lawrence	1.72	1.14	0.86	0.69	0.57	0.49	0.43	0.38	0.34
Steam	.92	.67	.55	.48	.43	.39	.37	.36	.35
Difference in—
Favor steam	.80	.47	.31	.21	.14	.10	.06	.02
Favor St. Lawrence									.01

The above shows that St. Lawrence hydroelectric power cannot be delivered in Binghamton, N.Y., as cheaply as steam-electric can be produced in that city except when the former is being used (delivered at a 100-percent load factor.

Comparing the costs at a 50- or 60-percent factor, it is seen that St. Lawrence costs 44 percent and 33 percent, respectively, more than steam. These are fair commercial-use factors.

Assuming a domestic-use load factor of 30 or 40, it is seen that St. Lawrence power costs 70 percent and 56 percent more, respectively.

BUFFALO

	20	30	40	50	60	70	80	90	100
COST
St. Lawrence	1.77	1.18	0.89	0.71	0.59	0.51	0.44	0.40	0.35
Steam	.77	.56	.46	.39	.35	.32	.31	.29	.28
Difference in favor of steam	1.00	.62	.43	.32	.24	.19	.13	.11	.07

The above shows that St. Lawrence hydroelectric power cannot be delivered in Buffalo, N.Y., as cheaply as steam electric power can be produced in that city. Even at the ideal of 100-percent load factor, the former cost is 25 percent greater than the latter.

With a load factor of 50 or 60 percent, the excess cost of St. Lawrence power is 82 percent and 69 percent, respectively.

Assuming a domestic use load factor of 30 or 40, it is seen that St. Lawrence power costs 111 percent and 93 percent more, respectively.

NEW YORK CITY

	20	30	40	50	60	70	80	90	100
COST
St. Lawrence	1.79	1.19	0.90	0.71	0.60	0.51	0.45	0.40	0.36
Steam	1.00	.73	.60	.52	.46	.42	.40	.38	.36
Difference in favor of steam	.79	.46	.30	.19	.14	.09	.05	.02

The above shows that St. Lawrence hydroelectric power cannot be delivered to New York City for less than steam-electric power can be generated in that city.

With a load factor of 50 or 60 percent, the excess cost of St. Lawrence power is 37 percent and 30 percent, respectively.

Assuming that there is a domestic-use load factor of 30 or 40, it is seen that St. Lawrence power costs 63 percent to 50 percent more, respectively.

ROCHESTER

	20	30	40	50	60	70	80	90	100
COST
St. Lawrence	1.62	1.08	0.81	0.65	0.54	0.46	0.41	0.36	0.32
Steam	.86	.63	.51	.44	.39	.36	.34	.32	.31
Difference in favor of steam	.76	.45	.30	.21	.15	.10	.07	.04	.01

The above shows that St. Lawrence hydroelectric power cannot be delivered in the city of Rochester, N.Y., as cheaply as it can be produced in that city by steam; although at 100-percent load factor the difference, in favor of steam, is only one one-hundredth of a cent per kilowatt-hour.

With a load factor of 50 or 60 percent, the excess cost of St. Lawrence power is 48 percent and 38 percent, respectively.

Assuming a domestic-use load factor of 30 or 40, it is seen that St. Lawrence power costs 71 percent and 59 percent more, respectively.

SYRACUSE

	20	30	40	50	60	70	80	90	100
COST
St. Lawrence	1.49	0.99	0.74	0.60	0.50	0.43	0.38	0.33	0.30
Steam	.88	.65	.53	.46	.41	.38	.36	.34	.33
Difference in—
Favor of steam	.61	.34	.21	.14	.09	.05	.02
Favor St. Lawrence								.01	.03

The above shows that St. Lawrence hydroelectric power can be delivered at Syracuse, N.Y., at a less cost than steam-electric can be generated there provided a load factor of 90 or 100 can be secured.

With a load factor of 50 or 60 percent, the excess cost of St. Lawrence power is 30 percent or 22 percent, respectively.

Assuming a domestic-use load factor of 30 or 40, it is seen that St. Lawrence power costs 52 percent or 40 percent more, respectively.

Mr. BEITER. The joint board of engineers report outlines a complete development of the power resources of the river by the construction of additional power works with an inflated capacity of approximately 5,000,000 horsepower, at a total cost of from $620,000,000 to $650,000,000.

The existing water-power and steam plants in the section of the United States which could be economically reached from the St. Lawrence territory by the transmission lines are quite adequate to meet the industrial development for many years to come.

The power production contemplated cannot be counted upon to liquidate the canal outlay. The value of hydroelectric power has in the last 10 years heavily depreciated, owing to the remarkable developments in efficiency of steam-power electric plants. So there is not likely to be a market for power in the large cities which have steam plants located at tidewater. In substance, the Government would be engaging in a most hazardous power speculation.

It is an admitted fact that the St. Lawrence can only operate economically by using its total power production as a base load, and such use would put out of business practically all the commercial plants in the section of the United States which could be reached from the St. Lawrence now producing electric energy, excepting at times of peak load; and by such action would destroy the value, as going concerns, of practically every electrical utility company in the State of New York. Such condition certainly cannot be assumed as true economy in any sense of the word.

You may also be interested to know that low water in Lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence River has been below the standard low-water datum of the Canadian Government, to such an extent that it will, undoubtedly, require a revision of all previous estimates of the cost of constructing the proposed St. Lawrence Canal. The said low water is lower than any records during the last 60 years.

The extremely low water will require a new determination of the amount of firm power obtainable on the river. It is of great concern to the Canadian Government as it effects artificial channels in the river below Montreal and may require a large expenditure to assure safe navigation therein.

The officially published costs of the complete St. Lawrence project have been greatly understated, to such an extent as to be badly misleading. As far as they have gone, the engineering reports are understandable. Instead of a total cost of $543,429,000 it is believed that the public should be apprised of the fact that the total eventual cost will aggregate not less than $903,829,000, as follows:

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEITER. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Where did the gentleman get those statements? What authoritative sources have made such statements as that?

Mr. BEITER. I have the total amount broken down, and I will read it to the gentleman. The amount for engineers' estimates, as published, is $543,429,000.

Lock duplication, $18,700,000. That is found in St. Lawrence Waterway Project, Ottawa, 1932, pages 10 and 11.

Mr. SNELL. I think the gentleman misunderstood my question. I understood the gentleman to say that the best estimates were a total of nine hundred million and some odd.

Mr. BEITER. Nine hundred three million eight hundred and twenty-nine thousand dollars.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman tell me from what source that came?

Mr. BEITER. I am trying to give the gentleman the split-up in the following manner: The total amount is $903,000,000——

Mr. SNELL. But who made that estimate?

Mr. BEITER. I am giving that from records that I have obtained.

Mr. SNELL. Well, where are they?

Mr. BEITER. The Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty, Publication No. 347, Department of State, page 17.

Mr. SNELL. That might have been, but I am trying to get the authority back of the statement.

Mr. BEITER. It is from the engineers.

Mr. SNELL. What engineers?

Mr. BEITER. The engineers of the Department.

Mr. SNELL. The engineers of the State Department?

Mr. BEITER. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. That is news.

Mr. BEITER (reading):

Engineers' estimate (as published)[1]	$543,429,000
Lock duplication [2]	18,700,000
Compensating works [3]	100,000
Channel deepening [4]	25,000,000
Welland Canal deepening [5]	25,000,000
Power projects in Canadian territory [6]	262,000,000
Montreal Harbor [7]	4,600,000
Private capital required to improve harbors [8]	25,000,000
Total	903,829,000

Upon whom will the original cost fall and upon whom will the cost of maintenance and operation fall? In giving consideration to the probable ultimate cost to each State and having at hand the various and divergent estimates, recourse should be made to the average of estimates prepared by different individuals or organizations who have given study to this project. Including President Hoover's figures, the average would be $914,857,250. If based upon the same percentage as internal-revenue receipts are based, the cost to each State would be as follows:

State or Territory	Percent of total	Amount
Alabama	0.17	$1,545,257.35
Alaska	.01	91,488.57
Arizona	.06	548,914.35
Arkansas	.07	630,400.00
California	4.90	44,828,005.25
Colorado	.35	320,200.04
Connecticut	1.31	11,984,629.98
Delaware	1.06	9,697,486.85
District of Columbia	.54	4,940,229.15
Florida	.54	4,940,229.15
Georgia	.28	2,561,600.30
Hawaii	.24	2,195,657.40
Idaho	.03	274,457.18
Illinois	6.85	62,667,721.63
Indiana	.79	7,127,373.28
Iowa	.41	3,750,914.75
Kansas	.46	4,208,343.35
Kentucky	1.69	15,461,087.53
Louisiana	.40	3,659,429.00
Maine	.28	2,561,600.30
Maryland	1.51	13,814,344.48
Massachusetts	3.16	38,909,489.10
Michigan	3.85	34,810,318.36
Minnesota	.92	8,416,686.70
Mississippi	.05	457,428.63
Missouri	2.22	20,309,830.95
Montana	.06	548,914.35
Nebraska	.20	1,829,714.50
Nevada	.09	823,371.53
New Hampshire	.11	1,006,342.98
New Jersey	4.52	8,416,686.70
New Mexico	.02	182,971.45
New York	25.36	232,007,798.60
North Carolina	14.84	135,764,815.90
North Dakota	.02	182,971.45
Ohio	3.97	36,309,832.83
Oklahoma	.65	5,946,572.13
Oregon	.16	1,463,771.60
Pennsylvania	7.02	63,222,978.95
Rhode Island	.43	3,933,886.18
South Carolina	.11	1,006,342.98
South Dakota	.03	2,744,571.75
Tennessee	.58	5,306,172.05
Texas	1.18	10,795,315.55
Utah	.09	823,371.53
Vermont	.06	548,914.35
Washington	.47	3,374,971.83
Virginia	6.42	58,733,835.45
West Virginia	.45	4,116,857.63
Wisconsin	1.06	9,697,486.85
Wyoming	.03	274,457.18
Philippine Islands	.02	182,971.45

In addition, New York is to pay $89,000,000 because of power rights.

Can you blame the Empire State for demanding a voice in a matter that we believe will be injurious to its welfare?

Those millions, plus additional millions for upkeep and maintenance, would have to come out of the pockets of American and Canadian taxpayers. They would represent

[1] Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Deep Waterway Treaty (publication no. 347, Department of State, p. 17).
[2] St. Lawrence Waterway Project, Ottawa, 1932 (pp. 10, 11).
[3] For 32-foot depth, derived from S.Doc. 183 (69th Cong., 2d sess., pp. 27, 28), H.Doc. 253 (70th Cong., 1st sess., p. 4).
[4] For 32-foot depth, derived from H.Doc. 253 (p. 7).
[5] For 32-foot depth, derived from S.Doc. 183 (p. 28).
[6] S.Doc. 183 (p. 48, tables II and III).
[7] S.Doc. 183 (p. 52).
[8] H.Doc. 253 (p. 5).

a direct subsidy to shipping—not to all shipping but to certain favored classes of shipping.

Operations thereon will be in competition with, and will divert traffic from, rail carriers during 6½ or 7 months of the year when operating costs are lowest, but will require the railroads to provide maximum facilities during the winter months when operating costs are at a maximum. Notwithstanding this diversion, the obligation to handle the traffic during a part of the year will necessitate the keeping of the railroad plant at a maximum efficiency during the entire year.

The joint board of engineers estimates that the entire cost of the proposed 27-foot channel, including the proposed power development, will be $543,429,000 and that the share to be borne by the United States will be $272,453,000.

It is estimated that of this total amount the expenditures for power development in the international section of the St. Lawrence River will represent something over $100,000,000, one half of which is to be paid by the United States.

The project is estimated to require from 7 to 10 years for construction; an 8-year period is the general official estimate. For this period no allowance is made for interest on the money required for construction. Assuming that the entire amount will be invested only half of the period, or 4 years, and that the interest charge would be at the rate of 4 percent per annum, there would be an additional interest charge on the $543,429,000 amounting to $86,948,640, or an additional charge to the United States of $43,592,480.

There are seven important harbors on the Great Lakes within the United States, namely, Duluth-Superior, Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit, Toledo, Cleveland, and Buffalo. It has been estimated that there must be expended at least $25,000,000 each on these seven harbors, making an aggregate of $175,000,000 to be expended by the United States.

The longer ratification is delayed the stronger grows the opposition. The seaway was at the peak of its popularity in 1928. Every year since then has weakened the case for it. At the end of a depression, with little American wheat moving to Europe, it is extremely difficult to make a case for the billion-dollar subsidy to shipping which the seaway represents.

Nor does it appear to me that there would be any benefit to American people sufficient to outweigh the burden of debt and taxation which will result from the cost of these projects.

I may be mistaken, but I can visualize, if the St. Lawrence propect is developed and the gates are thrown wide open, that foreign-built ships, built by cheap labor and manned by coolies, will come to the Great Lakes when times are bad and eke out an existence on low rates that have developed.

To construct it now would be to create a white elephant.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 6670. An act to provide for the establishment of a corporation to aid in the refinancing of farm debts, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 33 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, January 30, 1934, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

(Tuesday, Jan. 30, 10 a.m.)

Continuation of the hearing on H.R. 6836, to regulate motor carriers.

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE, RADIO, AND FISHERIES

(Tuesday, Jan. 30, 10:30 a.m.)

Further consideration of House Joint Resolutions 100 and 151 and Senate Joint Resolution 15. Hearings to be in committee room.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

315. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting an estimate of appropriation for the Department of State for the fiscal year 1935, to be immediately available, amounting to $7,125,000, in substitution for the estimate of appropriation for emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service contained in the Budget for 1933 (H.Doc. No. 229); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

316. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting two supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Panama Canal for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, totaling $200,000 (H.Doc. No. 230); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

317. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a request for an additional appropriation of $950,000,000 for the purposes of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, and for continuing the Civil Works program under the Federal Civil Works Administration established by Executive Order No. 6420–b (H.Doc. No. 231); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

318. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations pertaining to the legislative establishment under the Architect of the Capitol, for the fiscal year 1935, in the sum of $111,944 (H.Doc. No. 232); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

319. A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a list of documents and files of papers not needed nor useful in the current business of the Department of Commerce; to the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 191. A bill for the relief of William K. Lovett; with amendment (Rept. No. 351). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 1127. A bill for the relief of O. H. Chrisp; with amendment (Rept. No. 352). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 1301. A bill for the relief of M. Aileen Offerman; with amendment (Rept. No. 353). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 1842. A bill for the relief of Amos D. Carver, S. E. Turner, Clifford N. Carver, Scott Blanchard, P. B. Blanchard, James B. Parse, A. N. Blanchard, and W. A. Blanchard; with amendment (Rept. No. 354). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 2639. A bill for the relief of Charles J. Eisenhauer; with amendment (Rept. No. 355). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLANCHARD: Committee on Claims. H.R. 2990. A bill for the relief of George G. Slonaker; with amendment (Rept. No. 356). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4013. A bill to provide an additional appropriation as the result of a reinvestigation, pursuant to the act of February 2, 1929 (45 Stat., p. 2047, pt. 2), for the payment of claims of persons who suffered property damage, death, or personal injury due to the explosion at the naval ammunition depot, Lake Denmark, N.J., July 10, 1926; with amendment (Rept. No. 357). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. WALTER: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4056. A bill for the relief of Emma F. Taber; with amendment (Rept. No. 358). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4926. A bill for the relief of H. D. Henion, Harry Wolfe, and R. W. McSorley; without amendment (Rept. No. 359). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 4952. A bill for the relief of Theodore W. Beland; without amendment (Rept. No. 360). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H.R. 7229. A bill for the relief of the estate of Victor L. Berger, deceased; without amendment (Rept. No. 361). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. S. 2. An act for the relief of C. M. Williamson; Mrs. Tura Liljenquist, administratrix of C. E. Liljenquist, deceased; Lottie Redman; and H. N. Smith; without amendment (Rept. No. 362). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. S. 375. An act to reimburse the estate of Mary Agnes Roden; without amendment (Rept. No. 363). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. S. 406. An act for the relief of Warren J. Clear; without amendment (Rept. No. 364). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. S. 407. An act for the relief of Willie B. Cleverly; without amendment (Rept. No. 365). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. S. 750. An act for the relief of the Lebanon Equity Exchange, of Lebanon, Nebr.; without amendment (Rept. No. 366). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. S. 751. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to refund to the Farmers' Grain Co., of Omaha, Nebr., income taxes illegally paid to the United States Treasurer; without amendment (Rept. No. 367). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. S. 1069. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Chicago, North Shore & Milwaukee Railroad Co.; without amendment (Rept. No. 368). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. S. 1074. An act authorizing adjustment of the claims of John T. Lennon and George T. Flora; without amendment (Rept. No. 369). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. S. 1079. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of Francis B. Kennedy; without amendment (Rept. No. 370). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. S. 1083. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Potomac Electric Power Co., of Washington, D.C.; without amendment (Rept. No. 371). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. S. 1085. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of Schutte & Koerting Co.; without amendment (Rept. No. 372). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. S. 1087. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of William T. Stiles; without amendment (Rept. No. 373). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. S. 1115. An act to authorize the Department of Agriculture to issue a duplicate check in favor of Department of Forests and Waters, Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, the original check having been lost; without amendment (Rept. No. 374). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. S. 1219. An act to carry into effect the finding of the Court of Claims in the claim of Elizabeth B. Eddy; without amendment (Rept. No. 375). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. S. 1347. An act for the relief of Little Rock College, Little Rock, Ark.; without amendment (Rept. No. 376). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. S. 1426. An act for the relief of the estate of Benjamin Braznell; without amendment (Rept. No. 377). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. S. 1496. An act for the relief of Nannie Swearingen; with amendment (Rept. No. 378). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. S. 1651. An act for the relief of the estate of Anton W. Fischer; without amendment (Rept. No. 379). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. S. 1782. An act for the relief of the B. & O. Manufacturing Co.; without amendment (Rept. No. 380). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H.R. 6742) granting a pension to Margaret M. Warner, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WALLGREN: A bill (H.R. 7412) to provide funds for cooperation with Marysville School District No. 325, Snohomish County, Wash., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. McSWAIN: A bill (H.R. 7413) to promote national defense by organizing the Junior Air Corps Reserve, as a civilian component of the Army of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DUNN: A bill (H.R. 7414) to provide employment or relief to all citizens of the United States and its possessions who are in need of employment or relief; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SMITH of Washington: A bill (H.R. 7415) to subject certain Federal and State and other securities to income taxation; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FULMER: A bill (H.R. 7416) to divert lands unsuited for profitable agriculture to productive forestry uses; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HOEPPEL: A bill (H.R. 7417) to grant retirement to disabled noncommissioned officers of the Army and Marine Corps and to petty officers of the Navy and Coast Guard; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BLAND: A bill (H.R. 7418) to prohibit the importation of pulpwood, wood pulp, or any wood susceptible of use in manufacturing paper; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7419) to prohibit the importation of fish and fish products; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mrs. NORTON: A bill (H.R. 7420) to readjust the boundaries of Whitehaven Parkway and Huidekoper Place, in the District of Columbia, provide for an exchange of land, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7421) to provide fees to be charged by the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CULKIN: A bill (H.R. 7422) to reduce the annual interest charge on the war debt owing by the Republic of Finland to the United States of America; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BLAND: A bill (H.R. 7423) amending section 23 of the Merchant Marine Act of 1920; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

By Mr. JAMES: A bill (H.R. 7424) to readjust the allowances of retired enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WHITE: A bill (H.R. 7425) for the inclusion of certain lands in the national forests in the State of Idaho, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. SIROVICH: A bill (H.R. 7426) to protect the consuming public of the United States of America, numbering 125,000,000 people, and the honest producers and distributors, numbering 50,000 persons, of food, nonalcoholic or nonintoxicating beverages, drugs, and cosmetics sold or offered for sale, in containers or packages, and to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated or misbranded food, drugs, nonalcoholic and nonintoxicating beverages and cosmetics, and to regulate traffic therein; to prevent the false or fraudulent advertisement of food, drugs, nonalcoholic and nonintoxicating beverages and cosmetics, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. DRIVER: A bill (H.R. 7427) for improvement of the St. Francis River in Arkansas for navigation; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. ADAMS: A bill (H.R. 7428) providing for the transfer of certain lands from the United States to the city of Wilmington, Del., and from the city of Wilmington, Del., to the United States; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. DISNEY: A bill (H.R. 7429) to provide a right of way; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CROSSER of Ohio: A bill (H.R. 7430) to establish a 6-hour day for employees of carriers engaged in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mrs. NORTON: A bill (H.R. 7431) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior, with the approval of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, and the Attorney General of the United States, to make equitable adjustments of conflicting claims between the United States and other claimants of lands along the shores of the Potomac River, Anacostia River, and Rock Creek, in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BLAND: Resolution (H.Res. 239) appointing a select committee to investigate and inquire into the price charged farmers for fertilizer throughout the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. FULMER: Resolution (H.Res. 240) providing for the printing of 2,000 copies of the soil survey for certain counties in South Carolina; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. BUCHANAN: Joint resolution (H.J.Res. 250) to provide appropriations to carry into effect the act entitled "An act to control the manufacture, transportation, possession, and sale of alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia", approved January 24, 1934; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. DIMOND: Joint resolution (H.J.Res. 251) authorizing a preliminary examination or survey of Haines Harbor, Alaska; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. DISNEY: Joint resolution (H.J.Res. 252) to extend the Civil Works Administration created by Executive Order No. 6420–B, issued November 9, 1933, for 4 months from February 15, and to appropriate $450,000,000 therefor; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FISH: Joint resolution (H.J.Res. 253) to extend the Civil Works Administration created by Executive Order No. 6420–B, issued November 9, 1933, until May 15, 1934, and to appropriate $450,000,000 therefor; to the Committee on Ways and Means .

Also, concurrent resolution (H.Con.Res. 28) for revision or repeal of part of the so-called "Platt amendment" to the act entitled "An act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902"; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of South Carolina, that American agriculture be placed on an equal basis with other industries by providing an adequate system of credit; to the Committee on Agriculture.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ADAMS: A bill (H.R. 7432) granting a pension to Eliza A. Leonard; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ARNOLD: A bill (H.R. 7433) granting a pension to Alice Cook; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. AYRES of Kansas: A bill (H.R. 7434) granting an increase of pension to Emily J. McCready; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CHASE: A bill (H.R. 7435) granting a pension to Christine Lindow; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CLARK of North Carolina: A bill (H.R. 7436) for the relief of Rufus J. Davis; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7437) for the relief of E. C. West; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DREWRY: A bill (H.R. 7438) for the relief of certain officers of the Dental Corps of the United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. EDMONDS: A bill (H.R. 7439) for the relief of Alex Taylor; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. ELLENBOGEN: A bill (H.R. 7440) for the relief of Cora B. Nebel; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FULMER: A bill (H.R. 7441) for the relief of Fletcher Hammond; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7442) for the relief of Charles E. Kelley; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7443) for the relief of Thomas Lee Mitchum; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7444) granting a pension to Maggie R. Cooper; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7445) granting a pension to Thomas Grimsley; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7446) granting a pension to Walter T. Reckling; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GILLETTE: A bill (H.R. 7447) granting a pension to Nancy E. Dermit; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma: A bill (H.R. 7448) for the relief of Lettie Leverett; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7449) for the relief of Fanny M. Crosby; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7450) granting an increase of pension to Priscilla Hurt; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7451) granting an increase of pension to Alice Jordan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7452) granting an increase of pension to Jennie Beadle; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7453) granting an increase of pension to Catharine A. Best; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7454) granting an increase of pension to Cynthia A. Mitchell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KLEBERG: A bill (H.R. 7455) to authorize the appointment of Thomas S. Garrett as a first lieutenant on the retired list of the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LAMNECK: A bill (H.R. 7456) granting a pension to Alonzo Edward Davis; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MAPES: A bill (H.R. 7457) for the relief of William Dean McCoy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. McCORMACK: A bill (H.R. 7458) granting a pension to Timothy Vaughan; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MOTT: A bill (H.R. 7459) for the relief of Clatsop County, Oreg.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. RAMSPECK: A bill (H.R. 7460) for the relief of Judson Stokes; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. REECE: A bill (H.R. 7461) granting an increase of pension to William McKinley Green; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7462) for the relief of Marion C. Asbury; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SECREST: A bill (H.R. 7463) granting a pension to Florence Bonnell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TINKHAM: A bill (H.R. 7464) for the relief of William R. Smith; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7465) for the relief of Lucius D. Burton; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. UTTERBACK: A bill (H.R. 7466) granting a pension to Maria B. Thompson; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 7467) for the relief of Edward Francis Chisholm; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WILCOX: A bill (H.R. 7468) for the relief of Ross P. Beckstrom Co.; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PARSONS: Resolution (H.Res. 241) to pay to Lizzie Calhoon, niece of William C. Allen, 6 months' compensation and not to exceed $250 funeral expenses; to the Committee on Accounts.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

1871. By Mr. ARENS: Petition relative to the acquisition of lands bordering on lower Rice Lake; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

1872. By Mr. BACON: Petition of sundry residents of the First Congressional District, New York, urging appropriate action to restrain any interference with religious programs in radio broadcasts; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1873. By Mr. BLAND: Petition of Ninth Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense, held January 24, 25, and 26, 1934, at the Mayflower Hotel, Washington, D.C., requesting Congress to continue its policy of aid to the American merchant marine in order that our national defense may not again be weakened by the withdrawal of American ships from the sea; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1874. By Mr. CHASE: Resolution of the Department of Conservation, State of Minnesota, relating to acquisition of lands bordering on lower Rice Lake; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

1875. Also, resolution of the Department of Conservation, State of Minnesota, urging adoption of project to remove floating trees, brush, and debris from the flowage areas, etc., of upper Mississippi reservoirs; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

1876. Also, resolution of the Department of Conservation, State of Minnesota, urging approval and development of so-called "Mud Lake area" in Marshall County, Minn., into a wild fowl nesting area, etc.; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1877. By Mr. ELTSE of California: Petition and protest against an alleged censorship on radio broadcasts; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1878. By Mr. FITZPATRICK: Petition signed by Mr. and Mrs. R. Pintner, of 60 Ridge Road, and a number of other residents of Yonkers, N.Y., urging support of the bill to strengthen and modernize the present Food and Drug Act; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1879. By Mr. GOODWIN: Petition signed by DeWitt Rockefeller et al., of the town of Cairo, Greene County, N.Y., requesting the passage, or amendment, of a bill in January so that all needy veterans will be properly taken care of; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

1880. Also, resolution of the National Federation of Post Office Clerks, Washington, D.C., concerning restoration of Government wages; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1881. By Mr. HILDEBRANDT: Petition of citizens and voters of Miner County, S.Dak., asking for the enactment of emergency legislation in the Congress of the United States appropriating sufficient money to carry on the Civil Works Administration program in the State of South Dakota and elsewhere, at the rate of pay for 30 hours per week, and that said work continue until the 1st day of June 1934, or longer; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1882. By Mr. HOIDALE: Petition of the city of St. Paul, Minn., urging Congress to provide financial facilities to relieve municipalities from financial difficulties arising from tax delinquencies; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1883. By Mr. HOWARD: Petition of William Wegner and others, who reside in the Central Northwest area of the United States and depend directly upon the agriculture industry for their livelihood and existence, urging the passage of the Frazier bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1884. Also, petition of Leslie D. Case and other prominent farmers of Bloomfield, Nebr., urging the passage of the Frazier bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1885. By Mr. JAMES: Resolution from the Board of Supervisors for Gogebic County, Mich., favoring the extension of the Civil Works Administration program beyond February 15, 1934, and for as long a period thereafter as possible; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1886. By Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota: Petition of the Farmer-Labor Association of Polk County, Minn., urging the passage of the Frazier bill; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

1887. Also, petition of the Farmer-Labor Association of Polk County, Minn., opposing Prince plan or any plan tending to merge railroad companies; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1888. By Mr. KENNEY: Petition of Sarah N. Nelson and 5,000 other citizens of the Ninth Congressional District of New Jersey concerning control and censorship of radio broadcasting; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1889. Also, petition of Essex County Medical Society (980 members), unanimously urging support of the Pure Food and Drugs Act, as represented by Senate bills 1944, 2000, and House bill 6110; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1890. Also, petition of C. E. Stover, Spencer Kellogg & Sons, of Edgewater; S. Bayard Colgate, Colgate Palmolive Peet Co., Jersey City, all of the State of New Jersey, and others, urging that a tax of 5 percent per pound on coconut and other vegetable oils would be ruinous, increase importation of foreign soaps and other products, result in reduction of employment and closing of plants, and asking that the Ways and Means Committee reconsider the oppressive tax; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1891. Also, petition of Bergen County Osteopathic Society, opposing the Tugwell bill in its present form; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1892. Also, petition of the Morsemere Community Church, Ridgefield, N.J., supporting the Costigan antilynching bill, which proposes to give the Federal Government power to act against lynchers where States fail to do so; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1893. By Mr. LAMBERTSON: Petition of the Ladies Aid of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Everest, the Mahaska Flower Club, of Mahaska, and the East Topeka Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Topeka, all in the State of Kansas, urging the passage of House bill 6097, providing higher moral standards for films entering interstate and international commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1894. By Mr. LEHLBACH: Petition signed by Maynard O. Klement and others of the Twelfth Congressional District of New Jersey, protesting against improper means to prevent free access to broadcasting facilities; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1895. By Mr. LEWIS of Maryland: Petition containing 5,000 names, protesting against the censorship of certain radio broadcasts; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1896. By Mr. LINDSAY: Petition of W. F. Banks, of Brooklyn, N.Y., opposing the excise tax on coconut oil, copra, and other imported oils; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1897. Also, petition of Welch, Holme & Clark Co., New York City, protesting against excise tax on coconut oils; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1898. Also, petition of Kirkman & Son, Inc., soap manufacturers, Brooklyn, N.Y., concerning excise tax on account oil and copra; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1899. Also, petition of National Licorice Co., Brooklyn, N.Y., opposing present excise tax on candy; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1900. Also, telegram of Jos. Rosenberg's Sons, 58 Townsend Street, Brooklyn, N.Y., concerning tax on oils; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1901. Also, petition of Colgate-Palmolive Peet Co., S. Bayard Colgate, president, Kansas City, Mo., opposing proposed 5-cent tax on imported oils; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1902. Also, petition of Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, New York City, opposing the projected program of naval construction; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1903. Also, petition of Central Trades and Labor Council of Greater New York and vicinity, New York City, requesting early restoration of 15-percent pay cut; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1904. Also, petition of Jos. G. Dubin & Sons, Inc., manufacturing confectioners, Brooklyn, N.Y., opposing present excise tax on candy; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1905. By Mr. PARKER: Petition of several thousand residents of Chatham, Bryan, Bulloch, Burke, Effingham, Emanuel, Evans, Liberty, Jenkins, Screven, Treutlen, and Tattnall Counties in the First Congressional District of Georgia, protesting against the discrimination of certain broadcasting companies against certain religious radio programs; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1906. Also, petition of A. W. Daughtry and 225 other citizens of Chatham County, Ga., urging the passage of the legislation known as the "old-age pension bill"; to the Committee on Pensions.

1907. By Mr. PARKS: Petition of citizens of Calhoun County, Ark.; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

1908. By Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma: Petition of J. O. Collins, 311 West Twenty-fourth Street, Oklahoma City, and 425 residents of Payne County and 1,500 residents of Oklahoma County, all of the State of Oklahoma, protesting against certain unwarranted interference with their rights, under the Radio Act, and certain vicious action of certain entrenched interests; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1909. By Mr. RUDD: Petition of Kirkman & Sons, Inc., soap manufacturers, Brooklyn, N.Y., opposing the proposed tax on coconut oil and copra; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1910. Also, petition of W. F. Banks, of Brooklyn, N.Y., opposing the proposed tax on coconut oil, copra, and other imported oils; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1911. Also, petition of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, New York City, opposing the passage of the Vinson naval building bill; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

1912. Also, petition of the Central Trades and Labor Council of the Greater New York and vicinity, favoring an early restoration of the full 15-percent cut for Government employees be made; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1913. Also, petition of the Associated Office and Professional Employees, 232 Seventh Avenue, New York City, opposing pay cuts of Civil Works Administration employees, and for the expansion of the civil-works program in order to absorb more workers from the millions still unemployed; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1914. Also, petition of S. Bayard Colgate, president Colgate Palmolive Peet Co., Kansas City, Mo., opposing the proposed 5-cent tax on imported vegetable oils; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1915. Also, petition of the National Licorice Co., Brooklyn, N.Y., favoring the repeal of the excise tax on candy; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1916. Also, petition of Welch Holme & Clark Co., New York City, opposing the proposed tax on coconut oil; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1917. By Mr. SANDERS: Petition of numerous citizens of Mabank, Tex., asking for the full payment of adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1918. By Mr. SEGER: Petition of Monsignor Stein General Assembly, Fourth Degree Knights of Columbus, and Paterson Council, No. 240, Knights of Columbus, of Paterson, N.J., opposing the birth control bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1919. By Mr. SINCLAIR: Petition of W. M. Lewis and 85 others, of Fargo, N.Dak., and vicinity, favoring the Hatfield-Keller bill providing a system of retirement and pensions for railroad employees; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1920. By Mr. SNELL: Petition of residents of the Thirty-first Congressional District of the State of New York, urging that radio stations be given the same privileges that are now enjoyed by the public press, and every radio station should be permitted, without interference to broadcast any lawful programs that they may choose to broadcast; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1921. By Mr. SMITH of West Virginia: Petition of Mrs. S. J. Bowman and other citizens of Charleston, W.Va., favoring the passage of House bill 6097, which seeks to regulate motion-picture production; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1922. By Mr. WIGGLESWORTH: Petition of James A. Colby et al., protesting against unjust censorship of radio broadcasting, and urging the safeguarding of the inherent rights of the American people relative to the radio; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

1923. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the American Federation of Government Employees, regarding the restoration of the 15-percent pay cut; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

1924. Also, petition of Mrs. Frank B. Stewart et al., regarding the proposed pure food and drugs bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1925. Also, petition of the city of Oakland, Calif., regarding the passage of a bill pertaining to a strip of land 300 feet long and 30 feet wide on the south side of Seventeenth Street, between Broadway and Franklin Street, to the city of Oakland; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

SENATE

TUESDAY, JANUARY 30, 1934

(Legislative day of Tuesday, Jan. 23, 1934)

The Senate met in executive session at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. LEWIS. I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask for a roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Hebert	Reed
Ashurst	Couzens	Johnson	Reynolds
Austin	Cutting	Keyes	Robinson, Ark.
Bachman	Davis	King	Robinson, Ind.
Bailey	Dickinson	La Follette	Russell
Bankhead	Dieterich	Lewis	Schall
Barbour	Dill	Logan	Sheppard
Barkley	Duffy	Lonergan	Shipstead
Black	Erickson	Long	Steiwer
Bone	Fess	McAdoo	Stephens
Borah	Fletcher	McCarran	Thomas, Utah
Brown	Frazier	McGill	Thompson
Bulkley	George	McKellar	Townsend
Bulow	Gibson	McNary	Trammell
Byrd	Goldsborough	Murphy	Tydings
Byrnes	Gore	Neely	Vandenberg
Capper	Hale	Norris	Van Nuys
Caraway	Harrison	O'Mahoney	Wagner
Carey	Hastings	Overton	Walcott
Connally	Hatch	Patterson	Wheeler
Coolidge	Hatfield	Pittman	White
Copeland	Hayden	Pope

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] still occasioned by illness.

I also announce that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] are necessarily absent from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 6976), to protect the currency system of the United States, to provide for the better use of the monetary gold stock of the United States, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H.R. 6976) to protect the currency system of the United States, to provide for the better use of the monetary gold stock of the United States, and for other purposes, and it was signed by the Vice President.

INDEBTEDNESS OF FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS TO THE UNITED STATES

As in legislative session,

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution No. 109, agreed to on the 4th instant, a statement relative to the indebtedness of foreign governments to the United States as of January 4, 1934, giving the amounts not paid according to contract terms, which, with the accompanying statement, was ordered to lie on the table.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS

As in legislative session,

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Commerce transmitting, pursuant to law, a list of documents and files of papers that have accumulated in the Department which are not needed in the transaction of business and have no historical interest, and asking for action looking to their disposition, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. STEPHENS and Mr. MCNARY the committee on the part of the Senate.

EXCISE TAX ON COCONUT OIL

As in legislative session,

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following letter from the Secretary of War, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 29, 1934.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D.C.

SIR: The following message, received in this Department today in a radiogram dated at Manila, Philippine Islands, January 29, 1934, is transmitted to you pursuant to the request contained therein:

"Please transmit Speaker House, President Senate, following: Bill proposed by House Ways and Means Committee imposing excise tax 5 cents pound on all coconut oil imported or manufactured in United States will be very severe blow to coconut-oil industry and copra producers Philippines, and will be tremendous hardship on 4,000,000 Filipinos dependent upon industry embracing four fifths of the archipelago. Approval measure will be disastrous to economic and social progress Philippines, as average of 95 percent our coconut-oil exports and over 60 percent our copra exports absorbed by United States, with no sufficient alternate markets. Although not as important financially as sugar, Philippine coconut industry affects far greater number people. United chambers commerce Philippines through me respectfully request you kindly present our views to congressional leaders and Ways and Means Committee, and if possible prevent its consideration by Congress. Luz, President Chamber of Commerce of Philippine Islands."

Respectfully,

GEO. H. DERN, Secretary of War.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

As in legislative session,

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Carolina, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

A concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to provide relief for the agricultural industry

Whereas, unless immediate relief is given, hundreds of thousands of farmers will lose their farms and their homes and millions more will be forced into our cities and villages, and the army of unemployed will necessarily increase to alarming proportions; and

Whereas the price of agricultural products during recent years has in fact been far below the cost of production; and

Whereas there is no adequate way of refinancing existing agricultural indebtedness and the farmers are at the mercy of their mortgagees and creditors throughout this State and Nation; and

Whereas Senate bill No. 457, introduced in the Senate of the United States by Senator LYNN J. FRAZIER, of North Dakota, provides for the liquidating and refinancing of agricultural indebtedness and provides for a reduced rate of interest for the same through the Federal Farm Loan System and the Federal Reserve Bank System; and

Whereas the provisions of this bill will have a vital effect upon the agricultural industry of the State of South Carolina; and

Whereas at the present time many loans relating to the agricultural industry should bear a reduced rate of interest; and

Whereas agriculture is the basic industry of this country and there can be no sound business prosperity until agriculture is put on an equality with other industries: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of South Carolina (the senate concurring), That it is the sense of this general assembly that American agriculture should be placed on an equal basis with other industries by providing an adequate system of credit and that adequate legislation to that end should be adopted at the earliest possible date.

Resolved further, That the Congress of the United States should enact the provisions of said Senate bill No. 457; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and to each of the Senators and Representatives of South Carolina in Congress, and to United States Senator LYNN J. FRAZIER, the Senator who introduced the bill.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Columbia, S.C., January 25, 1934.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of a resolution adopted by the house, and concurred in by the senate.

[SEAL] J. WILSON GIBBES,
Clerk of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Joint resolution relating to the corn-hog program

Whereas the farmers of Wisconsin have been suffering for years due to the economic depression; and

Whereas the farmers of Wisconsin will be benefited by the corn-hog adjustment program to the extent of several million dollars only if they will all be eligible to take advantage of such program; and

Whereas a ruling has been made by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration of the United States to the effect that any farmer who has grown less than 10 acres of ear corn or who raised less than 3 litters of pigs a year, based on an average for the years 1932–33, will not be eligible to sign a contract pursuant to the corn-hog adjustment program and will be discriminated against by this ruling, due to the fact that approximately 85 percent of Wisconsin farmers use oats, barley, peas, and other grains and skim milk rather than corn for hog feed; and

Whereas the Wisconsin farmer deserves recognition in the corn-hog program for the reason that Wisconsin produces upward of 1,750,000 of hogs per year: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That this legislature respectfully requests the Agricultural Adjustment Administration to make all farmers in Wisconsin who raise two litters of pigs eligible to sign a contract under the corn-hog program, thereby making it possible for all Wisconsin hog raisers to receive benefit payments on hogs; be it further

Resolved, That suitable copies of this resolution be transmitted to the Agricultural Adjustment Administration of the United States, to both Houses of the Congress of the United States, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

CORNELIUS YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JOHN J. SLOCUM,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.
THOMAS J. O'MALLEY,
President of the Senate.
R. A. COBBAN,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin urging the Federal Government to provide relief for the potato-growing industry in Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

(See joint resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. DUFFY.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from Helen Rosenblum, of Brooklyn, N.Y., praying for the passage of the so-called "Copeland pure food bill", which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Omega Psi Phi Fraternity, favoring the passage of anti-lynching legislation, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a petition of sundry citizens of Buffalo Springs and vicinity, in the State of North Dakota, praying for the passage of legislation known as the "Frazier farm refinancing bill", which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Taxpayers' Protective League of Berks County, Reading, Pa., opposing adoption of the so-called "Prince plan for railway consolidation" and favoring Government ownership of railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from Hon. PEDRO GUEVARA and Hon. CAMILO OSIAS, Resident Commissioners from the Philippines, embodying in part a resolution, contained in a cablegram, adopted at a mass meeting held in the city of Manila, P.I., "affirming the people's right to decide for themselves their destiny" and that "it is the sense of this meeting to favor and support the extension by 9 months of the acceptance period in the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law as proposed by the Senate Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs and petition Congress for the approval of such extension", which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Wielapa Harbor Unit, No. 39, of South Bend, Wash., favoring the passage of legislation embodying the 4-point program for veteran relief of the American Legion, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Ninth Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense at Washington, D.C., which were referred as follows:

Resolution favoring the making of appropriation for a full investigation of all organizations, forces, and individuals engaged in activities subversive to the common welfare of the American people; to the Committee on Appropriations.

Resolution urging the passage of legislation securing premises within academy line "B", shown on the "present lay-out plan" of Fort Schuyler, N.Y., dated July 8, 1927, for the efficient operation of the New York State Merchant Marine Academy; to the Committee on Commerce.

Resolution favoring maintenance of the constitutional powers of the Congress "whereby the security of our people and the appropriations for national defense shall be assured"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Resolution favoring provision for adequate crews to man all ships of a full-treaty Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Resolution favoring the passage of legislation providing 1,650 useful airplanes for the Navy, including necessary personnel and equipment, to be available by 1939; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition numerously signed by sundry citizens of Riley County, Kans., praying for the passage of the so-called "Frazier farm refinancing bill", which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas presented a letter from J. S. Connolly, of New York City, relative to reduction in benefits, pensions, and emergency officers' retirement pay of veterans residing abroad, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a letter from Col. T. H. Barton, of El Dorado, Ark., relative to certain objections to the disallowance of percentage depletion of oil and gas wells and reduction of the depreciation and depletion allowances, which, with the accompanying table, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DUFFY presented the following joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Joint resolution requesting the Secretary of Agriculture to take certain action on the direct buying of livestock

Whereas direct buying destroys competition at public markets where prices of livestock are daily established, and prevents them from establishing fair prices for the producer; and

Whereas more than 50 percent of the hogs are now being purchased direct by packers; and

Whereas a producer's corn-hog committee of 25 members representing the corn-hog industry appointed at the national corn-hog conference held at Des Moines, Iowa, July 18, 1933, recommended that the Secretary of Agriculture proceed immediately to correct the evils existing because of direct buying; and

Whereas one of the major objectives of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration is to create fair prices for hogs and there should be exact equality of conditions especially between price-establishing markets and the so-called "concentration points" or direct-buying stations; and

Whereas the producer of hogs should have the same privilege to sort, grade, weigh, consolidate, and sell at through rates at public markets, which buyers of hogs enjoy at interior concentration points and country buying stations; and

Whereas the live hog should be standardized when sold for the account of the producer, such standardization should be brought by governmental supervision of weighing, grading, docking, and filling, United States Bureau of Markets standards of grading recommended: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That this legislature respectfully requests the Secretary of Agriculture to proceed immediately under the Packer and Stockyards Act or any other existing legislation to place direct-buying and terminal markets on a basis of fairness and equality; and be it further

Resolved, That a properly attested copy of this resolution be sent to Hon. Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, and to each United States Senator and Representative from Wisconsin in the Congress.

THOMAS J. O'MALLEY,
President of the Senate.
R. A. COBBAN,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
C. T. YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JOHN J. SLOCUM,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Joint resolution urging the national administration to provide relief for the potato-growing industry in Wisconsin

Whereas the potato-growing industry is one of the major branches of the agricultural industry in Wisconsin, this State in the year 1932 having planted and harvested in excess of 260,000 acres, with an average yield of 87 bushels per acre, or a total yield of 22,620,000 bushels, for which the farmers received an average price of only 23 cents per bushel; and

Whereas the present Federal restrictions on the grading of potatoes are such that potato growers cannot conform thereto, and such restrictions should be somewhat relaxed under the present economic conditions; and

Whereas the Federal Government now imposes a tariff duty on the importation of jute, which is used in the manufacture of burlap sacks, used almost exclusively for the shipment of potatoes; and

Whereas Wisconsin now ranks the fifth largest potato-producing State in the Union and complete recovery for the agricultural industry in Wisconsin cannot be accomplished unless relief is provided for all branches of the agricultural industry, assuring the farmer a price for his product equal at least to the cost of production plus a reasonable return on his investment and labor; and

Whereas under the Federal agricultural relief program in excess of $500,000,000 have been poured into agricultural communities in the Corn-Hog Belt, the Wheat Belt, and the Cotton Belt, and in addition thereto large sums have already been turned over to tobacco growers for acreage reduction; and

Whereas not one cent has as yet been provided for the potato-growing industry, nor is there at this time any relief program in sight for that industry; and

Whereas the foregoing conditions not only affect the potato producers but as well the potato shippers: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That this legislature respectfully urges the national administration to include in the agricultural-relief program prompt and effective relief for the potato-growing industry, to the end that the potato farmers may secure a price equal to at least the cost of production plus a reasonable return on investment and labor; and be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to President Roosevelt, to Hon. Henry A. Wallace, Federal Administrator of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, and to each Wisconsin Member of the Congress of the United States.

C. T. YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JOHN J. SLOCUM,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.
THOMAS J. O'MALLEY,
President of the Senate.
R. A. COBBAN,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in legislative session,

Mr. WALCOTT, from the Special Committee on Conservation of Wild Life Resources, to which was referred the bill (S. 2277) to establish fish and game sanctuaries in the national forests, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 243) thereon.

Mr. WALCOTT (for himself, Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. MCNARY, Mr. NORBECK, Mr. CLARK, Mr. BAILEY, and Mr. BYRD), from the Special Committee on Conservation of Wild Life Resources, reported a bill (S. 2529) to promote the conservation of wild life, fish, and game, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title, and also submitted a report (No. 244) thereon.

Mr. TRAMMELL, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2493) to establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties; to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels; and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 245) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

As in legislative session,

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. VANDENBERG:

A bill (S. 2520) to amend section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, relating to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. GEORGE:

A bill (S. 2521) to amend section 61 of the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, relating to depositories for money of bankrupt estates; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 2522) to provide for the cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in meeting the crisis in public education; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 2523) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, consider, and render judgment on the claims of George A. Carden and Anderson T. Herd against the United States in respect of certain ships taken during the World War by the United States; and

A bill (S. 2524) for the relief of certain disbursing officers of the Army of the United States and for the settlement of individual claims approved by the War Department (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2525) for the relief of Edward N. Jerry; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LONG:

A bill (S. 2526) to pay an annuity to Frances Agramonte, the widow of Dr. Aristides Agramonte, member of the Yellow Fever Commission; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GIBSON:

A bill (S. 2527) to amend the act of May 29, 1930, for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service; to the Committee on Civil Service.

A bill (S. 2528) to provide for establishing and maintaining a public airport for the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CAREY:

A bill (S. 2530) authorizing the conveyance of the old post-office building in Casper, Wyo., to the County Commissioners of Natrona County, Wyo.; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. WHEELER (by request):

A bill (S. 2531) to define the exterior boundaries of the Navajo Indian Reservation in New Mexico, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 2532) granting a pension to Mary A. Gillon (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McGILL:

A bill (S. 2533) granting a pension to Nathen Dishman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ADAMS:

A bill (S. 2534) to further extend the operation of the act entitled "An act for the temporary relief of water users on irrigation projects constructed and operated under the reclamation law", approved April 1, 1932; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 2535) for the relief of Claudia F. Banks and Edna B. Towner; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SCHALL:

A bill (S. 2536) to direct the distribution of the interest and principal of permanent fund of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota in accordance with the true purpose and intent of the agreements made pursuant to the act of January 14, 1889; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 2537) for the relief of Robert H. Leys; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2538) to provide for the appointment of two additional district judges for the southern district of New York; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 2539) for the relief of Anthony J. Constantino; and

A bill (S. 2540) to authorize the Secretary of War to sell to the Plattsburg National Bank & Trust Co. a tract of land comprising part of the Plattsburg Barracks Military Reservation, N.Y.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2541) granting a pension to Russell L. Armstrong; and

A bill (S. 2542) granting a pension to Emma J. Morris; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BYRD:

A bill (S. 2543) for the relief of John K. Johnson; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A joint resolution (S.J.Res. 78) to authorize the erection on public grounds in the District of Columbia of a stone marker designating the zero milestone of the Jefferson Davis National Highway; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. STEIWER:

A joint resolution (S.J.Res. 79) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, relating to popular nominations of candidates for President and Vice President; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENT TO INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL

As in legislative session,

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 6663, the independent offices appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the end of section 23 add the following:

"That paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of section 301 of title 3 of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932 is amended by striking out the date 'July 1, 1933,' where it appears in said paragraph and inserting in lieu thereof the date 'June 30, 1934.'"

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF LOUISIANA PROPAGANDA

As in legislative session,

Mr. LONG. I submit a resolution, which I ask may lie over until tomorrow under the rule.

There being no objection, the resolution (S.Res. 158) was ordered to lie over under the rule, as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee consisting of five Senators, to be appointed by the Vice President, is hereby authorized and directed to investigate into what, if any, plans, efforts, conspiracies or arrangements have been entered into, made, or exerted through the use of facilities in interstate commerce, through the use of publications using the United States mails and through bureaus of the United States with intent to spend sums of money, to set up various organizations or to bring about multiplicitous proceedings to libel or spread false information and to secure publicity thereof affecting HUEY P. LONG, United States Senator from the State of Louisiana, for the purpose of making difficult or impossible or to prevent such Senator from having fair and reasonable opportunity to present and urge, or to oppose, proposed legislation in the Congress of the United States; that said committee shall further inquire into the sums of money spent and by whom, in undertaking to accomplish the defeat of said Senator, when a candidate for the United States Senate, both in the primary and the general election of the year 1930, and the use of the mails for publications and the use of facilities in interstate commerce to spread libels against said Senator in said campaign and the use made of United States agencies to affect him and his candidacies; that said committee shall pursue its inquiry into whether Senators and Members of Congress have been libeled and defamed through the use of telegraphic wire services used in interstate commerce, through publications circulating in interstate commerce and through the mails of the United States, and by means of interstate radio communication if said Senators and Congressmen did not make or participate in the making of statements denunciatory to the said Senator, and to defame Members of Congress who do approve of any course of conduct of the said Senator, with a view to compelling unfavorable expressions affecting said Senator; that said committee shall inquire into whether or not interstate telegraph and telephone wires, radio facilities, and periodicals and publications passing through the mails of the United States were maliciously and improperly used to extol and applaud the misconduct of agents and servants employed by the United States Senate and its committees in which they may have been in contempt of the United States Senate or otherwise improperly acting, so as to reflect upon the said Senator; said committee shall inquire into whether agencies and departments of the United States have been employed and used for the purpose of harrassing and embarrassing and affording means of adverse publicity and false information and information in violation of the law, to defame and injure said Senator; that said committee shall make inquiry to determine whether said publications circulating through the United States mail and interstate telephone, telegraph, and radio facilities are employed to bring discredit and prosecution upon political and business associates and relatives and other colleagues of the said Senator, with the view and for the purpose of maligning the said Senator so as to render difficult and embarrassing his pursuing his work in the Congress of the United States; that said committee shall investigate whether publicity agencies have been hired and set up in the city of New York and the city of Washington to spread false information through the use of interstate telephone and telegraph wires, through interstate radio facilities and through publications circulating in the mails of the United States, to malign and defame the said Senator; and it shall investigate all sources of funds, if any, supporting and financing any and all such efforts, to the end and for the purpose of preventing all interstate telephone and telegraph wires, interstate radio facilities, and the mails of the United States being used for fraud and for promotion of crime and to prevent fair, reasonable, and honorable action and expression in the Congress of the United States; that said committee in pursuing its investigation to determine whether there has or has not been a conspiracy or activity involving a misuse of such interstate facilities and the mails of the United States, shall conduct its inquiry into matters touching upon expenditures and facilities used in effort to bring about impeachment and removal from office of said HUEY P. LONG, or his defeat to said offices, of public service commissioner, Governor, and United States Senator, insofar as the same tends to show such improper use of the facilities of interstate commerce and the mails of the United States, and make inquiry into all other facts in relation to the foregoing which would not only be of public interest but which would aid the Senate in enacting any remedial legislation.

Said committee is hereby authorized to act upon its own initiative and upon such information as in its judgment may be reasonable or reliable. Upon complaint being made before said committee, under oath, by any person, persons, candidate, or political committee setting forth allegations as to facts which, under this resolution, it would be the duty of said committee to investigate, the said committee shall investigate such charges as fully as though it were acting upon its own motion, unless after a hearing upon such complaint, the committee shall find that the allegations in said complaint are immaterial or untrue.

Said committee is hereby authorized, in the performance of its duties, to sit at such times and places, either in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, as it deems necessary or proper. It is specifically authorized to require the attendance of witnesses, by subpena or otherwise, to require the production of books, papers, and documents; and to employ counsel, experts, clerical, and other assistants; and to employ stenographers at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per 100 words.

Said committee is hereby specifically authorized to act through any subcommittee authorized to be appointed by said committee. The chairman of said committee, or any member of any subcommittee, may administer oaths to witnesses and sign subpenas for witnesses; and every person duly summoned before said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, who refuses or fails to obey the process of said committee or who appears and refuses to answer questions pertinent to said investigation shall be punished as prescribed by law.

All hearings before said committee shall be public, and all orders or decisions of the committee shall be public.

The committee shall make a full report to the Senate.

INFORMATION RELATIVE TO FISHING INDUSTRY

As in legislative session,

Mr. JOHNSON. I submit a resolution asking the Tariff Commission to make an investigation, and request unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution (S.Res. 159) was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission be, and hereby is, requested to make investigations under its general powers of:

(a) Subsidies, bounties, and other assistance given to fisheries enterprises by foreign governments;

(b) The employment of crews in foreign ports for temporary service on United States fishing vessels, including the practice of dispatching United States fishing vessels with so-called "skeleton crews";

(c) The importation into the United States of fresh and frozen tuna fish and its effect on the production of tuna fish by United States fishing vessels.

PRICE FIXING IN FAIR-COMPETITION CODES

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, on the assumption that it will cause no discussion, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 157.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. FESS. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read Senate Resolution 157, submitted by Mr. COSTIGAN on the 27th instant, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the National Recovery Administration is requested to transmit to the Senate at the earliest practicable date copies of all codes of fair competition in which price fixing in any form has been resorted to, together with the industrial, consumers', and labor analyses with respect to such codes.

INDEBTEDNESS OF FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS TO THE UNITED STATES (S. DOC. NO. 123)

As in legislative session,

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Secretary of the Treasury has made response to Senate Resolution No. 109, relative to the indebtedness of foreign governments and the default of those governments. I ask if his reply goes into the RECORD or is it necessary to ask that it be printed in the RECORD?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It may be printed in the RECORD or as a Senate document or in both forms.

Mr. BORAH. I ask that it may be printed as a document and also in the RECORD. It is brief.

There being no objection, the response of the Secretary of the Treasury was ordered to be printed as a Senate document and in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, January 30, 1934.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: Pursuant to Senate Resolution No. 109 of January 4, 1934, I have the honor to transmit herewith a statement relative to indebtedness of foreign governments to the United States as of January 4, 1934, giving the amounts not paid according to contract terms.

The amounts shown under classification I are due from governments which have funded their indebtedness. The amounts shown under classification II represent unfunded indebtedness which is either past due or is payable on demand.

Respectfully,

H. MORGENTHAU,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Statement relative to indebtedness of foreign governments to the United States as of Jan. 4, 1934

FUNDED INDEBTEDNESS (JULY 1, 1932–JAN. 4, 1934)

	Total indebtedness	Amounts not paid according to contract terms
		Total	Original funding agreements		Under moratorium agreements (joint resolution of Dec. 23, 1931), (amount)
			Principal	Interest
A. Countries which have made payments in full of amounts due:
Finland	$8,726,645.63
B. Countries which have made payments on account of amounts due, July 1, 1932, to Jan. 4, 1934:
Czechoslovakia	165,283,195.35	$2,852,898.61	$2,670,085.83		$182,812.78
Great Britain	4,636,157,358.30	176,120,246.63	32,000,000.00	$134,399,481.58	9,720,765.05
Greece [1]	32,583,338.65	1,379,690.83	694,000.00	605,384.00	80,306.83
Italy	2,008,103,288.76	13,687,010.12	12,300,000.00	490,854.24	896,155.88
Latvia	7,312,658.38	286,462.10	47,500.00	223,687.84	15,274.26
Lithuania	6,554,544.23	221,169.92	39,705.00	167,781.66	13,683.26
Rumania [2]	63,871,783.49	1,048,750.08	1,000,000.00		48,750.08
Total	6,919,866,167.16	195,596,228.29	48,751,290.83	135,887,189.32	10,957,748.14
C. Countries which have made no payments on account of amounts due, July 1, 1932, to Jan. 4, 1934:
Austria	23,757,934.13	34,767.23			34,767.23
Belgium	411,166,529.09	11,309,453.88	4,200,000.00	6,625,000.00	484,453.88
Estonia	17,784,695.59	989,985.29	135,500.00	817,900.00	36,585.29
France	3,960,772,238.30	82,308,312.22	21,477,135.00	57,784,297.50	3,046,879.72
Germany (reichsmarks converted at $0.2382) [3]	724,186,740.53	959,377.17		595,157.59	364,219.58
Hungary [4]	2,051,938.61	114,628.64	25,070.00	85,333.06	4,225.58
Poland	222,560,466.43	12,317,829.71	1,625,000.00	10,236,600.00	456,229.71
Yugoslavia [5]	61,625,000.00	525,000.00	525,000.00
Total	5,423,905,542.68	108,559,354.14	27,987,705.00	76,144,288.15	4,427,360.99
Total under funding agreements	12,352,498,355.47	304,155,582.43	76,738,995.83	212,031,477.47	15,385,109.13
UNFUNDED INDEBTEDNESS
Armenia	20,313,416.66	20,313,416.66	11,959,917.49	8,353,499.17
Nicaragua	416,550.13	416,550.13	289,898 78	126,651.35
Russia	337,223,288.14	337,223,288.14	192,601,297.37	144,621,990.77
Total unfunded indebtedness	357,953,254.93	357,953,254.93	204,851,113.64	153,102,141.29
Total	12,710,451,610.40	662,108,837.36	281,590,109.47	365,133,618.76	15,385,109.13

[1] Payments due on account of war loans postponed in accordance with terms of funding agreement. Interest due on such postponed amounts has not been paid. United States has received same proportionate payment on account of amount due on stabilization and refugee loan of 1928 as other creditors, namely, a payment of $65,376, representing 30 percent of the annual interest for 1932. Payments of other amounts due on account of this loan have not been received, but assurances of treatment equal to that arranged for private holders of such bonds have been received.

[2] Rumanian Government paid on June 15, 1933, the amount of $29,061.46 as advance interest on the amount of $1,000,000 due on that date. No payment has been received on account of the amount of $48,750.08 due on Jan. 2, 1934, under the moratorium agreement with that Government, but discussions regarding this payment have not been closed.

[3] Amount due (4,027,611.95 reichsmarks) paid on Sept. 30, 1933, to the conversion office for German foreign debts in Berlin in a "blocked account" for the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, to the credit of the general account of the Treasurer of the United States. Refunding agreement provides for payment in dollars at Federal Reserve Bank of New York.

[4] Hungarian treasury certificates in the pengo equivalent of the dollar amount due have been deposited to the foreign creditors' account at the Hungarian National Bank. Refunding agreement provides for payment in dollars at the Treasury of the United States in Washington or at the Federal Reserve Bank of New York.

[5] No payments received since June 15, 1931.

RELIEF OF THE DAIRY INDUSTRY

As in legislative session,

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I received under date of January 25, 1934, the outline of an emergency and long-time program for the relief of the dairy industry which was sent to me by the president of the Wisconsin State Chamber of Commerce. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the outline was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A DAIRY INDUSTRY PROGRAM ADOPTED AND APPROVED BY THE WISCONSIN STATE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE AND THE WISCONSIN COUNCIL OF AGRICULTURE AT A JOINT MEETING HELD AT WAUSAU, WIS., ON JANUARY 20, 1934

(A) A VOLUNTARY CONTROL PLAN FOR DAIRY PRODUCTS ON A BUTTERFAT BASIS

I. Features of a central plan that are essential to meet present situation:

(a) Program must make dairying relatively more profitable to established dairymen who cooperate in the program.

(b) Must bring about a positive check if not an actual decrease in the sales from farms.

(c) Must discourage, rather than encourage, farmers engaged in other types of farming from becoming dairymen.

(d) Must be voluntary on the part of participating farmers, and if possible, permit farmer to use his discretion as to methods of accomplishing the required reduction.

II. Taxes to provide money for benefit payments:

(a) Levy a processing tax collected on a butter-fat basis on all milk and milk products sold from the farm.

(b) Levy a compensating tax on dairy substitutes.

(c) The above processing and compensating taxes to be sufficient to finance adequate benefit payment.

III. Benefit payments to be paid to cooperating farmers:

(a) Benefit payments must be limited to contracting producers who actually effect reduction in sales.

(b) The method shall be by placing limitations on sales rather than on production, number of cows, or number of acres, because it permits dairymen to curb sales by culling low producers, disposing of diseased cows, less intensive feeding, or any other method that they may choose peculiar to their own individual farming business.

IV. Allocation and control of sales:

(a) A base allotment would be established from marketing records of creameries, cheese factories, condensaries, and milk plants covering a period of 5 years. Adjustments of base allotments to compensate for abnormal production conditions.

(b) Producer-distributors must furnish satisfactory evidence of past production to obtain base allotment.

(c) All sales of milk or milk products will be measured in terms of pounds of butterfat.

(d) Control agencies would concern themselves with only those who applied for benefits and submit evidence of proper adjustment of sales.

(B) SUPPLEMENTARY MEASURES FOR BENEFIT OF DAIRY INDUSTRY

I. American dairy farmers must be given preference in the domestic market if they are to reduce sales.

(a) Prevent importations of dairy products, fats, and oils.

(b) Provide adequate internal taxes on dairy substitutes.

II. Emphasize bovine-disease eradication.

(a) Offer an incentive to farmers to eradicate bovine tuberculosis and Bang's disease through sufficient indemnity to be paid upon proof of slaughter.

(b) Sufficient funds for carrying out such eradication programs should be drawn from appropriation to Department of Agriculture, similar to procedure now followed in paying indemnities for tuberculosis eradication.

III. Special emergency relief.

(a) It is desirable that Congress appropriate a special fund of at least $250,000,000 for an emergency relief program that will fit into the general plan of production control so as to permit the dairy farmer to dispose of dairy animals as a means of reducing sales, such fund to be raised from other sources than a processing tax.

IV. Purchase and distribution of dairy products for relief.

(a) Purchase of dairy products to be distributed to persons on relief should be continued and, if possible, used as a market stabilization feature through the making of purchases on the open market rather than on bids.

(b) All dairy products should be included in the purchasing program whenever advisable.

V. Develop a merchandising plan for dairy products.

(a) Give consideration to a program of increasing consumption of dairy products through an educational advertising program designed to create a lasting health and appetite appeal with the consuming public for dairy products.

(b) Develop uniform and adequate Federal standards of butterfat content of dairy products with a view to improving quality and increasing consumption.

(c) Conduct research for finding new and more extensive uses of dairy products.

(The Wisconsin State Chamber of Commerce has affiliated with it about 60 of the largest and most influential chambers of commerce and trade associations. The Wisconsin Council of Agriculture is composed of the oldest, broadly recognized and most experienced of the important farm organizations of Wisconsin. Other important farm organizations were independently represented. By agreement, the Wisconsin State Chamber of Commerce appointed a committee consisting of Messrs. K. S. Reynolds, H. S. Wells, and W. H. Gharrity. The Wisconsin Council of Agriculture appointed a committee consisting of Messrs. Herman Ihde, Charles Dineen, and C. G. Huppert. These two committees met jointly as a committee on planning in connection with the fifth annual meeting of the Wisconsin State Chamber of Commerce, held at Wausau, on Jan. 20, 1934. After hearing a great number of representatives of both business and agriculture and perusing a great many written plans for the relief of the dairy industry, the committee made the above report, which was unanimously adopted by the joint gathering of business men and farmers.)

THE RECONSTRUCTION PROGRAM

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have in my hand a quotation from Mayor LaGuardia, of New York City, printed by Labor in its issue of January 30, 1934. It bears directly upon the reconstruction program of the administration, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Labor, Washington, D.C., Jan. 30, 1934]

NATION GAVE LIBERALLY TO DESTROY; WHY NOT TO SAVE? ASKS LAGUARDIA

NEW YORK, January 25.—Fear of the consequences if the Federal Government curtails or abandons the Civil Works program were voiced at a significant meeting in aid of the unemployed held last Sunday at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

More than 10,000 persons crowded the unfinished edifice, and loud-speakers carried the words of speakers to throngs outside. Fifty or sixty clergymen, representing all denominations, were present.

Mayor F. H. LaGuardia, one of the principal speakers, declared that the unemployment situation has gotten beyond the control of charitable organizations, municipalities, and even the States.

"We are in the midst of a great national crisis", Mayor LaGuardia said. "We dare not measure the requirements in dollars and cents but in human souls.

"The Civil Works program is costing $60,000,000 a week. Are you shocked at that sum being used to save human lives?

"Many are; but let us go back 16 years and recall similar meetings when speakers would rise and say that a barrage against the enemy would cost $1,000,000 a minute, that the Government was appropriating cheerfully, and that everybody would give until it hurt 'in order to kill and destroy.'

"Now we want to build and prove whether or not our economic system is worth saving. I don't know whether it is, but I do know that the families of 12,000,000 Americans are worth saving."

ADDRESS BY JOHN A. SIMPSON—MODERN SHYLOCK

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I present a radio address by John A. Simpson, president of the National Farmers' Union, delivered on Saturday, January 27, 1934, entitled "Modern Shylock", which I ask may be published in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and it is as follows:

I am happy to greet the thousands of my radio audience I know are listening in at this time.

I especially greet Local No. 1 at Dundee, N.Y. This is the first local ever organized in that State. They are having a meeting today and a dinner at this hour. They are all listening. I want to promise them that within 30 days I am going to meet them face to face in their own place of assembly.

Out in Arizona, Marshall Humphrey and George Freestone have notified me that several hundred Farmers' Union members are assembled in Phoenix getting this broadcast. To you good members, of whom the only two I have ever met are Humphrey and Freestone, I promise you that early in May I will be in your midst with a series of meetings in Arizona.

Now, jumping to Wyoming, I am glad to greet Local No. 1, just organized at Buffalo, and I promise to Brother Walters a meeting for the members of Local No. 1 sometime in June.

Here is a good one—a letter from J. J. Welch stating that after my last radio talk his Irish arose and he got up from listening in, went out, and before stopping signed up 27 farmers in the Farmers' Union. This is a new local at Deer Grove, Ill.

Now, here is one from Coeur d'Alene, Idaho. Washington and Idaho maintain a State union between them. Jesse Vetter is State president. He says:

"I am sure you will be interested to know that on the date of your next radio address, January 27, Mrs. Lillian Reynolds, of Puyallup, Wash., has arranged for a radio party in the public library auditorium of that city. She expects to have from 100 to 200 farmers and their wives present to hear your address and has requested that I be present to form a Farmers' Union local, then have a big dinner. I shall be present and do my duty, although it means a trip of over 300 miles.

As a means of helping the dairy farmers and beef farmers, I made a canvass of the food stores of this city of 8,000. I found that they all carried canned beef in stock, but not one had a can of beef manufactured in the United States. Every can for sale came from South America. I also found that the Forest Department, the C.C.C. camps, and the Army, until just recently, when we sent protests to Washington, used South American canned beef.

Here is a wire just received from the Farmers' Union Cooperative Gin, at Amber, Okla. They are having a meeting today of their stockholders and friends; are in a radio party at this meeting. I greet each and everyone of them. I was there when this cooperative baby was born. I am proud of them.

Hello Arkansas! Just received your wire saying you are in a meeting at Ulm today with a radio installed listening in at this minute. I predict Arkansas will become one of the big Farmers' Union States in the year 1934.

Prairie View Local, Checotah, Okla., is organizing a county union with Ed Reger, State organizer, with them.

There are many others who have notified me of their radio parties, but time forbids that I give special greetings to each of you.

I have some splendid and encouraging organization news that the national secretary has gathered for me. The night of the 20th of this month the records of our national secretary showed every State that had reported on membership had a marked increase in numbers of members as compared with the same date in 1933.

For instance, Oklahoma has already paid for 12,000 members. A year ago she had only reported for 10,000.

Nebraska reports an increase of 45 percent over the same date of last year; Minnesota, 52 percent; North Dakota, 40 percent; and California, 75 percent.

Arkansas, Wisconsin, Montana, Oregon, and Illinois have more than 100-percent increase.

For all organized States the increase is 31 percent. In unorganized States a year ago there were 81 members paid up in the national union. On the 20th of this month there were 4,243. The increase for both organized and unorganized States is 73.7 percent.

All of this organization work, outside of the States where there are State organizations, has been done by the farmers themselves; they have self-organized over the appeals I have made on my broadcasting hour over the National Broadcasting Co.'s hook-up. One hundred and seventy-four locals in States where we had no organization have been organized. After my talk the neighbors discussed the subject. One of them was selected to write our national secretary, E. E. Kennedy, Kankakee, Ill., for information and instructions on how they could form a local in that community. Mr. Kennedy sent them the information and instructions. They called a meeting, probably at their schoolhouse or at one of their homes. They read the National Farmers' Union program, discussed it, believed in it, and then and there became members of the Farmers' Union, setting up the local. Since then they have been busy adding members. Some have been cooperating in a business way. Some of them have done cooperating in the way of looking after something in which they were interested at their county courthouse or at their State capitol. Practically all of them are helping to let the President and Congress know about the legislative program of the Farmers' Union.

You farmers listening to me at this moment who are not a part of the 174 communities mentioned, why not at the close of this hour do the thing that these 174 have done? Why not ring up a few of the neighbors and call a meeting at your house for tonight or tomorrow night, select someone to write E. E. Kennedy, our national secretary, for information and instructions? I guarantee you that if you do this, you will never regret it.

REPORT OF STATE CONVENTIONS

Since talking to you the fourth Saturday in December, over this splendid hook-up, among a lot of meetings I have attended are a

State convention of the Nebraska Farmers' Union in Omaha, a State convention of Farmers' Union of Oklahoma in Oklahoma City, a State convention of the Farmers' Union of Colorado in Denver.

You farmers listening in who are not members of the Farmers' Union, which is the farmers' class organization of the United States, if you could have been with me at these three State conventions, you would have gone home wild with enthusiasm for organizing a local of the Farmers' Union in your community. You would have heard in each of these conventions the wonderful story of Farmers' Union cooperative business institutions—grain elevators, produce stations, cotton gins, livestock commission firms on the terminal markets, Farmers' Union creameries, oil and gas stations, Farmers' Union mutual property-insurance companies, and State exchanges where farmers buy their supplies at wholesale, Farmers' Union automobile and life insurance doing business in these States from the sister State of Iowa. Then you would have heard the story of how, in these three States, the Farmers' Union looks after the welfare of the farmers in a legislative way, procuring the passage of many beneficial laws and defeating the passage of many injurious ones.

To you Farmers' Union members out there in the Mid West, who read the reports of the convention in the daily papers of the dissension in the Nebraska State convention, I want you to know the newspapers' stories were 99 percent fiction. I was there the first day; was on the program that night. I announced to the 1,500 members of the Farmers' Union attending that convention that I would be leaving early the next morning, that if they had any criticisms or questions to ask, they should give them while I was there. There was some discussion, but it was all of a constructive nature and carried on in a brotherly way. I do not believe, and I do not want you to believe, that there would be a single member of the 1,500 members of the Farmers' Union in that convention so cowardly as to wait until the next day when they knew I would be gone to attack me. I am sure the daily papers have manufactured their stories along this line without an atom of foundation. Farmers' Union members are the salt of the earth; not cowards.

We just arrived in Washington Wednesday afternoon; wife and daughter with me. On our way here from our home in Oklahoma City, we held a splendid meeting Sunday evening in the Federated Church in South Solon, Ohio. On Monday night we talked to an audience in the high-school auditorium in Lima, Ohio. They came from five counties. One delegation came from Maybee, Mich., 110 miles from there. Tuesday night it was my very great pleasure to speak to the members of two new locals in the court house at Butler, Pa. This is another group of self-organized farmers. It is my prediction that part of Pennsylvania will soon be well organized. There are half a dozen splendid young men who have interested themselves in getting farmers into their own class organization. I know they will not fail.

You farmers who have not made the start, you do not know how much pleasure you will get out of organizing a local in your community. Write E. E. Kennedy, Kankakee, Ill., for information and instructions as to how to organize.

OUR BILLS IN CONGRESS

Let me briefly outline for you the bills we are working for here in Washington.

We are for the Wheeler bill (S. 70). This bill remonetizes silver. If this bill should pass, it puts silver back in the same position that it occupied before it was demonetized in 1873.

A complete story of the demonetization of silver will be found in Coin Harvey's The Book. You will, undoubtedly, find this book in the library nearest you, or your neighbor may have a copy. It is a textbook on the money question.

Another book worth reading on this subject is by a member of the Supreme Court, Justice Brandeis, entitled "Other People's Money." This book was written about 20 years ago. In a way it has proved prophetic.

The remonetization of silver as provided in the Wheeler bill doubles our basic money and raises prices all over the world. I am sure any thinking man knows that is the need of the hour.

We are endorsers and promoters of the Frazier bill H.R. 2855. This bill provides for the Government refinancing farmers on the basis of charging farmers 1½ percent interest, which is more than the Government charges many other groups they finance.

We are supporters and promoters of the Swank-Thomas bill, which provides for the Government regulating the marketing of farm crops on the basis of fixing the prices at not less than cost of production, including a reasonable profit on that portion of our crops needed for domestic use. This is exactly what the Government does for the products of many other groups when they fix their prices.

We think the Economy Act was written by Shylock. Shylock wanted more interest. To get it he promoted the reduction of the compensation and pensions of the ex-service men of every war beginning with and including the Civil War. He promoted the reduction of wages of the scrubwomen who keep the public buildings in Washington clean. The Farmers' Union resents such mistreatment of these ex-service men; we demand that the interest to Shylock be reduced and the payments of our ex-service men and our scrubwomen restored.

The farmers of this country who produce sugar beets are destroyed to the point of bankruptcy. For that reason, among others, the Farmers' Union supports legislation that will give the Philippine Islands immediate and absolute independence. Tariffs on sugar are ineffective, because they do not and cannot include the Philippine Islands as long as they belong to us.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S INAUGURAL ADDRESS

"Practices of the unscrupulous money changers stand indicted in the court of public opinion, rejected by the hearts and minds of men.

"True, they have tried, but their efforts have been cast in the pattern of an outworn tradition. Faced by failure of credit, they have proposed only the lending of more money."

These are not my words. They are taken from the inaugural address made the 4th of last March.

It looks as if unscrupulous money changers still dominate the monetary policies of this Government. At least the process of lending money has not ceased. In fact, it has increased. The Government is now issuing bonds at about the rate of a billion dollars a month. They issued a billion dollars in December. They have just issued another billion this month. The people pay interest on these bonds; old Shylock gets the interest.

JUSTICE BRANDEIS

"J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. for promoting the Steel Trust took as compensation for a few weeks' work $12,500,000 in cash and $20,000,000 of the $80,000,000 of stock."

This is a fair sample of hundreds of promotions made by the House of Morgan.

"Corporations, which in the first instance bear the charges for capital, have doubtless submitted because of banker control; exercised directly through interlocking directorates and indirectly through combinations among bankers to suppress competition. These burdens are shifted upon the community."

These are not my words. They are taken from a book entitled "Other People's Money" written by Louis D. Brandeis 20 years ago. Louis D. Brandeis is now a member of the Supreme Court of the United States.

WOODROW WILSON

"I have no desire to excite anger against anybody. That would be easy, but it would do no particular good. I wish, rather, to consider an unhappy situation in a spirit that may enable us to account for it.

"When I see alliances formed, as they are now being formed, by successful men of business with successful organizers of politics, I know that something has been done that checks the vitality and progress of society.

"Today, when our Government has so far passed into the hands of special interests, it behooves this Nation to remember that the people shall be saved by the power that sleeps in its own bosom, or none at all.

"Some of the biggest men in the United States are afraid of somebody or something. They know that there is a power somewhere so organized, so subtle, so watchful, so interlocked, so complete that they had better not speak above their breath when they speak in condemnation of it.

"It is because the laws of this country do not prevent the strong from crushing the weak. The strong have crushed the weak. The strong dominate industry and the economic life of this country.

"All over the Union people are coming to feel that they have no control over the affairs of Government. We know that something intervenes between the people and the control of their own affairs at Washington. It is not the people who have been ruling there. We are in the presence—we are at the threshold of a revolution.

"Don't you know that a man with eloquent tongue who did not care for the Nation could put this whole country into a flame? Don't you know that the people from one end of the country to the other believe that something is wrong?

"The Government of the United States at present is a foster child of the special interest. The people stand outside and look on at their Government. I sometimes think that the men who are now governing us are unconscious of the chains in which they are held.

"The national administration for 16 years has been virtually under the regulation of the trusts.

"One of the wonderful things about America is that for more than a generation it has allowed itself to be governed by persons who were not invited to govern it. Secret, private interests have been running the Government. They have been running it through the agencies of those whom we call political bosses. Bosses are men who have worked their way by secret methods to places of power. They are men who are never elected to anything. They operate behind closed doors in secret conferences.

"The great money lenders of this country are in arrangement with the manufacturers of this country by which they control the markets. They do not propose to see their control of the markets interfered with by the people.

"Those of us who talk this way are denounced as dangerous radicals. The men who cry out most loudly against us are those who find that their private game in politics is being spoiled. They are the men who get behind the Constitution to play hide-and-seek with the people whom they pretend to save. They are the men who have entrenched themselves in the laws which they have misinterpreted and misused. They are now afraid that radicalism will sweep them away, and I believe it will."

What I have been telling you the last few minutes are not my words. Some of you were afraid I was committing treason; would be arrested, tried, convicted, and spend the remainder of my days in a felon's cell. No danger. I have taken all of it from The New Freedom, written by Woodrow Wilson in 1912.

USURY

The subject of my talk today is the "Modern Shylock." I desire to treat Shylock not as a person but as a system. Usury, or the interest system, is the modern Shylock.

Those of you who have read the Merchant of Venice remember that Shakespeare created a character called "Shylock" in order to represent a type of person who existed at that time, had existed before, and still exists.

Shakespeare's Shylock was a member of the board of trade in Venice. Antonio, a Roman, was a member of the same board of trade. One day at the board of trade Antonio saw Shylock in deep conversation with another Roman. As Antonio approached them he discovered that Shylock was about to close a loan to his friend at a high rate of interest. Antonio tapped his friend on the shoulder and told him he would lend him the money and charge no interest. Shylock complained bitterly of this mistreatment on the part of Antonio. Antonio replied by calling him a usurer and a dog-of-a-Jew.

A few weeks later another friend of Antonio's came to him to borrow money. Antonio told him he had no ready cash; that his money was lent and invested in three cargoes of goods that were on the sea bound for foreign ports.

Seeing his friend was much distressed, Antonio told him to follow; that he knew where they could borrow the money. They went to Shylock for the loan of 3,000 ducats for 90 days.

Shylock replied about as follows: "You, Antonio? You come to Shylock to borrow 3,000 ducats? Not 30 days ago you called me a usurer and a dog-of-a-Jew because I lent my money at interest. Just yesterday at the board of trade as you passed me you spit on me."

Then, changing his attitude, he became a fawning sycophant. Shylock said, "O good Antonio! O gracious Antonio! Old Shylock is going to prove to you that he has a better heart than you thought he had. Old Shylock is going to lend you this money without interest."

Antonio half apologized and said, "Maybe I have wronged you, Shylock. Perhaps you have a better heart than I thought. Now, what kind of security will you want?"

Continuing his fawning attitude, Shylock said, "O great Antonio! O gracious Antonio! Shylock would not think of asking you for security. Your name is all that is required. Oh, as a matter of jest, just to make merry, we will put in the contract a provision that if you do not pay when due, I am to have a pound of your flesh where I may desire."

The contract was made; the money turned over to Antonio's friend. Sixty days later Antonio received word that his three ships with their cargoes had been caught in a hurricane and gone to the bottom of the sea, a total loss. His friends who had borrowed of him also had cargoes in the same storm and were bankrupt.

Shylock notified Antonio his note was due. Antonio went to Shylock's office, threw a roll of bills on the counter, and asked to have the note extended 30 days. Shylock said he was not in the extending business. Antonio said he would have to extend it as he could not pay it. Shylock told him to borrow it. Antonio replied that he could not borrow it. Antonio argued without avail. Finally he threw wide his mantle, asked Shylock where he wanted the pound of flesh. Shylock fiendishly replied, "I will take the pound nearest your heart."

You who have read or heard the story have always thought what a cruel and murderous heart old Shylock had. I say to you that the modern Shylock, the interest system, has destroyed more lives, caused more heartaches, provoked more crime than all the wars and pestilence throughout the history of the world.

It is the position of the Farmers' Union that for this Government to issue bonds when it needs money is a crime against the taxpayers of the Nation. The modern Shylock advocates and demands this method of financing Government projects.

An editorial in the Hearst papers of January 9 reads as follows:

"If the bankers of the country, long paralyzed and afraid, are ready to play ball, the contemplated Treasury operations constitute a God-given opportunity for them to make substantial profits for their stockholders with a minimum of risk.

"Under the Roosevelt financing program the banks will have a sure, dependable borrower for the credits which can be builded on these excess reserves, namely, the United States Treasury.

"The banks can turn from profitless idleness to profitable lending.

"The process entails chiefly simple bookkeeping.

"In buying Government bonds member banks pay for them by setting up on their ledgers a deposit credit for the Government. The bonds thus purchased are used as collateral against the deposit against which no reserves are needed. Under the new set-up the banks pay no interest on the deposit, but get interest on the bonds.

"In the circumstances wouldn't bankers, from their own viewpoint, be foolish to try to buck the Government?

"A strike on the part of the bankers would probably necessitate financing the Government's needs through the printing of currency, as permitted under the Thomas amendment.

"The net practical effect would be to deprive banks of their cut.

"Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau boasted of the oversubscription to the January issue of $1,000,000,000. The only way the bankers can get their cut is to subscribe for the bonds."

This editorial states the case plainly when it says no money is required; it is merely a matter of bookkeeping.

Let me make plain old Shylock's method of furnishing money to the Government. The Government just this week issued a billion dollars of bonds. The taxpayers will be taxed $1,000,000,000 in the next 30 years to pay the principal on those bonds. The taxpayers will also be taxed in the next 30 years $1,000,000,000 to pay the interest on those bonds. These bonds are exempt from taxation, and so old Shylock escapes another billion of taxes during the next 30 years, which burden falls on the rest of the taxpayers. In other words, Shylock's bond system of financing the Government costs the taxpayer $3 for every $1 Shylock lends the Government by merely giving the Government a deposit slip.

The present program of the administration, if carried out, raises the total bonded indebtedness of this country to the gigantic sum of 38 billion. This means that in the next 30 years we taxpayers will be taxed $38,000,000,000 for interest alone on these bonds because of their tax-exemption provisions. Shylock, in the next 30 years, will escape 38 billion of taxes which we will have to pay. This is $76,000,000,000 we will pay and still owe the principal sum of 38 billion.

As long as this Government carries out such a destructive system of financing itself, every American will know that the big bankers of the country are still in control at Washington. Headlines in this morning's papers read, "United States will establish dollar in British pact arranged by J. P. Morgan."

Any sensible person knows it is utterly impossible for this Government to collect sufficient taxes from the people to every pay the huge sum of $38,000,000,000 with an equal amount of interest.

Failure to pay means repudiation. Repudiation means collapse of government. Collapse of government is usually attended with revolution.

It is the purpose of the Farmers' Union to avert these terrible calamities coming to our beloved Nation. We may be too late to save the situation. If so, then it is more necessary than ever for every farmer in this Nation to be in his class organization, the Farmers' Union, that we may take part when that collapse comes in bringing order out of chaos.

The only organization in Washington with the courage to fight old Shylock is the Farmers' Union. We appeal to those listening in who are farmers to support us by getting into our organization. Write E. E. Kennedy, our national secretary, Kankakee, Ill., for information and instructions how you may organize in your community. Those listening in who are not farmers, write to your Congressman and Senators requesting them to support the Wheeler bill S. 70, the Lemke-Frazier bill H.R. 2855, the Swank-Thomas bill H.R. 6165. Also urge them to oppose the bond-issuing system every time the Government needs money; and, instead, that the Government issue full legal tender non-interest-bearing currency.

FALSE ECONOMY

All prosperity based on money received from interest-bearing bonds is false. It is like a jag or a shot in the arm. The victim imagines he is prosperous when really another rock has been tied to his financial foot.

Every time the Government issues a billion dollars of bonds, it is a $50 debt on the average family of the United States. Thirty-eight billion of bonds means $1,900 debt on the average family. In measuring your prosperity you must take into consideration this $1,900 debt you owe on account of the bonds this Government has issued.

Old Shylock expects within a few years to have a system of ruling the people of this country like unto the feudal system in medieval times. Shylock will play the part of the feudal lord. We will be his vassals.

Shall we continue to extend a beggar's hand to receive alms from old Shylock, or shall we be men and use that extended arm to strike down the Shylock system that enslaves us? Old Shylock controls the exchanges of the country; his victims on the stock, the grain, and the cotton exchanges are numbered by the thousands. Old Shylock is in the cut on every promotion as thoroughly described in Justice Brandeis' book "Other People's Money." Old Shylock feeds even on the dead; you will find him at the bankruptcy sales. He waits like a buzzard for a weak business to give its dying gasp then pounces upon the dead body and feeds his greed for gain.

It is the purpose of the Farmers' Union to secure equity, establish justice, and apply the golden rule.

Such a declaration of purpose places us in conflict with old Shylock. In a way it is an uneven battle. It is David against Goliath. It is the plain people versus the monster Shylock.

However, the great commoner, William Jennings Bryan, in a debate with David B. Hill, said "Pebbles of truth shall prevail against javelins of error."

Thousands of petitions have been coming to Congressmen and Senators asking them to support the Farmers' Union program. I hope those listening in will continue to keep in touch with your Congressman and Senators by letter and telegram.

I do not have the time to read the names of Congressmen who have signed the petition to bring the Lemke-Frazier bill out of the committee and onto the calendar in the House. However, this talk will be published in most of the Farmers' Union papers, and a complete up-to-date list of those who have signed this petition will also be included. Those who are not members of the Farmers Union, or even if you belong, may receive a copy of this talk by writing the Farmers' Union, Oklahoma City, Okla.

I am furnishing Farmers' Union papers with the vote on the gag rule in the House of Representatives and with the vote on the Wheeler silver amendment that will be taken this afternoon in the Senate. The next issue of the Oklahoma Union Farmer will have this information. You can get a copy by writing Farmers' Union, Oklahoma City, Okla., and see how every one of your Congressmen and Senators voted.

CLOSING

In closing let me once more call your attention to the relation existing between us common people and old Shylock. When you buy a ticket to carry you between two points on any railroad, one third of what you pay goes for interest. The price of the clothing you wear is one third interest. One third of the taxes paid goes for interest on the bonds Shylock owns.

Today 125,000,000 common people approach Shylock reverently, with bowed heads and bended knees, presenting Shylock with one third the Nation's income. He is our feudal lord; we are his slaves.

We of the Farmers' Union appeal to you listening in to join us in the overthrow of this monster. Let us take from him the control of money and credits. When we have done this, we will have shorn Shylock of his power. The Constitution provides that Congress shall have power to issue money and regulate the value thereof. Through the National Bank Act and the Federal Reserve Act the control of our money has been turned to Shylock. Let us restore it to Congress, where the Constitution says it belongs. Let us provide for the Government financing those things that create wealth. When we have done this, Shylock will cease to be a Samson and we shall be a free people once more.

Our Revolutionary ancestors fought for political freedom. It is up to us to emulate their courage and manhood and womanhood by fighting for economic freedom.

Remember, the fourth Saturday of each month, 12:30 to 1:30, is Farmers' Union hour over National Broadcasting Co.'s hook-up. Arrange your radio parties and be on the air Saturday, February 24, 12:30 to 1:30 eastern standard time.

POLITICAL TRENDS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR DICKINSON

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a speech made by the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] before the Chamber of Commerce of Rochester, N.Y., last Thursday evening, January 25, 1934, on the subject of Political Trends.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(Debate question: Resolved, That the legislative policies of the present administration, as embodied in the recovery program, are not conducive to economic improvement)

In discussing this question tonight, it is my hope that the members of this organization will receive some suggestions helpful in guiding their economic and political course.

It is now conceded that we scraped economic bottom the world over in 1932. It is well to compare the efforts of America with that of England under the present stress. In the United States we are spending money to bring back prosperity. In England they are saving it for the same reason. Naturally, both methods will make some progress. In Great Britain they ask no emergency or extraordinary powers. It is well to remember that the stability of the English course has weathered many tests. In America we are sending up a trial balloon. No one can predict the expected landing.

The best proof of the contention that economic recovery is not the result of legislation is the fact that most of the legislation has been a hindrance rather than a help.

Where is the industrialist that made his own business a success? He has surrendered his industrial birthright to code authority. He has asked his competitor to help run his business, with General Johnson as referee.

Where is the financial wizard of yesterday? He has surrendered his position, sacrificed his fortune, and we see the Government gradually managing the banking business of the country.

Where is the stable, sturdy farmer of yesterday? He is following a code on milk production and spends his evenings studying the Ezekiel equation of pig logarithms.

We hear things are better—but at what cost. Every advance in business over and above the slow world gain has been purchased at a tremendous cost to the American taxpayer. Every advance in steel can be traced to Federal loans to railroads for the purchase of rails. Furniture and auto-tire sales can be traced to the farmers who are borrowing money on cotton or corn. Capital goods are only being purchased for public works paid for by public money. The Government cannot continue to finance such a program. Where are the signs that capital investment is gradually coming in to take the place of Government funds? Most of the capital of today is playing hide and seek, attempting to land in the country where its value is most secure.

I take a daily report sheet of the Public Works Administration. What does it include? Street improvements, highways, power houses, schools, waterworks, sanitariums, incinerators, sewers, dormitories, grade crossings, swimming pools, etc. They have combed the country for methods and projects on which to spend money. How can this be supplanted with capital trade expansion and private funds when there is nothing left to do? The field has been fully covered and completely absorbed.

The C.W.A. is not conducive to permanent improvement. True, it took people from the charity rolls and placed them on a Federal pay scale—in reality, a dole. But who can see any permanent benefits in transferring a dependent from one tax roll to another?

There is underlying this whole program several vital questions. First, does this artificial stimulus help or hinder recovery? Second, the costs will become a tax burden and hobble recovery for the future. Third, it has developed among our people a psychology of dependency and helplessness. Fourth, it encourages the belief that the Government is obligated to cure all our ills, whether physical, economic, or financial.

MONETARY POLICY

It is my contention that the monetary policy of the present administration begets uncertainty in finance, uncertainty in trade, and uncertainty in business.

Apparently it was the expectation of the administration to join in the Economic Conference in London and propose a stabilization of national currency upon an agreeable basis. We proceeded upon that program. Business had assumed an attitude of confidence; but all at once, and apparently for no reason, there was a change in attitude. Prices in this country were advancing. There was a fear that if our country joined in an international stabilization agreement, it would checkmate the advance in commodity prices. Whatever the reason may be, the program was abandoned. This is a handicap to economic recovery at this very date and hangs over our fiscal policy like a cloud and no one knows what we may expect tomorrow.

The Economic Conference was a failure by reason of this disagreement. About all that our delegates could do was accept their hats and come home.

At the present time it is the ambition of the administration that Government money shall be used to prime the pump for economic recovery. No one knows the limit of the required expenditure. We are spending billions upon billions. It has been the history of practically every country in the world that has embarked upon a program of this kind that they never get through priming the pump until there is a complete collapse of Federal finances. Something should be done at the present time to checkmate this program.

This uncertainty in the value of the dollar retards all industrial and commercial expansion. It is impossible to encourage capital to reenter investment in any line of endeavor. The result is that we are gradually exhausting our Federal credit, with no encouragement that private capital or individual credit is coming to the rescue.

In a recent issue of the Cleveland Trust Co. Business Bulletin I find the following paragraph:

"Business recovery can be continued in the long run only by the progressive substitution of a flow of private expenditures for that of public expenditures. If there exist obstacles preventing that substitution, they have been unintentionally created by the Congress and could be removed by it. Lavish public expenditure to create recovery that private enterprise could not sustain would be futile and perhaps disastrous."

We have the new proposed gold devaluation bill that provides an issuance of some three to four billion dollars in gold certificates based on the devaluation of gold in the Treasury. Many individuals and many corporations have had a severe lesson in get-rich-quick money. No individual can continue any get-rich-quick scheme without meeting disaster. It is my judgment that no Government can, by legislation or otherwise, retain the confidence of the people by creating $4,000,000,000 through Executive order or by legislative enactment. This drastic change always leads to uncertainty and chaos. Particularly will this be true when $2,000,000,000 is to be left in the hands of the Treasury for manipulation, for the purchase of gold bullion, to dabble in foreign currencies, and to use for any other purpose that the Treasury may see fit. This certainly makes the program unstable.

N.R.A.

Prof. Williford I. King, of New York University, says:

"The trouble with the N.R.A. is, of course, that practically every feature of it runs exactly counter to accepted economic principles—principles based upon past experiences."

It is my contention that the Industrial Recovery Act has not served the purpose for which it was intended. Any effort to put business in a strait-jacket is bound to and should fail. The conflicting interests in the complicated business structure of the United States prevent it being codified. A code that favors one section may harm another. A code that can be operated in one section of the country might be unworkable in another.

The acceptance of the code by business generally was due to the fact that business concerns were subjected to keen competition. In order to get rid of the chiseler, they were willing to accept any Government device. It is now found that the codes are practically all dictated by the larger units in every industry. The little fellow is not given a chance to survive. It is true that he is called the unfair competitor. He may do some things that the big operator may not like. On the other hand, he is the only check that the consumer has against excessive prices if the big operators are permitted to proceed without competition. The controversy at the present time is the fact that nearly all of these codes have been dictated by the big concerns and are leading to a general monopoly in practically every line of endeavor over which the N.R.A. has control.

PRIVATE INITIATIVE

It should be further suggested that the codes are not conducive to private initiative, and to regiment business under codes is an effort to adopt the old mercantile guild of the twelfth and fourteenth centuries. The minute you permit business to violate the antitrust law, to agree upon prices, to fix standards of wages, segregate territory, enter into market agreements, that minute you will impose upon the consumer a burdensome task of maintaining an inefficient, noncompetitive form of production. It did not work under the old guild system in merchandising. It will not work now under the present-day system of either industry or commerce.

GOVERNMENT ENFORCEMENT

Only recently I was visiting with two gentlemen representing major industrial interests in the United States. It was their plea that in order to make the N.R.A. a success the Government must assume the responsibility of enforcing the codes. Just think of Uncle Sam becoming a policeman to enforce business ethics! Just think of Uncle Sam attempting to make business angels out of many of the sinners of the earth! We have just had 13 years' experience trying to police appetites, which was purely a police power. In that it is the general consensus of opinion that the Government failed.

You could not enlist a large enough personnel army in the United States to see that all the provisions of all the codes are lived up to, and the task is simply impossible. The real effect of a large percentage of those putting the blue eagle in their windows was to display the bird to the public and then never speak to him from that date on.

The N.R.A. is passing and passing fast. But little attention is now being given to it. A few people are complaining that a code is being violated. We get a few straggling accounts in the newspapers that codes are being violated. To my best knowledge, no man has been in jail to this date, and not a single individual has been convicted and fined. I do not expect that they will go to jail or pay a fine in the near future.

REGIMENTATION OF AGRICULTURE

It is my further belief that any attempt to regiment agriculture will fail. There are too many farmers, too many diversified interests, too much excessive land.

Some may say that everything that is now being done is for relief. If all of these expenditures of the present day are for relief, then the standard for sustenance is beyond the taxpayer of the country to maintain.

Some say that all that is now being done is for recovery. No public expenditure at the expense of the taxpayer can be justified unless there is an assurance that value is to be received in the expenditure.

Some say that all that is being done is for revolutionary reform, and that agriculture is to be regimented, land is to be classified, crop allotments are to be made, and that all of this is to be done for the common good.

From chapter 23 of the Book of Exodus I quote this passage:

"And 6 years thou shalt sow the land and shall gather in the fruit thereof. At the seventh year thou shalt let it rest and lie still, that the poor of thy people may eat, and what they leave the beasts of the field shall eat."

The only place where such a gigantic program has been attempted today is in Russia; and in Russia the peasant is still the poor ignorant peasant that he always has been, and probably will continue to be unless greater progress is made in that country.

We find that under the present agricultural program we have started in with rentals. This is step no. 1. The next step will be to purchase marginal lands—step no. 2. On account of the conflict of interests, it will be far easier for the Government to take all of the land—step no. 3. Socialism—land ownership—no rights for the individual to acquire a home and keep a roof over his head and provide sustenance for himself and his family from the acres he has acquired. I do not believe that this country wants to proceed far in such a program.

The Government is now making loans on cotton at more than the cotton will sell for. The Government is now making loans on corn at a price greater than the corn will sell for. It is a direct effort to maintain the price of these commodities, but all of these products purchased will continue to remain in existence and will hang as a cloud over the morrow, the same as the purchases by the Federal Farm Board that the Democratic administration claimed was the greatest failure of the last Republican regime. It is now admitted that the obligations under this program have now reached $731,000,000.

PUBLIC WORKS

It is my contention that every hour of labor provided in the entire Public Works expenditures has been at an expense that cannot be justified, and that in the end this entire program will retard rather than advance recovery. Pick up the daily work sheet giving the Public Works allowances and note that every type of improvement that can be suggested is being promoted. Many improvements will be made that will impose a burden for maintenance upon the locality for many years to come. Not that I am against improvements—but I am against improvements where the taxpayer has to borrow the money in order to make the improvement and the maintenance of the improvement will impose a tax burden upon the locality in future generations. This cannot be justified under existing conditions.

It should be further noted that many of the projects now approved by the Public Works Administration have been heretofore disapproved by Congress. This statement was made by Mr. BUCHANAN, Chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations. Many of these projects have been before Congress for many years, and, without any approval by Congress, we now find that allocations are made for these various projects, and they are proceeding with their construction.

The Public Works Administration has allocated $400,000,000 to the Civil Works Administration. I have every sympathy for those in distress. I believe the Government should see that no one suffers from hunger. On the other hand, I am not in sympathy with a program that will waste public funds on useless projects in many of the localities in this State and others.

I have a clipping from Florida which suggests that recreation centers will be established in various counties; that contests will be held for the boys and girls.

"The purpose of the project calls for a supervised plan of recreation. The first activity planned in the county-wide movement is a kite-flying contest for the boys, as well as a marble contest. A jackstone tournament has been planned as the first event for the girls.

"District winners will compete in semifinals and the winners of these events will meet for final events.

"This is the first of any C.W.A. projects to provide for this branch of activities and is State-wide in its scope. Funds to finance the project are from Federal funds, the same as any other project now under way in this country."

With further reference to this, I note that in New York they are going to have a wolf-hunting contest—in another place, a mosquito-eradicating campaign. In another place, they are going to set aside large tracts and areas for duck reservations. This is the tragedy of the taxpayer being charged with the maintenance of such expenditures in these crucial times. To me it is deliberate and shameful waste and is a handicap to recovery rather than a help.

DELEGATION OF LEGISLATIVE POWER

The first hint that this country was to adopt Government by Executive order and place excessive powers in the Executive is found in the inaugural message, which reads as follows:

"But in the event that the Congress shall fail to take one of these two courses, and in the event that the national emergency is still critical, I shall not evade the clear course of duty that will then confront me. I shall ask the Congress for the one remaining instrument to meet the crisis—broad executive power to wage a war against the emergency, as great as the power that would be given to me if we were in fact invaded by a foreign foe."

No such legislation was ever suggested to Congress and by it refused. The first suggestion that came to Congress was a request for excessive authority, which the Democratic Congress granted. Not one request was made to Congress for the passage of any legislation that was refused. Numerous requests for Executive authority were asked and granted.

Growing out of this transfer of legislative authority to the Executive, we find ourselves now existing under all of the various bureaus, subbureaus, subdivisions, corporations, etc., represented as follows: The A.A.A., C.A.B., C.C.C., C.S.B., C.W.A., E.C.P.C., E.H.F.A., F.A.C.A., F.C.A., F.C.T., F.D.I.C., F.E.R.A., F.H.L.B.B., F.S.R.C., G.S.C., H.O.L.C., I.A.B., I.B.R.T., I.T.P.C., L.A.B., N.C.B., N.E.C., N.I.R.A., N.I.R.B., N.L.B., N.P.B., N.R.A., P.W.A., P.W.E.H.C., S.A.B., S.B.P.W., S.R.B., T.C.F.T., T.V.A.

Many of these had no foundation in legislation whatsoever. They are the result of Executive orders—illegitimate stepchildren of an ill-advised law whereby the legislative body surrendered its birthright and delegated legislative authority to the Executive of the United States. We are at present the victims of such delegated authority. Pressure on Congress put through many measures transferring authority from Congress to the Executive—a cowardly procedure. Those governing us today were not elected to office. Johnson was not elected by the vote of the business men, nor Davis by the vote of the farmers. This has all been brought about by a delegation of power.

CONSTITUTIONAL REQUIREMENTS

Many governments have failed, not because they did not do enough for their people, but always because they attempted to do too much. The Constitution of the United States is not a restriction on liberties, but rather a protection of liberties. When we exceed its privileges we are on dangerous ground.

The new deal has set up a number of bureaus, functioning under the Federal Government, performing clearly State functions. The States may acquiesce and may condone, but in those fields the States should be supreme and should not be imposed upon by the Federal Government.

No one can deny this is an emergency, but the Supreme Court, in its recent decision, held:

"Emergency does not create power. Emergency does not increase granted power or remove or diminish the restrictions upon power granted or reserved. The Constitution was adopted in a period of grave emergency. Its grants of power to the Federal Government and its limitations of the power of the States were determined in the light of emergency and they are not altered by emergency. What power was thus granted and what limitations were thus imposed are questions which have always been and always will be the subject of close examination under our constitutional system. While emergency does not create power, emergency may furnish the occasion for the exercise of power."

No one can doubt that regardless of the general comment on this opinion, the outstanding conclusion is that constitutional guaranties, subject to construction, remain binding and inviolable in the Constitution.

CENTRAL BANK

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has just been given a new lease on life. For what? Why, to buy gold at home and abroad. A year ago if I had $100 in gold in my pocket I was a law-abiding citizen; if I perchance had a pint of whisky I was a criminal. Today if I have the whisky I am a law-abiding citizen, but if I have the gold I am a criminal violating the law.

It has been recently asserted that not only will the Reconstruction Finance Corporation seek to own preferred stock in various banking institutions but it will also supervise and direct the personnel that will have charge of these financial institutions. We are fast approaching a Bank of the United States. Somebody page Andrew Jackson. Where are the advocates of State rights? The shades of Democracy grow dim when the legislative leadership of that party forsake every tradition of Thomas Jefferson and the South and surrender to a centralized Government control. In finance they surrender to the R.F.C., in industry to the N.R.A., in agriculture to the A.A.A.

NORMAL RECOVERY

The theory that any particular policy of any particular group is responsible for existing conditions is erroneous. The present-day depression is the result of the sins of society itself. The individual increased his expenditures, he took on extravagant habits, he gambled large stakes on uncertain gains, he lived beyond his means, he bought on the installment plan, and spent next month's salary this month. This was destructive to the understrata of society itself.

The same program was adopted by the municipalities of our country. Bond issues were voted, boulevards constructed, pavings extended, buildings erected. The expansion program was such that soon the tax revenues were unable to meet the obligations. This is the reason for the demand that municipalities be permitted to take advantage of bankruptcy.

This same spirit of spending extended to the States themselves. Many of our States obligated themselves for expenditures beyond the resources of their taxpayers. In fact, it was not solely on account of the manipulation of the stock exchange—although much blame can be placed at its door—it was the gambling spirit in practically every walk of life that disintegrated our economic structure. It is this condition that forces upon the country the necessity for an economic cure.

SPENDING SPREES

We find that our country has embarked upon three excessive spending sprees.

The first excessive expenditure was when we were hailed in the hour of need by Europe and spent billions to help fight the World War.

The second big spending spree was following the war when we loaned money to Europe to increase our foreign trade. They, in turn, bought goods from us and we expanded our production accordingly. We then adopted the monthly installment plan for payment of domestic-consumed goods. Expansion knew no bound, and we came up to the collapse of 1929 with the highest individual indebtedness, the highest corporation indebtedness, and the highest municipal and State indebtedness that the country has ever known.

We are now proceeding on the third spending spree. This is a program of going into debt in order to get out of debt. We are advancing costs and increasing taxes. Unless spending is checked, Federal finance will collapse. I know of no country that has ever embarked on such a program where such spending has been checked and financial collapse avoided.

CONCLUSION

It is my contention that the present legislative policies are conflicting and counteracting. How can we decrease the purchasing power of the dollar by inflation and at the same time expect wage earners to increase their consumption?

How can we entice capital from hiding when there is no confidence in the monetary policies being carried out? You cannot entice the 'possum from his hiding by beating the tom-toms. It takes the aroma of something that pleases and does not destroy.

We cannot recover as long as the present legislative program destroys confidence by injecting the element of fear and uncertainty into money standards, into business restrictions, into labor requirements. The present legislative policies reduce the leaders, with ideas and push, to the level of the common herd. The best business man must await the approval of the "brain trust" before he can proceed. He is bound by the limitations of a code. Government control over business and agriculture, which has proven a failure wherever tried, has been initiated anew. These policies are not conducive to recovery because they are un-American and contravene every tradition of American liberty.

GUESSING PARTY

This whole legislative program is an extensive financial and economic guessing party.

We guess at how large an emergency expenditure we can create without credit collapse.

We are guessing at how much the Government can interfere with business and still have business survive.

We are guessing how long we can feed the needy without having them lose all of their self-respect.

We are guessing on what you will be compelled to accept tomorrow in payment of your gold contract.

We are guessing at what the Treasury will do with $2,000,000,000—without restrictions and without requiring an accounting.

We are guessing that a Government official can run the finances of this country better than those with experience.

We are guessing that an increase in farm prices will follow acreage control, regardless of all the other economic factors in the price equations.

We are in a grand and glorious campaign of trying everything for something that ails us, with the hope that somewhere, somehow, someone will guess themselves better off.

If by this program representative government is to be displaced; if emergency relief is to bring a permanent revolutionary and socialistic change in our form of government; if our lands and forests are to be collectivized; if our budget is to be forced out of balance; if we are to be subjected to every form of panacea that the human mind can suggest, then we should be prepared to accept the inevitable consequences of such social disruption.

We should remember and deeply realize that regardless of all the socialistic schemes that have been tried in the world, in the end nearly everybody has to work for a living after all.

THE HAND IS WRITING ON THE WALL

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I rise to a point of personal privilege. I was not here when the report was brought in by the special committee that was appointed to investigate campaign expenditures in Louisiana. I remained here about a week waiting for that report to reach the Senate before going back to Louisiana. It becomes necessary at this time that I make some reference to what is contained in that report. The committee investigated the Louisiana primary of 1932, and it is necessary that I take cognizance of it not only for the defense of my friends and of my State but of those who now sit in the House of Representatives who were affiliated with the opposition to me in politics in Louisiana.

That report, Mr. President, so far as it concerns my colleague [Mr. OVERTON], terminates in the beginning in these words:

> There was no charge made by the complaint filed with the committee that Senator OVERTON personally participated in any fraud or, with guilty knowledge, approved any fraud. There was no probative evidence produced before the committee that Senator OVERTON personally participated in or instigated any fraud, unless the inference were indulged that being the beneficiary of whatever frauds would result from the employment of the dummy candidate device by the organizations supporting his candidacy he was chargeable with knowledge thereof. We cannot indulge such an inference in the face of the fact that there was neither a charge nor evidence to that effect. All of these matters occurred in the primary. Thereafter Senator OVERTON was elected in the general election without opposition.

I take it that those words mean what they say—that when the committee used that language, the committee meant what it said by its words, which say literally that against the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] it has neither complaint nor evidence of any kind or character in the remotest extent reflecting or undertaking to reflect that there was any guilty knowledge of participation, or approval, or of anything resembling fraud in the election which put him in the Senate.

However, there were elected 8 Congressmen, 1 Senator, 1 member of the public service commission, and many other officials in the State at that time. A majority of those Congressmen elected on what the committee terms "the Long ticket" are now alined in the great work of this administration; that is, the Members of Congress are now listed not only with the administration but they are with what are listed as the anti-Long forces in the State of Louisiana, and therefore I am glad to say that that alone gives them a clean bill of health, whether there was any fraud in the election or not. [Laughter.]

Having established from the committee's report that the junior Senator from Louisiana is as clean as an angel's robe, having established from subsequent events that there is no animus of any kind to be reflected against any Louisiana Congressman, at least those who are not at this time affiliated with the Long organization in the State of Louisiana—I believe there are two left, and there has been no contest filed against them yet—I come to what I consider a necessary defense of my State.

What is the fraud that is supposed to have occurred in the elections in the State of Louisiana? Is it the support of the Choctaw Club of the city of New Orleans, known as the "Tammany of the South"? Is it any test of fraud to have had the support or to have had a connection with the Choctaw Club known in Louisiana as the "New Orleans ring"?

If that is true, then let me say that within the lifetime of no man who sits in the Senate today has there ever been a man come to the United States Senate from the State of Louisiana except myself who did not have the support of the Choctaw Club. Ransdell, Broussard, Foster, McEnery, Banjamin, and so on back to the Civil War—every candidate and every elected man who has been in the United States Senate from Louisiana has come here with the support of the Choctaw Club, but for which he could not have been elected to the United States Senate.

The only men ever elected to the United States Senate and who sit here, whether it was the will of the Choctaw Club or not, are the two United States Senators who are here now—one, the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], because, regardless of what the Choctaw Club had done, his majority in the country outside of the city of New Orleans was so big that it was not possible for the New Orleans vote to have defeated him, and myself, who was elected over the opposition of the New Orleans ring, and of every newspaper in the State of Louisiana, and of every big corporation in the State of Louisiana.

Mr. President, the committee says there are "distressing and deplorable conditions existing in the politics of the State of Louisiana." What are those distressing and deplorable conditions existing in the State of Louisiana? First is the matter of dummy candidates. The dummy-candidate device is listed by the committee, which says, "Perhaps the most serious charge was the use of dummy candidates." The committee is kind enough to say that all political candidates and all political factions were alined with forces employing and using the dummy-candidate device. But the committee talks as though it were a thing peculiar to the State of Louisiana for there to be such a thing as a dummy candidate in a political contest.

I have seen dummy candidates used in the State of Iowa. I have seen them used in the State of Texas. I have seen them used in the State of Arkansas. I have seen them used in the State of Mississippi. I saw them used by the national parties last fall in order to affect campaigns going on in the United States. Not only have I seen them used, but I have knowledge that one candidate for the United States Senate, who ran in the primary and was defeated, was encouraged by a national political party to reenter the same political contest in the general election, not for the purpose of being elected, but in order to divide the vote of one of the parties so the opposition party candidate could be elected, with the understanding that there was possibly something that could be given to him by the successful party even though he was defeated, and which was done.

It is nothing peculiar to the State of Louisiana because in many States the high candidate becomes the nominee of the party. As an example I cite the State of Arkansas where there is a Democratic primary, as there is in many other States where there is a primary, and the high candidate receives the nomination. Time after time this same candidate procures the entrance of some other candidate, possibly so geographically domiciled as to pull votes away from some stronger opponent so that he might be the high man in the primary contest where there is no second primary provided for under the law. To condemn the dummy-candidate device as a special child of the State of Louisiana is far from touching the truth in the politics of our Nation.

Coming to the State of Louisiana now, if the committee is going to charge the State of Louisiana with the dummy-candidate device, let me say that the State of Louisiana has it the same as other States have it, the same as the national parties have it. At whose feet are you going to lay it insofar as affects Louisiana? Are you going to lay it at the feet of the men who enacted it into law? Are you going to lay it at the feet of the men who went into court to sustain their right to use it time after time and were vindicated by the courts in so doing? Are you going to lay it at the feet of the men who could have prevented it if they wanted to, but did not want to prevent it? Or are you going to lay it at the feet of the men who have unsuccessfully undertaken to prevent its use and only used it after the courts had upheld its use in lawsuit after lawsuit?

We are in the clear on the matter, Mr. President. This contest is filed—not this contest particularly but the whole matter is brought up here by Mr. John M. Parker and Mr. Francis Williams and Mr. John P. Sullivan and their partisans. The faction with which they were affiliated was not supporting the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] but certain of the Members of Congress elected on the Long ticket who now sit in the Congress, now sit with Sullivan and Parker in New Orleans.

In the year 1922, on August 18, was the first time the dummy-candidate matter was carried to court under the present law. It was in the month of July 1922, when John M. Parker was Governor of that State, that there was enacted the law which forbade any man questioning the filing of a candidacy and the selection of commissioners. As the result of that law, enacted under Mr. Parker and signed by Mr. Parker as Governor of the State of Louisiana, a month later, on the 18th day of August 1922, the first lawsuit sustaining the right to the use of dummy candidates was won by the John M. Parker and John P. Sullivan faction against men who were affiliated with me in later years.

I have in my hand a copy of the report of the decision of the Supreme Court of the State of Louisiana rendered in favor of the Parker and Sullivan faction on the 18th day of August 1922 sustaining the right of the Parker and Sullivan and Williams faction—and Williams was a candidate at that time on the ticket—to use nine dummy candidates who were qualified, who were used to draw commissioners, and who then resigned from the race. I send this document to the desk and ask that it may be incorporated in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit A.)

Mr. LONG. Perhaps someone will say we should have done something to stop the use of dummy candidates. Did we? I have in my hand the One Hundred and Seventy-third Louisiana Report, and I turn to page 858, to the decision in the case of the State ex rel. Hinyub et al. against Parish Democratic Committee for Parish of Jefferson, decided December 7, 1931. In that case there were filed by the anti-Long group a number of dummy candidates. We went before the committee and urged that those men had been filed with no other living purpose than to be used to draw commissioners. We went before the committee of the parish and we were sustained and those men were disqualified, whereupon the Parker-Sullivan-Williams faction took an appeal to the Supreme Court of the State of Louisiana. The Supreme Court in deciding against the Long faction and in upholding the use of dummy candidates used these words:

> The question, and the only one which concerns the officer of the committee when a notice of intention to become a candidate is presented for filing, is whether such notice is accompanied by a declaration of the applicant that he is a member of the party calling the primary and that he is a duly qualified elector, etc. If the prospective candidate fails to accompany his notice of intention by such positive declaration, the officer to whom presented may and should refuse to receive and file it. But when such notice, properly signed, verified, and accompanied by the declaration prescribed by the statute, is presented, it is the plain ministerial duty of the officer of the committee to receive and file it. Neither such officer nor the committee itself has jurisdiction to question or inquire into the truth of the declaration made.

That was the lawsuit which we lost in 1931 when I undertook to prevent the use of dummy candidates in the State of Louisiana.

I do not object to the committee's report. I do not object to the committee having said the dummy-candidate device had been used. But I do think that the committee owed it to me to have gone further and to have shown that we had gone to the committees and court on three distinct and separate occasions undertaking to enjoin the use of dummy candidates against John M. Parker, John P. Sullivan, and Francis Williams, and that we had lost in those courts three times out of three; and that the use of dummy candidates was never employed by the Long faction until John M. Parker's administration wrote the law, until John M. Parker signed the law, until John M. Parker's faction filed the dummies, until they went to court in 1 case, 2 cases, 3 cases, and sustained the right against the Long followers, the court holding that they had the right to use dummy candidates in the State of Louisiana.

There is another case here just exactly like it.

I have in my hand the One Hundred and Twentieth Louisiana Reports, the case of State ex rel. Trosclair against Parish Democratic Committee. Here is what that decision holds:

> The act requires only two things of the person desiring to become a candidate in any primary election, to-wit, an application in the form prescribed by section 11 and a deposit as required by section 12 or section 13. The act confers no jurisdiction whatever on any person or committee to refuse to receive or to vacate an application made in due form under the statute.

According to the decision in that case, the act does not confer upon the committee, nor upon the court, nor upon any member of any party, nor upon any officer of the State, the jurisdiction, the duty, or the authority to void or to vacate the filing of an application to become a candidate. There was the law, settled back as far as the case that I have read from, back as far as the year 1908—24 years before the campaign in 1932—once repealed, which Parker reinstated.

Mr. President, what should I do about dummy candidates? When I became a candidate for the United States Senate in the fall of the year 1930, as this record shows, and as no one contradicts or disputes, when the opposition had filed a long list of dummy candidates, my side filed a list of dummy candidates three times as long as the list they field. [Laughter.] They filed 10, and we filed nearby 40. If they wanted dummy candidates, we were there to give them plenty of them.

What did we do when we had secured 4 dummies to their 1? We sent them word, "You have used the dummy-candidate device in order to get an advantage in the drawing of election commissioners; but", as this record shows, and there is no word to contradict it, said the Long faction, speaking through me, "We do not want a single dummy advantage of you. We will withdraw our dummy candidates, although we have 3 to your 1, and the time for filing more has closed, if you will withdraw yours; and we will let the Long people have one half the commissioners, and we will let the Ransdell people have one half the commissioners." That was done, as a result of which I came to the United States Senate in that election by the largest majority that ever was given a man for the United States Senate in Louisiana up to that time.

I had done my part, Mr. President, to prevent the dummy-candidate system from being used. I had gone before the committees and had urged them to disqualify the dummy candidates. I had stood behind those committees in the Supreme Court of Louisiana when they disqualified the dummy candidates, and had seen them lose. I had yielded to any agreement that they wanted to make, and in the year 1932, according to the evidence of the campaign manager, Mr. Ellender, which Mr. Hodges of the opposite side says was never communicated to him, but none the less the speaker of the house of representatives testified as to his undertaking to talk to them about withdrawing their dummies and our withdrawing our dummies, the opposition rebuked the idea and would yield to no such suggestion of any kind or character.

But, Mr. President, it seems now that we are going to pour the holy oil on politics in this country, and I am ready to do my part of the holy-oil pouring while it is being done. Let us beat our breasts with sincerity. Let us not talk about the dummies in Minnesota, in Iowa, or in Louisiana; let us not criticize dummy devices when we sit here and enact, or keep enacted, a dummy system that is far more telling than all the dummy systems in the United States put together.

Who is the propagator of the greatest dummy device in elections? The Congress of the United States is responsible for the chief dummy device in election machinery. We have kept in existence an electoral college for the purpose of keeping the people of the United States from having the right to vote for whomsoever they want to have elected President of the United States. We have sat here and kept the electoral college, which keeps anybody from having his name on the ballot except somebody that is satisfactory to one set of bosses out of two; and we have seen that system used to a point where the electoral college not only does not meet, but its members are not even allowed any longer to hire a man to carry to the college a message as to how they vote, but the message has to be sent by mail. In other words, it is a stamping privilege.

In the early days the electoral college was a safeguard to keep the people from having the direct right to elect anybody. It was figured that the people, if they were allowed to do so, might elect somebody President who did not have any business being President; so, therefore, the framers of the Constitution created the electoral college, and in order for a man to be elected President the people had to vote for somebody to vote for the man. Now, however, it is admittedly a device used for fraud. It is admittedly a device to keep anyone from coming into the realm of a Presidential possibility unless he has the sanction of the political bosses of the States.

If anybody wants to purify politics, let us start with the United States Government and the President of the United States. Let us provide for a direct manner and method by which the people of the United States can vote for their choice in electing Presidents of the United States.

Mr. President, this committee names two points of fraud, and only two. One is the dummy device, to which I take no exception. I want to show that my remarks are not any different from those of the chairman of the special committee. I will read from the Senator from Texas how he saw the matter when he came to Louisiana the first time. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] said:

> I was going to say, any committee of the Senate in passing on these matters naturally takes into consideration the law of the State involved.

That is on page 36.

Mr. Rightor, who was Mr. Broussard's attorney, said:

> I concede that Senator Broussard, neither by the courts of Louisiana, the political committee of Louisiana, nor any judicial or legislative body can be declared nominated.

That is the statement of Mr. Broussard's attorney, on page 38, in which he said that he conceded that Mr. Broussard could not be said to be nominated, but he urged the dummy device.

What did the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] say then? I read this to show that I look on this matter exactly as the committee looks on it. I have the place marked here, but I may have to ask my friend from Texas to locate it for me. I will state it in substance.

The Senator from Texas said then, as I say now, and as all other members of the committee said in effect:

> Here is a practice that has been in existence for years and years and years, practiced by all sides and by all parties, and you call on this committee to say that this is in itself a fraud. The committee cannot take any such action in view of the fact that by long custom and law it has become the accepted practice by all parties and by all men and by all candidates in this State.

I have not read the exact words of the Senator from Texas, but that is the sum and substance of it. I take the same position. I always have taken the same position. I took that position before there ever was any election for the United States Senate in which I was involved or concerned. I took that position before I was ever a candidate for Governor of the State of Louisiana. I took that position while I was Governor of the State of Louisiana. I went into the courts, and I went before the parish executive committees, and I offered to withdraw the dummies if the opposing candidates would agree to do the same thing. By no means or rule of reason or stretch of the imagination can anyone place before me anything that could have been said or done, or anything that was left undone, that could have disrupted the dummy-candidate device as practiced in the State of Louisiana more than I did myself.

The next thing the committee says, after passing over the dummy-candidate matter, is that they condemn the coercion of public employees in being made to contribute to political campaigns.

There is not a line of evidence, Mr. President—it must be drawn from inference—there is not one line of evidence that anybody was ever coerced into making a campaign contribution. There is not one man that I recall who so testified. Maybe there was. I do not recall him. I did not hear all the testimony. I listened to some of it over the radio, and some of it I heard in person; but I do not recall one man who testified that he was told that if he did not contribute to a political campaign he would lose the position which he held as a result of not doing it. There were many witnesses who testified to the contrary, that they did not contribute to political campaigns, and many of them who testified that others did not contribute to political campaigns, but that no one person had ever been discharged by reason of it.

But let us accept it as a fact that there was a suggestion in Louisiana that someone should contribute to a political campaign. I believe the Senator from Texas did ask Mr. Wade Martin the hypothetical question, "If you had an employee, would you expect him to contribute?" and my recollection is that Mr. Martin answered back that if he had an employee who did not have sense enough to want to protect his own job he would consider him too incompetent to hold the job and would fire him. [Laughter.] That is a matter in which the Senator from Texas exchanged his professional views with the elected candidate who ran on our ticket. There was not, however, any testimony from Mr. Martin as to anything of the kind he had done.

But why condemn the State of Louisiana for having contributions to political campaigns made by public employees? I hold in my hand a receipt from one of the national political parties in the last Presidential election. They did not ask this poor devil to give 10 percent of 1 month's salary; they asked him to give one half of 1 month's salary, and he coughed up $100. This receipt is signed to Mr. Alfred Daspit, 418 South Solomon Street, New Orleans, La., receipt no. 55, the Republican National Committee, signed by Mr. Everett Sanders, Mr. J. R. Witt, treasurer, September 8, 1932. That is a sample of what all of them did.

I am not painting the Republican Party black. The Democrats do it when they are in power, and the Democrats do it when anybody else needs money and they need money, and always have done it. There is no difference between any of them; and the most disgusting thing in my life is to see national politics painting State politics with all the dark colors that can be put on a washpot when we know that they all cry for money, and ask the poor devil at the fork of the creek to go out and get it from whoever he can get it, the best way he can, and they all go out and get it.

I was asked to raise some money for President Roosevelt. How did we raise it? We raised the money for President Roosevelt just like we raised the money for everybody else. They telephoned for the money, because they said they were going to have to close up the campaign headquarters if we did not go out and get some money to pay off the stenographers and office help at the end of the week. They told me to go out and get $15,000 and send it to them, and I went out and got the $15,000 and sent it to them, just like I got the balance of the money. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There must be no demonstrations in the galleries.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator says he got the $15,000 just like he got the balance of the money.

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator mean like the committee reported that he got the balance?

Mr. LONG. I do not know what the committee reported. We got it according to law, legally and lawfully. I did not make the law.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator was commenting on the committee's report.

Mr. LONG. I am not commenting on the committee's report and saying that it is a fact that any employees were coerced, because there is not a line of evidence here that anybody was coerced. You may go to a man and say, "Oh, boy, it will be a good thing if you will contribute." Who is there here who does not know that the man who pulls the plow gets the plunder in politics if he gets it right? That is how it has been practiced by both national political parties. I am not getting mine, because they say I am not helping to pull the plow right. That is according to our leading publications in this country. They all say that. They are trustworthy journals, and they tell us that the night HUEY LONG did not vote for the veterans' legislation he lost his patronage in the State of Louisiana. Now go tell those newspapers to rewrite those columns and substitute the Bible for what they published before in order to make it sound a little bit better.

Every dime raised, Mr. President, that I have any knowledge of, for the Governor's election, for the Senator's election, for the Congressman's election, for the President's election, was legally, properly, and judiciously raised, according to law, according to right, and I am going to prove it now by the records of the committee.

It was testified before the committee by a man by the name of Sam D. Hunter, a wealthy oil and gas operator in Louisiana, one of many, that he had contributed to the campaign against the Long ticket, $75,000 himself, and he testified before the committee that he gave the $75,000 because he had been promised by the man running on the anti-Long ticket that he would repeal the Huey Long severance-tax law, the law which taxes the oil and gas brought from the ground on a quantity basis. That is in the record in this case. I believe the testimony reads that the candidate agreed to consider reducing the tax in the State of Louisiana along the lines of other States. That only means that he would repeal the law which I enacted, because I enacted a law different from the laws of all other States, which forced the oil combines in Louisiana to pay so much per barrel and not so much on the value of the oil.

Enough testimony, Mr. President, was given by Mr. Hunter alone so, if we will draw inferences, we will know that the $75,000 he contributed was not the only contribution made to that campaign to annul the laws that we had put on the statute books against the big interests in the State of Louisiana. Mr. Hunter's $75,000 was not a drop in the bucket. When one little man comes and tells you that his share of the campaign fund to annul the legislation that I had written on the law books of that State was $75,000, it does not take a man with a great deal of imagination to know that there is bound to have been 10 or 15 times $75,000 provided in that political campaign.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. That contribution, however, was not made in connection with the Overton election; that was made in connection with the preceding election for Governor of the State.

Mr. LONG. That was made 6 months before in the last election, when there was a fight against the Long ticket, and the committee investigated that election, just as the committee investigated the last one.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, no.

Mr. LONG. The Senator's committee did not do it, but the previous committee did, and the Senator's committee did investigate it to a certain extent.

Mr. CONNALLY. I desire the Senator's statement, however, to be clear that the election in connection with which the contribution referred to was made did not involve Mr. OVERTON, was not the election which our committee was investigating.

Mr. LONG. It was the same one that involved the contribution which the Senator's committee was passing on. The committee says in its report that the preponderance of the evidence tended to show that the contribution went to help the Allen ticket. That was the same ticket that the $75,000 was given as a contribution by Mr. Sam D. Hunter to defeat, and the $75,000 given by one man, Mr. President, is not a drop in the bucket.

We were trying, Mr. President, to get money with which to run the schools of the State of Louisiana. When I went into the office of Governor of the State of Louisiana that State had the lowest rating in education in America. It stood at the bottom of the list of States. We could not get the money with which to educate the youth of our State. Our State university was rated class C. We could not treat the poor people for diseases of the eyes; we could not give them room in the hospitals. Our insane people were locked up in jail cells hid out in the cribs around the barns. We had these deplorable conditions existing in the State of Louisiana, with people crying for relief. The common man was taxed to death, and there was no way to rescue the State from the sabotage that it had suffered at the hands of the feudal lords except by putting heavy taxes on the big corporations, thus giving relief to the State institutions.

How were we going to get the money from these poor devils with which to compete with those who were having $75,000 contributed by one man to defeat our ticket? With every newspaper in Louisiana against us, with black headlines alleging that we were guilty of stealing and of fraud, all we could do to combat such a campaign was to get out circulars to the people. We had to buy stamps, run a printing press, and send circulars out to the people. We had to make a campaign, Mr. President, and the only way we could make a campaign in the State of Louisiana was to get nickel and dime contributions with which to make the campaign. That is the only way on earth we could do it.

What was the result, Mr. President? Was it a good result? We opened up night schools immediately following that campaign. Two hundred and thirty-eight thousand people from 21 to 75 years old, who could not read, write, or spell, had the opportunity to go to school. The result is that the United States census report showed that Louisiana made the greatest reduction in illiteracy ever known to have been made in any State in the United States.

Was that all we did? Was that a worthy purpose? We went into the insane asylum, Mr. President, and what did we find? I have here the report rendered by the national authorities wherein it is stated that there were found insane people in the institutions with their hands locked to the plow stocks; where insane people were chained in lock chairs; where insane people were placed in strait-jackets. We went to work, Mr. President, to undo that act of barbarism being practiced in our State, and, for one thing, we put a dentist in one of the asylums who pulled out 1,700 rotten and abscessed teeth in 6 days, teeth that had been left in the mouths of some of those people in such bad condition for 20 years, while the corporations ran amuck in that State, having controlled it ever since the time of the Civil War.

Was that all we did? It was not, Mr. President. We took the State university, which was rated class C, and we raised it to class A, and its enrollment went from 1,500 to near 5,000.

Was that all we did? No. We took the charity hospital, which had a death rate of 4.1 percent, and brought the death rate down to 2.8 percent. We took that same hospital, which had a daily capacity of 1,600, and raised that capacity to 3,800. Was that a worthy purpose?

There were the blind people being housed in an old, worn-out school building that had been abandoned as a grammar school. For those poor blind people we built a home.

Then there were the deaf and dumb, who were being housed in old out houses, some of which had been built a hundred years ago, and for them we built a new home.

Furthermore, there was no institution for the treatment of those suffering from epilepsy. We built a home for the treatment of those suffering from epilepsy, so such sufferers could be properly cared for.

Was that all we did? It was not even starting it. We had to raise money to send the youth of the State to school. We had to raise $1,000,000 the first year with which to buy their schoolbooks in order to get the children started in school, and we raised $1,000,000 extra the first year I was Governor of Louisiana, in addition to other things we did for the purposes of education. We raised $1,000,000 with which we bought schoolbooks and gave them free to every child in the State of Louisiana, as the result of which the school enrollment in the State of Louisiana increased near 20 percent the first year I was Governor of that State.

There was a State, Mr. President, lying under the domination of the great white angels of feudal democracy. The feudal State of America was the State of Louisiana. That is the way it had been run and had been allowed to be run, and nobody dared gainsay any one of them because the political organizations were so entrenched that no one tried to change it; and if anyone went against them, he did not have the chance of a lightning bug to be Governor of the State.

Mr. President, what did those people do with the road money? Go over and examine the records of the United States Bureau of Public Roads; they were paying $80,000 a mile for the construction of highways in Louisiana with a tensile strength to the square inch of less than 500 pounds. We initiated the good-roads program, Mr. President, and constructed through the length and breadth of Louisiana concrete highways at a cost of $26,000 per mile, including bridges, according to the Bureau of the United States Bureau of Public Roads; and at the cost of $26,000 a mile we constructed a road with 10,000 tons tensile strength to the square inch, including bridges, as against the previous work which had been done at a cost of $80,000 per mile for roads with less than 500 pounds tensile strength to the square inch.

Now people come alleging fraud against us; people for whose candidates individuals were putting up as much as $75,000 each. But the contribution of $75,000 I refer to is not a drop in the bucket, Mr. President, to the total raised.

This is not the first time fraud has been alleged, Mr. President. I became a member of the Public Service Commission of the State of Louisiana in 1918. I had to stand for all the bantering from the year 1918 that I have stood for since I came to the United States Senate. I have had to stand for it every day from the time I became public service commissioner in 1918 right up until the present day. I never held a public office in my life during which I was not under some kind of threat of removal or impeachment from the day I went into politics until the present day. I have never held one, and I do not expect to hold one. I have tried for about 16 years to have it some other way, and it has never been any other way, so now I have stopped trying to have it any other way.

Mr. President, as the result of all this, when I ran for the office of Senator, what was the issue then in Louisiana? How did I then get elected? Fortunately, I did not have to ask anyone to contribute to my cause. There was very little requested to be contributed. The campaign was too hot to require it. When I ran for the United States Senate, Mr. Sam Zemurray—I hope the Senators will get this name—Mr. Sam Zemurray was quoted time after time as saying that his part of the campaign fund to defeat HUEY P. LONG was $350,000. That is the statement which has been made by Mr. Zemurray; and if he is examined today, and if there is any record to show for it, I do not think he will even quibble about it.

I charged, Mr. President, at the conclusion of that campaign, that my opponents had spent more than $1,000,000 to defeat me for the Senate in that election in the State of Louisiana. Never has there been a word of denial of that charge. I sat in the Hibernia Bank & Trust Co., and was told by one of the bankers there that in addition to the enormous expenditures they had made, there was a deficit of around $50,000 still unpaid as the result of the campaign they waged against me. Compare that with the little money we spent, and it will be found that it is not a drop in the bucket. It is not even wash money compared with the amount of money the other side used. They have the public press, they have the large corporations on their side, they have the cash, they have more money in a day than I have had in 25 years to spend in a political campaign.

All we can do is to try to get a little money to get out circulars to the people. That is all. If the Senate will pass a law giving me the free use of the post office and the Government Printing Office with which to print circulars and send them out to the people, I will not need a thin dime to run for anything I want to run for in the State of Louisiana. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to announce that it is against the rules of the Senate to have any demonstration in the galleries, or any evidence of approval or disapproval. Those occupying the galleries are guests of the Senate. We are glad to have you here, but we hope you will observe these rules.

Mr. LONG. The committee says one further thing. I take no exception to the committee's report on either of the matters I have described, except that the committee finds that it can infer that an employee was coerced. I assume that they found some basis for that inference. I do not find it in the record myself. I have not found it.

That is not all. Three witnesses testified that they gave to the Overton campaign fund, all three of which witnesses were discredited. One was a man by the name of Wells. He had been discharged by the State highway commission. In connection with his testimony he said that he had contributed to the Overton campaign fund, and he stated that he had paid a man for a right of way $400 for something that he did not own, to get him to vote for OVERTON for the United States Senate. The public records were produced which showed that that piece of ground had been bought 1 year and 8 months before Senator OVERTON ran for the United States Senate, and the record went on to show that the value was all right; some other man showed that he had minor heirs, and sued in the courts, and was adjudicated the owner of it, and the court gave him the same amount of $400. Another was a man by the name of T. O. Harris, who had been discharged as an employee of the State twice. He was employed on a newspaper called the Shreveport Times, writing articles against the State administration at the time. The third was a man by the name of J. T. S. Porter, who had been discharged from the Conservation Commission of the State of Louisiana. Those three are the only men who testified that they ever gave a dime to the Overton campaign fund, the total of which amounted to fifteen or twenty dollars, and neither of them testified they were coerced into making contributions or were threatened with the loss of their jobs if they did not make them.

Mr. President, I think there are 20 Members of the Senate who were former Governors, and many of them have held other public offices in their States. I am willing for my record to be brought out and compared with the records of most of them. I think they can understand the difficulties that confronted us in accomplishing what we did accomplish in the State, with every newspaper in the State against us all the time—every one, except now and then one would get a little bit easier just for a little time, from motives best known to themselves—when we had no means of communication, no means of reaching the people, no means of getting the truth to them, not even the statistical records. We had no means of doing any of those things while we were undertaking to pass laws and to sustain laws to educate the youth of the land, to relieve the burdens of the poor. In addition, as the result of corporate activities in that kind of a conflict, hundreds of thousands of dollars were being contributed to the opposition, while we could not expect anyone to contribute to us by those who are affiliated with interests of that kind, because they have everything to gain by your defeat and everything to lose by your election. I fail to see why we in the State of Louisiana should be condemned for doing that which is practiced all over the United States, even by the national parties which are 10 times as strong. The contest, then, was whether the State administration had been right or not.

We were condemned because we were in with the Choctaw Club when OVERTON ran for the Senate. The New Orleans ring never supported me in its life, and I never supported the New Orleans ring in my life. I have never supported a candidate of the New Orleans ring ticket as long as I have lived, and the New Orleans ring has never supported me for anything I ever ran for in my lifetime.

It was in the year 1932 that they did support OVERTON, who was a candidate on our ticket, and the Allen ticket when we had the Governor's campaign. Why did they support them? Because it would not have made one bit of difference whether they supported OVERTON or not; they would have been elected by a monstrous majority whether the New Orleans ring had been with us or not. That was the only reason they supported it. No; that was not the only reason. There was also the reason that we were about to recall the mayor of that city, and they called me in, and here is the peace agreement that I signed. I will read article X of that agreement to show why that gang had to lay down that time and support OVERTON for the United States Senate and support Allen and his ticket for Governor. This was when I was Governor of Louisiana. Article X is as follows:

> The Governor obligates and binds himself that no legislation will be passed that will in any way interfere with the terms of office of the present city administration and that he will oppose, privately and publicly, any attempt to foster a recall movement or to disturb its present administration in any way.

That was an agreement which I publicly signed, and which was published in the newspapers. It was signed because we had them lying on their noses; if they had not stood at attention they would have been removed from office, and it was better for us to allow men to stay in office at the time than to have gone out and to have recalled them. Why? I only had 18 more months to serve as Governor of the State of Louisiana; under the law of that State I could submit a constitutional amendment but once every 2 years; and in order to get money to build paved highways, free bridges, and to care for the institutions of the State the agreement was reached at that time.

I had to submit that constitutional amendment by November 1930, or not be able to submit it while I was Governor of Louisiana; it was better for me to be able to submit the constitutional amendment to the people; in order to do that, I had to have a two-thirds vote, and the representatives of the ring were absolutely essential to get that vote. So it was much better for me to submit to the people the constitutional amendment providing for free bridges and paved highways and many other important reforms than to have the ring recalled in the city at the time; but, in order to keep from being recalled, the ring had to stand at attention in 1932, for if they had cracked one eye they knew they would have been faced with a recall election the next day. That is the only time they have ever been made to stand at attention. It may be said that it was wrong, and perhaps it was wrong; but we could not do in New Orleans what we did outside of the city. There they are as holy as the robes of angels themselves just so long as they are against HUEY P. LONG and locked up with the nefarious combines like the Power Trust; then they are good and holy; but whenever we have endeavored to pass legislation of the kind that we have been passing in Louisiana then we became tainted with all the sins that can be described in the catalog.

Why? Because, Mr. President, in the year 1932, when Governor Allen became the Governor of the State, we went a little bit further; we passed a few more laws to get a little more money for the State. Where did we get it? We passed a law imposing a 2-percent tax on the receipts of electric power sold in Louisiana; we did not allow that to be charged in the bills of the customers, and we collected nearly a half a million dollars in that way. We also enacted a corporation franchise tax law, such a law as we have never been able previously to enact in the State of Louisiana, and we got a million or so dollars a year from that tax. We imposed a severance tax on oil and a severance tax on gas and corporation franchise and electrical power taxes. Those are other acts to show the virtues of the State administration.

I was the chairman of the Public Service Commission of Louisiana in the year 1918 to the year 1928, when I became Governor of that State. I had control over the regulation of power rates and gas rates outside of New Orleans, but even today inside New Orleans the city government controls the rates and under its administration 200 kilowatt hours of power manufactured and sold right in New Orleans cost $16.16, while they sell the same amount right outside the city limits of New Orleans, made in New Orleans, for $8.80.

It costs one half as much to buy the power that is made in New Orleans outside the city limits of New Orleans as it does to buy the power made in New Orleans inside the city of New Orleans. That is the difference between the rate made, or approved, by HUEY P. LONG, chairman of the public service commission, and the rate made by the city council of the city of New Orleans. That will explain some of the opposition we have had there. Even then the rates have not been lowered half enough, and we know it.

We had our litigation with the telephone company. The rates were raised in 47 States of America when Louisiana reduced them, and made the company pay back 467,000 cash dollars and remit that amount in checks to the people of Louisiana of the money they had collected.

We made the pipe lines of the Standard Oil Co. common carriers, a reform for which we had fought for years and years. When I became a member of that commission, and interested in the oil business, I was one of the men who took a part when the pipe-line embargo came on. They picked out the men of influence of that State and bought oil of the man who was politically or financially influential. I was one of those whom they would have been willing to have picked out, but I went down the line and went all the way with the balance of them, and they never preferred me, but I continued the fight and the pipe lines were made common carriers in Louisiana, but it was not done until the public service commission went into court and had them decreed common carriers.

How did we get through it? They tried impeachment; they tried indictment; we had some kind of removal proceedings up every day and every night while I was engaged in those fights. In the constitutional convention of 1921 they wrote a provision to abolish entirely the office that I held. I fought that and managed to make them amend that, and had no more than got that done than they instituted impeachment proceedings. They had no more than got through the impeachment proceedings, than they brought an indictment in the district court, but never did they get away with the claptrap they pursued in the State of Louisiana.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I am very curious about the figures quoted by the Senator from Louisiana. I wonder if I heard him aright in the statement he made that 200 kilowatt-hours of electrical consumption a month in the city of New Orleans cost the domestic user $16.16.

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Mr. BONE. And outside the city cost them $8 and some cents? I should like to point out to the Senator from Louisiana that in my home, Tacoma, under public ownership, 200 kilowatt-hours' consumption cost a little home owner $3.05.

Mr. LONG. And that is enough. I do not take any credit for reducing it to $8. It was reduced before I left the chairmanship of the commission in 1926, but the rate ought to be lower than it is; it ought to be as cheap in New Orleans as it is in Tacoma. But today, to show the Senate the difference, it is still one half outside of New Orleans what it is in New Orleans. We have just had an election down there with the Power Trust as the issue.

Mr. BONE. I will say to the Senator that the Tacoma light and power system, publicly owned, is not permitted benevolently to accumulate unto its few hands everything in the city, including the money of the people.

Mr. LONG. That gang made 113-percent profit, as the records show, according to the report of the Federal Trade Commission, and they have pretty well held New Orleans in their clutches.

Another matter that I may state is that our penitentiary was losing a million dollars a year, while it is now on a paying basis. We have more inmates in it, maybe some of them related to me. [Laughter.]

Why, Mr. President, have they brought here these matters? Who have they brought here before the committee? Who are the parties whose names they have paraded? A blackened-face gang who cannot go under their own names, but hide behind the petticoats of their wives and daughters; men who have been put on the block and have been found to be everything that the public will not have; who do not dare to show their monstrous visages to the public gaze, but hide behind the rustle of the skirts of their wives and daughters. I will tell you in a few moments how they get their publicity and how that is being done. Chief among them is a gentleman who is attorney for the United Fruit Co., a lawyer, the political dictator of the Times-Picayune newspaper. That gentleman's name is Mr. Esmond Phelps, the attorney for the Western Union Telegraph Co, attorney for the Power Trust, and for several railroads.

Mr. Phelps has a brother-in-law by the name of Arthur D. Hammond. When we hear the call for political purity in Louisiana—and such a call will affect anybody, Mr. President; it even affects me sometimes and other men in politics, and I am no better than any of the others of them, I suppose; I have never seen anyone any better than am I, but I am no better than any of them. [Laughter.] They were not satisfied with the loot that they were getting from the city; that was not enough. When I went down to New Orleans they had a law there that prevented any one man from holding more than one office. There I found on the public pay rolls one Arthur D. Hammond. He was on the pay roll of the levee board at $400 a month, and he was on the pay roll of that board at $416.66 a month.

This brother-in-law of the Power Trust, of the Electrical Trust, and of the Fruit Trust, this dictator of the newspaper, this brother-in-law who could not sell himself into slavery for 40 years for $250, was drawing more money on the two pay rolls than the Governor of Louisiana. It is said that that is not true. I have in my hands a photograph of the checks of the salary of the same man for the same month, dated the same day, from two different boards, bearing his own individual endorsement. Here they are! The only difference between the checks is that the one drawn on the dock board is for $208.33, being for the last 15 days of the month, whereas the one drawn on the levee board for $400 is for the full-month salary.

I ordered this man dismissed from both of those pay rolls. He was dismissed. He was worthless for any purpose the State had in either capacity. He had violated the law in accepting money from both positions. I ordered him dismissed. The enraged Power Trust attorney, Mr. Phelps, unable to fight with his own countenance, unable to use the physical likeness of his brother-in-law, sends his sister and the wife of his brother-in-law to the National Capital, and over the United States she is widely publicized.

Is that all? Who is the next one? Mrs. Roger Q. Stone. Who is Mrs. Roger Q. Stone? She is the daughter of a man who does not dare show his face in this kind of matter. She is the daughter of Sam Zemurray, president of the United Fruit Co., who used the State of Louisiana and the city of New Orleans as a revolutionary base for revolutions in Central America and in South America. Many a mother's son lies in an unmarked grave today that gave his life in those revolutions promoted by this man Sam Zemurray out of the city of New Orleans and lower Louisiana. He promoted that city as a base until, finally, with the influence that he exerted over men in Congress and men in high Federal positions, he managed to persuade the United States Government to send the marines to Nicaragua; and many a man and many a boy, the son of many a mother, lies today in the Tropics dead in the cause of this man Sam Zemurray's preemption of a few hundred miles of land and territory that he wanted down in that country; they are the pirates of humanity's disaster.

Through the use of New Orleans as the base of revolutions, Mr. Sam Zemurray preempted to himself a monstrous fortune based on the blood of American people.

When I became Governor of the State of Louisiana I put the heel down on those revolutionary operations out of the city of New Orleans and the State of Louisiana. I wired the President that we were going to expose the damnable outrages if they kept sending soldiers into Nicaragua to protect Zemurray's questionable actions down there in the Tropics.

He comes here now, after admitting that he contributed $350,000 in order to defeat me as the candidate for the United States Senate; and does not show his own face, does not use his own name, but he hides behind the rustling, shimmering skirts of his daughter, undertaking to create the impression that there is a great uprising from the State of Louisiana. Such cowardly scoundrels we have had to fight in that State! There has never been a corruption fund heard of in any election in this world such as they turn loose in the State of Louisiana. Yet they talk about and criticize the little nickel and dime funds spent for circulars sent out in that State!

Who are the others? Mrs. John M. Parker. Everybody knows the case between Mr. Parker and myself. I helped to elect him Governor in the year 1920, and I was publicly accredited with having turned the day and elected him Governor of the State. I elected him because in a signed letter written to me he promised that he would enact a law making pipe lines common carriers and making pipe lines common purchasers. When the bill I had drawn came up for final passage in the State of Louisiana Mr. Parker sent word to the Legislature of Louisiana that he had changed his mind and decided he did not want the law enacted. I went down and had the pleasure of telling the gentleman what I thought he was. Since that day we have never spoken. Since that day I have been elected to everything I have run for, and since that day he has never dared to run. We passed the law regardless of the Governor's word, and he either left the State and let the Lieutenant Governor sign it or signed it himself, and it became the law of the land. His word was kept notwithstanding his message to the legislature that he did not want to keep it.

They followed me into the Governor's office in 1928 with an impeachment proceeding before the ink could dry on the oath I had taken. Their prosecutions were not to stop with me as chairman of the public service commission. When I had taken the oath as Governor of the State the impeachment was in order almost immediately, and I hardly got through the first session of the legislature without having to face an impeachment that time. The first time I did call a special session for the purpose of imposing taxes on the business of refining oil, I met the impeachment of 1929. They had their forces reinforced that time better than now. They had the New Orleans ring with them that had fought me and is still with them. They had the Standard Oil Co. They were fighting the law I was trying to pass to tax them a little more.

They had something else with them. Louisiana is surrounded by water. They were going to build a bridge in there so anyone could come in without having to take a ferry. Lo and behold, they got their old political gang together a few years before I became Governor and gave an exclusive contract for a bridge over Lake Pontchartrain permitting them to charge $3.60 each way for an automobile plus 15 cents for every passenger in the automobile. In other words, they gave a contract to this very clique that is there now for $8.40 for a family of five to take an automobile across the bridge into New Orleans and come back the same day or the next day.

I went in and built a free bridge beside that toll bridge. Instead of having to pay $3.60, people could cross the bridge free. They had the stock watered up to where they said the toll bridge had cost $7,700,000. I built the free bridge and the roadway to the bridge for $1,500,000, just one fifth of what they said it cost them to build their bridge, and I made the traffic free into and out of that city.

They went into that impeachment proceeding before I could get the bridge completed. They hawked the stock and bonds of the bridge company to the members of the legislature. I tried to produce before this committee that was down there the living witnesses—the members of the legislature to whom they had finally come and offered sums that were staggering if they would vote for my impeachment as Governor of the State of Louisiana. I produced the living witnesses right in the presence of the committee while they were down there. I think the committee did right to have ruled out the testimony, but I brought the living witnesses there to tell the day and the date, the sums and the amounts, and the whys and wherefores of being offered stupendous sums in order to bribe their way through to get those privileges in that State.

It is not the first time they have hidden behind petticoats. In the year 1923, when I undertook to make a speech in the city of Baton Rouge, the capital of the State, the domicile of the Standard Oil Co., on that occasion they sent the wife of the president of the Standard Oil Co. into my meeting to break up a peaceful political meeting that I was holding over there in that domicile—the cowardly wretches!

They undertook to unseat the delegation in Chicago. They moved to impeach me in office and remove me from the office of a member of the railroad commission, and they indicted me. They impeached me as Governor on every charge from stealing cordwood up to attempted murder. When I beat them the next thing they did was when they went to Chicago to try to unseat the delegation, and we won that fight.

Mr. President, I come to a matter that is going to interest the Senate a little more than what I have been saying. The publicity has gone out that Mr. HUEY P. LONG has been put on the spot; that the agencies of the Government have been ordered to dig up something on his income taxes. This has been going on for about 3 years or 4 years. I have in my hand a letter, or a copy of a letter, that I am going to read to the Senate:

August 17, 1933—

Strictly personal and confidential. [Laughter.]

I hope the Senate will listen to this letter. It may be of some value to Senators in their later lives.

Hon. GUY T. HELVERING,
Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. HELVERING: I am embarrassed by the fact that such articles as the one herewith enclosed has been published in a small paper in the rural sections of this State. I think, in fairness to myself and you, I should transmit this, and the time has arrived when I should take some note of it and kindred things.

I have been connected with this department since February 1919, starting under the administration of President Woodrow Wilson. The records will show the service and efficiency with which the office under me has been conducted. Even the Associated Press bulletins from Washington some days ago placed Louisiana in a class by itself, showing a noticeable increase in collection of internal revenue. Your statistical reports furnished to collectors by yourself are highly complimentary to the administration of my office.

The matter of former Governor and our present Senator, HUEY P. LONG, has been so widely published that it is now scarcely a secret. Before this publicity was given out, and some of it by agents connected with your Department, so much common talk had been indulged in that I was constantly embarrassed as to what I should say. For that reason I am writing you fully about it now.

When Governor LONG started to run for the Senate in 1930 against Senator Ransdell, from Mr. Jacob O. Bender, then collector of internal revenue, we were given to understand that it was desired that a very close scrutiny and check be made of his records and affairs with a view to determining whether there was anything definite by which any irregularity could be charged to him. When we called Governor LONG, in the beginning of the campaign, he promptly denounced all of us with all of the language that he could use—and he seems to know how to use plenty—telling us that he regarded it as a matter of piracy to jump on him just as he entered a campaign, and that he would not stop to give us any information whatever at the time, but that we could crack our whip as we saw fit. He said that when his campaign for the Senate was over that he would go over the matter with us. I discussed the matter with the collector, and he thought it best not to undertake to embarrass the Governor, and I was glad that he took that position, because I knew that very soon Governor LONG was going to charge us with all kinds of fraud. After his campaign we went through the investigation but found nothing to charge him with.

The matter ended there until some time before the two national conventions met in Chicago last year. The Department sent about 100 inspectors in here at different times to work in all directions to get something on Mr. LONG. I was simply told what they were here to do, and I was requested to supply certain information and had no jurisdiction in the matter at all. I gave them whatever they asked and performed anything I was assigned without any complaint.

Friends and prominent supporters of Senator LONG were examined to the limit. I conversed with some of the agents, who told me how they had worked trying to get something on Senator LONG but without doing it. If they expected anything more from me than I did, none ever suggested it. I understood that the Senator's telephone wires were tapped and other measures taken.

It was none of my duty or my suggestions as to what the Department was doing in the Senator Long case. Had it been, I would have never suggested any such things as they did.

I find that I am cut both ways. The Senator probably thinks I was in on the tapping of his wires. The scurrilous article I enclose to you says the work was done under me.

I think the writer of this article has a double motive. He wants Senator LONG's friends to feel I was the man in charge of this chase to get him. He wants you to feel I favored him. This would leave me with no friend at all for something I had no more to do with than you did.

I am asking your advice. My reports show the results and comparisons above any other district in the Nation.

I would appreciate your reply and will hold same in strict confidence.

This is a genuine carbon copy, gentlemen of the Senate. The original is in the files of the Internal Revenue Department; and if they think there is any such thing as fear, they had better go back and ask them what happened in the last 3 years about it.

When John D. Rockefeller had committed his murders and thievery throughout this country, including the bullets piercing the heads of defenseless children and women; when he had made a contract with the railroads that not only gave him a rate below all other oil companies but gave him a royalty on the freight business, even of his competitors; when he was blackened from one end of this country to the other they hired a press agent to glorify him. They began this dime business of giving out a dime here and there. The hand that had raked in and raped the country was made to appear bountiful by giving a dime to the sick where the public had been fleeced of a thousand dollars. They hired a man by the name of Mr. Ivy Lee, and Mr. Ivy Lee is supposed to have done the great job of whitewashing John D. Rockefeller's sins from the memory of the American people.

A short time ago, Mr. President, I never thought the name of Mr. Ivy Lee, the celebrated publicity agent for the Rockefellers, would ever come into my life, top side nor bottom. He is too big a man to have extolled the virtues of this country's leading crime. But, lo and behold, I met a gentleman in this city who draws a very large salary. He told me:

I have just had a conversation with a man by the name of Shipp—

S-h-i-p-p, I believe they spell it. He said:

There is a publicity concern here in the city of Washington run by a man by the name of Shipp. Mr. Shipp has just told me that Mr. Ivy Lee has called to see him, and has told him that he wishes him to take charge of handling the publicity against HUEY P. LONG.

That was enough for us to investigate. We did investigate; and, lo and behold, one of these women sent here, the wife of this culprit that was found on the two pay rolls, the sister of the Power Trust and United Fruit Co. lawyer, was found entering one of the leading newspaper offices a few days preceding one of her celebrated interviews in the personal company of Mr. Shipp. I am not giving the name of the gentleman. He is here. There are Senators here to whom he will entrust his message.

Not only that; there was a newspaper down somewhere near my parts that had been passively neutral, and to some limited extent even adjudged to be friendly to my policies and to my politics. A short while ago a friend of mine happened to be discussing a matter with one of the men in that newspaper office, when in walked a gentleman bearing a letter from a manufacturing house of this country, and in the presence of my friend he read a letter which I have been doing everything I could to get, in which he stated that—

The national advertisers of this country are willing to patronize no paper that is not unfriendly to HUEY P. LONG, and you can inform them that we are unwilling to have any further advertising of any kind printed in the columns of that paper unless they are unfriendly to LONG, because we regard him as a national menace.

That is how far they have carried this campaign.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Does the Senator mean to have it inferred from his statement that the present administration is carrying on this spy system with reference to him as it was carried on by the previous administration?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir; they are still in Louisiana. They went back there. They are there now. They went into the offices of some friends of mine down there last week and told them they were there to get HUEY P. LONG, and they were going to stay there until they got him. Well, they will be there a long time, gentlemen of the Senate. [Laughter.] They will be there a long time; and I am glad it is me they are after.

I will never forget, when they indicted me in the Standard Oil fight in 1921 and in 1929, when I said to the members of the house of representatives around me, as they began to leave me one by one, "I am certainly glad that the indictment is against me instead of one of you, because I am afraid the whole fight would go glimmering if anybody else had to carry it"; and as results to show what happened to the fight in 1921 we were not 6 months in making them write the law just as we told them to write it. They fined me a dollar, and the judge paid part of the dollar, so there was no appeal. [Laughter.] He is my friend.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The occupants of the galleries will preserve order.

Mr. LONG. I do not charge any member of the present administration with responsibility. There has been considerable publicity given out about this matter. There has been 3 years of it, starting in 1930, according to this letter; and I can tell you that I remember very vividly, when I became a candidate for the Senate, when the agents came to me and told me they were going to have to stop me for a few days to go into my income taxes, and I gave them a very short answer and went my way for a few days. When I returned, with Mr. Ransdell defeated, they looked into my papers very hurriedly and said, "Everything is all right." I think they wanted to pay me back thirteen or fourteen dollars if I would make application, but I thought I had better let them keep it. I did not know what they would say about it the next time. [Laughter.]

This publicity makes such a terrible condemnation in the newspapers of a political ring being covered with all possible slime and sin. They make the point that, if there is an organization that has supported a man, he is a terrible man to sit in the Senate. Well, have they ever said anything about the Choctaw Club that they have not said about Tammany Hall? Has anybody moved to unseat the two Senators from New York because Tammany Hall supported them? Has anybody moved to unseat the men that Vare supported to send to the United States Senate from the State of Pennsylvania? Has anybody moved to unseat the Senators that the Crump organization sent from Memphis? Has anybody moved to unseat the bunch sent from the State of Illinois? I will guarantee you that nothing they have ever said about the Choctaws can hold a candle to what has been said about them.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, does the Senator mean the present delegation from Illinois?

Mr. LONG. Well, I am willing to make it any delegation the Senator prefers.

Mr. LEWIS. I prefer that the delegation to which the Senator alludes should be made definite, because my State has been quite exempt from any just accusation against its political morality; and if there is an exception I should like to have the Senator name it specifically.

Mr. LONG. Well, I think with the election of the present Senator from Illinois it gave all the color of purity to Illinois politics, as did the elections in Louisiana of its present Members. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The galleries will preserve order.

Mr. LONG. It is a little bit peculiar that they have taken Louisiana in all the publicity lately, but there is an added reason. We are trying to give this Nation a model tax law down in my State. There has been a whole lot of talk in Congress about what we are going to do, but if we can get the votes in our legislature in Louisiana we will do it.

We propose to take the taxes off the little landowner entirely. We have a piece of legislation pending, Mr. President, that we hope to make law, in which we say that we propose to take the taxes off the little home owner entirely. We do not propose to have him pay a copper cent in taxes. We propose to give him schools, and the protection of the Government, and free school books, and night schools, without its costing him a copper cent; and we have plenty there with which to do it. We just propose to make the tax on oil what it ought to be, and to tax the foreign oil that is manufactured in Louisiana the same as we tax the domestic oil that is manufactured there. We propose to raise the gas tax, and we propose to put on an income tax. Our State has never yet been able to put on an income tax; and then there is something that strikes them as even worse. We propose to put a tax on the cotton exchange and the stock exchange; and we are in the fight of our lives, because New Orleans is the great center in the South for the stock exchange and the cotton exchange. They have never allowed it over in the State of Texas or in the State of Mississippi. They trade through our stock and cotton exchanges there; and if we are successful in putting on these taxes we intend to let them eliminate the taxes that are being borne there by the little man.

That is the reason, Mr. President, immediately for the attack on Louisiana by some of these interests—not only for what we have done, not only for the stand that we take here nationally, but by reason of our proposals otherwise.

Mr. President, I have spoken somewhat longer than I expected to speak. I should like to have the day come when I will know just how long the Senate of the United States will be used as the common, privileged sewer for the spreading of every bit of slime and filth that these enemies have been unable to spread under privilege in my State and in the United States. I should like to know just how long the unprecedented thing will occur that they can go out and get them up six or seven more people that are not satisfied with the election and continue to file and refile these criminations and recriminations in the Senate of the United States. I think it has persisted to the point where there ought to be some reasonable recourse for a Senator.

Have they been, Mr. President, in anything like respectability? Have the publications treated them as they deserve? On the contrary, this very committee headed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and the subcommittee headed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] came down to Louisiana, and I saw an employee of that committee stand up in front of the committee not only defying the committee but calling its chairman a yellow coward, calling me a rat, calling the other Senators every name he wanted to call them, accusing them of every kind of intent to steal something away from public justice, defaming them in every manner he wished to, and I have never heard of the gentleman being called to the bar for any contempt. On the contrary, his picture has been printed throughout the length and breadth of this country. He has been extolled. He has been commended. He has been praised. He has been held up as a model of perfection because he stood before the committee of the United States Senate, his own employers, with all contempt, and cursed them with every word that could fall from the lips of an individual. But there has been no proceeding in contempt against him. People have even had nerve enough to urge him further as an employee of the Senate. That is the kind of publicity that has been received in connection with this matter, Mr. President.

I will state another fact. So long as the newspapers contained any kind of statement from the members of the committee that did not to some extent reflect upon the State of Louisiana or upon me, the editorial columns would print pages bristling with condemnations and denunciations of those Senators. The minute the same Senators were quoted as having given utterance to statements that were in whole or in part a condemnation of the State or of me, then the comments became glorious and approving. Every kind of condemnation descended from the press upon the heads of Members of the Senate sitting on the committee until they spoke ill words of the men who had been elected to the Senate. The newspapers even took the chairman of the committee, my distinguished friend from Texas, Mr. CONNALLY, and caricatured him because when the building in which the hearings were held was crowded, he crawled through the window of a wash room, and they caricatured him as another wash-room character because he had come into the committee room through a window leading into a wash room. But when there came from the lips of the distinguished Senator from Texas words that condemned anybody in Louisiana, the same newspapers extolled him for a while. They had not, however, done so before.

There were reasons given for all this. What are the reasons? The reasons given are that I am advocating a philosophy that they say is dangerous to the country, viz: the redistribution of wealth. The Medes and Persians are battering at the gates today. Many people cannot see the hand that is writing on the wall. I am not alone any more, however, in my advocacy and in my warning. There are plenty more who are advocating the same thing; and I was not alone in the first place. The time of correction is at hand. We no longer have optimistic utterances coming such as we had. They are no longer as unanimous as they were.

In the United States News there is a statement which shows that the publisher of that paper no longer speaks as optimistically as he used to, Mr. President. He says:

> We are witnessing some vital repercussions. The individualism of the farmer is to be taken from him. He is to be taxed on his individual surplus. Will he submit to this? The Civil Works Administration is about to turn loose millions of its employees. Will the unemployed submit to this? We are sowing the seeds of serious social disturbances of which the recent farm strikes in the West were symptomatic. To use force and coercion on the American farmer is not likely to be successful. The alternative to date—the payment of subsidies—also has its disadvantages. Increased production has not been thwarted. The fertilizer sales tell that story.

Then again, Mr. President, today we have articles going out over the country which are not bristling with such optimism, for I find today in the Washington Post—this article is dated January 30, 1934, and says:

> According to estimates of the Census Bureau, the net public debt of Federal, State, and local governments rose from $4,850,000,000 in 1912 to $36,822,000,000 in 1932—an increase of about 659 percent.

We have more people starving today than in 1912, and according to this article the public debt is 656 percent higher today than it was in 1912.

The article continues:

> When the census compilations were made the Federal debt amounted to only $19,225,000,000. If an anticipated addition of $12,000,000,000 to this total is realized by the end of the fiscal year 1935, the public debt then will show an increase of more than 900 percent over 1912. But Federal, State, and local governments debts constitute only a fraction of the total volume of obligations now in existence. According to a recent estimate of the Twentieth Century Fund, the private debt of this country, both long and short term, amounted to about $246,000,000,000, or more than $2,000 for each man, woman, and child at the beginning of 1933.

In other words, we have a private debt of $246,000,000,000 and a public debt of $36,000,000,000, making a total debt, according to the estimate in the Washington Post, of $272,000,000,000, which is almost equal to the total wealth of the United States in prosperous times.

They do not reflect such terms of optimism as I read in a paper dated Monday evening, December 25, 1933:

Mother kills self in Yule grief. Couldn't buy presents for her children.

And so she took her life.

The newspaper articles do not reflect all of the optimism, Mr. President, that we hoped would come about during this period of the game. People are beginning to express themselves entirely differently on some of these matters. They are getting back to pretty sound fundamental doctrine. They are not so optimistic about the things they hoped for.

I have here an article appearing in the Washington Herald a couple of months ago, giving a quotation that comes from New Haven, Conn., from a statement of a representative of the Union Theological Seminary of New York, as follows:

The civilization and culture in which mankind is living will perish through the very vehicle of propaganda which it helped to create, and will die through the nationalism which it helped to fashion. The unequal distribution of wealth is slowly undermining the stability of our civilization. It creates unemployment for millions, and the competition of unemployed with those who are employed further lowers living standards.

I have another article which does not reflect all the optimism which has been reflected and which we hoped to have reflected at this stage of the game. The article says:

The rich must assume the burden of taxation.

The article quotes Mr. John Dewey—and even the President—as of that idea. It quotes Mr. Dewey as saying:

We should tax incomes in the United States as heavily as do France, England, and Germany. Wealth must contribute heavily to prevent a complete collapse.

I have here another article, which appeared in the New York Herald Tribune on Monday, March 27, 1933, in which it says:

Wealth control called function of government. The Nation should prevent concentration in the hands of a few.

That article says, among other things:

"Such a radical and unjust distinction in the distribution of material goods", he continued, "could scarcely be in harmony with the designs of an Omniscient Creator. It was on this point that the State should have stepped in to stop the conflict between classes and insure an equitable distribution of wealth. Instead, it allowed such concentration of economic power that a fierce battle to acquire control of the State resulted."

So, Mr. President, we have, instead of such optimistic opinions, the warnings that the repercussions have begun to set in. We have the examples now being furnished us of other men speaking in terms in which they could have spoken long ago.

I read a few lines from Plato. Plato said:

Our aim in founding the State was not the disproportionate happiness of any one class, but the greatest happiness of the whole; we thought that in a State which is ordered with a view to the good of the whole we should be most likely to find justice, and in the ill-ordered State injustice; and, having found them, we might then decide which of the two is the happier.

This greatest philosopher of the Greeks gives a little dialog of only a few lines, a little less than one half a page. He says in this dialog.

I wonder whether you will agree with another remark which occurs to me.

What may that be?

There seem to be two causes of the deterioration of the arts.

What are they?

Wealth, I said, and poverty.

How do they act?

The process is as follows: When a potter becomes rich, will he, think you, any longer take the same pains with his art?

Certainly not.

He will grow more and more indolent and careless?

Very true.

And the result will be that he becomes a worse potter?

Yes; he greatly deteriorates.

But, on the other hand, if he has no money, and cannot provide himself with tools or instruments, he will not work equally well himself, nor will he teach his sons or apprentices to work equally well.

Certainly not.

Then, under the influence either of poverty or of wealth, workmen and their work are equally liable to degenerate?

That is evident.

Here, then, is a discovery of new evils, I said, against which the guardians will have to watch, or they will creep into the city unobserved.

What evils?

Wealth, I said, and poverty; the one is the parent of luxury and indolence, and the other of meanness and viciousness, and both of discontent.

America is the only real, genuine and proven, modern example of what Plato meant. Wealth on the one hand and poverty on the other have meant the breeding of indolence and the destruction of virtue. Yet some people cannot see it; they will not see it, blind as they are with eyes that will not look. Instead of that, Mr. President, they have been coming down to Washington and they have been going over the length and breadth of this land shouting, publicizing, doing everything within their power, hiding their own slimy faces behind the skirts of their womenfolk, undertaking to bring about every possible denunciation it is in their filthy minds to conceive against me and the redistribution of wealth I advocate to save the people and this country.

When I came here I was willing to fight hard and unceasingly for a great prize, the happiness of 120,000,000 people. Perhaps as the result of my example it might have meant the happiness of the people of the world; all should be brought about through the sharing of the wealth of the land. While I was willing to gamble for stakes that were great, I had a little to risk that could be lost in the effort.

Mr. President, more men of high position are in the ditches laboring under capital. Nine dollars and sixty cents a week is their ration; it is either that or less. Better that than nothing. Men who have worn white collars in the past, executives in sawmills and in manufacturing plants, executives even in other greater capacities, you will find today begging for the privilege of getting in the ditch and eking out the dole of $9.60 a week. Those who yet nurse their pride, or who are not fortunate enough to get on the public dole—8,000,000 of that kind of families—have placed their children in armchairs to look into the distant and empty space to distract the mind from the hunger and agonies of the body. No one holds out any hope in the articles we read today that the condition is getting a great deal better, particularly when we must face the proposition of retrenching on the dole rather than enhancing it.

One million young men have grown up in this country—there are probably more than that—who have never even been given the first advantage of hitting a lick of work in order to know how to earn a living. With all we have, too much of everything, too much to eat, too much to wear, too many houses to live in, people are starving and people are naked and people are homeless, because it is the land of too much. We are unable to balance it; we are unable to distribute it. There is but one way on God's living earth to distribute the blessings of the land, and that is according to the language of the Scriptures, the language of the lawgivers, the language of the philosophers, the language of the Creator, by not allowing any one man to have so much that there is not enough for the others; by limiting the amount which one man may have. I have proposed to bring that about by a resolution I have offered in the Senate. I have a right, Mr. President, to urge that resolution; I have a right to be let alone from the contraptions and devices of others; I have a right not only to be let alone in my own right without this unleashing of the hounds, this hiring of publicity agents, this swarming of the land with a wealth of agents for 4 years, this branding of my friends and my associates, but I have a right to pursue my ordinary undertakings without that.

Mr. President, I have not on my own responsibility alone, but I have today on the responsibility of someone who can be adjudged as having no particular interest in this matter offered a resolution which I am going to ask the Senate to adopt, and later I may ask permission to call it up out of order.

I read here an article which appears in Labor, the newspaper of the laboring man, of the railroad unions of the country. It says:

The campaign to discredit, and if possible destroy, Senator HUEY P. LONG, of Louisiana, is pressed with a ferocity seldom equaled in our political history.

Just who is doing the planning and paying has not come to the surface, but anyone familiar with the mysteries of propaganda knows there is a plethoric pocketbook and a directing brain some place in the background.

I will not read any further from that. That is the view of these observers, without having such proof as I have been able to give here this morning, as to what has been said about me and what has been put into effect against me.

It is time, Mr. President, for some investigation on another score here. When the Senate has been given information that people have come to Washington to install a publicity bureau in order to wreck a Senator, it is time for an investigation. When an investigating committee of the United States has been caricatured and denounced and an employee of that committee has been praised because he calls the chairman and members of the committee "yellow cowards" and "rats", it is time, Mr. President, to find out who is so misusing the facilities of interstate commerce and mails of the United States and why such characters as that go immune to continue condemnation of that kind. I have asked for an investigation, Mr. President, and, after these long years of investigations and recriminations and trials and prosecutions, I am entitled to have another investigation. I have submitted a resolution which reads as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee consisting of five Senators to be appointed by the Vice President is hereby authorized and directed to investigate into what, if any, plans, efforts, conspiracies, or arrangements have been entered into, made, or exerted, through the use of facilities in interstate commerce, through the use of publications using the United States mails and through bureaus of the United States with intent to spend sums of money, to set up various organizations, or to bring about multiplicious proceedings to libel or spread false information and to secure publicity thereof affecting HUEY P. LONG, United States Senator from the State of Louisiana, for the purpose of making difficult or impossible or to prevent such Senator from having fair and reasonable opportunity to present and urge, or to oppose proposed legislation in the Congress of the United States; that said committee shall further inquire into the sums of money spent and by whom, in undertaking to accomplish the defeat of said Senator—

They have investigated to find out how much was spent by us; it is now for the good of the country and the Senate that they find out who are back of this campaign of defamation—and I think I can tell them who they are—and how much—I think I can tell them most of that—was spent against the candidacy of a Senator as well as that which was spent in favor of the candidacy of a Senator.

The resolution continues—

when a candidate for the United States Senate, both in the primary and the general election of the year 1930, and the use of the mails for publications and the use of facilities in interstate commerce to spread libels against said Senator in said campaign and the use made of United States agencies to affect him and his candidacies; that said committee shall pursue its inquiry into whether Senators and Members of Congress have been libeled and defamed through the use of telegraphic wire services used in interstate commerce, through publications circulating in interstate commerce and through the mails of the United States, and by means of interstate radio communication if said Senators and Congressmen did not make or participate in the making of statements denunciatory to the said Senator, and to defame Members of Congress who do approve of any course of conduct of the said Senator, with a view to compelling unfavorable expressions affecting said Senator; that said committee shall inquire into whether or not interstate telegraph and telephone wires, radio facilities, and periodicals and publications passing through the mails of the United States were maliciously and improperly used to extol and applaud the misconduct of agents and servants employed by the United States Senate and its committees in which they may have been in contempt of the United States Senate or otherwise improperly acting—

I do not think there will be any trouble on the part of the Senate committee uncovering the last part of that recital—

so as to reflect upon the said Senator; said committee shall inquire into whether agencies and departments of the United States have been employed and used for the purpose of harassing and embarrassing and affording means of adverse publicity.

We have a law on the books that the Department of Internal Revenue is not supposed to give out any information regarding individual tax returns; and yet for 4 years there has been published in the newspapers all kinds of items to the effect that they were after HUEY LONG on account of his income tax, and were after him for this and were after him for that.

I will not read the remainder of the resolution, Mr. President. It simply provides for an investigation into the kind of practices that are being indulged to find out who is paying the bill and the expenses of these culprits who have come here; to find out who is putting up the money that has been handed to these hirelings; to find out why they are extolling the virtues and the capacity of servants and employees of the Senate who defamed, maligned, and caricatured even the members of the committee under whom they were supposed to be serving. That is what I am asking, based not only upon the prima facie showing which I am making here with such documents as I am able to present but based upon the opinion of other sound and conservative men who are not pursuing any partisan advantage. I will at the proper time call for the adoption of the resolution. I thank the Senate.

EXHIBIT A

The New Orleans Item of August 17, 1922, page 1, publishes an account of a victory by the regulars over the new regular faction, headed by John P. Sullivan, in the effort of the regulars to oust nine alleged dummy registrar candidates sponsored by the Sullivan faction, J. T. Trowell, attorney for the Sullivan faction; J. C. Davel, legal spokesman for the Behrman forces.

Friday, August 18, 1922: New Orleans Item, page 1, publishes account of victory of Sullivanites, new regular faction, over regulars, supreme court restraining Judge Skinner from interfering with the candidacies of nine dummies.

Monday evening, August 14, 1922, first account dummy commission battle, page 1, New Orleans Item.

The case of record is entitled George E. Morris v. Candidate for Registrar of Conveyances v. Nine Dummy Candidates, who are as follows:

Anthony Russo, E. A. Ginchard, John B. Vignaud, Awthur Livaudais, Martin E. Eckart, Joseph Dickman, Robert L. M. Rathe, Philip Heinz, and Joseph F. Peyronnin.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I do not expect to make any extended reply to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], because most of the matters discussed by the Senator do not raise any issue as to the committee which investigated the Overton election complaint. The Senator, however, in the course of his remarks did advert to certain unpleasant incidents transpiring in New Orleans on the occasion of the committee's investigation.

It is true that one of the employees of the committee did, on the first day of the meeting, at a time when I was not present, make a charge against all the members of the committee. He did not refer to the chairman as a "yellow dog", as suggested by the Senator.

Mr. LONG. As a "yellow coward"; I beg pardon.

Mr. CONNALLY. Nor as a "yellow coward."

Mr. LONG. I heard him testify.

Mr. CONNALLY. The press report was that he referred to the Senator from Texas as "yellow" because he was not present on the first day of the session.

I want to say that the Senator from Texas has done all that he could to rectify that situation. The Senator from Texas denounced that action of that employee publicly in the hearings immediately when he reached New Orleans; the Senator from Texas privately denounced the man to his face in unmeasured terms in such a way as, under ordinary circumstances, would have resulted in something more than a verbal exchange. The Senator from Texas here on the floor, when he submitted the report on behalf of the committee, denounced the conduct of this treacherous, disloyal, falsifying employee. What more can be done, I do not know. By direction of the committee he was discharged and is not now and has not been for some time in the employ of the committee.

The Senator from Louisiana also referred to an incident in which he says the chairman of the committee was caricatured as climbing through a window. The Senator from Texas wants to say that the facts concerning that incident are as follows: The mobs in Louisiana were clamoring to get into the hearing room, both mobs, the mob alined with the Senator from Louisiana and the mob alined against him. The committee had given orders that, in order to give everybody a fair chance to get into the room, the doors be closed and nobody admitted until 10 o'clock.

When the Senator from Texas and a number of newspapermen and Mrs. Hammond herself—the Mrs. Hammond who is so active in this matter—arrived at the hall the street was completely blocked from sidewalk to sidewalk and it was a physical impossibility to get to the door of the hall. Outside the building there was an iron stairway—not a fire escape, at all, but a broad iron stairway—and we supposed that it was an entrance to the side of the building. Mrs. Hammond, the Senator from Texas, and a number of newspaper correspondents went up that iron stairway. When we got to the landing we found there was no door, but there was a wide, open window, and we stepped through the window into the hearing chamber. That is all there ever was about the incident of the fire escape.

I never would have mentioned it on the floor of the Senate, it is so trivial, so inconsequential, except for the fact that the Senator from Louisiana saw fit to make reference to it here on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I hope the Senator understands that I made reference to it to show the kind of unfair and improper publicity that was given to reflect on the Senator from Texas and members of the committee by the press that evidently has determined to do everything possible to bring the committee into a bad light.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall say to the Senator from Louisiana that that is true; that the press in Louisiana was very unfair and very unjust to the committee in the first days of its hearings. Before the investigation had been concluded the press there was quite generally approving the work the committee was doing.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. In other words, if I understand the Senator from Texas, as soon as I left the press became friendly. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, no; and the Senator from Texas did not mean to imply any such thing as that. The Senator from Texas said after the first few days the press was quite generally approving the work of the committee. It was not the fault of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], it was not the fault of the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], it was not the fault of the Senator from Texas, myself; but it seems that some of the local press had gotten the idea, I suppose from this disloyal employee, before the committee began the hearing, that the committee would not act diligently, and got that idea before the committee ever met. I shall say that to the Senator from Kentucky. It was no fault of the Senator from Kentucky and no fault of any member of the committee; but the papers had assumed, some of them, at least, in Louisiana—not all of them, for there are two groups of papers there——

Mr. LOGAN. I hope the Senator understood me, because I must say that so far as I was individually concerned I find no fault with the newspaper publicity and I have no complaint to make about anything the press said about me. Probably I deserved it all.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not complaining about what the papers did, but that does not change the fact. The fact is that two of the papers in New Orleans that were alined on one side and the one paper alined on the other side——

Mr. LONG. Oh, no; we have none.

Mr. CONNALLY. I was informed that one of them was with the Long organization.

Mr. LONG. No; we have none.

Mr. CONNALLY. Be that as it may, I do not retract what I said, that while we public men have to take the punishment of unfair publicity—and I am not complaining—yet I do say that the Louisiana papers, when the committee first met, seemed only to want some sensational, scandalous stuff to put upon the front pages.

Mr. LONG. I dislike to interrupt the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must request Senators to address the Chair and obtain permission to interrupt the Senator who has the floor. This is done in order that the Chair may enforce the rule of the Senate in that regard.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield for a question only.

Mr. LONG. I just want to ask the Senator if he does not know that there was not any difference in the kind of publicity he had there then and what there was after he left and before he came?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not care to pursue that any further.

Mr. LONG. They had an editorial after the Senator left in which they were not any more complimentary about him than they were when he first came there.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have not been reading the New Orleans papers. I am not concerned especially with what they think of me or what they do not think of me. All the junior Senator from Texas is concerned with is whether or not, when he went to New Orleans as chairman of the committee or as a member of the committee, he did his duty to the Senate and brought back the facts and laid them before the Senate. My political fortunes and my personal welfare are not involved in what the papers of Louisiana say about me or do not say about me. The junior Senator from Texas was not influenced nor was any member of the committee influenced in his course in Louisiana by what the papers said or what the papers did not say.

The Senate knows the very difficult situation that confronted the committee in Louisiana. We were hampered by howling mobs, reminding one somewhat of trials in some of the courts in foreign countries, where the spectators raise a big hullabaloo when the testimony is suited to their side of the case, and on the other hand raise cries of protest when the other side gives its evidence. We went through that experience and tolerated it for nearly 3 weeks, undertaking to get the facts to bring back and lay them before the Senate.

I want to refer to a few other matters and then I wish to conclude. The Senator from Louisiana is not accurate in saying that the dummy-candidate system is in vogue in my State of Texas. I do not know what the practice is in other States. In Texas the dummy-candidate system is not in operation, because the election officers in my State in the primaries are selected by the county chairman and the county committee and not by the candidates themselves.

The Senator from Louisiana also takes the committee to task because we refer to the dummy-candidate system. The committee was not concerned with who established the dummy-candidate system. We were not concerned with the administration that enacted the dummy candidate law. We do not know anything about who did it. The committee had only to report the facts as they existed, and the fact is that that seems to be the system in Louisiana. I shall say to the Senator from Louisiana that the committee said that the dummy-candidate system seemed to be approved by the laws of the State.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Will the Senator do me one kind little act and say that my faction went into court three times to stop it and could not do it?

Mr. CONNALLY. The committee did not go into that matter, but I understand that is the contention of the Senator from Louisiana and his group. I am not concerned with that. It does not make any difference how many times anybody went into court, or whether it was the Overton group or the Broussard group. I understand both groups have used dummy candidates in the past, but, irrespective of whether all of them used dummy candidates or not, the system is a damnable one and the committee denounced it as being the mother of fraud in elections. Practically every faction in Louisiana says that they are against the dummy-candidate system, but they do not do anything about getting rid of it.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Senator does not mean to say we have not done anything about it, I hope, because I hand him the volume——

Mr. CONNALLY. I am speaking about changing the law through enactment by the legislature. I am not speaking about court action. I am speaking about a repeal of the statute by the legislature, the statute which permits that sort of thing. The Supreme Court, as I understand it, has refused to intervene because it says that the question is a political question and not a legal question, and therefore it is not for the Court to take jurisdiction. I am not raising any question about that, but I think the committee is entitled to have my statement in justification for the condemnation which the committee made of the practice.

Mr. President, the committee reported and condemned the method of assessing State employees on their salaries. The testimony is before the Senate and the findings of the committee are here. If any Senator will read the testimony and read the report, I believe he will agree that the report of the committee is a fair reflection of the evidence.

Mr. President, in justice to the committee let me also say that the Hunter incident, to which the Senator from Louisiana referred, had to do with a $75,000 contribution. I want to be fair to the Senator from Louisiana, of course. That was not involved in the Overton campaign. That $75,000 was contributed to the campaign of a man by the name of Le Blanc, who ran for Governor in the preceding January against Governor Allen, who was nominated. Mr. Hunter appeared before the committee and gave some testimony about general conditions in Louisiana, and on cross-examination, I believe, by counsel for Senator OVERTON, he testified that he had contributed $75,000 to the campaign fund of Le Blanc, the anti-Long candidate for Governor in the January preceding. I wanted to make that point clear.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I would like to ask the Senator, since he is very fair in the inferences he has drawn—I mean to say he has not traveled afield in them—if it is not his opinion, in view of the fact that one of the witnesses gave $75,000, he would not conclude that in the State probably more than $1,000,000 was raised in the campaign?

Mr. CONNALLY. That is a question the Senator from Texas would not undertake to answer. He has no information on that except the testimony of the one witness. That testimony was developed on cross-examination. The committee was not investigating the election of Governor Allen or the contributions to Mr. Le Blanc. We were there trying to investigate campaign expenditures in the Broussard-Overton case. We opened the door pretty widely because we wanted everybody to have an opportunity to be heard. We did not restrict the evidence to the technical rules of evidence. We allowed a lot of hearsay and, of course, because of that laxity of the application of the rules of evidence much testimony came in relating to collateral matters, and that was how this particular testimony regarding the contribution to the Le Blanc campaign came into the hearing. We did not pursue it. We had all we could do to keep our investigation within the bounds of the Overton case. Our funds were about exhausted. We did not investigate the Governor's election, because the Senate had not told us to investigate that election. We were not concerned with the election of governor except insofar as it related to the primary involving Overton and Broussard.

The Senator from Louisiana made some reference to the impeachment trial. The committee did exclude testimony relating to the impeachment proceedings of the senior Senator from Louisiana when he was Governor. Those matters transpired several years prior to the Broussard-Overton contest. It was at a time when the senior Senator from Louisiana was Governor of the State. It had no bearing on and no relation whatever to the primary between the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] and former Senator Broussard. So the committee properly, as I regard it, excluded testimony as to what may have happened at Baton Rouge at the capitol in the impeachment proceedings relating to Governor LONG.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the junior Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. When the Senator from Texas makes the statement that the testimony in reference to the impeachment of Governor LONG and the testimony in reference to the campaign contributions in the gubernatorial campaign was excluded by the committee, I assume he is referring to the time when he was chairman of the committee of the last hearing, and that he will admit that in the prior hearing conducted by the committee in the spring of 1933, the impeachment of Senator LONG, the different campaigns involving Senator LONG, and the contributions which had been made to this and that campaign were thoroughly gone into.

Further, he will also admit that while he was chairman of the committee in the last hearing the matter of contributions to the Allen campaign was investigated at the instigation of himself as chairman of the committee in the examination of witnesses, and that also he went into the matter of contributions made to the Presidential campaign.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas will say, in reply to the junior Senator from Louisiana, that the Senator from Texas was not present at the hearing held in New Orleans in February of 1933 when the late Senator Howell was conducting those hearings. The Senator from Texas, however, has read all of those hearings—something over a thousand pages of printed matter—and the Senator will say that, of course, that investigation did take a very wide range. It went back to many, many years prior to the Overton-Broussard contest; but the Senator from Texas, in stating what he did a moment ago, meant to refer to the investigation which the committee recently held in New Orleans; and we did exclude, as I regard properly, evidence as to transactions several years before the election contest between Overton and Broussard. It had no relation to it.

The Senator from Louisiana asked the Senator from Texas if it is not true that the committee recently in New Orleans did investigate campaign contributions made to Governor Allen's campaign fund. The committee did, but it did only thus far:

The Senator from Texas a moment ago said that the only investigation we made of the Governor's campaign in January preceding was as it related to the primary for Senator in the September following, and that is true. I shall tell you why.

We were investigating campaign contributions to the Overton-Broussard contest. It developed in that investigation that State employees had been assessed for campaign purposes. They came upon the stand; but when most of them testified, they testified that while they had given 10 percent of their salaries in September 1932 for a political campaign fund, that contribution was really to make up a deficit in the Allen campaign of the January preceding, and for a contribution to the national Democratic deficit, and that none of that money went to the Overton campaign fund. That is how far we investigated the campaign funds in the Governor's race.

The Senator from Texas said here a few days ago that while the committee's report did not go that far, the Senator from Texas believed that some of the money which was raised by the assessment of State employees did go to the Overton campaign fund. The reason the Senator from Texas made that statement was this:

The assessments were made in September 1932. The primary was held in September 1932. The heads of departments admitted, some of them, that they had assessed their employees and collected the money. When, however, they reported under oath as to their contributions, they reported that they personally had given $1,000, $1,500, or $2,000. The Governor, I believe, reported $2,900. While there was no direct evidence on that point, the Senator from Texas in his own mind reached the conclusion that these State officers had, in fact, raised the money which they were supposed to have personally contributed by assessment of employees under their jurisdiction.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I think the Senator would be interested in knowing that the income-tax returns of these gentlemen will show that they have contributed probably 15 to 20 times that amount in politics in that State in movements of social uplift, which can easily be determined. Mr. Maestri, who is one of the men the Senator has mentioned, probably has given $100,000 to keep the schools open in that State, and probably half that much in welfare work.

The Senator has stated that the State officers assessed their employees. I desire to ask the Senator if they did not testify that it was strictly voluntary whether these employees did or did not want to give, and that not one of them would have been discharged, and that many of them did not give and were not discharged. Some gave to one, and some gave to another.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, it is true that the State officers did testify that the contributions were voluntary, and that they did not threaten employees with being discharged if they failed to contribute. On the other hand, there was some direct evidence and a great deal of other evidence that I felt warranted inferences that the employees were not acting entirely because of their voluntary urge to make a contribution.

There was only one witness, I believe, who testified positively that he had been discharged because he had not made a contribution; but men who have tried lawsuits, men who have sat in front of witnesses and watched their testimony, can arrive at beliefs without necessarily having affidavits or testimony in black and white.

The Senator from Texas wants to be fair. He said the other day, and he says now, that that is merely the belief of the Senator from Texas. I do not claim that it was established by plain, unequivocal, eyeball testimony; but the Senator from Texas concluded in his own mind that that was the source of at least several of these contributions.

I know little about Mr. Maestri or any of these other State officers. I do not care whether they go to Sunday school and pray aloud every Sunday or whether they spend their Sundays on the golf course. I am simply speaking of the facts and the record as disclosed by this investigation. They may have given every dollar of these contributions out of their own pockets, but they did assess their employees. They did get money from their employees. There is no law in Louisiana requiring them to file campaign-expenditure accounts. There is no law requiring them to report to anybody, so the committee does not know what they did with the money they got from their employees. The committee does not know, except to the extent that it was testified, that part of that money went to the Allen deficit; part of it went to the national-campaign deficit of the Democratic Party; and to what other purpose the rest went we do not pretend to say.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I hope the Senator will be brief, because I want to conclude.

Mr. LONG. I desire to ask the Senator a question. He has gotten away from his own statement here.

The Senator testified that there was no "eyeball" testimony—I am using his words—that there was any compulsion in any contribution ever received from State employees except from one witness. I intended to ask the Senator about that witness.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator has already discussed that witness. I do not want to discuss it.

Mr. LONG. Will the Senator tell me who the witness was who stated that?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not remember his name. It is in the record.

Mr. LONG. I do not remember him.

Mr. CONNALLY. Was it Webb?

Mr. LONG. Wells. Was he not discredited by the public records as a perjurer?

Mr. CONNALLY. I did not say anything about his credibility, or anything of the kind. I merely referred to the fact that one witness did testify to that effect.

Mr. LONG. I desire to ask the Senator if that man was not proved by the written record to be a perjurer.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I do not want to get into any argument with the Senator from Louisiana about the matter. The record is here. The testimony is in the record. Senators can read it. I shall say that a great deal of the testimony in this record was of a highly unsatisfactory character. Many of the witnesses did not impress the committee with their sincerity or their character.

Mr. President, I simply make these statements, I hope acting for the committee, in order that the Senate may know what the committee had in mind and what it tried to do. We have already made our report, and at the time of its presentation the Senator from Texas undertook to discuss it in some detail. I do not care at this time to consume the time of the Senate in reiteration of what was then said. I hope every Senator will read the report and will familiarize himself with what the committee really did. The committee went to New Orleans and performed a very unpleasant duty. We were harassed and hampered, but we undertook to obey the instructions of the Senate. We undertook, without any fear or favor and without any preference or any partiality to either faction or either group, to get the truth insofar as it was possible to get it, and bring it back here and lay it before the Senate. We have undertaken to do that. I believe we have done that. The record is here before the committee, and it speaks for itself.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas obtained the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LONG. I only want to take a couple of minutes.

I want to thank the Senator from Texas. I indeed thank him sincerely, because the Senator clears up a matter or two that we appreciate very much.

I want to say, Mr. President, that these men who have given to Mr. OVERTON are my friends—Mr. Maestri, Mr. Shushan, Mr. Weiss, Mr. Allen, Mr. Atkins, Mr. Noe, and several others.

I want to say that none of the names I have mentioned—and our returns will show it—have contributed, in the years we have been in politics in Louisiana, less than, I should say, fifty to one hundred thousand dollars apiece over and above every dime we ever drew out of the State treasury for the political and social legislation of Louisiana. It will not be disputed that not a single one of them gave less than that. Some have given as much as $200,000; and I do not think there will be a claim from the record that one of these gentlemen has given less in the years we have been fighting for the education and advancement of that State and for social uplift.

Only one word more:

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] was once a district attorney. I had a little jack-leg district-attorney practice myself once, Mr. President, and I was glad I did not prosecute very long, because I had got to believing honestly that every man on earth was guilty when he came up. I had a brother who was a district attorney, and I never could convince him that there was a possibility of a man being innocent of anything. He never could be made to see it.

There was a man named Wells who maybe did testify that he was fired because he did not give anything. He was the only man who did so, after any number of men had testified that they had not ever given anything and had never been threatened with being fired. We took up the case of that man Wells, and I do not think the Senator from Texas will dispute at all that we proved him by the written records to be the most complete perjurer that ever was proved on earth. He could not be believed on oath.

The great trouble with my friend from Texas was that when Wells testified, and once it hit his mind, he was very much like the railroad lawyer who was defending a cow-case suit; he honestly believed that the cow had tried to hook the engine off the track, and no amount of evidence was going to convince him to the contrary.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] will address the Senate on the subject of the St. Lawrence-Great Lakes Waterway Treaty, and I intend at this time to claim the attention of the Senate for only a few minutes.

It seemed to me, Mr. President, respecting the subject that has just been discussed, that the select committee of the Senate has had a very difficult duty to perform; that it has encountered numerous impediments and embarrassments; and that the committee has discharged its duty with fidelity and ability.

I now desire, Mr. President, for a few moments to discuss another subject.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HEBERT in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Hebert	Reed
Ashurst	Couzens	Johnson	Reynolds
Austin	Cutting	Keyes	Robinson, Ark.
Bachman	Davis	King	Robinson, Ind.
Bailey	Dickinson	La Follette	Russell
Bankhead	Dieterich	Lewis	Schall
Barbour	Dill	Logan	Sheppard
Barkley	Duffy	Lonergan	Shipstead
Black	Erickson	Long	Steiwer
Bone	Fess	McAdoo	Stephens
Borah	Fletcher	McCarran	Thomas, Utah
Brown	Frazier	McGill	Thompson
Bulkley	George	McKellar	Townsend
Bulow	Gibson	McNary	Trammell
Byrd	Goldsborough	Murphy	Tydings
Byrnes	Gore	Neely	Vandenberg
Capper	Hale	Norris	Van Nuys
Caraway	Harrison	O'Mahoney	Wagner
Carey	Hastings	Overton	Walcott
Connally	Hatch	Patterson	Wheeler
Coolidge	Hatfield	Pittman	White
Copeland	Hayden	Pope

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the following Senators are necessarily detained from the Senate: The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] by reason of illness, and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] because of immediate necessity.

I also desire to announce that the following Senators are necessarily detained from the Senate: The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

SPEECH OF OGDEN L. MILLS TO KANSAS REPUBLICANS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, yesterday was observed in Kansas as the seventy-third anniversary of statehood for the State of Kansas. On the occasion of the celebration the former Secretary of the Treasury, Ogden L. Mills, delivered a political address that has been widely published and commented upon throughout the country.

The address of Mr. Mills to Kansas Republicans is notable in that it indicates his candidacy for the Presidential nomination on the Republican ticket and the platform upon which he expects to run.

Mr. Mills bewails what he calls "the death of liberty" under the Roosevelt administration, denounces the President's monetary policy, and, to the astonishment of the political world, repudiates the tariff policy of the Hoover administration, of which he was the chief adviser, and advocates tariff reform.

With respect to liberty, all social progress—one might add all political control—implies a measure of sacrifice on the part of the public for the common good. So long as happiness and comfort among the people are promoted, there can be little likelihood of the destruction of liberty in the sense which Americans have been taught to adore it and have come to understand it.

There are, indeed, some who believe that antihoarding statutes violate the rights of the citizen guaranteed by the Constitution. Public opinion strongly supports the effort to compel the miser to open his chest and bring his hoardings into use. My reply to the assertion by Mr. Mills that liberty has been slain during the present administration is that, insofar as the masses of our population are concerned, there is far more liberty now than was enjoyed by our citizens generally during the time when he stood close to the seat of power and whispered to the head of the Government the devious course to be taken to strengthen and to build up privilege and monopoly at the sacrifice of the common citizen's liberty and welfare.

The new monetary policy contemplating the reduction of the gold-dollar content and the stabilization of exchange has been the subject of discussion in this Chamber throughout last week—a discussion which culminated in the passage of the monetary bill by a vote of 3 to 1.

Mr. Mills was the head of the Treasury and the chief financial adviser of President Hoover, whose administration will go down in history as a miserable failure primarily because those relied upon to guide the President either lacked the wisdom or the courage to suggest or do anything to stay or check the forces of business depression, financial bankruptcy, and ruin. Admittedly no single measure can be expected to prove itself a cure-all in such a time as this. While Mr. Mills and his associates, who lately were running the Government, permitted a complete loss of confidence to occur and were entirely helpless to bring about recovery, the Roosevelt administration has accomplished such a reversal as in the general opinion means the gradual return of prosperity. While condemning the measures through which business revival is being brought about, Mr. Mills makes only one constructive proposal—and only one, as I comprehend his address—a proposal which implies repudiation on his part of the principles for which he has stood throughout a long political career.

Let me not be misunderstood. When one discovers his error, it is mainly to correct it; when one recognizes that he has been in the wrong, he deserves credit for admitting it.

His one remedy is modification of international policies and of tariff policies so as to provide a mutual exchange of commodities manifestly necessary to the continued and healthful growth of our export trade.

I read a brief extract from the New York Times of January 30, 1934, as follows:

> We will have, said Mr. Mills, to abandon the present policy of isolation and intense nationalism and to some extent modify recent tariff practices.

From the New York American of the same date and from the Washington Post of this date I quote what purports to be the language of Mr. Mills on this new tariff policy for the Republican Party:

Modification of tariff policy is necessary if this is to be accomplished, Mr. Mills said, adding, "This may sound strange coming from an orthodox Republican, but I never understood any sound system of protection, based on the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad to mean the erection of impassable barriers, the destruction of our commerce with the rest of the world, and the sacrifice of the efficient farmer to save the inefficient manufacturer."

Mr. President, that is indeed a strange doctrine to his party associates upon which Mr. Mills has announced impliedly his candidacy for the Republican Presidential nomination. It is a matter of record and of history that during the administration in which he served as chief economic and political adviser a tariff policy was adopted and maintained which prohibited substantially the import of foreign goods into the United States, on the theory that such policy was consistent with sound protective doctrine, and now he has announced that he stands on the platform of reciprocal trade arrangements approved by former President McKinley and more recently advocated by the present great President of the United States.

Our President does not regard change in tariff policy as the sole measure necessary for the correction of the evils from which our people are suffering, but he does regard it as an essential and consistent part of the program that has been carried forward for some months intended to promote national recovery. It is surprising to find that Mr. Mills places himself in the attitude of denouncing and criticising the domestic policies advanced by President Roosevelt to promote national recovery and relies upon one, and only one, of the international policies which have been advanced by this administration.

In proposing a modification of tariff policy in order to permit mutual exchange of commodities between this and foreign countries and to assure the growth of our export trade, Mr. Mills is standing in the shadow—and is almost invisible in the shadow—of our great leader, whom he refuses to recognize, but who long ago announced his belief in the necessity for reciprocal trade arrangements to restore the commerce which Mr. Mills helped to destroy through a tariff policy of which he apparently has grown ashamed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in fairness to Mr. Mills, it seems to me that the speech which has just been discussed should appear in the RECORD and I ask unanimous consent that the speech, as printed in full in this morning's New York Herald Tribune, may be thus printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection to the request, Mr. President. I think the more publicity which is given to the speech, the less effect the speech will have. [Laughter.]

There being no objection, the speech of Mr. Mills was order to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune, Tuesday, Jan. 30, 1934]

FULL TEXT OF OGDON L. MILLS' ADDRESS AT DINNER OF KANSAS DAY CLUB AT TOPEKA—RISING PRICES, FALLING OUTPUT HELD OBSTACLES TO RECOVERY—FORMER TREASURY HEAD DEPLORES POLICY OF "SPENDING WAY OUT OF DEPRESSION", BUT NATION HAVING EMBARKED UPON IT, HE HOPES FOR ITS SUCCESS

TOPEKA, January 29.—The complete text of Ogden L. Mills' address on "Where Do We Go From Here?" as delivered before the Kansas Day Club here tonight follows:

My fellow Republicans, these are stirring times. Great issues are gradually taking shape which will divide men as deeply and as uncompromisingly as any of the great issues of the past. In their decision the Republican Party has an immense responsibility, for surely the party which during wellnigh three quarters of a century, for all but 17 years, has governed this Nation has the vigor and constructive ability to develop a program based on time-tested principles to meet the new conditions of the day.

OPEN DISCUSSION AND POPULAR GOVERNMENT

As the minority and opposition party, not now responsible for the conduct of the Government, our immediate function is to see that all important policies are subjected to such scrutiny, discussion, and consideration as will permit the people to form a just appreciation of their wisdom and desirability. Open discussion and honest criticism are essential to the functioning of democratic institutions. In our country up to the present time this commonplace saying has been taken for granted. Lately, however, it has assumed a new and all-important meaning. First, because, as we shall shortly see, free discussion and an informed public opinion are incompatible with the planned and managed national life which seems to be the ultimate objective of the present administration, and secondly, because it is apparent that even now there is a willingness to adopt the most sweeping measures without that consideration which would permit the forming and expression of public opinion and an obvious impatience with any criticism. We are witnessing revolutionary changes in our governmental and economic structures without popular mandate. We are being presented with a series of accomplished acts, the consequences of which in the future life of the Nation are incalculable, and in the name of national solidarity in time of stress the voice of the people is afforded no opportunity to become audible.

Under these circumstances silence is not a virtue, and, while mere partisan obstruction would be intolerable, it is the duty of the minority to insist that important measures shall not be adopted until they have been subjected to the tests of critical analysis and open discussion, unhampered by intimidation of any kind, to the end that public opinion may be informed and the people themselves afforded the opportunity to reach a sound judgment.

SUSPENSION OF CONSTITUTION

Popular government means faithful performance of the public will. The public will finds temporary expression in legislative and executive acts intended to deal with immediate problems, but the permanent will of the American people is embodied in the Constitution. They, and they alone, can change it. Until amended—and we have recently seen how promptly it can be amended in response to popular demand—any infraction or suspension of the fundamental law is a challenge to popular sovereignty. In all of its long history, no provision has ever been made for the suspension of the Constitution in time of emergency. This must unquestionably be due to the recognition that one of its most precious values is that it stands as a safeguard of our rights and liberties in times of stress.

If, then, the Congress and the President, by a mere declaration of an emergency, can, in effect, suspend the limitations of the fundamental law, it must be apparent that constitutional government, as understood throughout our history, ceases to exist and that the Federal Government may be transformed overnight from a government of limited powers to one of unlimited authority over the life of every individual citizen.

GOVERNMENT BY MEN WITHOUT LIMITATIONS OF LAW

Not only have we witnessed what I believe is an unconstitutional attempt to extend the powers of the Federal Government beyond the limits contemplated by the basic law but the exercise of the enormously expanded authority has been vested in the hands of a single individual. So that the citizen is deprived not only of the protection of the fundamental law but is subjected to arbitrary Executive action freed from the restrictions of legislative control. The abdication by the Congress and the delegation of powers to the Executive are in effect creating a government of men without any practical limitations of law.

The effect of the monetary legislation of last spring, authorizing the President to issue $3,000,000,000 of greenbacks, to debase the gold content of the dollar, to fix the weight of the silver dollar, and to provide for the free and unlimited coinage of silver, gave one man the right to alter as he sees fit the national monetary unit of value and so directly to affect the economic situation of every family and individual in the land, altering the purchasing power of salaries and wages, the value of the products of farm, factory, and mine, and of the investments, savings, and insurance policies of all. We have to turn back many centuries to the days of absolute autocrats to find so great a power over the lives of millions of men lodged in the hands of a single fallible human being.

It is daily becoming more apparent that through the system of codes the Federal Executive is attempting to establish detailed bureaucratic control over all business and industry, large and small, and over the economic activities of the individual citizen. It is true that in the first instance all American industries are invited to form their own codes; but they have no value unless approved by the President, and when approved they apply with the force of law even to those who have refused to sign. Moreover, the President may change the code at any time after it has been adopted, any violation of a code by any individual is made a crime, and the right of the President to refuse a license vests in him the power to destroy, even without resort to the vicious policy of boycotting the business of any man who refuses to comply with the arbitrary rules laid down by the Central Government.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERTY AND PLANNED ECONOMY

When you sweep aside the glittering tinsel, the fact is that the Federal Government is today in effect telling the mechanic in California how many hours he may work and what he may earn, the producer in Texas at what price he may sell his product, the manufacturer in New England what additions and improvements he may make to his factory, and the storekeeper in Kansas on what basis he may conduct his business. If the planners have their way, how long will it be before each farmer has to take out a license before cultivating his own farm and be compelled to operate under the regulation and supervision of Federal inspectors? These actions definitely violate the letter and spirit of the Constitution. They abolish the sovereignties of the States. They make of a government of limited powers one of unlimited authority over the lives of us all. They destroy America's greatest contribution to the cause of human freedom—the guaranty of individual rights against the arbitrary power of the Government.

This Government was founded on the principle that the individual has the inalienable right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. "Inalienable" means that these cannot be taken from him by the power of Government. Liberty, as we have understood it in this country, has been the liberty of the individual to pursue the common callings of mankind, whether in farm, factory, mine, or mercantile establishment, as he saw fit, so long as he didn't transgress the rights of others; and the police power vested in the State has been, and is, adequate to prevent transgression.

But if the Federal Government, acting through a centralized bureaucracy, may reach out to the farthest corners of this immense land and regulate the daily life and occupations of the individual, liberty as we have understood it is dead and a Nation of freemen will have become an aggregation of regimented subjects.

The whole conception of a planned and directed national economy is destructive of the most fundamental principles upon which the American system rests. It cannot be carried out unless the central Government be vested with complete and arbitrary authority over the actions of individuals and the right to regiment them.

Mr. Walter Lippmann, one of the administration's ablest supporters but not an advocate of a planned economy, in a most illuminating article has pictured the conditions essential to successful planning. He says: "Nobody honestly believes that planning can be carried out consistently among freemen—that is to say, among men who have their own plans for their own lives—or that planning, in the full sense of the term, is possible where discussion is free; or that a social order can be managed if those who compose it are not regimented. In a planned society no liberty is tolerable which would delay or hinder the Executive. To manage a whole social order according to a central plan, human behavior must be predictable. The planner must know what men will produce and what they will consume; the only way to make sure of knowing this is to regiment men as producers and to ration them as consumers. For you can confidently predict how men will behave only when you have power to order their behavior. Thus a completely planned economy calls for an authoritarian state."

There is the unvarnished truth. In this Utopia to which the President is leading us, neither free discussion nor liberty will be tolerable; men will no longer be free in the sense that they may plan their own lives, but are to be regimented, directed, and ruled by an all-powerful state.

Our ancestors gave their lives to make the individual the master of his own destiny and the state the servant rather than the master of the people. The unexampled growth, progress, and well-being of our people over a period of 150 years, and the wealth, resources, organization, standard of living, and civilization of this, today, the most powerful nation on earth, testify to the soundness of their principles and to the wisdom and foresight with which they built.

Are we to destroy this inheritance and to tear up the charter of our liberties in the vain hope that a small group of men, selected through political processes, may direct with greater sureness and foresight the life of the Nation than the people themselves? Where is the creative impulse, which originates only in the individual, to come from? Granted the highest wisdom in the selection of these directors, where are they to find the necessary wisdom, knowledge, experience, and vision? The truth is that there exists in the world today no man or group of men who can visualize, much less direct, the countless small streams that unite to form the mighty river of American economic life.

The emergency measures are accomplished facts. Whether we approve or not, there is little that can be done. But if the effort is made, as it will be, to make a regimented economy a permanent feature of our national life, our party should resist to the utmost. We are not ready to admit that, with the spread of knowledge, the rapid dissemination of information and the character and intellectual vigor of our people, they are unable to govern themselves so as to cope successfully with the new conditions of the day, but must submit to the role of the governed.

THE N.R.A.

I would not have you infer that I am opposed to the National Recovery Act and all its works. I am not. I am only opposed to its extension far beyond what I believe its original conception was, or, at least, ought to have been. The idea that where industries are genuinely national in scope they might, through trade associations, adopt, subject to the approval by the Federal Government, regulations for their own guidance, intended to eliminate unfair and unsound practices and to promote progress and sound development, has much to commend it. But this is something very different from the wholesale attempt to reorganize business and industry of the country by substituting detailed bureaucratic control in the place of regulated individual control. It is perfectly possible to preserve a free economic system based on the maintenance of competition, and at the same time provide that business and industry may check abuses and promote progress through the formulation of policies for their own guidance, subject to Government regulation based upon law. Surely, some way can be found of harmonizing the self-expression and liberty of the individual with the welfare of all.

RECOVERY THROUGH SPENDING

Turning now to the economic phases of the administration's program, two clean-cut conceptions stand out: That the increase of consumer purchasing power through an enormous distribution of funds and an increase in prices brought about by monetary manipulations are the keystones to recovery. By spreading work and increasing the hourly rate of compensation the N.R.A. contemplates putting more money into the hands of a great number of individual consumers, while through the Agricultural Adjustment Act, Public Works Administration, and the Civil Works Administration the Federal Government will distribute monthly well over $1,000,000,000. In the meantime monetary manipulation is relied on to force prices up.

These immense sums cannot be derived from national income. They must, therefore, be borrowed by making free use of the national credit. This means that as a nation, for the time being, we are no longer self-supporting. Just like the individual living on borrowed money, we are mortgaging our future. It is an uneconomic process, but, while it continues, it produces an appearance of business prosperity, stimulating as it does an increased demand for goods; and, with basic forces the world over working toward recovery, it may help lead to a resumption of normal economic activities.

It is, however, perfectly clear that the process cannot be continued indefinitely. There is a limit to the national credit, and we cannot, short of inviting disaster, borrow up to the very point of exhaustion. At some stage or stages, therefore, a transition must be effected, and the Nation once more become self-supporting. We must get back to the position where we can say with President Cleveland that "it is not the business of the Government to support the people; it is the business of the people to support the Government."

Again, it is idle to debate the wisdom or lack of wisdom of this attempt to spend our way out of the depression. We are definitely committed to this course, and we must now devote our best thoughts and efforts to make the venture successful.

The problem resolves itself into a race between business recovery and the exhaustion of the national credit. It follows that all unnecessary drains on the Federal Treasury should be avoided, and that all avoidable obstacles to recovery should be eliminated.

There is one aspect of the situation that cannot fail to make us thoughtful. Let me quote the statement of a highly intelligent observer that has recently come to my attention:

"For the first time in history a great nation has volunteered to assume the economic burdens of all its citizens.

"It says to its people that if you have become tired in this long depression and find your load too heavy, bring it to us and we will take care of it and of you. If you are a home owner and cannot meet your mortgage payments, we will take over the debt on easy terms. If you are a farmer in danger of losing your place, we will assume the mortgage. If your crops have been selling at too low a price, we will pay you to raise smaller crops. If you are a business man and weary with trying to meet competition, we will regulate that competition so it will not burden you. If you are a railroad, we will lend you money to meet your bond maturities. If you are a bank, we will supply you with capital. If you are an individual out of work, we will give you a job. If you are heavily in debt, we will alter your money so as to make that debt easy to pay.

"No such offers as these have ever before been made by a responsible government. Many times in past history similarly sweeping assurances have been put forward by religious leaders seeking converts, but their promises have concerned the future life instead of this one. These present offers are immediate and tangible, and they are substantial in convincingly real dollars. The administration is not only presenting offers and giving assurances, it is making good on its promises. While it continues to do so, it will receive the support of the millions who are the direct beneficiaries of its philanthropy. Public faith is being bought with public works."

If that is a reasonably accurate picture—and it seems to me that it is—are we not in danger of creating a whole series of vested interests that cannot be subsidized indefinitely from the public purse and yet may politically become so powerful as to make it difficult for public officers to resist their demands? Here, again, the time element is all-important, for the longer the citizen looks to the Government for help, the more reluctant he becomes to resume once more the habit of self-reliance.

The dangers are there and are unavoidable. They can, however, be minimized by scrutinizing every expenditure, by limiting them to what is strictly necessary to carrying out the program, by emphasizing at all times its emergency character, and by coordinating all efforts and sparing none to reach the real objective—the resumption of normal economic activity within the limit of time available.

The minority has here a real duty to perform. It must steadfastly resist any tendency to weakness on the part of the Government. It must oppose public squandering. It must constantly remind the administration and the public of the true objective. It must relentlessly press the administration to remove existing obstacles to recovery.

RISING PRICES AND FALLING PRODUCTION

The administration's apparent faith in the value of a rise in prices per se, even if brought about by artificial means, such as monetary manipulation, may well constitute one of these obstacles. While a rise in prices may in some cases help debtors, and a rise in prices of agricultural commodities is essential in the interest of a better-balanced price structure, a general rise in prices which tends to restrict industrial production is clearly undesirable and opposed to the goal sought to be attained by other means.

From this standpoint, certain features of the N.R.A. are definite obstacles to recovery. Under a normal process of recovery, we would have expected to witness first increased production, distribution, and employment, followed by the reappearance of profits, an expansion of short-term credit, the rebirth of a capital market and of capital expenditures, and a gradual rise in prices, costs, and wages.

The essential features of this process are that increased volume of production and employment are attained before the increase in wages, costs, and prices takes place. Under the N.R.A., wages, costs, and prices rise first, and increased volume of production is expected to follow. Unless the increased production does come, failure is inevitable, and to date the evidence indicates that the National Recovedy Act itself has failed to stimulate greater volume. For instance, one of the conclusions reached by the National Industrial Conference Board as a result of a survey of New England industries conducted in conjunction with the New England Council was that "the consensus of opinion is that increased labor costs have increased sales prices, diminished production, and increased inventory."

Again, there is no reason why the Public Works Administration and the Civil Works Administration, whose primary duty is to take care of the unemployed, should pay wages so high as to give serious competition to private industry, or so stimulate the prices of materials as to discourage private construction. After all, we cannot afford to create a situation where it will be impossible gradually to transfer men from the Government emergency pay roll to normal private pay rolls.

Whether expenditures of the Federal Government, running over a billion a month, so distributed as in the first instance to increase consumer purchasing power, will be sufficient to overcome the handicap of increased costs and prices and uncertainty, and result in an increased production of goods, is all-important. But it is not the whole story.

THE HEAVY INDUSTRIES

These efforts are directed almost exclusively to stimulating the production of consumption goods. Assuming that they are successful, the further question arises as to whether the movement will in time spread to the production of durable goods. This is perhaps the crux of the problem of recovery. The so-called "heavy industries" today and throughout the depression have been the weak spot in our economic system. Until they recover, general recovery appears to be impossible.

How important they are in our national economy has been strongly brought out by Mr. Leonard Ayres in a book recently published. He points out that, whereas in 1929 we produced consumption goods valued at about $30,000,000,000, the value of durable goods produced reached the colossal total of $40,000,000,000; that throughout the depression the production of consumption goods was relatively stable, while the production of durable goods suffered a fearful collapse; and that even today the overwhelming majority of the unemployed in industry is composed of those who earn their livelihood in the production of so-called "durable" goods.

THE CAPITAL MARKET

While, from the standpoint of the Federal Budget the amount to be devoted to public works is large, these expenditures contrasted with the sums normally expended by the Nation in the way of capital improvements of all kinds are not. Here, again, while Government expenditures may in the first instance prime the engine, unless they are followed by a genuine flow of private capital into permanent improvements of all kinds, general recovery may be indefinitely delayed. After 4 years of the most severe restrictions there is every reason to believe that a genuine need exists for all manner of capital expenditures, including replacements, improvements, and new construction. Nor can there be much doubt that, given favorable conditions, an ample supply of long-term credit would be available.

OUR UNCERTAIN DOLLAR

The Government would enormously enhance the prospect of an early recovery if it would remove the uncertainties that at present deter the business man from making long-term commitments and the investor from tying up his funds in long-time obligations. The chief of these are the uncertainty as to the Government's monetary policy, and now the preempting of the money market by the Federal Government.

I am not one of those who believe it was either necessary or desirable to abandon the gold standard. I look with dismay upon the repudiation of its obligations by the Government of the United States. I have no faith in monetary manipulation as a wholesome means of raising prices. But I am enough of a realist to face accomplished facts and not to indulge in futile recriminations. The question is not the rightness or wrongness of past policies, but, given existing circumstances, what is a sound future policy?

Uncertainty as to the ultimate value of the dollar destroys confidence, hinders business decisions, commitments, and activity, inhibits credit expansion, and brings about a condition of stagnation in the capital market, for no investor cares to advance funds in complete ignorance of the value of the unit with which he will be repaid.

Almost anything is better than this uncertainty. This is all the more true in view of a Budget now apparently beyond control and a deficit of such proportions as in itself to constitute a threat to the integrity of our currency.

The President's recent message, while in some respects reassuring, raises new doubts and fears. Those of us who had hoped for a definitive devaluation of the dollar and a stabilization of its exchange value, are again disappointed. We are still confronted with all of the uncertainties of a managed currency. It is only too evident that we have not reached a terminal in this long journey through the mazes of monetary experimentation, but only a way-station. There is still much to come.

In this message, nowhere do we find a definite commitment as to the ultimate value of the dollar. On the contrary, the President speaks of a gold dollar "of such weight and fineness as may be established from time to time."

Moreover, since even when the plan goes into effect, gold is only to be paid out at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, we are in effect to remain on an inconvertible paper basis, though ostensibly on a gold bullion basis.

The Government is to take over all the gold at present held by the central banks, in accordance with, and as the President expresses it, "the inherent right of government to issue currency and to be the sole custodian and owner of the base or reserve of precious metals underlying that currency." He adds: "With this goes the prerogative of government to determine from time to time the extent and nature of the metallic reserve."

In the absence of definite explanation, if this means anything, it means that there is an ultimate intent to have the Treasury issue currency, the free gold obtained to serve as a reserve against such a currency issue. Otherwise, why take over all the gold? Why not just that portion representing profit resulting from devaluation? Assuming that the free gold amounts to some $4,000,000,000, and that the administration might determine that a 25-percent reserve is adequate, $16,000,000,000 of currency could be issued. It is difficult to escape the suspicion that the administration has some such thought in mind as a means of financing the immense deficits that it is incurring. Since the currency so issued would not be in response to the demands of business and commerce, but to meet current Government expenditures, it would mean inflation of the crudest kind, disguised by a thin coating of gilt and silver.

But this is not the whole story. One of the most admirable features of our Federal Reserve System, the establishment of which constitutes one of the great constructive achievements of the Wilson administration, was the provision for an elastic currency, expanding and contracting in accordance with the business and commercial needs of the country, as contrasted with the rigid and inelastic monetary system of the past, and the placing of the control of the volume of money and credit in the hands of central banks operated under Government supervision, but free from political control. The program outlined in the President's message clearly contemplates the impairment of these two central features of a sound monetary system. For an elastic currency he would substitute a redundant and inelastic currency. For the nonpolitical control of the central banks he would substitute the political control of the Treasury.

Such a prospect is hardly reassuring.

AGRICULTURE

Finally we come to the problem of agriculture. Certain salient facts must be recognized to understand the nature of the problem. The difficulties are unquestionably due to an increase in production, a restriction of importing markets, and a gradual accumulation of stocks.

For instance, the world wheat supply (except of Russia) increased from a pre-war average of about 3,000,000,000 bushels to an average of 3,600,000,000 bushels during 1926–30. During the period 1921–25 the average yearly production of the four chief exporting countries increased by 361,000,000 bushels; and even after European production came back to something like normal, these countries increased their production by an additional 220,000,000 bushels during the 1926–30 period. In the United States production increased from a pre-war average of about 690,000,000 bushels to over 880,000,000 during the period 1928–31.

In the meanwhile, first, as a result of a return to more normal conditions, and later, because of nationalistic tendencies, the markets of importing countries were being steadily narrowed by all manner of restrictions. Grains and animal products were particularly hard hit.

If we exclude cotton (exports of which were at the pre-war level), the volume of agricultural exports from this country in 1932–33 were but 64 percent of the pre-war volume. In 1932 we exported only 32,000,000 bushels of wheat, as compared with an average of 110,000,000 during the 1909–13 period and 190,000,000 average during 1921–25.

Wheat imports of France, Germany, and Italy fell from 232,000,000 bushels in 1928–29 to 47,000,000 in 1932–33.

Exports of pork have fallen from an average of 399,000,000 pounds in the period 1910–14 to 111,000,000 in 1932–33, while exports of lard have fallen from an average of 722,000,000 pounds in the years 1926–30 to 560,000,000 in 1932–33.

Our exports of tobacco to Europe have fallen from 347,000,000 pounds in 1924–25 to 224,000,000 in 1930–31.

If these products, including fruit and cotton, of which we produce substantial surpluses over and above our own needs, are dammed up in our own markets, prices fall, farmers are driven to the more intensive production of those products wholly consumed at home, and the price of these in turn is driven below the point of profitable production. Today, with the exception of cotton, all of our agricultural export products are suffering severely from foreign restrictions.

The facts speak for themselves. It is clear that we must produce less and we must sell more.

I am not inclined, therefore, to be too critical of the administration's program as strictly emergency measures. Conditions may well have justified both bonus payments and the debt-relief program. But, looking to the future, I have no confidence that a premium payment will reduce production, and I am sure that a billion-dollar processing tax will curtail consumption. Even today the Government reports indicate that the reduction in winter-wheat acreage is disappointing. On the other hand, the production of flour for domestic consumption during the 4 months of July to November showed a falling off of over 11 percent.

Nor am I ready to accept the intolerable hardships involved in adjusting agricultural production to the needs of the domestic market. A practically completely self-contained and controlled national economy can doubtless be attained, but only at a frightful social cost and by enforced migrations of millions of people from their homes and an all-around lowering of the standard of living.

I prefer to turn my attention to the possibilities, among others, of recovering lost markets and to the stimulation of increased consumption not only through the restoration of purchasing power at home but through the promotion of a greater prosperity and a higher standard of living the world over.

Granted that the difficulties are enormous and that much time and patience will be required, this is even more true of the self-containment program. We will have to abandon the present policy of isolation and intense nationalism and to some extent modify recent tariff practices. This may sound strange, coming from an orthodox Republican; but I have never understood that a sound system of protection, based on the difference of the cost of production at home and abroad, if intelligently applied, means the erection of impassable tariff barriers, the destruction of our commerce with the rest of the world, and the sacrifice of the efficient farmer to save the inefficient manufacturer.

I am prepared to take my stand with a great Republican President, President McKinley, who, in his last speech, delivered in Buffalo just before his assassination, said: "A system which provides a mutual exchange of commodities is manifestly essential to the continued and healthful growth of our export trade. We must not repose in the fancied security that we can forever sell everything and buy little or nothing."

A POLITICAL CREED

In conclusion, let me summarize this altogether too long speech by stating some articles of a brief political creed:

I believe in a free press, open discussion, and honest criticism as essential elements in the preservation of democratic institutions.

I am opposed to revolutionary change without popular mandate, and to government by men without any practical limitations of law.

I believe in our Federal form of government, with its system of State and local responsibilities, as contrasted with a centralized bureaucracy; and the powers, rights, and duties of the Congress, as opposed to Executive dictatorship.

I am opposed to the attempt to reorganize the business and industry of the country by substituting detailed bureaucratic control in the place of regulated individual control.

I believe in an economic system based on individual freedom, and the maintenance of competition, under legal provision by which business and industry may check abuses and promote progress through the formulation of policies for their own guidance, subject to Government regulation based upon law.

I believe that an unassailable national credit and a sound and stable currency are indispensable foundations of national prosperity.

I believe in the future the hardships of unemployment must be mitigated by the development of a sound system or systems of insurance.

I believe that the present destructive world economic war should be brought to an end by cooperation with other nations, looking to the stabilization of currencies, the establishment of a common medium of exchange, and the promotion of commerce and trade through the reopening of markets that are essential to the welfare of our agricultural industry.

If, in the formulation of national policies, these principles are steadfastly adhered to, I can maintain with undiminished strength my faith in the promise of American life.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S BIRTHDAY

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, today is an anniversary which is not observed in one State alone but which is being observed throughout the United States. It is the anniversary of the birthday of President Roosevelt. The New York American, under date of January 30, 1934, contains this statement:

The Nation comes today on dancing feet to celebrate the fifty-second birthday of its President.

And it brings kind words for its leader, a hope for posterity, and gifts for crippled children.

There are no boundaries but oceans for the celebration, for each Middlesex village and farm, each cabin in the cotton and the ranch house west of the Pecos will have tributes today for him who lived to bring hope to a forlorn people.

There are also some lines in the same publication which are deemed worthy of repeating here:

Out of the marts, the mines, the mills,
From rolling farms and snowy hills
There comes a cheerful voice that fills
The land from shore to shore;
A nation lays its cares away,
Forgetting skies that once were gray,
To celebrate your natal day
And wish you countless more.

Watching the storm clouds drifting by,
A Nation stands with reverent eye,
Breathing a hope that God on high
Will guide your hand aright;
And as the tempest fades away
A hundred million mortals pray
That they will always bless the day
You first beheld the light.

—George E. Phair.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I should like at this point to tender a pertinent resolution which the able Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] requested me to present at the conclusion of his very commendable address. I therefore submit the resolution which I was requested by the Senator from Arkansas to tender, and which I take great pleasure in participating in tendering. I read:

Senate Resolution 160

Resolved, etc., That the Senate expresses its congratulation to the President of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt, upon enjoying his fifty-second birthday and expresses the wish for continuous health and beneficial service to his country in the years to follow. The Senate expresses its admiration and praise of the courage of the citizen, Franklin D. Roosevelt, in fighting and overcoming obstruction and discouragement and by his example enabling the sufferers of misfortune to enjoy hope and refuge.

Mr. President, I tender the resolution which I have just read and ask for its immediate consideration and adoption by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution submitted by him. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered, and unanimously agreed to.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S RECOVERY PROGRAM

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, in connection with the remarks made by me a few moments ago, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a brief article by Mr. Joseph Tumulty.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KEEP FAITH WITH ROOSEVELT

By Joseph P. Tumulty

In this crisis confronting our country, we have no choice but to support and cooperate with the President. There is no alternative. Either Franklin Roosevelt and his program succeed, or we fail. Success means happiness and prosperity; failure means ruin.

What can we do to help? We can put back of the President's program a force as irresistible as the tides of the ocean, the force of faith and the force of love of country in over a hundred million people. God save me from the gloomy, too logical man, the hapless and hopeless disciples of H. G. Wells and Dean Inge who predict the end of all things by 1960. They are the Doubting Thomases who, sitting at a ball game, believe that every game ends with the defeat of their favorite team in the third inning. They are the Gloomy Hamlets who sit by your bedside and, with direful forebodings, exclaim, "You can't recover." Through the generations, Doubting Thomases have been the stumbling blocks to progress. In the days of George Washington, they watched the retreat at Long Island and, though admiring Washington, declared the battle was an ignoble and futile thing.

By his faith in everlasting things the real American is able to fight the tides of adversity with courage and intrepidity. The hour of test is here. Unlike the demands made upon his courage and fortitude during the critical days of war—he is not asked to carry a gun, to die on a sun-bleached battlefield, or cross a submarine-infested sea. Now he must fight the twin monsters of depression: Hunger and poverty. What real man would refuse to enlist under such a banner in company with Uncle Sam and Franklin Roosevelt?

The critics of the National Recovery Administration say it is an untried thing, an experiment with chaos around the corner. These same critics are the erstwhile exponents of what before the terrible days of 1929 was characterized by them as a new era, with prosperity always in our midst.

It is true that we are now off the beaten path; that in sheer desperation (when there appeared no other way) we have blazed a trail through the wilderness to seek new avenues of opportunity. The first thing we did was to recover our own freedom, to blot out of our Federal Constitution a mere matter of police regulation that ought never to have found lodgment there. We have freed ourselves from the intolerance of minorities and reasserted our right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness by repealing the eighteenth amendment. The handsome byproduct of this action is that we have strengthened the National Treasury and buttressed it against the storms that lie ahead.

We are proceeding to rebuild American business upon a sounder, more ethical basis, substituting the Golden Rule for the rule of gold. We are at last recognizing the right of men, women, and children to a living wage. We begin to feel that human labor is more than a commodity—a thing of flesh and blood. Who has so grand a gift of prophesy that he can say the past was a success and the program for the future is a failure?

In the very old days of 1492 when Columbus was battering at palace doors to persuade Ferdinand and Isabella to place their imprimatur upon his plans, skeptics and critics then, as now, were berating and trying to knock down the things that Columbus stood for, which his genius was later to build to an unmeasured monument. The scientists and the logicians of Columbus' day were against his plan. The earth was flat and Columbus was wrong. He was merely a seeker after a Utopia. Those doubting Thomases hoped to laugh Columbus' new idea to scorn, but Columbus was undeterred. Yet there came a time when Columbus, too, had to give way temporarily. Even the compass which was his guide became no longer the servant of his genius.

In a sketch of Columbus I recently read the following: "Columbus, disconcerted by the immensity of space, of which he had reached the boundary, abandoned the route he had traced on the map and followed the flight of the birds, feeling that the instinct of the birds would not direct them all toward one point if they did not see earth there."

This is what we are doing in America today through the activities of the N.R.A. We have turned away from the old charts and are following the flight of the birds, praying that through instinct and faith in new leadership we will be guided in the right direction.

At this critical hour, we are called upon to save a Nation's life by surrendering something ourselves. The word "surrender" means "to give something; to yield a little to gain much." To whom do we build our monuments? To the rich man who, living on a lonely promontory of selfishness, lived only for himself? No. To whom do we build our monuments? We build them in memory of those who gave out of the largess of their own generous natures to help others.

To those who stand on the sidelines hurling stones of mean criticism and petty fault-finding through the White House windows let me say that this is the time for patience and tolerance on the part of everyone. No permanent prosperity can be built in a day. That man is foolish, indeed, who seeks to lift himself by tearing the President down. Let those who criticize and find fault with the President visit the statue of Edmund Burke in Washington and read these immortal lines written at its base, "Magnanimity is the essence of great politics."

Sometime, in a better, happier day, our politicians and statesmen will learn that the road to distinction lies along this path.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

PHILADELPHIA MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD newspaper articles and editorial comments from the Philadelphia Public Ledger, the Philadelphia Inquirer, the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, and the Philadelphia Record in the matter of the transactions of the Philadelphia Mail Steamship Co. with the Government.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Philadelphia (Pa.) Public Ledger, Jan. 25, 1934]

MR. REED EXPLAINS

The testimony before the Senate committee regarding the attempt to obtain an ocean mail contract for a steamship line to operate from Philadelphia should be read in the light of Senator REED's explanation of his role in this matter. The Pennsylvania, Baltimore & Ohio, and Reading Railroads joined in this enterprise. Mr. Brown, then Postmaster General, had decided to award the contract to the Philadelphia Mail Steamship Co. as the lowest bidder, when a resolution was introduced in the Senate to block the award at the instance, says Senator REED, of some disappointed bidders.

This was only a few days before the close of the Hoover administration and of the Seventy-second Congress. His desire to promote the interests of the port of Philadelphia prompted Senator REED to speak against time in an attempt to delay passage of the resolution. But the contract was not signed because of the Shipping Board's refusal to sell vessels to the Philadelphia company. And the port of Philadelphia, which was once such a factor in the trans-Atlantic passenger and mail service, still labors under its serious handicap while competitors are steadily expanding their ocean trade.

[From the Public Ledger, Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 26, 1934]

OPEN AND ABOVEBOARD

The explanation given by Mr. Hubert J. Horan, president of the Philadelphia Mail Steamship Co., of the circumstances attending its application for a postal contract under the Hoover administration places the matter in the clearest possible light. The project, as he says, represented a sincere and commendable effort by leading business interests of this city to expand the overseas trade of the port of Philadelphia.

The company had contracted to buy four vessels from the United States Lines, subject to approval by the Shipping Board, when competitive interests in Norfolk presented an application for a mail contract to cover a duplicating service to English ports. The Post Office Department had no funds available to give both lines mail contracts. Later an agreement was reached between the Philadelphia and Norfolk companies for a division of the contract. The law required 3 weeks' advertisement before bids were opened. This delay brought the matter up to within a few days of the end of the Hoover administration and the retirement of Postmaster General Brown.

Senator BLACK then introduced his resolution, which has been referred to in committee hearings at Washington, to hold up award of the contract to the Philadelphia company until after an investigation could be made. Senator REED, in defense of the interests of Philadelphia, opposed the resolution, but in vain. The matter is now in the hands of Mr. Brown's successor, Postmaster General Farley.

The entire dealings on the part of the Philadelphia Mail Steamship Co. and Senator REED were open and aboveboard. Both were engaged in a public-spirited endeavor which ought to have succeeded. In the upbuilding of the American Merchant Marine, Philadelphia, with its excellent facilities, has been unjustly neglected. This injustice has been emphasized by the incident which has been brought to the Senate committee's attention. There is no reason why this project to give Philadelphia a trans-Atlantic mail and passenger service should not be revived and pushed to completion.

[From the Public Ledger, Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 25, 1934]

SENATE BROADENS AIR MAIL INQUIRY INTO ALL AWARDS—VOTES ADDITIONAL $25,000 TO COMMITTEE; DEMAND FOR ACTION HEARD IN HOUSE

WASHINGTON, January 24.—The Senate today passed the resolution of Senator BLACK, Democrat, Alabama, appropriating an additional $25,000 for expenses of the Ocean and Air Mail Investigating Committee, of which Mr. BLACK is chairman.

The resolution also broadens the scope of the inquiry to include any corporation or individual connected with one holding an air mail contract.

Members of the committee said the additional authority was sought after their investigators had been denied access to the files of the Hudson & Manhattan Railroad Co., of which Walter F. Brown, former Postmaster General, is chairman.

OPPOSE FEDERAL SUBSIDIES

Senator BLACK said tonight that the evidence his committee had gleaned pointed to the necessity of the Government's abandoning subsidies, operating the lines itself, or completely revising the Federal-aid system.

He recited a series of incidents revealed by the inquiry which he said "discloses that the huge subsidies paid by the Government to build up a merchant marine had been diverted from the channel and have been largely spent in high salaries, extravagant expense accounts, highly paid lobbyists, and huge dividends."

Of the air mail phase of the investigation, he said that "when the air mail map had been redrafted, it was found that the eighteen or more million dollars of taxpayers' money annually paid for the carriage of air mail was controlled more than 90 percent by four companies."

Attorney General Cummings said today that Carl L. Ristine, new Special Attorney General, would "conduct all legal proceedings which may be found to be necessary" as a result of the investigation of air and ocean mail contract awards.

Mr. Cummings made the statement after a conference with Mr. Ristine and Senator BLACK.

Mr. Ristine arrived today from his home in Lexington, Mo. He said his first task would be to familiarize himself with testimony to date.

Attacking fraudulent mail contracts, Representative SABATH, Democrat, Illinois, called upon the House to cause their cancelation.

"If the Senate committee will complete its inquiry, it will disclose many more frauds than in the last few days", he said.

MAIL-LINE HEAD EXPLAINS OVERTURES FOR UNITED STATES AWARD

Hubert J. Horan, president of the Philadelphia Mail Line Co., declared yesterday a series of unavoidable delays were responsible for the fact his company's application for a mail contract reached the Post Office Department only a few days before the end of former Postmaster General Brown's administration.

In explanation of these delays, Mr. Horan issued the following statement:

"The Philadelphia mail line, in respect to its relations with the Government, stands today where it has stood from the beginning in its negotiation with Washington—strictly on its merits. The project represents a sincere effort on the part of business leaders of the city to further promote the expansion of Philadelphia's overseas trade, with particular attention to trans-Atlantic passenger business. Nothing that I can see has taken place before Senator BLACK's committee to disprove this.

"Every interest and every individual connected with the efforts to establish a direct cargo-passenger service via Philadelphia to ports in Great Britain were prompted to give their assistance purely from the standpoint of community spirit. True, our application for Government help reached the Post Office Department in the closing days of the last administration. This was no fault of those sponsoring the project.

"It was the result of a series of unfortunate delays over which the Philadelphia committee had no control. It will be recalled that the organizing committee had, as it believed, successfully negotiated for the purchase of four ships from the American Scantic Line Co. These ships of 13 knots were thought to be desirable in every respect for an initial start on the Philadelphia Line.

"We had had these ships thoroughly examined and surveyed by competent marine architects who gave us a favorable report. Then to our surprise and disappointment the Post Office Department notified us they would not be disposed to grant a mail contract for a Philadelphia line unless the speed of the ships was 16 knots or better. The only 16-knot ships available at the time were the so-called "B type" operated by the United States Lines between New York and London and still in operation in this service.

"We were advised by the Shipping Board that these B-type ships were the most desirable available to meet the requirements of the Post Office Department. Negotiations began all over again and when we completed a deal with the United States Line for the purchase of the ships another obstacle developed and with it further delay to Philadelphia's efforts.

WHOLE PROGRAM THREATENED

"This has reference to the application of Norfolk interests for a mail contract which covered a multiplicity of service along the Atlantic coast, including Philadelphia and Manchester and Liverpool, the ports in England which our line planned to serve directly. This later incident threatened to hold up our project indefinitely.

"It was our desire and our promise to Philadelphia that our service would be in operation in 1933. Now, this Norfolk incident threatened to upset our whole program first, because there were not funds available to give both lines a mail contract, and, secondly, because of the reluctance of the Norfolk group to surrender anything which they believed was theirs and this included the indirect and inadequate service which they had planned for Philadelphia against our direct service. This prolonged our efforts in Washington until February 1932, when an agreement was reached between Philadelphia and Norfolk under which agreement our line could be started with 26 sailings and Norfolk with 52 sailings.

"This would enable the Post Office Department to satisfactorily divide between the two projects what funds were available. It required by law that advertisements covering the mail contract appear for 3 weeks before the bids were opened. This took the matter up to within a few days of the retirement of Mr. Brown.

CORRECTING FALSE IMPRESSION

"This, I believe, ought to correct any false impression that may exist that Philadelphia had waited for the last days of the Brown administration to rush through its application. Two days before the Post Office Department arranged to open the bids, Senator BLACK introduced his resolution calling for a halt in the awarding of the Philadelphia mail line contract until an investigation of the proposal could be made.

"The Shipping Board in view of this withdrew its confirmation of the sale to us of the ships by the United States Lines, and Postmaster General Brown left our application on the desk for his successor and it is now in the hands of Postmaster General Farley.

"We feel confident that it will be favorably acted upon, for we have been investigated by his Department and have been advised that the report which he has substantiates the sincerity of our proposition and the integrity of all its sponsors and supporters. Moreover, our plans to increase the importance of the business of the port of Philadelphia have the whole-hearted local support of both Democrats and Republicans. It is strictly a civic proposition and not political."

[From the Philadelphia (Pa.) Inquirer, Jan. 25, 1934]

THE TRUTH ABOUT MAIL CONTRACTS

Into a Senate committee's investigation of air and ocean mail contracts Philadelphia has been drawn. After years of endeavor the Philadelphia Mail Steamship Co. had been formed. It needed, of course, a mail contract such as other steamship lines had been granted.

A contract had to be predicated upon the ability of the company to procure ships. The company dealt with the United States Lines and had bought four vessels subject to the approval of the Shipping Board. It submitted bids for mail transportation. Bids were to be opened last year on March 4 at noon. The award was assured to the company.

Hostile interests sought to block the ambitions of this port. A southern Senator offered a resolution requesting Postmaster General Brown not to make an award until the Senate had made an investigation. The resolution was debated by Senator REED on that day in March from noon to half after the hour, when it was adopted.

In the interim there was opportunity for the Postmaster General to sign the contract, but he was advised by the Shipping Board that, because of the Senate resolution it would not approve the purchase. Without ships there could be no mail contract. Postmaster General Brown left the whole matter in the hands of his successor, where it remains today.

Such was the outcome of an unfortunate occurrence that deprived Philadelphia of an individual express service direct to British ports. Such a service had been fought for ever since the World War.

Plenty of freight, if the railroads were interested, could be had from the West as well as from the nearby country, but most of it went right by us to New York. Heavy freight was and is going out of this port, but to obtain freight that demands prompt delivery the need was and still is for a combined passenger and freight service operated on a strict schedule directly to a port on the other side of the Atlantic.

To the task of building sentiment for a direct ship line Hubert J. Horan devoted his attention. President Atterbury went into the matter enthusiastically. The Pennsylvania subscribed to the capitalization. So did the Baltimore & Ohio and the Reading. Other subscriptions were to be obtained from citizens of Philadelphia. This was to be a community concern—a real Philadelphia affair. Necessarily a contract for carrying mails was essential.

The Philadelphia Mail Steamship Co. was as clean as a hound's tooth in its promotion. It stands ready to operate when permitted to do so. Postmaster General Farley should recognize the injustice of sidetracking this important port.

[From the Philadelphia (Pa.) Evening Bulletin, Jan. 25, 1934]

PHILADELPHIA'S STEAMSHIP LINE

All the facts concerning the effort to get a United States mail contract, subsidy, or subvention for Philadelphia's projected steamship service across the Atlantic ought to be made apparent. The facts concerning the genesis of the plan, its purpose, and its promotion are well known here in Philadelphia and the story is capable of substantiation at Washington. It was not an enterprise of private graft-seeking, but rather a cooperative effort for the better service of the port of Philadelphia, with a hope of paying its way rather than of making profit. Railroad interests hereabouts were brought into the cooperation on a plea of public interest and railroad obligation.

It would be more important and serviceable to determine and put before the public all the facts concerning the opposition to the project and the means which were employed to obstruct it, to compel a sacrifice of Philadelphia interests and finally to hang it up indefinitely, denying Philadelphia's effort at independent service its fair opportunity.

The mail contracts and other provisions for Federal assistance were designed for the upbuilding of the American merchant marine, and the Philadelphia steamship line fitted into the plan. There never has yet been any sufficient reason offered for blocking it, or for the failure of the Federal authorities to do their part in moving it along to efficient operation. Senator BLACK declares that the Philadelphia plan was not included among the targets for his attack on mail subsidies. The Post Office Department at Washington declares that upon inquiry it found the Philadelphia plan worthy. Under all the circumstances the Philadelphia plan ought to be freed from all suspicion and moved forward.

[From the Philadelphia (Pa.) Evening Bulletin, Jan. 25, 1934]

MEN AND THINGS—PHILADELPHIA MAIL STEAMSHIP LINE ORGANIZED FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE PORT OF PHILADELPHIA AND A FAIR AND OPEN BIDDER FOR UNCLE SAM'S MAIL SUBVENTION

No apologies are due to Philadelphia by Senator REED for anything that he did, on the Senate floor or elsewhere, for the furtherance of the Philadelphia Mail Steamship Line, planned to operate between this port and Liverpool and Manchester. And the fact that the Pennsylvania interests were behind the project contains no invidious suggestions for Philadelphians. This enterprise was the nearest approach to the establishment of a genuinely Philadelphia line of steamships across the Atlantic that has been achieved in 20 years or more of talking and planning, and no one who did anything to make its accomplishment possible deserves criticism for the service. While formally and technically it was of necessity a private enterprise, it came as near being a public project, conceived and carried forward for the general interest of the port of Philadelphia, as any such undertaking could be.

Describing the inception of the shipping plan, Hubert J. Horan said yesterday that he was first moved to take up the project by reading two articles in a newspaper, one a criticism of the railroad for not taking an active interest in the development of the port, the other a letter from an official of the road stating the "Pennsy" was always interested in the development of the port and ready to cooperate in any move to that end. "Reading these two articles", said Mr. Horan, "it occurred to me that one ought to have a steamship line giving direct service between Philadelphia and Europe and that the Pennsylvania Railroad might cooperate. So I arranged for a meeting of about 50 prominent citizens interested in the industrial, commercial, and business interests of the city, and decided to put such a project before them."

At this meeting, on February 5, 1931, at the Manufacturers' Club, Mr. Horan explained his ideas. Philadelphia years ago had the benefit of railroad cooperation in building up the old American Line, which operated the steamships Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois between here and Liverpool, for which the Pennsylvania Railroad in those days had advanced $4,000,000. This old trade route, served now only by cargo carriers operating under British flag and under private management, might be reestablished if the three railroads entering the city were willing to cooperate. At the time trunk-line railroads reaching the Atlantic were beginning to realize the necessity of getting back into the ocean-carrying trade.

PUBLIC GOOD THE GOAL, NOT PROFIT

It was proposed that a strictly Philadelphia port promotion enterprise should be started by the formation of a steamship line with a capitalization of $10,000,000, of which, it was announced, the three railroads would furnish a million dollars, the Pennsylvania putting up five hundred thousand and the Baltimore & Ohio and the Reading each agreeing to subscribe a quarter of a million. It was thought then that banks which had been pledged to cooperate would aid in the disposal of $4,000,000 more of the stock among large concerns, and that the remaining $5,000,000 of capital would be obtained by selling stock to importers and exporters in the metropolitan area of the city who, by agreeing to subscribe to shares and to using the line, would benefit both by the savings and services promised and by the profit on their investment.

At this meeting General Atterbury, speaking for the Pennsylvania, urged the group to make it purely a commercial and a community enterprise and to start without the need of Government aid.

After the meeting General Atterbury was asked to name an executive committee to perfect the organization, and Mr. Horan was named as chairman; John J. Egan, editor of the port publication called "Commerce and Industry", was selected as secretary, the other members being J. Howard Pew, president of the Sun Oil Co.; Howard Loeb, president of the Tradesmen's National Bank; J. W. VanDyke, president of the Atlantic Refining Co.; Nathan Heyward, president of the American Dredging Co.; Harvey C. Miller, president of the Philadelphia Tidewater Terminal Co.; J. S. W. Holton, president of the Maritime Exchange; and Philip H. Gadsden, president of the chamber of commerce.

COOPERATION APPROVED ON ALL SIDES

Numerous meetings were held throughout 1931, bankers, shipbuilders, commercial and industrial interests were consulted, the two shipyards on the Delaware, the New York Shipbuilding Co., at Camden, and the Sun Shipbuilding Co., at Chester, were found ready to bid on reconditioning ships or on new ships if needed, with the understanding that the successful bidder would contribute liberally to the stock of the company, it being the aim to keep all work of this sort in the community.

But the depression grew worse and the bankers realized the futility of attempting to dispose of the stock at the time. The organizers began to look elsewhere. The pledges of the railroads held good. There were found five ships of the Scantic Line that could be bought reasonably and with an expenditure of $150,000 on each ship could be reconditioned and fitted with passenger accommodations that would prove attractive to the one-cabin class of travelers. Accordingly negotiations were opened with the Board, the Department of Commerce, the Post Office Department, the Treasury, and other agencies in Washington cooperating with the Shipping Board, to have the Government pass upon the feasibility of the plan.

MAIL CONTRACT REQUIRED FASTER BOATS

At this stage word came from Postmaster General Brown that he would not look with favor on a mail-carrying contract for a line that did not call for ships of 16 knots speed. Those contemplated were 13-knot vessels. For a time the committee was inclined to go ahead with the 13-knot ships when it was pointed out that as Baltimore was served by 16-knot boats and New York by 18- and 20-knot vessels it would be unwise to do so. A new search for ships disclosed then that the United States Lines had two 16-knot ships, operating between New York and London, that were already equipped with passenger accommodations and which would have been ideal for the purpose of the Philadelphia line and which could be obtained with possibly two more of these boats available in the future. Negotiations were resumed with the Post Office Department when word was received a new competitor had come into the picture. A group of Norfolk business men had got together and organized a company that had filed an application for a mail contract, it being their intent to have frequent sailings from Norfolk of ships that would call at various ports between there and Boston, including Philadelphia, before departing for Liverpool and Manchester. Nevertheless, the supporters of the line here went ahead.

WASHINTON DELAY WAS DISASTROUS

Application for the mail-carrying contract was made in the regular form. A certified check for $5,000, which the Government still holds, was deposited. A surety company was ready to put up the bond of a million and a half dollars if the contract was awarded. Bids were advertised for and tendered. At first it was the thought that Philadelphia would receive a contract calling for 52 sailings a year. Then it was proposed that the business be divided between Philadelphia and Norfolk and a joint sailing schedule for each was suggested. But it so happened that all this brought the reception and the opening of the bids to the very end of Postmaster General Brown's administration when, in the last-minute effort to allow the bids to be opened, the Norfolk and Philadelphia groups having agreed to split on the sailings, Senator REED delayed, as a matter of service to the port, the vote on the resolution of Senator BLACK, of Alabama, to postpone the awards pending an investigation.

All of Senator BLACK's attack at the time was launched against the International Mercantile Marine and not against the port of Philadelphia, the debate giving no consideration to the project as a community one. The resolution passed, the contract was not awarded, the Shipping Board refused to sell the ships belonging to the United States Lines, as they were the only profitable vessels operating then under the American flag, and so for a time the matter rested.

Again Mr. Horan and Mr. Egan visited Washington and sought the Government's aid. They learned from Assistant Postmaster General Howes that the new administration has sent three investigators, at various times, to Philadelphia to learn the details of the project, that the Department believes it to be a worthy one and no further argument on that score is necessary.

[From the Philadelphia Record, Jan. 25, 1934]

STEAMSHIP HEAD DEFENDS COMPANY—H. J. HORAN DISCLAIMS INTENTIONAL DELAY CONCERNING MAIL CONTRACTS

Hubert J. Horan, president of the Philadelphia Mail Steamship Co., last night amplified information concerning his company, that was placed before the United States Senate committee investigating ocean mail contracts.

Horan sought to correct "the false impression that may exist" that the company waited until the last days of former Postmaster General Brown's administration to rush through its application for mail contracts.

The steamship line's president said "unavoidable delays" held up the transmission of the application to Washington, and added that Postmaster General Farley, who has made an investigation of the situation, has been advised of the company's "sincerity and integrity of its sponsors."

The statement follows:

"The Philadelphia Mail Line in respect to its relations with the Government stands today where it has stood from the beginning in its negotiations with Washington—strictly on its merits. The project represents a sincere effort on the part of business leaders of the city to further promote the expansion of Philadelphia's overseas trade, with particular attention to trans-Atlantic passenger business. Nothing that I can see has taken place before Senator BLACK's committee to disprove this.

DEFENDS SPONSORS

"Every interest and every individual connected with the efforts to establish a direct cargo-passenger service via Philadelphia to ports in Great Britain were prompted to give their assistance purely from the standpoint of community spirit. True, our application for Government help reached the Post Office Department in the closing days of the last administration. This was no fault of those sponsoring the project.

"It was the result of a series of unfortunate delays, over which the Philadelphia committee had no control. It will be recalled that the organizing committee had, as it believed, successfully negotiated for the purchase of four ships from the American Scantic Line Co. These ships of 13 knots were thought to be desirable in every respect for an initial start on the Philadelphia line.

16-KNOT SPEED DESIRED

"We had had these ships thoroughly examined and surveyed by competent marine architects, who gave us a favorable report. Then, to our surprise and disappointment, the Post Office Department notified us they would not be disposed to grant a mail contract for a Philadelphia line unless the speed of the ships was 16 knots or better. The only 16-knot ships available at the time were the so-called 'B type', operated by the United States Lines between New York and London and still in operation in this service.

"We were advised by the Shipping Board that that these B-type ships were the most desirable available to meet the requirements of the Post Office Department. Negotiations began all over again, and when we completed a deal with the United States Line for the purchase of the ships another obstacle developed, and with it further delay to Philadelphia's efforts.

PROGRAM FORCED DELAY

"This has reference to the application of Norfolk interests for a mail contract, which covered a multiplicity of services along the Atlantic coast, including Philadelphia, and Manchester and Liverpool, the ports in England which our line planned to serve directly. This later incident threatened to hold up our project indefinitely.

"It was our desire and our promise to Philadelphia that our service would be in operation in 1933. Now, this Norfolk incident threatened to upset our whole program, first, because there were not funds available to give both lines a mail contract, and, secondly, because of the reluctance of the Norfolk group to surrender anything which they believed was theirs, and this included the indirect and inadequate service which they had planned for Philadelphia against our direct service. This prolonged our efforts in Washington until February 1932, when an agreement was reached between Philadelphia and Norfolk, under which agreement our line could be started with 26 sailings and Norfolk with 52 sailings.

"This would enable the Post Office Department to satisfactorily divide between the two projects what funds were available. It required by law that advertisements covering the mail contract appear for 3 weeks before the bids were opened. This took the matter up to within a few days of the retirement of Mr. Brown.

DISCLAIMS PURPOSEFUL DELAY

"This, I believe, ought to correct any false impression that may exist that Philadelphia had waited for the last days of the Brown administration to rush through its application. Two days before the Post Office Department arranged to open bids Senator BLACK introduced his resolution calling for a halt in the awarding of the Philadelphia mail-line contract until an investigation of the proposal could be made.

"The Shipping Board, in view of this, withdrew its confirmation of the sale to us of the ships by the United States Line, and Postmaster General Brown left our application on the desk for his successor, and it is now in the hands of Postmaster General Farley.

"We feel confident that it will be favorably acted upon, for we have been investigated by his Department and have been advised that the report which he has substantiates the sincerity of our proposition and the integrity of all its sponsors and supporters. Moreover, our plans to increase the importance of the business of the Port of Philadelphia has the wholehearted local support of both Democrats and Republicans. It is strictly a civic proposition and not political."

REPORT OF THE JUVENILE COURT OF THE DISTRICT

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress a communication from the judge of the Juvenile Court of the District of Columbia, together with a report covering the work of the juvenile court during the fiscal years July 1, 1931, to June 30, 1933.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 30, 1934.

[NOTE.—Report accompanied similar message to the House of Representatives.]

REPORT OF GOVERNOR GENERAL OF THE PHILIPPINES (H.DOC. NO. 233)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by section 21 of the act of Congress approved August 29, 1916, entitled "An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands", I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the report of the Governor General of the Philippine Islands for the period February 29, 1932, to February 10, 1933, together with appendixes, including the reports of the heads of the six departments of the Philippine Government for the calendar year 1932.

I concur in the recommendation of the Secretary of War that this report and its appendixes be printed as a congressional document.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 30, 1934.

[NOTE.—Report accompanied similar message to the House of Representatives.]

HOUSING IN RENTED PREMISES IN THE DISTRICT

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a letter from the vice chairman of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, transmitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution No. 86, Seventy-third Congress, first session, a report of investigation of facts relating to the cost and character of housing in rented premises in the District of Columbia and complaints in relation thereto, and stating that a supplemental report will be transmitted at a later date, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE DEEP WATERWAY TREATY

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the treaty between the United States and the Dominion of Canada for the completion of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence deep waterway, signed July 18, 1932.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE addressed the Senate. After having spoken, with interruptions, for more than an hour, he said:

Mr. President, I now yield to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], who, I understand, desires to take up routine executive business, with the understanding that I may resume the floor and conclude my remarks tomorrow morning when the Senate convenes.

[Mr. LA FOLLETTE'S speech is published entire in RECORD of Jan. 31.]

RESTORATION OF PAY OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

As in legislative session,

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas obtained the floor.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, a few days ago at my request an article by Ethelbert Stewart, former Commissioner of Labor Statistics, was placed in the RECORD. That article, published in the Union Postal Clerk for October 1933, was entitled "Cost of Living Statistics and the Wage Cut." At the conclusion of my remarks today I shall ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a second article by Commissioner Stewart, found in the December issue of the Union Postal Clerk, entitled "Cost of Living for What?" These articles are written by a recognized authority on the subject of labor statistics.

The independent offices bill is now before the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate. Last year's bill came to be known as the "Economy Act." I could not see eye to eye with those who sponsored that act, and did not vote for it. However, in the interest of a balanced Budget, I understood something of the purpose of the act and sympathized with it to the extent that it was introduced as a step toward a balanced Budget.

All this is now past. With the expenditure of billions of dollars, I see no reason, therefore, why there should not be a full restoration of the pay cut. There is no employer of labor in the United States which is being observed more closely these days than Uncle Sam. As a model employer of labor, and in view of the unexpected turn of events, and in view of a dollar which may be only half as valuable as at the time the pay cut was made, and in prospect of rising prices, I believe the pay cut should now be fully restored.

I have often said that we have long ago passed the time when men struggle and work simply for food and shelter. Luxuries and semiluxuries quickly grow into necessities. Thus economic demand increases and thus business prospers. A rude shelter and any kind of coarse, cheap food will keep man alive, but that is not enough and never will be enough for American citizens under modern conditions. Today men work for the luxuries of life and for sufficient money to give them protection when sickness comes or when old age comes on. The men and women who live on wages and salaries are now beginning to wonder if, with the cheapened dollar, they are destined to lose the good things of life for which they have been working. I voted for the Recovery Act hoping that it would dedicate itself to the supreme duty of building up purchasing power by setting the Nation at work. With 10,000,000 idle and with the national income cut in half, the prospect is not yet bright.

It is but natural that those who live in Washington should think of the vast army of salaried employees in the Government service as typifying the cause of labor. They are the employees of the Nation and at the same time they aggregate a large proportion of the working people of this vicinity. The question of their pay cut is before the eyes of the Nation. With the united forces of the administration directed to raise prices, these public servants typify close at hand for us the tragedy which confronts workers everywhere if wage increases do not follow closely after price increases. If our Government will not give consideration to the needs of workers within the shadow of the Nation's Capital, what may American workers as a whole expect?

We need positively to be reminded that we are not living back in the eighteenth century, when the economic principles of Adam Smith provided living standards for workers sufficient only for them to eke out a bare existence and to breed other workers to take their places when they were laid on the human junk heap. Those days are gone. If we are to have a new deal, it should be one by which workers move forward to better standards of living made possible through decent wages paid out of the genuine earnings of industry. If it had not been for that laid by in store by those who were energetic and thrifty, by those who earned largely and saved, where would this Nation be today? Instead of 10,000,000 idle and a national income reduced by half, we might have witnessed the tragic spectacle of the entire Nation reduced to want and despair. We must never forget those who carried this country through the valley of this depression by the surrender of their wealth, just as we must not forget our soldiers who have stood ready to serve the Nation's needs in time of peace and war. In that connection, permit me to say that while we are restoring the pay cut to the Federal employees, we must not forget our soldiers and sailors, our ex-service men, and our veterans. That which is rightfully theirs should be restored to them.

America has never gone backward; she has always gone forward. If the onward march is to continue, we must give workers a full opportunity to build up purchasing power, and we must be certain that the wages with which men buy shall keep pace with the prices they have to pay.

I now submit my request that the second article by Commissioner Stewart may be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Union Postal Clerk, December 1933]

COST OF LIVING FOR WHAT?

(By Ethelbert Stewart, former Commissioner of Labor Statistics)

The Government is making another budgetary survey to determine mathematically the cost of living of its employees in the District of Columbia, and the statistical average of these family budgets is to be used in deciding whether or not salaries are to be increased or restored.

The relation between wages of labor and cost of living, or the idea of fixing wage and salary rates to conform to the cost of maintenance of life or of living standards, grows out of the dogmas of the English school of political economists known as the "Manchester school", and begins practically with Malthus, Adam Smith, Ricardo, and their group. Most of our financial, industrial, and social trouble today results from clinging to a system of political economy which called itself the "Science of Wealth", but which can only lead us back into that poverty of life and of thought out of which it was itself born.

The wages theory of this school was that labor was a commodity to be secured at the lowest possible price. Its dictum of the natural law of wages was the lowest amount upon which a worker could live and reproduce another worker to take his place when his life was ended or his working power was exhausted. Those were the days of the discovery or the invention of natural laws that control things human and artificial. Everybody knows that the lily pays no rent to the pond, yet this did not stand in the way of Ricardo's discoverey of the natural law of rent. Export was the only source of new wealth to these thinkers. Sam Johnson said "a community may as well think of getting rich by taking in one another's washing as a nation to expect to enrich itself by home-marketing its own products." Such idiocy ruled the realm and was the prevailing type of thought when the United States was being settled and our schools were being founded. George Bernard Shaw, alluding to that day and time, said: "England is a little island just off the coast of Europe, where the natives believe that their opinions constitute the laws of nature."

In that alleged science the worker is not considered as a customer nor as an integral part of that public or society for which governments and social institutions exist.

Until all that savors of this is abandoned, there can be no adjustment of our social life with our enormous power to produce consumer's goods in a machine age. There will be no mental contentment in the lives of the workers of the world until they are honestly and adequately worked into the social and economic framework as a part of, rather than as an implement or tool of, our civilization. Economically there is no prosperity that is not general, and general prosperity means that population is the index of purchasing power. Our present thought on this whole subject of the cost of living in its relation to wages and salaries is a hangover from a day when economists were concerned solely with producing enough to keep the world from starving; it could not have been produced in this period, when the real problem is how to distribute the enormous surplus.

Against a background of the Manchester school of economists, with its iron law of wages, statistics of the cost of living once possessed real value. If the natural law of wages was the rate at which a man could live and raise another man to take his place when he was old it was important to know where that line was. Scrambling for jobs at lower and lower rates because each believed that he could live cheaper than the other gradually increased the baby death rate, lowered the marriage rate, increased the cost of governments to maintain exports, and finally convinced people that society as such had an interest in wage rates. In 1833 the printers' union in Washington, D.C., asked for an increase in wages because of the "increase in the cost of living." The price of a chicken in Center Market was 25 cents. The publishers replied that chicken at any price was not necessary to the maintenance of a printer. Family budgets, which determine the death line, the place where wages affect birth rate, became socially necessary.

In a day and time when our whole industrial and economic affairs were wedded to the Manchester law of wages, the Bureau of Labor Statistics did well to get some reasonably reliable data upon the money cost of living. These figures were helpful in settling wage disputes for many years, and usually settled them in the direction of higher wages. These higher wages brought better standards of living and better standards brought higher living costs. In my official reports as Commissioner of Labor Statistics, I constantly protested against the use of old figures to fix wages under an improved standard of living.

But my objection to family budget figures as a basis for wage rates goes much deeper than the question of the up-to-dateness of those figures. My objection is basic, and involves the whole principle of the application of statistical methods to the things of life. For years I have insisted that I knew no other English word that concealed so much misery, poverty, destitution, crime, and despair as does that word "average" when applied, for instance, to wages of women in southern cotton mills and northern sweatshops. When I hear men talk of average wages I shudder, for, generally speaking, there are as many individual items below the line we call average as there are above it. In many lines the statistical average, like patriotism, is the last refuge of a scoundrel.

At best we shall get from a survey of family cost of living only an average of the money cost of the things we eat, wear, and seem to have around us. The schedule used for that purpose asks if I own my home, but there is no place on it to add that the roof leaks. We can measure standards, but wages determine standards; and the cost of living standards will follow wage standards. Whether a man will wear an overcoat a year, 2 years, 3, or 5 years depends upon how much he earns. And to fit his wages to any one of these possibilities only perpetuates that standard, ossifies conditions, and paralyzes progress. Each family lives as well as it can. To use standards to fix wages is to fix standards and render living costs and expenditures inflexible.

Besides, your figures do not get at my standard; they determine only my basic requirements. My standard is what I want; the statistics dealing with my case show only what the wages you pay me will buy at the price I have to pay. You cannot buy contented employees that way. Figures do not quiver with life forces. Contentment as a subject for study is, I should say, quite outside the realm of statistical method. To use a slide rule on this subject is a waste of time.

After all is said and done, what do we mean by cost of living? Whose living? Living how? Living for what—to develop another Government clerk? What is living? The essence of living is desire. I want what I want when I want it, else there would be no me. Any attempt to statisticize these wants will fail. To get the cost of what I buy, of what I eat and wear, is not going to arrive at the cost of a satisfied employee. The average of a satisfied and a dissatisfied employee is two dissatisfied employees. Percentages are too much with us. Averages cloy. The metabolism of a statistical average in the human stomach is nil.

In an early arithmetic you will find this example: If a certain piece of work requires 1 boy 1 hour to do it, how long will it take 2 boys? 3 boys? etc. The author of this book meant well. He wished to put a human touch into arithmetic and to interest the boys in themselves. One youth replied: "If it takes 1 boy an hour to do this work, it would take 2 boys 2 hours and 3 boys would never do it." I call upon W. I. King, or Professor Ogburn, to refute this reply.

No; I am not trying to be funny. I am simply protesting that a child senses more deeply the application of mathematical principles to boys than do all the mathematicians and statisticians alive. We seem bent on stabilizing everything, forgetful that we have now too much anchor and too little sail. Faith is what we need, not statistical averages of what, let us hope, can never happen again; and we need hope to help our faith that a civilization can be built up which will be worth preserving. Stabilizing our cost of living may stabilize living itself—a scheme which finally defeated itself even in Spain and China. Rather let us stabilize faith, let us stabilize hope, lest we are forced to stabilize charity—and the dole.

We are warned that our money contributions to the Community Chest must not falter or lag during this fall and winter, because the need grows greater month by month.

There is one standard of the cost of living—that is the cost, whatever it may be, of living the maximum span of life and living it fully. This cannot be figured from the day's or the year's grocery bill. The social minimum wage, salary, or income is the amount, whatever it may be, that is required to reduce the death rate, especially the infant death rate, to an absolute minimum and keep it there. Less than this is murder done for money.

CONSIDERATION OF EXECUTIVE BUSINESS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of routine executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate sundry messages from the President of the United States, submitting nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Reports of committees are in order.

Mr. DILL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Harry W. Blair, of Missouri, to be Assistant Attorney General, to succeed Roy St. Lewis, resigned.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nomination of John T. Summerville, of Oregon, to be United States marshal, district of Oregon, to succeed John L. Day, whose term expired January 22, 1934.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Kingsbury B. Piper, of Maine, to be United States marshal, district of Maine, to succeed Burton Smith, appointed by court.

Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the following nominations:

Maurice M. Milligan, of Missouri, to be United States attorney, western district of Missouri, to succeed William L. Vandeventer, whose resignation is effective at the close of January 31, 1934;

Martin Conboy, of New York, to be United States attorney, southern district of New York, to succeed Thomas E. Dewey, appointed by court;

Charles D. McAvoy, of Pennsylvania, to be United States attorney, eastern district of Pennsylvania, to succeed Edward W. Wells, resigned;

Horatio S. Dumbauld, of Pennsylvania, to be United States attorney, western district of Pennsylvania, to succeed Louis Edward Graham, resigned;

William Thomas Collins, of Missouri, to be clerk, United States Court for China;

George Vice, of California, to be United States marshal, northern district of California, to succeed Frederick L. Esola, resigned; and Robert E. Clark, of California, to be United States marshal, southern district of California, to succeed Albert C. Sittel, deceased.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported favorably the nomination of Charles B. Henderson, of Nevada, to be a member of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a term of 2 years from January 22, 1934, vice Wilson McCarthy, resigned.

Mr. TRAMMELL, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers in the Navy and in the Marine Corps.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the calendar.

THE CALENDAR—FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of George C. Mathews, of Wisconsin, to be Federal Trade Commissioner for the remainder of the term expiring September 25, 1938.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, that is to go over.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes. There is an agreement to proceed to the consideration of that nomination tomorrow, so it should go over until tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be passed over.

FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William I. Myers, of New York, to be Governor of the Farm Credit Administration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Harvey C. Couch, of Arkansas, to be a member of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Jesse H. Jones, of Texas, to be a member of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Frederic H. Taber to be a member of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of C. B. Merriam, of Kansas, to be a member of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John J. Blaine, of Wisconsin, to be a member of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, with respect to the post-office nominations, I ask that no. 194, Edward A. Tigner, of Milledgeville, Ga., go over for the day. I make this suggestion at the request of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]. However, I see that the Senator has just reentered the Chamber, and he may speak for himself.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I am opposed to the confirmation of this nomination on personal grounds, which I have no objection to stating to the committee or on the floor. I advised the chairman of the committee that before the nomination was favorably reported by the committee I desired to be heard and was assured that I would be given that opportunity. I observe, however, that the nomination has apparently been favorably reported despite the fact that I filed a written protest against its confirmation.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I would suggest that the nomination be recommitted, if the Senator from Georgia has no objection.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The chairman of the committee is not present. I was trying to safeguard the rights of the Senator from Georgia. Someone brought me a memorandum stating that if the Senator from Georgia were not present he desired the nomination to go over.

Mr. RUSSELL. I appreciate the interest of the Senator from Arkansas. This is the first occasion since I became a member of this body that any situation of this kind has arisen. I have not familiarized myself with the precedents in such cases. I was of the opinion that this is a matter which should be settled by the committee. I had sought to have it settled in that manner.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I suggest the nomination go over for the day in order that the chairman of the committee may be present. I do not know what his pleasure may be. I myself have no objection to the recommittal of the nomination, but I think the chairman of the committee should be present. I suggest that the nomination go over.

Mr. RUSSELL. I would like to inquire of the Senator from Arkansas as to what is the practice in matters of this kind. If the nomination goes over is there any likelihood of it being taken up at some subsequent meeting of the Senate when I am unavoidably detained from the Chamber?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No. The nomination will not be taken up in the absence of the Senator from Georgia if I am here. If the Senator from Georgia desires a hearing before the committee I am sure the hearing will be had at his request, and that the nomination will be recommitted for that purpose.

Mr. RUSSELL. With that statement on the part of the Senator from Arkansas I have no objection to the nomination going over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination referred to will be passed over.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] came to my desk a little while ago and stated that he was compelled to leave the Chamber and would not be here when these nominations were to be considered and desired the nomination of a postmaster in North Dakota to go over. He also stated that he had left a memorandum at the desk as to which nomination he had in mind. I find that no such memorandum has been left at the desk, so I am going to request that the four nominations of postmasters for North Dakota now on the calendar, nos. 295, 296, 297, and 298, go over for the day. I do not know which one the Senator had in mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and the four nominations will be passed over.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I now ask that all other nominations of postmasters, except the one from Georgia and the four from North Dakota, be confirmed en bloc.

Mr. LONG. What are the nominations—military nominations?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; they are post-office nominations. I am asking that, with certain exceptions which I have stated, the remainder be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? There being no objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas subsequently said:

Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], who asked me to look after a nomination referred to a little while ago, has returned to the Chamber. The nomination which he had in mind is no. 296, George W. McIntyre, Jr., to be postmaster at Grafton, N.Dak. I ask unanimous consent that that nomination go over for the day and for the present consideration of the other three nominations from North Dakota. I make this request at the suggestion of the Senator from North Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? If not, nomination 296, George W. McIntyre, Jr., to be postmaster at Grafton, N.Dak., will be passed over and the other three nominations of postmasters in North Dakota are confirmed.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p.m.) the Senate, in executive session, took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, January 31, 1934, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 30 (legislative day of Jan. 23), 1934

SECRETARY IN THE DIPLOMATIC SERVICE

Cyril L. F. Thiel, of Illinois, now a Foreign Service officer of class 8 and a consul, to be also a secretary in the Diplomatic Service of the United States of America.

MEMBER OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Charles B. Henderson, of Nevada, to be a member of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a term of 2 years from January 22, 1934, vice Wilson McCarthy, resigned.

GOVERNOR OF THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII

Joseph B. Poindexter, of Hawaii, to be Governor of the Territory of Hawaii, vice Lawrence M. Judd.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL

George J. Keinath, of Ohio, to be United States marshal, northern district of Ohio, to succeed William J. Williams, whose resignation is effective at the close of January 31, 1934.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS

Frank J. Duffy, of Nogales, Ariz., to be collector of customs for customs collection district no. 26, with headquarters at Nogales, Ariz., in place of James W. McDonald.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The following-named assistant dental surgeons to be passed assistant dental surgeons in the Public Health Service, to rank as such from the dates set opposite their names:

Franklin R. Frampton, February 1, 1934.

James S. Miller, February 1, 1934.

Gordon G. Braendle, February 16, 1934.

These officers have passed the examination required by law and the regulations of the Service.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 30 (legislative day of Jan. 23), 1934

GOVERNOR OF THE FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION

William I. Myers to be Governor of the Farm Credit Administration.

MEMBERS OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Harvey C. Couch to be a member of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Jesse H. Jones to be a member of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Frederic H. Taber to be a member of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

C. B. Merriam to be a member of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

John J. Blaine to be a member of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

POSTMASTERS

GEORGIA

Ruth D. McClure, Acworth.
Cleo H. Price, Adairsville.
George E. Youmans, Adrian.
George B. McIntyre, Ailey.
Dan L. Gibson, Albany.
John G. Gruber, Alma.
Chester Maynard, Austell.
Levi P. Grainger, Blackshear.
Hardy S. McCalman, Buchanan.
Henrietta E. Butt, Buena Vista.
Arthur C. Little, Carnesville.
Fred J. Forbes, Cave Spring.
Guy H. Wells, Collegeboro.
Lonzier J. Wood, Cuthbert.
Robert H. Manson, Darien.

Wylie West, Decatur.
Oliver F. Deen, Douglas.
Sara B. Green, Fairburn.
Mary V. Lynch, Fort Screven.
Augustus B. Mitcham, Jr., Hampton.
Arley D. Finley, Hazlehurst.
Glossie A. Dunford, Helena.
Fannie M. Vaughn, Jeffersonville.
Charles Clements, La Fayette.
Jane M. Wilkes, Lincolnton.
Aligene B. Howard, Ludowici.
W. Brantley Daniel, Millen.
Marion Lucas, Savannah.
Susie M. Lunsford, Smithville.
Arthur B. Caldwell, Smyrna.
Myrtle Louise Walker, Soperton.
Mamie G. White, Stone Mountain.
Bertha L. Boyd, Union Point.
Tilden A. Adkins, Vienna.
Charles H. Orr, Washington.
Sim A. Gray, Waynesboro.
Robert B. Bryan, Wrightsville.

KENTUCKY

Sara G. Friel, Ashland.
Charles B. Cox, Benton.
Virginia C. Reynolds, Carlisle.
Walter McKenzie; Eubank.
Rebecca B. Forsythe, Greenup.
Herman P. Yates, Kuttawa.
Robert E. Johnson, Lawrenceburg.
Amelia B. Samuels, Lebanon Junction.
Martha J. Combs, Manchester.
James Purdon, Maysville.
Peter T. Colgan, Middlesboro.
Mattye M. Burns, Morehead.
Robert L. Case, Mount Olivet.
Marie C. Hagan, New Haven.
Ollie M. Lyon, Olive Hill.
Fred Acker, Paducah.
Jennie S. May, Stone.
Homer B. Burks, Upton.
Mary Breckinridge, Wendover.

MAINE

Charles W. Abbott, Albion.
George H. Williams, Alfred.
Walter O. Dunton, Boothbay Harbor.
George W. Leonard, Brunswick.
David H. Smith, Darkharbor.
Arnold D. Chase, Kezar Falls.
Charles P. Lemaire, Lewiston.
Hattie M. Higgins, Mapleton.
Edna M. Ellis, North Anson.

MASSACHUSETTS

Eva Fitzpatrick, Allerton.
John H. McDonald, Andover.
George G. Henry, Ashfield.
John F. Saunders, Baldwinsville.
Joseph P. Bartley, Barrowsville.
Matthew D. E. Tower, Becket.
Charles L. Goodspeed, Dennis.
Clarence S. Perkins, Essex.
Mildred D. O'Neil, Hyannis Port.
Arthur L. Cushing, Island Creek.
Mary M. Langen, Lancaster.
John E. Roche, Orange.
Myra H. Lumbert, Pocassett.
Florence S. Roddan, Randolph.
Mary E. Joseph, Truro.
Nellie G. McDonald, Ward Hill.
Raymond F. Gurney, Wilbraham.

MICHIGAN

Edson Porter, Blissfield.
Gerald R. Pitkin, Brighton.
Robert E. Lee, Byron.
Morton G. Wells, Byron Center.
Patrick H. Schannenk, Chassell.
Marian A. Cleary, Clawson.
Cyrenius P. Hunter, Gagetown.
Mason A. Wright, Gaines.
Glenn O. Donner, Garden City.
Herbert E. Gunn, Holt.
William H. Cuthbertson, Ludington.
Mary E. Devins, Michigamme.
George D. Mason, Montague.
Peter Trudell, Jr., Negaunee.
Eva A. Wurzburg, Northport.
Charles W. Tallant, Shelby.
Louis J. Braun, South Range.
Jerome Wilhelm, Traverse City.
Frank R. White, Webberville.
John F. Lyons, White Cloud.

MISSISSIPPI

Margaret Henry, Anguilla.
Will N. Guyton, Blue Mountain.
Clyde E. Day, Brookhaven.
Pearl S. Anderson, Centreville.
Harry L. Callicott, Coldwater.
Grace B. McIntosh, Collins.
James M. Thames, Decatur.
Ernest A. Temple, Electric Mills.
Finley B. Hewes, Gulfport.
Pink H. Morrison, Heidelberg.
Alline Jolly, Hickory.
Walter E. Dreaden, Lambert.
Burnell B. Hatten, Lyman.
Benjiman P. Albritton, McComb.
William M. Alexander, Moss Point.
Carson Hughes, Oakland.
John W. Woodward, Oxford.
R. Ben Linn, Pickens.
George D. Pylant, Purvis.
Henry B. Edwards, Shuqualak.
Tommie A. Hamill, Sturgis.
Lillie B. Carr, Sumner.
Walter L. Collins, Union.

NEW MEXICO

Agnes C. Evans, Shiprock.

NORTH DAKOTA

Henry D. Mack, Dickey.
Hugh Roan, Portal.
Damian A. Preske, St. Michael.

OHIO

Joseph A. Link, Carthagena.
A. Hulse Hays, Circleville.
Nathan A. McCoy, Sr., Columbus.
Fred A. Kenney, Delta.
Clifford B. Hyatt, Killbuck.
James E. Gallagher, Lancaster.
Fred W. Justus, Massillon.
Harry E. Miller, New Concord.
John Maurer, New Philadelphia.
Edwin Sommers, Ottawa.

OREGON

John Q. Buell, Chiloquin.
Sadie B. Jones, Oakridge.
Early Phillips, Scio.

WASHINGTON

James B. Robertson, Kettle Falls.
William E. Field, Quincy.
James E. Clark, Ryderwood.
John Maloney, Jr., Skykomish.
Pearl B. Burrill, Snoqualmie Falls.

WEST VIRGINIA

S. Cleveland Underwood, Bethany.
Emmett C. Andrick, Elizabeth.
John J. Walker, Follansbee.

Thomas T. Bambrick, Hollidays Cove.
Fred A. Burt, Mannington.
Justus O. Eakin, New Martinsville.
Mack Kiger, Paden City.
Anna M. Stephenson, Parkersburg.
Wilbur S. Moore, Pine Grove.
James J. Lovell, Point Pleasant.
William L. Brice, Wheeling.

WISCONSIN

John J. Riordan, Beloit.
Frank R. Hughes, Chippewa Falls.
Will Riley, Darlington.
Arthur G. Hoskins, Dodgeville.
Henry E. Steinbring, Fall Creek.
Oliver E. Neuens, Fredonia.
Leo M. Meyer, Loyal.
Earl D. Young, Melrose.
Levy Williamson, Mineral Point.
Louis W. Kurth, Neillsville.
Hilary T. Karis, Norwalk.
Arthur H. Gruenewald, Oshkosh.
Edmund J. Piechowski, Redgranite.
Peter P. Dandoneau, Rhinelander.
Stephen J. McShane, Rice Lake.
Charles F. Heald, Sheboygan Falls.
Nicholas Lucius, Jr., Solon Springs.
George W. Shenkenberg, Waterford.

WITHDRAWAL

Executive nomination withdrawn from the Senate January 30 (legislative day of Jan. 23), 1934

MEMBER OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Charles B. Henderson, of California, to be a member of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a term of 2 years from January 22, 1934, vice Wilson McCarthy, resigned, which was sent to the Senate January 23, 1934.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JANUARY 30, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Gracious Father in Heaven, we are still folded in Thy deep memory. Back of our appeals, back of our needs, back of our tendencies, and back of our sins stands the glorified, reigning Lord. From the throne of the universe Thou dost bestow upon us marvelous blessings of life and light. O send Thy glowing pathways through the unseen realms of our immortal souls. Be pleased to enter into a new relationship with us. If any hearts are heavy, let a heavenly harmony possess them. Fate will then only deepen the current, pain will only sweeten the tone, and the yoke will only enrich the melody. This day keep us mindful of that wayside shrine, namely, the Golden Rule. Then at its close there will be nothing lost, nothing forfeited, and all things turned to their higher use. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

IDA MAY ELLIS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 224

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Ida May Ellis, widow of George D. Ellis, late an employee of the House, an amount equal to 6 months' compensation, and an additional amount, not exceeding $250, to defray funeral expenses of the said George D. Ellis.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer another privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts (H.Res. 214) and ask its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the further expenses of conducting the investigation authorized by House Resolution 163, incurred by the Committee on the Judiciary, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $2,500, including expenditures for the employment of clerical, stenographic, and other assistance, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, on vouchers authorized by the committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

SEC. 2. That the official committee reporters shall serve said committee at its meetings in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from North Carolina tell us to what investigation this resolution relates?

Mr. WARREN. This is for the investigation of Judge Ritter in Florida.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman tell us something about it?

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman will recall that at the last session the House passed unanimously a resolution to investigate Judge Ritter, of Florida. As I recall, the investigation was made upon the judge's request. He concurred in the desire that there should be an investigation.

The subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee has already expended $2,500. The committee came before us again and has asked for an additional $2,500 but expressed the opinion that perhaps they would not need all of it.

Mr. HOOPER. Mr. Speaker, I think this is an entirely proper request on the part of this subcommittee. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER], the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], and myself make up this subcommittee. We held a week's hearing in Florida and kept expenses down to the very limit. We feel we will not be obliged to spend all of this money but believe there is one and perhaps two more lines of investigation we should pursue before we make our final report to the House.

Mr. SNELL. As I understood the resolution, the rest of the investigation is to be made in the District of Columbia. Is this right?

Mr. HOOPER. It will be done largely in the District, but an investigator might be sent into the Middle West.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts and ask its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 215

Resolved, That the further expenses of conducting the investigation authorized by House Resolution 145, incurred by the Committee on the Judiciary, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $10,000, including expenditures for the employment of clerical, stenographic, and other assistance, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, on vouchers authorized by the committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

SEC. 2. That the official committee reporters shall serve said committee at its meetings in the District of Columbia.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 4, strike out the figures "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$7,500."

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from North Carolina tell us about this resolution?

Mr. WARREN. This is a resolution that was authorized yesterday.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand from the gentleman's statement what investigation this relates to.

Mr. WARREN. At the last session the House passed a resolution empowering the Judiciary Committee to investigate certain bankruptcies in the Nation, and they were given $5,000. On yesterday the time for filing their report was extended, I think, until June 30, and they are asking for this additional $7,500 to fully complete the investigation now in progress.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from North Carolina if it is not a fact that at the time the resolution was passed last year we were assured the committee would not spend over $5,000; that they would keep within the $5,000? Now they are asking for more. The resolution as presented before amendment is for $10,000—just double the amount given them at the last session, though there has been added to the resolution a little palliative amendment reducing the amount to $7,500.

Mr. SNELL. Is not that the usual outcome of these legislative investigating committees?

Mr. BLANTON. It is a system that has grown up here during the last 12 years. It is simply outrageous. It grew up all through the Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover administrations.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman cannot lay the blame on me, because I have always opposed them.

Mr. BLANTON. And most of them originated from our friends on the other side of the aisle; but we Democrats are trying to keep our house in order; we are trying to keep things clean; and we are trying to keep the expenses of the Government down to the very minimum, regardless of precedents set by other Presidents.

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman from Texas must remember that the Committee on Accounts has no authority after the House has passed a resolution ordering an inquiry.

Mr. BLANTON. I know; it is just like the Committee on Appropriations; after the legislative committee speaks, you have got to carry out the will of the House. But when a committee comes in here and asks for $5,000 to make an investigation and assures the House that not more than $5,000 is to be spent, we Members on both sides of the aisle ought to be able to place some kind of dependence upon such assurance.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If the gentleman from Texas would talk to the members of the Judiciary Committee and find out what they have already disclosed, he would vote $100,000 to go on with this investigation. Something is going to result from this investigation.

Mr. BLANTON. I knew every bit of it before they ever had an investigation.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Why did not the gentleman tell the House all about it, then?

Mr. BLANTON. We all here who were posted on the subject knew about it. We knew then all about the abuses that have crept into these bankruptcy courts. We knew about the tremendous expense and the tremendous fees of receivers, outrageous fees of trustees and their attorneys, that have been paid in New York, Chicago, and other places in the Nation. We have known all about this for years, which has constituted a public scandal, and we ought to stop it without so much investigation and without so much expense.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly to the minority leader.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman from Texas has referred to what was done during the Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover administrations. I want to say to the gentleman that during 8 years of that time I was Chairman of the Rules Committee, and there is no man on the floor of this House who as consistently opposed investigations as I did during that entire time, and there is no time during the history of Congress that as few resolutions of that character were reported as during the time I was Chairman of the Rules Committee.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman from North Carolina will yield, I cannot forget the several hundred thousand dollars that were spent by the Graham smelling committee and the Walsh committee that lived for months in palatial palace and dining cars on the Pacific coast and by other wasteful committees.

Mr. SNELL. That was before my time as Chairman of the Rules Committee.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman was here during that time.

Mr. SNELL. The gentlemen on the other side of the aisle have consistently asked for these investigations. Now pay for them.

Mr. BLANTON. The distinguished gentleman from New York was on the floor when all of that was going on.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman from New York yield a moment?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. Let me say that I happen to know about one of the committees referred to as a smelling committee, because I was chairman; and we disclosed the fact that after an expenditure of $500,000,000 we never sent one more plane to the front, either bombing or pursuit plane, and all of our American aviators at that time were flying in planes borrowed from other countries.

Mr. BLANTON. And with all your Republican smelling you never put a single person connected with the Democratic administration in the penitentiary, but we Democrats put several high officials in the penitentiary during the succeeding administrations.

Mr. FREAR. I went to the Attorney General, and I told him he ought to be impeached at that time because he had not acted upon the report.

Mr. BLANTON. But, with great respect for our friend from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], you did not put anybody in the penitentiary, and we have put some of the gentleman's friends, including high Cabinet officers, in the penitentiary.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

I thought something would come up about these investigations at some time, so I have had a statement prepared showing all of the investigations that have been ordered during the last 4 Congresses, 2 under Republican control and 2 under Democratic control. The gentleman from New York knows, when he talks about opposing investigations, that there is no one on this floor who has opposed or voted against them more than I have, on the ground that most of them accomplish absolutely nothing.

Mr. SNELL. I think the gentleman is correct, and I agree with him.

Mr. WARREN. In the Seventieth and Seventy-first Congresses under Republican control there were 20 investigations ordered by the House of Representatives with a total authorization of $178,581.06. I wish to be fair and say that these investigations, of course, were completed, and there was turned back into the Treasury $61,933.11.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. There was $600,000 spent on the coal investigation alone.

Mr. WARREN. That was before these Congresses.

In the Seventy-second, and so far in the Seventy-third Congress, under Democratic control, only 12 investigations have been authorized by the House, amounting to $158,500. Of course, it is impossible to say how much will be turned back. Those that have already been completed show a turn-back of approximately $20,000. The bulk of all of these investigations, both under Republican and Democratic control, has been one item amounting to $150,000 by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which was unanimously passed without a murmur from either side of this House.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert these tables in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

SEVENTIETH AND SEVENTY-FIRST CONGRESSES—REPUBLICAN

Special investigating committees authorized by the House of Representatives from December 1927 to Mar. 3, 1931, inclusive

Item of investigation and authority therefor	Expenditure authorized	Amount expended	Balance of authorization unexpended
1. H.Res. 101, passed Jan. 26, 1928, District of Columbia Committee, investigating government of the District of Columbia, $2,000, and H.Res. No. 267, passed Jan. 14, 1929; authorized $1,500 additional	$3,500.00	$3,214.40	$285.60
2. S.Con.Res. 11, passed Mar. 4, 1929, seacoast aircraft investigation; House share authorized $1,000	1,000.00	----------	1,000.00
3. H.Res. 232, passed May 28, 1928, investigation of campaign expenditures; authorized $20,000	20,000.00	4,775.69	15,224.31
4. H. Res. 233, passed May 28, 1928, investigation of Federal prisons; authorized $20,000	20,000.00	6,257.01	13,742.99
5. H.Res. 252, 70th Cong., Committee on Ways and Means, investigation of the tariff	(1)	2,182.67	----------
6. H.Res. 18, passed Apr. 16, 1929, Committee on Ways and Means, investigation of the tariff; Public Act 1034, approved Mar. 4, 1929, authorized $2,500	2,500.00	2,232.81	267.19
7. H.Res. 113, passed Jan. 7, 1930, contested-election case of Wurtzbach v. McCloskey	(1)	1,359.59	----------
8. H.Res. 159, passed Feb. 19, 1930, contested-election case of Hill v. Palmisano	(1)	38.80	----------
9. H.Res. 141, passed Feb. 10, 1930, investigation branch banking; H.Res. 178, passed Mar. 27, 1930, authorized $3,500	3,500.00	2,375.67	1,124.33
10. H.Res. 235, passed June 30, 1930, contested-election case of Lawrence v. Milligan	(1)	----------	----------
11. H.Res. 220, investigation communist propaganda, etc.; H.Res. 250, passed June 13, 1930, authorized $25,000	25,000.00	19,225.45	5,774.55
12. H.Res. 114, passed Jan. 24, 1930, Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, investigation holding companies—common carriers; H.Res. 134, passed Feb. 4, 1930, authorized $25,000 and H.Res. 274, passed July 22, 1930, authorized $25,000 additional	50,000.00	39,755.54	10,244.46
13. H.Res. 258, passed June 24, 1930, investigation campaign expenditures; H.Res. 275, passed June 27, 1930, authorized $10,000	10,000.00	----------	----------
14. H.Res. 284, passed July 1, 1930, investigation of Judge Deaver, of Georgia; authorized $5,000	5,000.00	174.92	4,825.08
15. H.Res. 191, passed June 13, 1930, investigation of Judge Anderson of Tennessee; authorized $5,000, and H.Res. 305, passed Dec. 3, 1930, authorized $5,000 additional	10,000.00	8,609.03	1,390.97
16. H.Res. 285, investigation fiscal relations of United States and the District of Columbia; H.Res. 329, passed Jan. 9, 1931, authorized $10,000	10,000.00	9,499.02	500.98
17. H.Res. 139, Committee on Appropriations, investigation of Mediterranean fruit fly; H.Res. 151, passed Feb. 18, 1930, authorized $3,500	3,500.00	2,896.86	603.14
18. S.J.Res. 216, approved Mar. 4, 1929, joint committee investigation District of Columbia airport; House share, authorized $1,000	1,000.00	357.00	643.00
19. H.J.Res. 431, approved Mar. 2, 1929, investigation of Judge Moscowitz of New York; $5,000	5,000.00	2,010.20	2,989.80
20. H.J.Res. 425, approved Feb. 26, 1929, investigation of Judge Winslow of New York; authorized $5,000	5,000.00	1,683.29	3,316.71
	178,581.06	----------	61,933.11

[1] Actual expenses.

NOTE.—All the above investigations completed.

SEVENTY-SECOND AND SEVENTY-THIRD CONGRESSES—DEMOCRATIC

Special investigating committees authorized by the House of Representatives from December 1931 to Jan. 15, 1934, inclusive

Item of investigation and authority therefor	Expenditure authorized	Amount expended	Balance of authorization unexpended
1. H.Res. 59, passed Jan. 19, 1932, Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, investigating holding companies. H.Res. 115, passed Jan. 27, 1932, authorizes $50,000 to carry out provisions of H.Res. 59	$50,000	$45,736.56	$4,263.44
H.J.Res. 572, approved Mar. 3, 1933, continued the above investigation during the Seventy-third Congress and authorized $50,000 additional for expenses to be paid out of the contingent fund; however, public act 442, also approved Mar. 3, 1933, provided a specific appropriation for the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce amounting to $35,000 under the terms of H.J.Res. 572, leaving a balance of $15,000 additional to be paid out of the contingent fund	50,000	26,264.54	[1] 23,735.46

[1] $8,735.46 to be paid out of specific appropriation, Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, balance $15,000 to be paid out of contingent fund, special and select committees.

SEVENTY-SECOND AND SEVENTY-THIRD CONGRESSES—DEMOCRATIC—Con.

Special investigating committees authorized by the House of Representatives from December 1931 to Jan. 15, 1934, inclusive—Continued

Item of investigation and authority therefor	Expenditure authorized	Amount expended	Balance of authorization unexpended
2. H.Res. 72, passed Feb. 8, 1932, Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, investigating value of silver, etc. H.Res. 136, passed Feb. 13, 1932, authorized $5,000 for this purpose	$5,000	$2,301.27	[1] $2,698.73
3. H.Res. 201, passed June 18, 1932, Special Committee to Investigate Campaign Expenditures; H.Res. 202, passed June 21, 1932, authorized $10,000 for this purpose	10,000	1,649.61	[1] 8,350.39
4. H.Res. 239, passed June 2, 1932, Special Committee of Judiciary Committee, investigating Judge Louderback of California. Same resolution carrying $5,000 authorization; H.Res. 72, passed Mar. 22, 1933, continued this investigation during the 73d Cong. and authorized the unexpended balance ($3,230.25) of H.Res. 239 to be used	5,000	3,409.26	[1] 1,590.74
5. H.Res. 226, passed June 21, 1932, Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, investigating activities of Post Office Department; H.Res. 273, passed June 24, 1932, authorized $5,000 for this purpose; H.Res. 59 and 98, passed Apr. 11, 1933, continued this investigation during the 73d Cong. and authorized the unexpended balance ($2,554.51) of H.Res. 273 to be used	5,000	3,228.97	1,771.03
6. H.Res. 235, passed May 31, 1932, Special Committee Investigating Government Competition with Private Enterprise; H.Res. 271, passed June 21, 1932, authorized $10,000 for this purpose; H.Res. 343, passed Jan. 10, 1933, authorized $3,500 additional	13,500	13,497.44	[1] 2.56
7. H.Res. 120, passed Apr. 26, 1933, Committee on Judiciary, investigating Judge Lowell of Massachusetts; H.Res. 132, passed May 8, 1933, authorized $5,000 for this purpose	5,000	199.72	[1] 4,800.28
8. H.Res. 146, passed June 1, 1933, Committee on Civil Service, to investigate Civil Service Commission re States' quota in making appointments. No funds authorized	----------	----------	----------
9. H.Res. 163, passed June 1, 1933, Committee on the Judiciary, investigating Judge Ritter of Florida; H.Res. 172, passed June 9, 1933, authorized $2,500 for this purpose	2,500	2,002.71	497.29
10. H.Res. 183, passed June 10, 1933, Committee on Ways and Means, investigating revenue laws; H.Res. 184, passed June 10, 1933, authorized $5,000	5,000	2,204.13	2,795.87
11. H.Res. 145, passed June 12, 1933, Committee on the Judiciary, investigating bankruptcy proceedings and receiverships; H.Res. 189, passed June 13, 1933, authorized $5,000 for this purpose	5,000	4,306.75	693.25
12. H.Con.Res. 15, passed Apr. 10, 1933, Joint Committee Investigating Wreck of Dirigible Akron, House share $2,500	2,500	2,220.19	[1] 279.81
	158,500	----------	----------

[1] Investigation completed.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution and amendment thereto.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

HOUSE MEMBERS MISREPRESENTED

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, several Members of the House have received communications from their veterans condemning them for voting for what is known as the so-called "gag rule" just before the passage of the independent offices appropriation bill. The veterans have charged them with betrayal, because they voted for this rule.

They give as their authority the National Tribune dated Thursday, January 18, 1934, in which the headline is, "Vicious gag rule is forced through House to stop legislation for vets." Then the next headline and the first paragraph of this article leaves the impression that the adoption of the rule prevented legislation that would have been beneficial to the veterans.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to insert these statements in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, just to ask a question, not to be taken out of the gentleman's time, may I ask my colleague whether or not the editor of this paper is Rice W. Means?

Mr. PATMAN. I understand Gen. Rice W. Means is the president of the company that owns the paper.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman will remember that in 1931 I got the House of Representatives to print House Document No. 802, Seventy-first Congress, third session, showing the names of all emergency officers who, claiming to be disabled, were retired on pay; and if the gentleman will look on page 37 of that report, House Document No. 802, he will find this same newspaper president, Rice W. Means, succeeded in getting himself retired at $240.62 per month for life, on the ground of bad hearing, in addition to his regular salary as president. His first check for back allowance was for the sum of $1,549.53, and he continued to draw his monthly retired pay of $240.62 per month until we stopped him last year. I cannot forget that as to his hearing a very prominent official of the American Legion stated that Mr. Rice W. Means might be deaf because he did not think he could hear a pin drop on a soft carpet farther than two blocks away. He was taken off this disabled retired officers' roll last year, and incidentally lost $240.62 a month, until he can prove that he is deaf and cannot hear a pin drop on a soft carpet as far as two blocks away.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. The National Tribune, published here in Washington, of date January 18, 1934, has the following headline in large bold-face type:

Vicious gag rule is forced through House to stop legislation for vets.

Another headline with type hardly so large, but large bold-face type, as follows:

Largest part of cut in independent offices appropriations bill is made at expense of disabled ex-service men and their dependents—action taken at behest of White House, according to Democratic leaders.

The first paragraph of the article is as follows:

To secure passage of the independent offices appropriation bill without any amendments which might mean anything, the House last Thursday adopted a special rule which Minority Leader SNELL, of New York, described as "the most vicious, the most far-reaching special rule that has ever been brought on the floor of the American Congress." Most of the money appropriated under this measure goes for the relief of disabled veterans and their dependents.

With reference to the retired emergency officers, it is true that 4,500 of them were eliminated from the rolls, and to my mind this legislation has been more harmful to all veterans than any legislation that has ever been passed. I do not think Congress will ever authorize these 4,500 to be reinstated on the rolls. I shall not go into details and tell you why I think they should be excluded, but it is my judgment they should never have been on the rolls, and the law never contemplated they should be there.

Anyway, General Means, the president of this company, has permitted to be issued the statement that Members of the House forced through this so-called "gag rule" to prevent the veterans' legislation being corrected. In truth and in fact, that so-called "gag rule" did not affect veterans at all.

NEWSPAPER CLAIMS IT IS VOICE OF THE VETERANS OF THE UNITED STATES

I have received many letters from Members of the House in regard to this erroneous headline and the false, misleading information that was thereby disseminated by this newspaper which advertises that it is "the voice of the veterans of the United States." One of such letters received by me contained the following paragraph which conveys practically the same information as was contained in all of them:

One of our Spanish War camps is on the warpath against me, the commotion being caused by a charge that in standing by the President on the question of continuing 10 percent of the pay cut for Government employees another year, I voted against the veterans. I am not bitterly condemned for voting for this so-called "gag rule" by the Federal employees, but by the veterans.

Many of the letters state that World War veterans are also claiming that their representatives in Congress betrayed them by voting for the rule.

WHAT ARE FACTS?

Did the adoption of the so-called "gag rule" prevent any Member of this body from introducing an amendment to the bill that would have been in order had the rule not been adopted? Not one. Where is the foundation for the statement that "vicious gag rule is forced through House to stop legislation for vets"? There is no foundation for it at all.

CORRECTION SHOULD BE MADE

I presume General Means wants to be fair. I think he should correct that statement. It is not the truth. It does not touch the truth. It is not even part true. There is no semblance of truth to it, and since there is not, certainly he ought to correct the statement and prevent these people from telling their Members of Congress that they have betrayed them in regard to veterans' legislation when they voted for that rule.

CHALLENGE

When the so-called "gag rule" was before Congress, it did not affect the veterans at all for this reason: After the rule was passed any amendment that would have been in order to that bill anyway was still in order, and right now I challenge any Member of this House to name one amendment on that bill that was excluded from consideration in regard to veterans, which was excluded by reason of the adoption of the so-called "gag rule". So if there is a Member of the House who knows of such an amendment, I believe now is the time for him to get up and say so.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; I will be pleased to yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman said the rule did not have anything to do with veterans' legislation.

Mr. PATMAN. I said it did not exclude any amendment. The reference here is that, by reason of the adoption of the rule, an amendment in regard to veterans was excluded.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. But previous to that the gentleman stated it had nothing to do with veterans' legislation.

Mr. PATMAN. I said it did not exclude any amendment in regard to veterans' legislation. In other words, the adoption of the rule was in no way harmful to veterans' benefits.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It prevented you from doing something for the widows of Civil War veterans?

Mr. PATMAN. Oh, no. The gentleman is absolutely mistaken. Is that the only point the gentleman makes?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. No; I am just pointing out that one, and the gentleman knows that is correct.

Mr. PATMAN. All right; name any others. The gentleman does not even claim that Spanish-American or World War veterans were affected. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] voted for the Economy Act. He is not in a position to do much complaining. I voted against it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 more minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOTT, Mr. BRITTEN, and Mr. HOEPPEL rose.

Mr. PATMAN. I want to yield to anyone who wants to say that any such amendment was excluded.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How about the widows of veterans of Indian wars and Spanish-American War veterans?

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman asks a question by naming Spanish-American War veterans and Indian-war widows. I say that he is wrong. The members of the Rules Committee say he is wrong. I therefore ask him to present his proof, if not now, at a later date, if he says they were affected.

Mr. MOTT. I assume the gentleman does not admit that that gag rule excluded any and every amendment to the bill.

Mr. PATMAN. So far as veterans are concerned, it did not exclude any amendment that would have been in order had the rule not been adopted.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman is talking about something that was not in the bill, anyway.

Mr. PATMAN. I want to yield to anyone who says that this so-called "gag rule" excluded an amendment in regard to veterans or affected veterans in any way.

Mr. MOTT. The fact is the gag rule excluded all amendments.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman does not name any more, so I shall not yield further.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. Did not that gag rule make in order under an appropriation bill a continuation of the provisions of the economy bill, as it related to Federal employees?

Mr. PATMAN. Pay cuts of Federal employees; yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. And in order to continue that pay cut for another year, you had to bring in some legislation here to continue the so-called "economy bill."

Mr. PATMAN. But we are not talking about Federal employees.

Mr. BOILEAU. And if that question had been brought up here, you would have put in some legislation in regard to veterans as well as Federal employees.

Mr. PATMAN. That does not touch the issue because we are talking about veterans only. The National Tribune referred to veterans.

Mr. BOILEAU. But that rule was brought in for the purpose of continuing the provisions of the Economy Act.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman has asked if Indian war veterans and Spanish-American War veterans were affected.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And the Civil War, too.

Mr. PATMAN. I wish to yield to anybody who says that the rule affected veterans. I also request any Member to present his proof that veterans or their dependents were affected in any way.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that if there had been no gag rule there would not have been a single amendment in order anyway that in any wise would have affected the veterans.

Mr. PATMAN. Then why should there be put out a headline like this, "Vicious gag rule is forced through House to stop legislation for vets"?

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I will be glad to yield if the gentleman knows of any amendment in regard to veterans that was excluded by reason of the so-called "gag rule." I refer particularly to Spanish-American and World War veterans and their dependents.

Mr. BRITTEN. I should like to ask the gentleman why the gag rule was brought to the floor of the House?

Mr. PATMAN. In order to make uniform the pay cuts. In other words, we had up the independent offices appropriation bill and we were going to adopt the policy, right or wrong, that there should not be any increase in pay of employees next year over this year, except 5 percent commencing in July. If we were going to make such a reduction effective as to independent offices, including the Executive Office, the Federal Trade Commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and all the others, certainly, when the Department of Agriculture bill would come up, when the Interior Department bill would come up, and when all the other appropriation bills would come up, we should provide a uniform reduction for all employees. This is the only reason in the world that the rule was adopted.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is it not a fact that the gentleman's speech today is made necessary by embarrassment on that side of the House, because the gentleman himself and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] did everything in their power always to embarrass Mr. Hoover in connection with the veterans' legislation? The gentleman is apologizing for that gag rule. He is ashamed of himself, ashamed of the administration. He does not say so, but that is the reason he is making the speech. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. PATMAN. Why should I be ashamed when I have done nothing that will in any way jeopardize the rights of the veterans? Certainly we should not be ashamed, because there is nothing to be ashamed of. I am not apologizing, because I have nothing to apologize for, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am talking about the embarrassment of the administration.

Mr. PATMAN. I am talking about the gag rule. The administration is not embarrassed. The worst gag rule that ever passed this House was put over by the Republicans. One time in June 1930 it came like a clap out of a clear sky. There was a bill circulated here in regard to disability allowance. It was intended to forestall, and did, the Rankin bill that helped border-line cases. I did not know it was coming, you did not know it was coming, but the President sent it up here and in 5 minutes it was in the hands of every man on the floor. It was put through under a gag rule allowing 20 minutes' debate on each side, a bill that never had been considered by a committee of the House or a committee of the Senate. Can you conceive of a more vicious gag rule for forcing through a bill that never had been considered in committee of either House of the Congress? That ought to be a complete answer to the gentleman as to gag rules. Such gag rule deprived many service-connected cases of their just compensation. Every special rule may be called a gag rule because it does change the general rules of the House.

Mr. BYRNS. If the gentleman will yield, I want to say in answer to the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois that he should not be taken seriously because the Washington Post told us several weeks ago that he was one of those who had been delegated to come on the floor of the House and sit here for the purpose of criticizing rather than offering constructive suggestions. [Applause.] And may I say further to the gentleman that judging from the record heretofore the gentleman is performing his duty. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] voted for the Economy Act. He is not in a very favorable position to complain. Let me say I do not object to criticism nor censure, but I do object to being misrepresented.

The National Tribune story misrepresents every Member of the House that voted for the so-called "gag rule", which was the least of a gag brought on this floor for a long time. I think the gentleman who is responsible for this article ought to apologize.

Mr. FADDIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. FADDIS. Will not the gentleman admit that a proper analysis of the situation is that the defeat of the gag rule would have admitted veteran legislation?

Mr. PATMAN. The veterans' legislation was not affected by reason of the adoption of the rule.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TRUAX. I should like to ask the gentleman if he is in favor of a complete restoration of the appropriation for veterans' non-service-connected disability?

Mr. PATMAN. That is foreign to this matter, but I am in favor of restoring all service-connected cases and a uniform pension law which will eventually restore all service-connected cases. As I said before, I think this man should apologize for his statement. [Applause.]

FUTURE LEGISLATION FOR VETERANS

The retired emergency officers who were stricken from the rolls by reason of Public, No. 2, are endeavoring to popularize the slogan "Repeal the Economy Act." As one who voted against the so-called "Economy Act", I do not claim that is the way to help the veterans at this time. It is just my opinion—I am not speaking for a single veteran—but I believe an outright repeal would place back into the hands of our enemies the same weapons to slay us with that they had before the passage of the act. On the next uprising of public sentiment the veterans might lose more than they did this time. It is my opinion that we should at this time endeavor to restore all service connected 100 percent, and work toward the adoption of a uniform pension law for both veterans of all wars and their dependents. We cannot expect to recover all our lost ground very quickly. We must cultivate public sentiment to sustain our position as we recover this lost ground. We would render the veterans a disservice if we were to force back on the pension rolls the cases that have been condemned by public opinion; that would again excite public opinion against all veterans.

CASES NOT SUPPORTED BY PUBLIC OPINION

Let us review a few of the cases that were condemned and that were not successfully defended:

First. Retired emergency officers. These officers claimed that they should receive retirement pay of the same amount as the Regular Army officers who served with them. On first blush this seems very reasonable. A Regular Army officer is entitled to retirement when he has suffered a 30-percent permanent disability; he has selected the Army as his life's work and he is not able further to perform that life's work efficiently when he is disabled 30 percent or more, so he is retired with the privilege of receiving, the remainder of his life, from $106 to $416 a month, depending upon his rank at the time of his retirement. The emergency officer with a 30-percent permanent disability is not necessarily disabled 100 percent from carrying on his life's work, which is not the Army. He is disabled in proportion to the effect his disability will have on his occupation or profession. Presuming for the sake of discussion that the emergency officers should receive these large amounts in order to prevent a discrimination between them and the Regular Army officers and they are retired on the same basis, a greater discrimination is thereby created between the emergency enlisted men and the emergency officers. For example, John and Jim Doe, brothers, entered the service for the emergency. John had an opportunity of becoming, and did become, an officer for the emergency—only a small percentage had that opportunity. John was a captain and Jim, although qualified to be an officer, remained an enlisted man because the opportunity never presented itself. John and Jim were injured in the service in exactly the same way, a disability that was rated 30 percent permanent. John, a captain, receives $150 a month under the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act, while Jim receives a maximum of $30 a month. John, as such officer, received officers pay, quarters, and allowances while in the service, and he did not always go unattended by enlisted men, who were at his service. Jim received $30 a month for home service and a 10 percent increase for service overseas, and from that amount he paid his allotments, his insurance, his laundry, barber, tailor, shoe repair, and other bills.

Do not get me wrong. There were approximately 6,000 such officers on the retirement roll before March 20, 1933. About 4,500 of them have been stricken off. The 1,500 remaining are practically all battle casualties. I never expect to do anything to disturb the battle casualties, and I am sure public sentiment will support them, if the roll is not loaded down with nonbattle casualties to the extent that all veterans' legislation will be jeopardized by them. The 4,500 stricken off will hereafter receive the same compensation for the same disability as their comrades who were enlisted men.

Second. Veterans who did not enlist until after November 11, 1918, received the same compensation for disability as battle casualties prior to March 20, 1933.

Third. Veterans who were suffering from willful misconduct received the same compensation for disability as battle casualties prior to March 20, 1933. There is much to be said in favor of many of these veterans, but I doubt that public sentiment will sustain putting all of them back on the pension rolls at battle-casualty rates. They are all entitled to hospitalization under present laws and regulations.

Fourth. Rich veterans received pensions and hospitalization for non-service-connected disabilities prior to March 20, 1933.

OUTRIGHT REPEAL OF ECONOMY ACT NOT RIGHT WAY TO HELP DESERVING VETERANS

If we repeal the Economy Act outright, the 4,500 emergency officers will be restored to the rolls immediately. The after-war and willful-misconduct cases will also be restored at battle-casualty pay and they will be able to stay in the hospitals and soldiers' homes at Government expense and draw the full amount of compensation; the rich veterans will again receive the benefits formerly enjoyed for non-service-connected disabilities. Do you believe such action will receive the support of the people? And do you believe such action will help the veterans?

WHAT SHOULD BE DONE

We should keep in mind restoring at the earliest possible date all the most deserving and meritorious veterans and their dependents 100 percent and the adoption of a uniform pension law for both veterans and dependents of all wars and never again have placed on the pension rolls cases that will not receive the approval of the people or cases that cannot be successfully defended before the people. I know of a number of border-line cases that should be service connected. A large number of veterans drew disability allowance but should have been drawing service-connected pay.

THE SO-CALLED "NATIONAL ECONOMY LEAGUE"

The National Economy League, in making a report to its members a few days ago, stated that the organization was very much displeased because in the compromise plan for veterans at the end of the last session of Congress payment of pensions to Spanish-American War veterans, whose disabilities were not of service origin, were allowed, and stated:

> It is important, of course, because of the precedent as to World War non-service-connected cases.

The officials of the National Economy League also expressed themselves as being displeased with the President's stand in permitting the compromise to go through. The officials stated:

> We wish the President had stood fast by the league's policy. We wish that he had put his back to the wall and fought. We believe that an appeal to the American people would have overwhelmed once more a cowardly and treacherous Congress. But if they win on a compromise now, the President will surely have to go to the mat in a desperate fight with the corrupting soldier's lobbies next session. We are sorry that he gave in far enough to let Congress taste long-forbidden blood in adding $60,000,000 to the administration's pension expenditures. (As a matter of fact, counting all the committee's work on the compromise, more than $150,000,000 were added.)

The National Economy League was an outlaw organization in that the officers trampled the law under foot and refused to divulge to the people the names of the contributors and the amount contributed, as required by the Corrupt Practices Act of 1925. There was a good reason why the officials refused to divulge this information. On that list would have been found the names of war profiteers, slackers, goldbrickers, tax evaders, bribe takers, and bribe givers. Anyway, the organization had charge of the four great means of communication—the newspapers, radio, screen, and stage. By resorting to all kinds of false representations, the country was sold on the theory that such a law as Public, No. 2, should be enacted. The veterans' organizations were negligent, so were veterans generally in that they made no proper attempt to defend themselves before the country.

TO ESTABLISH THE COMPOSITION OF THE UNITED STATES NAVY

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules I call up House Resolution 235, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H.R. 6604, a bill to establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties; to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels; and for other purposes. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill, and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the resolution as drafted provides for 2 hours of general debate. It was the intention of the committee that it should provide for 3 hours of debate. I ask unanimous consent that the word "two" in line 11, page 1, be stricken out and that the word "three" be inserted in lieu thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

This resolution makes provision for the consideration of the Vinson bill, H.R. 6604, to establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties; to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels; and for other purposes. The Navy Department laid out a building program intended to cover a period of 5 years, and in the report made by the Acting Secretary of the Navy in December it was estimated that the carrying out of the program would call for an expenditure of $380,000,000. Later, in the hearing before the Naval Affairs Committee, the statement was made that if construction is to be had under regulations or rules of the N.R.A., an additional 25 percent would have to be added. In other words, the carrying out of the program would call for an annual expenditure under the N.R.A. of approximately $90,000,000 for the next 5 years.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman state that total again, please?

Mr. COX. That would make a total of in the neighborhood of $470,000,000, or an annual expenditure of $90,000,000. The proposal has the approval of the Budget and is in line with the financial policies of the administration.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The Director of the Budget, in his letter which is found in the report, does not recommend the expenditure of $470,000,000 but merely says that he is willing that the Congress should consider it. Is not that right?

Mr. COX. That is not quite accurate.

Mr. BLANTON. Here is his exact language:

You are advised that, insofar as the financial program of the President is concerned, there is no objection to your submitting this proposed legislation to Congress for its consideration. This action is taken with the understanding that, if such legislation be enacted into law, no commitment can now be made as to when and at what rate of progress the construction of the naval vessels in reference may be undertaken.

That is signed by Mr. Douglas, Director of the Budget.

My question is this: Is this in accord with the appeal that the President of the United States, so recent as May 16, 1933, made to all the peoples of the world?

Mr. COX. With respect to what?

Mr. BLANTON. With respect to a limitation of armament, with respect to getting out of this eternal war building and getting ready for war, looking more to peace than to war. I refer to the earnest and eloquent appeal that our President made to the sovereigns and presidents of the nations of the world.

Mr. COX. The proposal is in line with every representation or appeal made by the President.

Mr. BLANTON. Then would the gentleman be fair enough to show us one word from the President asking that the $470,000,000 be authorized?

Mr. COX. The Acting Secretary of the Navy, appearing before the Naval Affairs Committee, gave testimony to the effect that the proposal did have the approval of the President.

Mr. BLANTON. And is he the spokesman for the President?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; he is.

Mr. BLANTON. I doubt it, on naval building. He may be the spokesman for the gentleman from Illinois on naval building.

Mr. COX. It was developed in the hearings before the committee, and it is well known throughout the world, that the United States has favored a limitation of armament and has evidenced that in many ways, particularly by voluntarily destroying a great part of its Navy. The other signatory powers to the Washington and London Treaties have not seen fit to reduce armament, but on the other hand, as was disclosed in the hearing before the committee, proceeded to build up to treaty limitations. The United States finds itself in the position of falling far behind other powers, and is undertaking now to simply grant an authorization for appropriations that come later on, for the bringing of our own Navy up to treaty limitations. And let me say to the gentleman that there was not a note of discord in the entire hearing before the committee. The proposal comes with the unanimous endorsement of the committee reporting the bill. The only dissatisfaction with the report and the bill, as indicated in the hearings, was to the effect that it did not make provision for immediate execution of the plan; but the gentleman will understand that the bill simply provides for building as rapidly as permissible under the treaties. The Government could not now undertake to build all vessels that are provided for in the bill, but it simply proposes to authorize construction as rapidly as possible within the treaties and as soon as permissible under the treaties.

Mr. BLANTON. May I ask one more question?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The great President of the United States now in the White House is not timid about sending us messages asking for what he wants. He sends us frequent messages, embracing one of January 25, 1934, asking us to appropriate $75,000 for the District Alcohol Beverage Control Board, and $12,793 for the office of corporation counsel. If he wants this $470,000,000 expended on naval armament, in addition to the millions already authorized, why has he not sent us a special message asking Congress to provide it?

Mr. COX. The gentleman must know that no member of the President's official family would dare come to the Congress and make a recommendation which was out of line with the President's view.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I have been sitting across the table from these heads of departments, and I wish the gentleman could hear some of the requests that I hear once in a while that are not in strict accord with the President's financial program.

Mr. COX. I am not prepared to concede by any means that the Secretary of the Navy would make a representation to a committee of this House which was contrary to the wishes of his chief.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. For the information of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], let me read exactly the testimony that was given at the hearing when I was examining the Assistant Secretary of the Navy. He is the civilian representative of the Executive in naval matters at this time:

The CHAIRMAN. To sum up this bill, it proposes to bring the Navy up to treaty strength; is that right?

Colonel ROOSEVELT. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. That is what the bill seeks to accomplish?
Colonel ROOSEVELT. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. And that has the approval of the Navy Department?
Colonel ROOSEVELT. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. It has the approval of the Director of the Budget?
Colonel ROOSEVELT. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. And it has the approval of the administration, the objective to bringing the Navy up to treaty strength as rapidly as Congress provides the money with which to do so?
Colonel ROOSEVELT. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. You state it will cost approximately $76,600,000 each year?
Colonel ROOSEVELT. Yes, sir. * * *
The CHAIRMAN. And this has the sanction and approval of the administration?
Colonel ROOSEVELT. Yes, sir.

Let me say to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] that when the Budget permitted the bill to come to the Navy Department and then to Congress it had the sanction and approval and endorsement of the administration. The Assistant Secretary of the Navy is the spokesman for the Executive on naval matters, and when he stated it had his endorsement it is equivalent to having a special message sent to the Congress.

Mr. COX. That is as I understand the situation.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. My friend from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] ought to check up and find out how many million dollars outside of the Budget recommendations this Secretary of the Navy was able to get from the P.W.A. after Congress had limited the appropriation to Budget authorizations. For this year Congress gave the Navy $308,669,562, and as soon as Congress adjourned requests for additional sums were made to the Public Works Board, and the Navy secured from it the additional sum of $277,265,924.

Mr. COX. We know that.

Mr. BLANTON. And after Congress had given the War Department for this year $349,523,278, as recommended by the President's Budget, the Secretary of War went down there to the Public Works Board, of which he is a member, after the Congress had adjourned and got an additional $333,721,227 from Mr. Secretary Ickes and his Public Works Board.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. And every dollar was given by permission of the Executive.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I doubt that very seriously. I believe that much of it was put over on the Executive; for it was not consistent with the Budget the President sent to Congress.

Mr. COX. Let me say, in response to a request from the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DREWRY], the Acting Secretary of the Navy inserted in the hearings before the committee certain tables. Unless these tables have been printed in the RECORD and are available to Members of the House and the country, they should go in the RECORD at this time. I wonder if the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] intends to put them in?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I trust the gentleman will put them in himself.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. When the gentleman revises his remarks, I suggest that he take care of the statement made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] in which he said that the President was continually sending messages up here on the most trivial subjects. I disagree with him.

Mr. BLANTON. No; I said he was not too timid to send us a message on January 25, 1934, for an appropriation as trivial as $75,000 for an Alcoholic Beverage Board, and $12,793 for the corporation counsel's office, to put into execution the District liquor bill.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, this is an open rule, and I cannot conceive of anyone having objection to its adoption in order that the bill may come up for consideration.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks certain tables that were inserted in the hearings before the committee by the Acting Secretary of the Navy.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATISTICAL TABLES ON PRINCIPAL NAVIES OF THE WORLD

FOREWORD

When the London Treaty took effect it specified that the naval strengths of the signatory powers should not, on December 31, 1936, exceed certain limits as given below in table I.

The treaty prohibits replacement tonnage being "laid down more than 3 years before the year in which a vessel to be replaced becomes over-age, but this period is reduced to 2 years in the case of any replacement surface vessel not exceeding 3,000 tons standard displacement." Thus replacement tonnage for a vessel becoming over-age on the 31st of December 1936 and exceeding 3,000 tons could have been laid down on January 1, 1933, practically 4 years in advance. This was limited, however, in the case of capital ships, by the treaty stipulation barring any replacement tonnage in this category being laid down before the 31st of December 1936.

The treaty defines over-age as follows under Rules for replacement in annex I of the treaty.

"A vessel shall be deemed to be over-age when the following number of years have elapsed since the date of its completion:

"(a) For a surface vessel exceeding 3,000 tons, but not exceeding 10,000 tons standard displacement: (1) If laid down before the 1st of January 1920, 16 years; (2) if laid down after the 31st of December 1919, 20 years.

"(b) For a surface vessel not exceeding 3,000 tons standard displacement: (1) If laid down before the 1st of January 1921, 12 years; (2) if laid down after the 31st of December 1920, 16 years.

"(c) For a submarine: 13 years."

In addition the Rules for replacement stipulate that "In the event of loss or accidental destruction a vessel may be immediately replaced."

In all tables showing ships building, appropriated for, or projected the tonnages given under these headings are approximate or estimated. The actual standard tonnages as defined by the treaty cannot be determined until the ships are completed.

TABLE I.—Treaty allowances—Under the terms of the Washington and London Treaties the following maximum tonnages and/or numbers of ships in the various categories are allowed

Category	United States		British Empire		Japan		France		Italy
	Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons
Capital ships [1]	15	525,000	15	525,000	9	315,000	(2)	175,000	(2)	175,000
Aircraft carriers [3]	(2)	135,000	(2)	135,000	(2)	81,000	(2)	60,000	(2)	60,000
Cruisers:
A [4]	18	180,000	15	146,800	12	108,400	(5)		(5)
B [6]	(2)	143,500	(2)	192,200	(2)	100,450	(5)		(5)
Destroyers:
Over 1,500 tons [7]	(2)	24,000	(2)	24,000	24	40,800	(5)		(5)
Not over 1,500 tons [8]	(2)	126,000	(2)	126,000	(2)	64,700	(5)		(5)
Submarines [9]	(2)	52,700	(2)	52,700	(2)	52,700	(5)		(5)
Total		1,186,200		1,201,700		763,050

[1] Not to exceed 35,000 tons, with guns not in excess of 16 inches.
[2] Not limited as to number of vessels, but limited to tonnage.
[3] Not to exceed 27,000 tons (except not more than 2 of not more than 33,000 tons allowed) with guns not in excess of 8 inches; 10,000-ton carriers restricted to guns not in excess of 6.1 inches.
[4] Not to exceed 10,000 tons, with guns in excess of 6.1 inches, but not to exceed 8 inches.
[5] France and Italy did not ratify the London Treaty fixing allowances in these categories.
[6] Not to exceed 10,000 tons, with guns not in excess of 6.1 inches.
[7] Not to exceed 1,850 tons, with guns not in excess of 5.1 inches.
[8] With guns not in excess of 5.1 inches.
[9] Not to exceed 2,000 tons, with guns not in excess of 5.1 inches (except that 3 not exceeding 2,800 tons, with guns not in excess of 6.1 inches allowed).

TABLE II.—United States existing and projected tonnages compared with treaty allowances as of Nov. 1, 1933

Category (1)	Treaty allowance (first credit) (2)		Vessels built that will be under-age on Dec. 31, 1936 (first debit) (3)		Building under Increase of Navy (second debit) (4)		Building under N.I.R.A. funds (third debit) (5)
	Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons
Capital ships	15	525,000	8	251,600	None		None
Aircraft carriers		135,000	2	66,000	1	13,800	2	40,000
Cruisers:
A	18	180,000	10	92,650	6	60,000	[3] 1	10,000
B		143,500	10	70,500	1	10,000	3	30,000
Destroyers:
Over 1,500 tons		24,000	None		4	7,400	4	7,400
Not over 1,500 tons		126,000	None		8	12,000	16	24,000
Submarines		52,700	18	24,810	2	2,260	4	5,200
Total		1,186,200	48	505,560	22	105,460	30	116,600

Category (1)	Tonnage remaining unprovided for (2)—(3+4+5) (first balance) (6)		Additional replacement tonnage that can be laid down before Dec. 31, 1936 (see foreword) (second credit) (7)		Total remaining tonnage that can be laid down before Dec. 31, 1936 (6)—(7) (present balance) (8)
	Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons
Capital ships	(1)		(1)		(1)
Aircraft carriers		15,200	None			15,200
Cruisers:
A	1	17,350	None		[3] 1	17,350
B		33,000	[4] 2	14,100		[4] 47,100
Destroyers:
Over 1,500 tons		9,200	None			9,200
Not over 1,500 tons		90,000	None			90,000
Submarines		20,430	[6] 14	15,100		35,530
Total		185,180	16	29,200		214,380

[1] By the London Treaty "the high contracting parties agree not to exercise their rights to lay down the keels of capital-ship replacement tonnage during the years 1931–36, inclusive * * *. This provision is without prejudice to the replacement of ships accidentally lost or destroyed."

[2] Keel to be laid in January 1934 (CA44).

[3] 1 of the cruisers authorized by the act of Feb. 13, 1929. London Treaty forbids laying of the keel before Jan. 1, 1935. Funds not yet provided. Tonnage limited by treaty to 10,000. Remaining 7,350 tons cannot be utilized, as total of 18 cruisers in this category cannot be exceeded.

[4] Replacements for Omaha and Milwaukee (7,050 tons each) over-age in 1939, which may be laid down before the end of 1936.

[5] Funds have not been provided for the last 5 of the 15 cruisers authorized by the act of Feb. 13, 1929. This number coincides with the number of cruisers which could probably be constructed within the tonnage available, viz, 47,100 tons.

[6] Replacements for 14 submarines, total tonnage 15,100 tons, which become over age in 1937, 1938, and 1939 may be laid down before the end of 1936.

TABLE III (pt. I).—Comparison of treaty vessels now in existence that will be under-age on Dec. 31, 1936, figures as of Nov. 1, 1933

Category	United States		British Empire		Japan		France		Italy
	Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons
Capital ships	8	[1] 260,000	4	[2] 139,750	5	[3] 160,750
Aircraft carriers	2	66,000	6	[4] 115,350	4	[7] 68,370	1	[6] 22,146
Cruisers:
A	10	92,650	17	[5] 163,890	12	107,800	6	[8] 60,000	7	[8] 70,000
B	10	70,500	8	46,120	14	69,895	5	[8] 33,016	4	[8] 19,584
Destroyers:
Over 1,500 tons			1	1,540	24	[8] 40,800	21	[8] 49,341	15	[8] 24,111
Not over 1,500 tons			37	50,524	33	38,135	26	[8] 35,120	27	[8] 28,564
Submarines	18	24,810	28	37,119	38	52,272	60	[8] 57,056	32	[8] 26,949
Total	48	513,960	101	554,293	130	538,022	119	256,679	85	169,208

[1] Estimated. Includes an allowance of 9,000 tons to cover modernization of New Mexico, Mississippi, and Idaho.

[2] Estimated. Includes an allowance of 1,100 tons to cover modernization of Barham.

[3] Estimated. Includes an allowance of 6,000 tons to cover modernization of Ise and Yamashiro.

[4] Includes the Argus, 14,450 tons; Hermes, 10,850 tons; Eagle, 22,600 tons; and Furious, 22,450 tons; a total of 70,350 tons, which are experimental and can be replaced at any time.

[5] Includes the Frobisher (9,860 tons, over-age 1940) and Effingham (9,770 tons, over-age 1941) now in existence, but which the treaty specifies are to be disposed of by the end of 1936, leaving then a balance of 15 ships of 144,260 tons.

[6] Experimental and can be replaced at any time.

[7] Includes the Hosho (7,470 tons, over-age 1942), which is experimental and can be replaced at any time.

[8] The London treaty allows 16 percent of destroyer tonnage to be employed in vessels over 1,500 tons but not exceeding 1,850 tons. This would give Japan 16,872 tons in this category. However, the treaty permits destroyers completed or under construction on Apr. 1, 1930, in excess of this project, to be retained. This allowance results in the figure 40,800 instead of 16,872 for Japan.

[9] France and Italy are not limited in these categories.

TABLE III (pt. II.)—Comparison of treaty vessels and tonnages under construction and projected prior to Dec. 31, 1936 (figures as of Nov. 1, 1933)[1]

Category	United States				British Empire				Japan[2]
	Building		Projected[3]		Building		Projected[3]		Building		Projected[3]
	Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons
Aircraft carriers	3	53,800									2	[4] 20,100
Cruisers:
A	6	60,000	2	[5] 20,000
B	4	40,000	5	[6] 47,100	9	59,200	4	22,000	2	17,000	4	34,000
Destroyers:
Over 1,500 tons	8	14,800
Not over 1,500 tons	24	36,000			18	24,875	9	12,400	6	8,268	20	[7] 27,560
Submarines	6	7,460			8	8,415	3	3,945	6	8,200	9	[8] 11,428
Total	51	212,060	7	67,100	35	92,490	16	38,345	14	33,468	35	93,088
Total tons				279,160				130,835				126,556

Category	France				Italy
	Building		Projected[3]		Building		Projected[3]
	Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons
Capital ships	1	26,500
Cruisers:
A	1	10,000
B	7	49,886			8	48,502
Destroyers:
Over 1,500 tons	9	22,737	1	2,500
Not over 1,500 tons			1	1,500	6	6,180	2	1,300
Submarines	19	19,113	2	2,758	22	17,916
Total	37	128,236	4	6,758	36	72,598	2	1,300
Total tons				134,994				73,898

[1] These figures are subject to change depending upon the determination of the tonnages when the vessels are completed.
[2] The Japanese Diet has provided for a continuing building program covering the years from 1931 to Mar. 31, 1936.
[3] May be varied by individual nations while remaining within treaty allowances.
[4] One of these included in program to be completed prior to Mar. 31, 1936. Originally planned for 8,000 tons, being increased to 10,000 tons.
[5] Includes 1 cruiser "A", authorized by act of Feb. 13, 1929, but funds not yet provided for its construction, which cannot be laid down before Jan. 1, 1935, and would not normally be completed before 1938.
[6] Five cruisers authorized by act of Feb. 13, 1929, but no funds yet provided for their construction. Includes 14,100 tons for replacement of Omaha and Milwaukee. (See column 7 of table II).
[7] The London Treaty allows Japan to lay down in each of the years 1935 and 1936 not more than 5,200 tons of replacement for part of the destroyer tonnage that becomes overage in 1938 and 1939.
[8] The London Treaty states that "Japan may anticipate replacement during the term of the present treaty by laying down not more than 19,200 tons of submarine tonnage of which not more than 12,000 tons shall be completed by Dec. 31, 1936."

TABLE III (pt. III.)—Comparison of treaty vessels now in existence that will be under-age on Dec. 31, 1936, plus those building and projected prior to Dec. 31, 1936 (figures as of Nov. 1, 1933)

Category	United States		British Empire		Japan		France		Italy
	Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons
Capital ships	8	260,000	4	139,750	5	160,750	1	26,500
Aircraft carriers	5	119,800	6	115,350	6	[1] 88,470	1	22,146
Cruisers:
A	18	172,650	17	163,890	12	107,800	7	70,000	7	70,000
B	19	157,600	21	127,320	20	120,895	12	82,902	12	68,086
Destroyers:
Over 1,500 tons	8	14,800	1	1,540	24	40,800	31	74,578	15	24,111
Not over 1,500 tons	24	36,000	64	87,799	59	73,963	27	36,620	35	36,044
Submarines	24	32,270	39	49,479	53	71,900	81	78,927	54	44,865
Total	106	793,120	152	685,128	179	664,578	160	391,673	123	243,106

[1] Includes the Hosho. (See note 7 under table III, pt. I.)

TABLE IV.—Comparative programs as of Nov. 1, 1933, necessary to bring navies to treaty strength (in under-age ships), also providing for future replacements of ships which may be laid down before the end of the London Treaty (Dec. 31, 1936)

Category	United States		British Empire		Japan		France		Italy
	Number (approximate)	Tons[1]	Number (approximate)	Tons	Number (approximate)	Tons	Number (approximate)	Tons	Number (approximate)	Tons
Capital ships		[2]		[2]		[2]	(3)	78,500	(2)	70,000
Aircraft carriers	(1)	15,200	(2)	[3] 34,100		[4]	(2)	[5] 37,854	(4)	60,000
Cruisers:
A	1	[6] 17,350	0	[7] 1,540	0	[8] 600	(9)	(9)	(9)	(9)
B	(5)	47,100	(15)	[10] 88,730		(11)	(9)	(9)	(9)	(9)
Destroyers:
Over 1,500 tons	(5)	9,200	(12)	22,460			(9)	(9)	(9)	(9)
Not over 1,500 tons	(60)	90,000	(27)	[12] 41,161		(13)	(9)	(9)	(9)	(9)
Submarines	(30)	35,530	(8)	[14] 9,616		(15)	(9)	(9)	(9)	(9)
Total	(102)	214,380	(64)	197,607		600

For footnotes to this table see bottom of page following.

TABLE V.—Status of building programs as of Nov. 1, 1933

United States	British Empire	Japan
No appropriation has been made for the construction of the following ships which the United States, under the terms of the London Treaty, is permitted to lay down prior to Dec. 31, 1936: Approximate number: 1 aircraft carrier, 15,200 tons; 1 cruiser A, 17,350 tons; 5 cruisers B, 47,100 tons (33,000 tons balance from treaty allowance plus replacements for Omaha and Milwaukee (7,050 tons each) over age in 1939, may be laid down during 1936); 5 destroyers (over 1,500 tons), 9,200 tons; 60 destroyers (not over 1,500 tons), 90,000 tons; 30 submarines, 35,530 tons (20,430 tons balance from treaty allowance plus replacements for 14 submarines, total tonnage 15,100 tons, which become over age in 1937, 1938, and 1939 and may be laid down before the end of 1936).	Great Britain has had in each recent year a uniform building program of 3 cruisers, 9 destroyers, 3 submarines, and several miscellaneous craft. The First Lord of the Admiralty stated to Parliament on Mar. 7, 1932: " * * * we must have the ships which we are allowed to have by 1936 by our treaties, and there is no doubt that we shall have them." The present construction program is as follows: 4 cruisers B; 1 leader and 8 destroyers; 3 submarines; 3 sloops; 1 convoy sloop; 1 coastal sloop; small craft (not specified as to character). Since the announcement of the United States program and use of N.I.R.A. funds the British Admiralty is reported as now asking not only that Britain build up to full treaty strength but is also demanding a heavy replacement program on the assumption that the present naval holiday will end Dec. 31, 1936. The new program is said to include 25 new cruisers of a most formidable type. New capital ships of 25,000 tons, heavily armored and carrying twelve 12-inch guns, are being designed, and the building of 15 to 18 destroyers per year to replace obsolete tonnage of 100,000 tons is proposed. Additionally 10,000 more men and more money for fuel is demanded to conduct extended maneuvers.	Since the Washington Treaty of 1922, Japan has maintained a steady building program with the object of maintaining the Japanese Navy up to treaty limits in modern under-age vessels. In 1931 the Imperial Diet approved a building program which was augmented in 1933. These programs provide for the construction by 1939 of a total of 68 vessels of all classes at an expenditure of 607,080,000 yen. A modernization program and an aircraft program have been approved in addition to the above. An additional naval building program has been tentatively approved by the Japanese cabinet and when approved by the Diet will provide for all except 600 tons of the tonnage allowed Japan by treaty provided several modern ships she now possesses are scrapped or converted to training vessels to keep within her treaty allowances.

TABLE VI.—Summary of comparisons as of Nov. 1, 1933[1]

UNITED STATES NAVY

Type	Built						Building		Projected		Grand total
	Under age		Over age		Total		Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons
	Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons
Capital ships	14	429,300	1	26,100	15	455,400					15	[2] 455,400
Aircraft carriers	2	66,000	1	11,500	3	77,500	3	53,800			6	131,300
Cruisers:
A	10	92,650	1	7,350	11	100,000	6	60,000	2	20,000	19	180,000
B	10	70,500			10	70,500	4	40,000	5	50,000	19	160,500
Destroyers	3	3,570	248	263,900	251	267,470	32	50,800			283	318,270
Submarines	45	46,530	37	21,260	82	67,790	6	7,460			88	75,250
Total	84	708,550	288	330,110	372	1,038,660	51	212,060	7	70,000	430	1,320,720
NAVY OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE
Capital ships	15	473,650			15	473,650					15	[3] 473,650
Aircraft carriers	6	115,350			6	115,350					6	115,350
Cruisers:
A	19	183,686			19	183,686					19	183,686
B	19	95,750	15	62,265	34	158,015	9	59,200	4	22,000	47	239,215
Destroyers	44	58,374	116	123,490	160	181,864	18	24,875	9	12,400	187	219,139
Submarines	31	39,539	25	13,895	56	53,464	8	8,415	3	3,945	67	65,824
Total	134	966,379	156	199,650	290	1,166,029	35	92,490	16	38,345	341	1,295,854
JAPANESE NAVY
Capital ships	8	242,740	1	29,330	9	272,070					9	[4] 272,070
Aircraft carriers	4	68,370			4	68,370			2	20,100	6	88,470
Cruisers:
A	12	107,800	2	15,720	14	123,520					14	123,520
B	17	81,455	3	11,920	20	93,375	2	17,000	4	34,000	26	144,375
Destroyers	60	81,245	42	39,820	102	121,065	6	8,268	20	27,560	128	156,893
Submarines	63	71,779	8	6,063	71	77,842	6	8,200	9	11,000	86	97,042
Total	164	653,389	56	102,853	220	756,242	14	33,468	35	92,660	269	882,370

[1] Over-age date Dec. 31, 1933.
[2] Modernization of Mississippi, New Mexico, and Idaho will add not over 9,000 tons more.
[3] Modernization of Barham will add about 1,100 tons more.
[4] Modernization of Fuso, Yamashiro, and Ise will add not over 9,000 tons more.

Following are footnotes for table IV, p. 1589:

[1] See column 8 in table II.
[2] By the London Treaty, United States, British Empire, and Japan agreed not to lay down any capital ships during the years 1931-36, inclusive, France and Italy, however are allowed to "build the replacement tonnage" (70,000 tons each) which they were entitled to lay down in 1927 and 1929 (under the Washington Treaty), which they had not, used up to the time of the London Treaty. In addition, France was entitled to replace the battleship France lost in 1922. This gives 35,000 tons more, making her allowance 105,000 tons France laid down the battleship Dunkerque (26,500 tons) in 1932, leaving the figure 78,500. Italy has not laid down any capital ships since the London Treaty.
[3] This includes 19,650 tons deficiency in under-age tonnage on Dec. 31, 1936, plus 14,450 tons as replacement for the Argu (experimental), over age in 1938. In addition, the following can be replaced at any time as they are experimental: Hermes, 10,850 tons; Eagle, 22,600 tons; and Furious, 22,450 tons.
[4] Japan has built and projected 88,370 tons to be under age on Dec. 31, 1936, thus exceeding the treaty limit by 7,370 tons. Included in the tonnage built is the Hosho, 7,470 tons, which is experimental and may be replaced at any time.
[5] This figure does not contemplate replacement of the Bearn (tonnage 22,146, over age in 1948) which is experimental and can be replaced at any time. If the Bearn is not included, France will have her entire aircraft allowance of 60,000 tons.
[6] This allows for one cruiser A (10,000 tons), the last of the 18 cruisers A allowed by the London Treaty. The 7,350 tons remaining cannot be utilized.
[7] This 1,540 tons cannot be utilized, as the 15 cruisers A allowed by the London Treaty have been built. Britain actually has 17 cruisers A under age on Dec. 31, 1936, of 163,890 tons, thus exceeding her allowed tonnage by 17,090 tons to be disposed of.
[8] This 600 tons cannot be utilized, as the 12 cruisers A allowed by the London Treaty have been built.
[9] Not limited.
[10] This includes 64,880 tons deficiency in under-age tonnage on Dec. 31, 1936, plus replacements for 5 cruisers of 23,850 tons over-age on 1937 and 1938, which may be laid down before the end of 1936.
[11] Japan has provided for everything that can be laid down before Dec. 31, 1936, to the amount of 120,895 tons. Included in this figure are 3 vessels of the Kuma class (total tonnage 15,300), which are to be reduced to training ships when replaced by new vessels, and their tonnage not thereafter included in the tonnage subject to limitation. Also Japan may replace the Tama (5,100 tons, over age in 1937) by new construction to be completed during the year 1936. Deducting these allowances the Japanese tonnage in this category becomes 100,495 as against the treaty allowance of 100,450.
[12] Includes 38,201 deficiency in under-age tonnage on Dec. 31, 1936, plus 2,960 tons which may be laid down before the end of 1936 to replace 2 destroyers over age in 1937.
[13] Japan has projected for everything that can be laid down before Dec. 31, 1936, to the amount of 73,963 tons, exceeding the treaty allowance by 9,263. However, the treaty permits Japan to lay down replacement tonnage to the amount of 5,200 tons in 1935 and 1936 to replace tonnage over age in 1938 and 1939, which allowance covers this excess.
[14] This includes 3,221 tons deficiency in under-age tonnage on Dec. 31, 1936, plus 6,395 tons which may be laid down before the end of 1936 to replace submarines over age in 1937, 1938, and 1939.
[15] Japan has projected everything that can be laid down before Dec, 31, 1936, to the amount of 71,900 tons, exceeding the treaty allowance by 19,200 tons. However, the treaty permits Japan to anticipate replacement by laying down not more than 19,200 tons prior to Dec. 31, 1936, which allowance covers the excess.

TABLE VI.—Summary of comparisons as of Nov. 1, 1933—Continued.

FRENCH NAVY

Type	Built						Building		Projected		Grand total
	Under age		Over age		Total		Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons
	Number	Tons	Number	Tons	Number	Tons
Capital ships	4	88,756	5	97,169	9	185,925	1	26,500			10	212,425
Aircraft carriers	1	22,146			1	22,146					1	22,146
Cruisers:
A	6	60,000	3	35,923	9	95,923	1	10,000			10	105,923
B	5	33,016	4	21,098	9	54,114	7	49,886			16	104,000
Destroyers	48	85,263	24	17,788	72	103,051	9	22,737	2	4,000	83	129,788
Submarines	64	59,559	26	17,824	90	77,383	19	19,113	2	2,758	111	99,254
Total	128	348,740	62	189,802	190	538,542	37	128,236	4	6,758	231	673,536

ITALIAN NAVY

Capital ships	4	86,532			4	86,532					4	86,532
Cruisers:
A	7	70,000	4	33,642	11	103,642					11	103,642
B	4	19,584	7	22,386	11	41,970	8	48,502			19	90,472
Destroyers	49	58,566	33	25,881	82	84,447	6	6,180	2	1,300	90	91,927
Submarines	32	26,949	21	8,159	53	35,108	22	17,916			75	53,022
Total	96	261,631	65	90,068	161	351,609	36	72,598	2	1,300	199	425,597

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. With pleasure.

Mr. MAY. As I understand it, the amount of money appropriated in this bill is to carry out a 5-year program of construction?

Mr. COX. That is correct.

Mr. MAY. And whatever money is not used in the first year will be used in subsequent years?

Mr. COX. That is true.

Mr. Speaker, I trust the rule will be adopted.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRITTEN].

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, later in the day, under a unanimous-consent request, I should like to further elucidate my impression of the somersault that was just made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], in his endeavor to get from under the embarrassment of his recent action toward the veterans. The gentleman's vote for the gag rule has brought him much criticism from the World War veterans. The Economy Act has done the same thing for the administration.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order. I reluctantly do it.

Mr. BRITTEN. Very well. I am out of order.

Mr. BLANTON. This is no time or place——

Mr. BRITTEN. I agree with the distinguished leader on the Democratic side. I am out of order. I shall now talk to the rule and the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I truly believe that there is less cause for criticism and less cause for objection to the bill now pending before the House than there could have been to any naval authorization bill presented to this House in the past 20 years. It is more free from attack than any naval bill that you gentlemen have ever been called upon to vote for, and I will tell you why in a very few words. This bill does not provide for the expenditure of a dollar for naval construction; not a dime. It is a blanket authority to the President to build the Navy up to treaty requirements if he desires to do so and if, in doing so, he adheres to the policy of the present administration as it has been publicly expressed time and time again.

This bill does not provide a single big ship outside of one big plane carrier. It provides for 65 destroyers, most of them under 1,850 tons, and 90 percent of them only 1,500 tons.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Section (b) provides for 99,200 tons of destroyers. How many vessels is that?

Mr. BRITTEN. Sixty-five.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. And what about submarines?

Mr. BRITTEN. Twenty-nine. I admit the tonnage is vague.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I was wondering why the bill carried tonnage rather than the number of vessels.

Mr. BRITTEN. In the past we have carried the number of the ships, but for some reason, which the chairman of the committee himself best knows, the numbers of ships have been left out, because the Department may want to vary them in size. Destroyers vary from 1,500 to 1,850 tons each. There is great variation in submarine sizes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. And the treaties deal with tonnages, also.

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; the treaties deal only with tonnage and not with ship numbers except in the case of the first-line ships, which are not contemplated here.

Now, as has been brought out by the question just asked, the bill provides for 65 destroyers, 29 submarines, and 1 airplane carrier, the latter being a replacement of our old experimental airplane carrier, the Langley, a 15,000-ton ship. These ships, with our cruisers and our first-line battleships, now built or building, are necessary to balance our Navy as a complete and fighting unit. It is not a balanced unit today. You gentlemen would undoubtedly be surprised to know that at the end of the next year we will not have one single destroyer under age; we will not have one single destroyer that is not obsolete; and they are of enormous importance to the fleet when it is in operation or maneuvering.

This bill has for its tendency the building up of what might be called, or what in naval parlance is called, a "balanced fleet", just like a first-class well-balanced football team or baseball team. These small ships are necessary to balance the fighting force.

Now, there have been but two objectors to this bill, within my knowledge. Every Member of the House got one of these letters from the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. This is a very high-sounding name, my friends—the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ of America. When you get a letter from such an organization you naturally presume that your little Christian church back home has taken part in the deliberation of which you are being informed. That is as far from the truth as it is possible to be.

Some 18 or 20 years ago we investigated this Council of Churches, together with another organization with a high-sounding name, the National Council for the Prevention of War. This latter organization is controlled by one man, Frederick J. Libby, a professional pacifist of long standing. The chances are that copies of this letter were sent to you and to me with the knowledge of the secretary, Mr. Walter W. Van Kirk, and nobody else.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman, of course, is aware of the fact that the Council of the Federation of Churches of Christ is an offshoot of the Carnegie Foundation which is operating in this country as a British-propaganda organization, tied up with all of the other subversive organizations which are trying to hold down proper preparedness in the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman is entirely correct. When we investigated this organization called the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, we learned that there were anywhere from 5 to 20 affiliated associations. The directors of one were the directors of nearly all of them. They were paid for their services, and it was not unusual for a director to get half a dozen or more salaries from these various organizations. They would communicate with our Committee on Naval Affairs and indicate that meetings had been held, and when we pinned them down we found that the meetings had been held in some private room, or in a hotel, or in an office some place when three or four of these directors determined that Congress should be importuned to block certain legislation. They were notorious pacifists and might reasonably have been on the pay rolls of Great Britain or Germany. They were more British than American. They were a great detriment to a proper national defense.

Let me tell you what this letter states; I will refresh your memory. Mr. Van Kirk states that at the request of the executive committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America he is enclosing a copy of the committee's statement on the Vinson naval bill. He goes on to say that—

> The membership of the executive committee includes official representatives of 25 denominations affiliated with the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

Twenty-five denominations! This must be important!

He goes on to state:

> We believe, as stated in this resolution, that the adoption of this legislation would considerably aggravate—

Listen to this, my friends:

> Would considerably aggravate a world situation already tense and serious, stimulate further naval competition among the principal maritime powers, and jeopardize the success of the 1935 naval conference.

It will jeopardize the success of a 1935 naval conference which has not yet been called!

But the person back home who gets one of these letters naturally believes that the 1935 naval conference is an assured conference for the serious consideration of further naval limitations.

This is the same kind of bait that for the last 20 years has been held before the National Congress and the gentleman who may sit in the White House. It is this kind of propaganda that has brought our Navy to its present unfortunate, its present disgraceful, condition—that subtle suggestion that the conference next year should not be interfered with; that the balance of the world is going to agree with us at that conference for further limitation of naval armaments. I shall tell you the facts, and this fellow Van Kirk may know it or he may not know it—I do not know whether he reads the newspapers or not, but this statement from the Federal Council of Churches would indicate that he does not even read the newspapers, because he does not know what is in the Vinson bill; this letter would indicate that we are to get together on further disarmament next year—the fact is, the preparatory council for naval disarmament and the conferences themselves have been going on for 11 years and getting nowhere excepting at a time when they can beat America down. Any conference that results in an agreement results in disaster to America. Otherwise they would not agree. That was done with the cruiser tonnage conference in London when this Nation got the worst of it. Had we carried out vigorously the building program which was scrapped at the Washington Conference, the biggest warship program in the history of the world, it is quite probable it would have kept us out of the World War.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield for a question.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Is it reasonable to suppose that an agreement would be observed by nations which have repudiated their debt obligations?

Mr. BRITTEN. My impression about these conferences is, and always has been—and I have sat in on them, I have watched them carefully; I have been in Europe a number of times when they were going on—and my serious contention is that there will never be an agreement to any conference between the European powers and ourselves unless it is understood in advance that they are going to "gyp" America. That is the very foundation of European diplomacy—deceit—and, of course, when you know Europe as most of us do, you know that their diplomacy must be deceitful.

If it were not deceitful, it would not be diplomatic. It certainly would not have been diplomatic for Germany to have told France years ago what her designs were in connection with the building of a railroad toward Mesopotamia. It would not be diplomatic for Italy to tell France what she is working on now in connection with Hitler and Germany. It certainly would not be reasonable for Germany to tell France what was included back of the curtains in her recent treaty with Poland. That would not be diplomacy. That would be just plain ordinary damn foolishness. So that the very foundation of European diplomacy means deceit first, and by that I mean to deceive your neighbor. It has been so always and it always will be so. They will deceive us on this $2,000,000,000 revolving fund for the stabilization of currency, and, take it from me, if we do not closely watch that $2,000,000,000, England and France will get most of it before we know it.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman does not want us to infer that the activities looking toward the disarmament conference in 1935 are not proceeding under the same influences that have heretofore been in operation in the United States, does he?

Mr. BRITTEN. No. Undoubtedly the gentleman is correct.

Mr. McFADDEN. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the activity is proceeding under the direction of Norman H. Davis and under the Foreign Policy Association, which works in connection with the Carnegie Peace Foundation and these other influences. They are now planning to hold this conference in Geneva, and the American people are being led in again, just as they were into the last Geneva conference, by this same crowd which has for their purpose what the gentleman has stated, the breaking down of the proper armament and protection to the people of the United States and our great interests.

I am heartily in accord with what this bill proposes, and I hope the President of the United States will exercise it to his full capacity and build our Navy up to a proper strength, where it ought to be in order to protect the people of the United States and their resources.

Mr. BRITTEN. I agree with the gentleman, and in the parlance of the street it is "old stuff", everybody knows that.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Our disarmament treaty expires in 1936. Is it not of importance that we now act within the limitations of that treaty?

Mr. BRITTEN. Why, of course, we should do that; and the bill before the House is merely an authorization to the President so that if he desires he may order or request the Director of the Budget to provide proper appropriations for any number of ships, the number to be determined by himself.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I may say that the substance of this bill, the character of this bill, and the type of bill now before the House has been carried in the Senate for years and has been called the Hale bill. It has been carried in the House for years. It was called the Britten bill. These bills gave blanket authority to the President of the United States just as the Vinson bill does. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] has always opposed this blanket authority to the President, because he said it was giving the President too much authority. This was opposed in the Senate because that blanket authority to the President gives him too much power. It is remarkable how you gentlemen on that side of the aisle on veterans' legislation and on legislation like this back somersault five or six times when you are in power.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman has a very good memory. He will not forget, when he speaks of deceit, what his distinguished former colleague from Illinois, Mr. Madden, on March 20, 1924, told us about deceit of our own Navy, when our own naval officers testified positively that England had elevated the turret guns of her ships to give them a longer range, and had thus influenced Congress to appropriate $6,500,000 in order to elevate our guns. Mr. Madden, that great public servant from Illinois, who was then Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, spoke on this floor and told us that there was not a word of truth in what the naval officers had told us. Does the gentleman remember that?

Mr. BRITTEN. Answering the gentleman, the gentleman is almost entirely correct.

Mr. BLANTON. This was deceit from our own Navy to Congress.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman is unusually correct. The question before the House at that time was the elevation of our big turret guns, which means our battleship guns, to a 30° elevation so that our guns could shoot as far as the British, the German, and the Japanese guns of like size. Up to that particular moment we had only about a 22° elevation. The question before the House was to provide a $6,500,000 appropriation so that our guns could be elevated to shoot as far as our neighbors' guns.

A naval officer had told Mr. Madden, who was then Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that the British were elevating their guns when the fact of the matter was that the British did not have to elevate their turret guns. Their guns had already been elevated and did carry a 30° trajectory. Most of them were built that way originally.

The Japanese at that moment were elevating their guns to a 30° angle. So the naval officer was incorrect when he said the British were doing it, because they did not have to do it. It had already been done. Mr. Madden made quite an ado about this.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman remembers very well that following the World War in the name of peace we destroyed a large number of ships that were not antiquated or out of date.

Mr. BRITTEN. They were the most modern in the world. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman agree with me that the surest guaranty of peace is the disposition to keep peace, but be prepared for war in the event we get into a war?

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman is entirely correct. No one would take a back swipe at our friend Carnera if he walked down the street, because Carnera is big and strong. No one goes after a man who has a mighty wallop, because he is afraid of being hit back. If we had had a Navy equal to Great Britain in 1917, Mr. Speaker, we would not have been dragged into the World War. I am certain of that. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman believe that the President of the United States, the present occupant of the White House, is a safe man in whose hands to leave the question of preparation?

Mr. BRITTEN. I think any President in the White House would be a proper man, because, after all, he is simply acting for the country at large.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] in the revised estimate he gave estimated that this program would involve an expenditure of an additional $470,000,000. I call the gentleman's attention to section 3 of this bill and invite the attention of the House to the fact that there is no limitation at all upon the amount of the authorization.

The sky is the limit, and there is no limit here of $470,000,000, and there is not even a limit up to $1,000,000,000.

Does not the gentleman from Illinois think there ought to be some limitation placed upon the amount authorized to be expended?

Mr. BRITTEN. Answering the gentleman, in general, I agree with what the gentleman states, but it is well known that the Navy Department takes competitive bids on all of its ships. Even if they are built in the navy yards they take bids. To place a limit of cost in this bill on the destroyer tonnage might not have been the proper thing to do, because we do not know that we are going to build all of them. We may not. We might have said that on the destroyers the limit of cost shall be $3,800,000 on the smaller destroyers and $4,400,000 on the larger ones.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BRITTEN. That could have been done, excluding armament and so on, but personally I do not think it is necessary. I have confidence in the administration, whether it be Democratic or Republican, to build these ships at the lowest possible figure and to make them just as efficient, just as powerful, and just as fast as money can provide.

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman will yield further, the inquiry I make does not involve any want of confidence in the President, but I am firmly of the belief that not only in this bill but in all authorization bills of whatever kind or character, in order to protect the taxpayers of this country, there ought to be some limitation.

Mr. BRITTEN. I agree with the gentleman that we have always done that; but under the present administration, by gag rule and otherwise, we have been precluded from doing things like that, and, as the gentleman from Georgia will tell you and me in just a moment, we are acting under what he calls "a new deal." We have never done things under previous administrations that are being done under the present administration.

Mr. HASTINGS. Why does not the gentleman talk to the point that is before him now?

Mr. BRITTEN. I am talking to the point.

Mr. HASTINGS. And that is the question of whether we ought to place a limitation upon the amount of the authorization, and not run off on gag rules and side questions.

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, no; I am not doing that.

Mr. HASTINGS. I know the gentleman can talk to the point, and the gentleman knows that practically every one of these authorization bills that has ever been considered by Congress, during one administration or the other, has contained some limitation.

Mr. BRITTEN. Limitation of cost—I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BRITTEN. And if it is deemed advisable to do that now, and limit the cost of destroyers in one case and the submarines in another, I shall have no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is not what I am inquiring about now. I am not referring to the limit of cost as to one destroyer or another, but the limit on the total authorization in section 3.

Mr. BRITTEN. Three hundred and eighty million dollars, or, as stated by the gentleman, $470,000,000.

Mr. HASTINGS. Would the gentleman be willing to support an amendment to limit the authorization in section 3 to $380,000,000?

Mr. BRITTEN. Let me answer the gentleman in this way: We were told in committee by naval officers, who ought to know, and who do know, that these ships would cost $380,000,000, but that under the Public Works Administration and the N.I.R.A., providing for shorter hours and more wages, and so on, they might cost 25 percent more, and probably would. This is where the gentleman gets his figure of $470,000,000.

Mr. HASTINGS. They are the figures given us by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] when he presented the rule.

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does not the gentleman think it would be better to place a limitation of $470,000,000 in section 3 rather than to have no limitation whatever?

Mr. BRITTEN. I will offer no objection to that.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BRITTEN. I will yield to the chairman of the committee as to that. I have no objection to it.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. In reference to placing a limitation on the total expenditures, does not the gentleman from Oklahoma, as well as the gentleman from Illinois, know that it is impossible for the Navy Department to estimate the cost of construction of a ship 5 years from today, and for that very reason it is wise and in the interest of economy to leave the authorization wide open? It might not cost $380,000,000, it might not cost $380,000,000 plus 25 percent, or it might cost more, all depending upon the cost of labor and the cost of material by 1939. It would be very unwise to provide a maximum or a minimum expenditure under the bill.

Mr. HASTINGS. Then the gentleman from Georgia, the author of the bill, is in favor of giving blanket authority, without any limitation whatever. Congress will be in session a year from now and 2 years from now and 5 years from now, and can we not trust those who are in charge of naval construction to come back to the Congress for additional authority or additional appropriations?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. But does not the gentleman from Oklahoma know that a maximum limitation would be of no avail for the reason that Congress at each session must make appropriations for a specified number of ships, and if you said the maximum authorization should be $400,000,000 and it required more than $400,000,000, Congress at that session would have the right to vote the amount of money necessary for the construction? So let me endeavor to convince the gentleman that it is not in the interest of economy or in the interest of good legislation to try to fix the cost of an article 5 years from today.

Mr. HASTINGS. If that is so, there is no use of our requirement that you must get an authorization in order to make an appropriation. I say now that I am in favor, not only on this bill but every authorization bill of every kind and character presented to this House; I am in favor of limiting the cost, and if we limit the cost to $470,000,000 the Committee on Appropriations is not authorized to bring in an appropriation exceeding the amount without coming back to the House and getting additional authority from the House.

Mr. BRITTEN. In general, the gentleman is correct, but it will not work out that way in practice because these 94 or 95 ships will be scattered over a period of years and appropriated for as they meet the President's approval in his international policy.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Georgia is incorrect in one particular. If you pass the bill under the authorization given in this bill, the President can begin his operations and have contracts entered into covering the next 5 years that will absorb the whole $470,000,000, and then Congress would have to appropriate to make those contracts good.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman from Texas is mistaken; he has got the cart before the horse. The appropriations are made before the contracts are entered into.

Mr. BLANTON. I hesitate because of the heavy wallop which my friend possesses—I hesitate to cross swords with him, but I do know something about appropriations; I do know something about authorizations to Presidents and the sacredness of Government contracts; I do know something about expenditures that can be made and what could occur under this power this bill invests in the President covering this 5-year period. Whenever he causes a contract for construction to be executed the gentleman knows that Congress will make those contracts good by appropriations later.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman from Texas says he "hesitates to cross swords with the gentleman from Illinois." That reminds me of one time when I was sitting in the Senate Chamber through a debate going on between Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, a great statesman, scholar, and able debater, and our good friend the Senator from Illinois, Senator JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS. Mr. Lodge had concluded a very vicious attack on Senator LEWIS.

Mr. LEWIS came back at the Senator from Massachusetts, after touching up his whiskers hither and yon, adjusting a little pink handkerchief in his cuff, and he said: "I will say to my distinguished colleague the Senator from Massachusetts that when I meet him on the field of battle my sword will be tipped with a rose." [Laughter.]

So I say to my good friend from Texas, when I meet him on the field of battle my sword will be tipped with a—thistle. [Laughter.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, knowing the heavy wallop carried by the gentleman from Illinois, I hesitate to further cope with him. I know when he comes in here some mornings in proper array, with his bright necktie and spats and his hair properly curled, rouge on his face, well perfumed, and smiling sweetly, you do not know whether to kiss him or sock him. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRITTEN. I shall refuse the kiss; I am not a Frenchman. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. But do not try to sock him. [Laughter.] He is a wonderful adept at that art. Seriously, when the President of the United States tells me he wants $470,000,000 to spend for national defense I will vote for his bill without any hesitation at all. But in no letter or message has the President asked us to vote him this $470,000,000. I remember very distinctly the impressive message the President sent us on May 16, 1933. Let us ponder well on what he then said. Here is his message:

To the Congress:

For the information of the Congress I am sending herewith a message that I have addressed this morning to the sovereigns and presidents of those nations participating in the disarmament conference and the world monetary and economic conference.

I was impelled to this action because it has become increasingly evident that the assurance of world political and economic peace and stability is threatened by selfish and short-sighted policies, actions, and threats of actions.

The sincere wish for this assurance by an overwhelming majority of the nations faces the danger of recalcitrant obstruction by a very small minority, just as in the domestic field the good purposes of a majority in business, labor, or in other cooperative efforts are often frustrated by a selfish few.

The deep-rooted desire of Americans for better living conditions and for the avoidance of war is shared by mass humanity in every country. As a means to this end I have, in the message to the various nations, stressed the practical necessity of reducing armaments. It is high time for us and for every other nation to understand the simple fact that the invasion of any nation, or the destruction of a national sovereignty, can be prevented only by the complete elimination of the weapons that make such a course possible today.

Such an elimination will make the little nation relatively more secure against the great nation.

Furthermore, permanent defenses are a nonrecurring charge against governmental budgets, while large armies, continually rearmed with improved offensive weapons, constitute a recurring charge. This, more than any other factor today, is responsible for governmental deficits and threatened bankruptcy.

The way to disarm is to disarm. The way to prevent invasion is to make it impossible.

I have asked for an agreement among nations on four practical and simultaneous steps:

First. That through a series of steps the weapons of offensive warfare be eliminated.

Second. That the first definite step be taken now.

Third. That while these steps are being taken no nation shall increase existing armaments over and above the limitations of treaty obligations.

Fourth. That subject to existing treaty rights no nation during the disarmament period shall send any armed force of whatsoever nature across its own borders.

Our people realize that weapons of offense are needed only if other nations have them, and they will freely give them up if all the nations of the world will do likewise.

In the domestic field the Congress has labored in sympathetic understanding with me for the improvement of social conditions, for the preservation of individual human rights, and for the furtherance of social justice.

In the message to the nations which I herewith transmit I have named the same objectives. It is in order to assure these great human values that we seek peace by ridding the world of the weapons of aggression and attack.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 16, 1933.

And, accompanying said message that he sent to the House, the President sent the following copy of his message to the peoples of the whole world:

The following message was cabled today to the sovereigns and presidents of the nations listed below:

His Majesty Zog I, King of the Albanians, Tirana, Albania.

His Excellency Agustin P. Justo, President of the Argentine Nation, Buenos Aires, Argentina.

His Excellency Wilhelm Miklas, President of the Confederation of Austria, Vienna, Austria.

His Majesty Albert, King of the Belgians, Brussels, Belgium.

His Excellency Getulio Vargas, President of the United States of Brazil, Rio de Janeiro, Brazil.

His Excellency Enrique Olaya Herrera, President of the Republic of Colombia, Bogota, Colombia.

His Excellency Daniel Salamanca, President of Bolivia, La Paz, Bolivia.

His Majesty Boris III, King of the Bulgarians, Sofia, Bulgaria.

His Excellency Arturo Alessandri, President of the Republic of Chile, Santiago, Chile.

His Excellency Ricardo Jimenez, President of Costa Rica, San José, Costa Rica.

His Excellency Lin Sen, President of the National Government of the Republic of China, Nanking, China.

His Excellency Gerardo Machado, President of the Republic of Cuba, Habana, Cuba.

His Excellency Thomas G. Masaryk, President of Czechoslovakia, Praha, Czechoslovakia.

His Majesty Christian X, King of Denmark, Copenhagen, Denmark.

His Excellency Rafael Leonidas Trujillo, President of the Dominican Republic, Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic.

His Excellency Juan de Dios Martinez Mira, President of the Republic of Ecuador, Quito, Ecuador.

His Majesty Fouad I, King of Egypt, Cairo, Egypt.

His Excellency Konstantin Pats, Head of State, Tallinn, Estonia.

His Imperial Majesty Haile Selassie I, Emperior of Ethiopia, Addis Ababa, Ethiopia.

His Excellency Pehr Evind Svinhufvud, the President of Finland, Helsingfors, Finland.

His Excellency M. Albert Lebrun, President of the French Republic, Paris, France.

His Excellency Field Marshal Paul von Deneckendorff und von Hindenburg, President of the Reich, Berlin, Germany.

His Majesty George V, the King of Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Dominions Beyond the Seas, Emperor of India, etc., etc., London, England.

His Excellency Alexander Zaimis, President of the Hellenic Republic, Athens, Greece.

His Excellency Jorge Ubico, President of the Republic of Guatemala, Guatemala, Guatemala.

His Excellency Stenio Vincent, President of Haiti, Port au Prince, Haiti.

His Serene Highness Admiral Nicholas De Horthy, Regent of the Kingdom of Hungary, Budapest, Hungary.

His Excellency Tiburcio Carias A., Constitutional President of the Republic of Honduras, Tegucigalpa, Honduras.

His Majesty Victor Emanuel III, King of Italy, Rome, Italy.

His Majesty Hirohito, Emperor of Japan, Tokyo, Japan.

His Excellency Alberts Kviesis, President of the Republic of Latvia, Riga, Latvia.

His Excellency Antanas Smetona, President of the Republic of Lithuania, Kaunae, Lithuania.

Her Royal Highness Charlotte, Grand Duchess of Luxembourg, Luxembourg, G.D.

His Excellency General Abelardo L. Rodriguez, President of the United Mexican States, Mexico City, Mexico.

Her Majesty Wilhelmina, Queen of the Netherlands, The Hague, Netherlands.

His Excellency Juan D. Sacasa, President of the Republic of Nicaragua, Managua, Nicaragua.

His Majesty Haakon VII, King of Norway, Oslo, Norway.

His Excellency Harmodio Arias, President of Panama, Panama, Panama.

His Excellency Eusebio Ayala, President of the Republic of Paraguay, Asuncion, Paraguay.

His Majesty Faisal I, King of Iraq, Baghdad, Iraq.

His Excellency Ignace Moscicki, President of the Republic of Poland, Warsaw, Poland.

His Excellency Gen. Oscar Benavides, President of Peru, Lima, Peru.

His Excellency Gen. Antonio Oscar de Fragoso Carmona, President of the Republic of Portugal, Lisbon, Portugal.

Mis Majesty Carol II, King of Rumania, Bucharest, Rumania.

President Michail Kalinin, All Union Central Executive Committee, Moscow Russia.

His Majesty Prajadhipok, King of Siam, Bangkok, Siam.

His Excellency Alcala Zamora, President of the Spanish Republic, Madrid, Spain.

His Imperial Majesty Reza Shah Pahlevi, Shah of Persia, Teheran, Persia.

His Majesty Gustaf V, King of Sweden, Stockholm, Sweden.

His Excellency Edmond Schulthess, President of the Swiss Confederation, Berne, Switzerland.

His Excellency Gazi Mustafa Kemal, President of the Turkish Republic, Ankara, Turkey.

His Excellency Gabriel Terra, President of the Republic of Uruguay, Montevideo, Uruguay.

His Excellency Juan V. Gomez, President of the United States of Venezuela, Caracas, Venezuela.

His Majesty Alexander I, King of Yugoslavia, Belgrade, Yugoslavia.

THE MESSAGE

A profound hope of the people of my country impels me, as the head of their Government, to address you, and through you the people of your nation. This hope is that peace may be assured through practical measures of disarmament and that all of us may carry to victory our common struggle against economic chaos.

To these ends the nations have called two great world conferences. The happiness, the prosperity, and the very lives of the men, women, and children who inhabit the whole world are bound up in the decisions which their governments will make in the near future. The improvement of social conditions, the preservation of individual human rights, and the furtherance of social justice are dependent upon these decisions.

The World Economic Conference will meet soon and must come to its conclusions quickly. The world cannot await deliberations long drawn out. The conference must establish order in place of the present chaos by a stabilization of currencies, by freeing the flow of world trade, and by international action to raise price levels. It must, in short, supplement individual domestic programs for economic recovery by wise and considered international action.

The Disarmament Conference has labored for more than a year, and as yet has been unable to reach satisfactory conclusions. Confused purposes still clash dangerously. Our duty lies in the direction of bringing practical results through concerted action based upon the greatest good to the greatest number. Before the imperative call of this great duty petty obstacles must be swept away and petty aims forgotten. A selfish victory is always destined to be an ultimate defeat. The furtherance of durable peace for our generation in every part of the world is the only goal worthy of our best efforts.

If we ask what are the reasons for armaments, which, in spite of the lessons and tragedies of the World War, are today a greater burden on the peoples of the earth than ever before, it becomes clear that they are twofold: First, the desire, disclosed or hidden, on the part of governments to enlarge their territories at the expense of a sister nation. I believe that only a small minority of governments or of peoples harbor such a purpose. Second, the fear of nations that they will be invaded. I believe that the overwhelming majority of peoples feel obliged to retain excessive armaments because they fear some act of aggression against them and not because they themselves seek to be aggressors.

There is justification for this fear. Modern weapons of offense are vastly stronger than modern weapons of defense. Frontier forts, trenches, wire entanglements, coast defenses—in a word, fixed fortifications—are no longer impregnable to the attack of war planes, heavy mobile artillery, land battleships called "tanks", and poison gas.

If all nations will agree wholly to eliminate from possession and use the weapons which make possible a successful attack, defenses automatically will become impregnable, and the frontiers and independence of every nation will become secure.

The ultimate objective of the Disarmament Conference must be the complete elimination of all offensive weapons. The immediate objective is a substantial reduction of some of these weapons and the elimination of many others.

This Government believes that the program for immediate reduction of aggressive weapons, now under discussion at Geneva, is but a first step toward our ultimate goal. We do not believe that the proposed immediate steps go far enough. Nevertheless, this Government welcomes the measures now proposed and will exert its influence toward the attainment of further successive steps of disarmament.

Stated in the clearest way, there are three steps to be agreed upon in the present discussions:

First. To take, at once, the first definite step toward this objective, as broadly outlined in the MacDonald plan.

Second. To agree upon time and procedure for taking the following steps.

Third. To agree that while the first and the following steps are being taken no nation shall increase its existing armaments over and above the limitations of treaty obligations.

But the peace of the world must be assured during the whole period of disarmament, and I therefore propose a fourth step concurrent with and wholly dependent on the faithful fulfillment of these three proposals and subject to existing treaty rights:

That all the nations of the world should enter into a solemn and definite pact of nonaggression; that they should solemnly reaffirm the obligations they have assumed to limit and reduce their armaments; and, provided these obligations are faithfully executed by all signatory powers, individually agree that they will send no armed force of whatsoever nature across their frontiers.

Common sense points out that if any strong nation refuses to join with genuine sincerity in these concerted efforts for political and economic peace, the one at Geneva and the other at London, progress can be obstructed and ultimately blocked. In such event the civilized world, seeking both forms of peace, will know where the responsibility for failure lies. I urge that no nation assume such a responsibility, and that all the nations joined in these great conferences translate their professed policies into action. This is the way to political and economic peace.

I trust that your Government will join in the fulfillment of these hopes.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

[Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, you will note that after the reading of said message from the President, there was "applause" by this House. But, if the President has changed his mind, and if this is the President's proposition, I am for it without hesitation at all, for I am backing him. I bury my judgment where it conflicts with his, but it has not yet come from the President to us. I call attention to the fact that when these naval officers had our good friend, our valuable Representative on the Republican side from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] here fighting for them to raise the elevation of guns, I remember how he fought for that elevation and I remember how he fought for the $6,500,000 the naval officers said was absolutely necessary. I remember how he said, "Oh, it is for the protection of the Government, it is national defense." But, Mr. Speaker, he is not the only valuable Republican that the great State of Illinois has ever sent here. I remember one of the most valuable men who ever served this country on the Republican side, Martin B. Madden, of Illinois, and Martin Madden got up here courageous as a lion, and gave us the real facts about the matter. I will tell you what he said. He did not say that the naval officers were mistaken, he did not say that they had misled Congress, he said that they had lied. He said there was not a word of truth in it, and he said that our $6,500,000 was saved.

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, no, the gentleman is mistaken, we elevated those guns.

Mr. BLANTON. Wait a minute. I have a better recollection than my friend from Illinois. Here is exactly what Mr. Madden said, and I quote it from the RECORD of March 20, 1924, page 4584:

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

